– STORY –

Waking up, Kim Hajin finds himself in a familiar world but an unfamiliar body.

A world he created himself and a story he wrote, yet never finished.

He had become his novel's extra, a filler character with no importance to the story.

The only clue to escaping is to stay close to the main storyline.

However, he soon finds out the world isn't exactly identical to his creation.

The Story Within the Novel

[Kim Suho] 17 – 27 years old

A righteous, honest, and hard-working man from a commoner background. He possesses extraordinary character and talent and is a well-known genius from the military academy. He carries a strong sense of justice befitting a hero, but harbors a special secret.

[Shin Jonghak] 17 – 27 years old

The fourth generation heir to Jinsung Corp, a chaebol that contends for the number one spot. ^[1] He is narcissistic and elitist as the spoiled child of a chaebol family and later becomes a villain because of his inferiority complex towards Kim Suho. I have to be the best. I can't tolerate anyone above me. He confronts Kim Suho with such stubbornness.

Those two were the main characters of my novel. The novel had many more characters, but writing them all down was impossible. It contained billions of characters, and unless they had important roles like the heroine or sidekick, giving them a name was unnecessary. Why was I saying all this?

The story in my novel was happening in front of my eyes. Kim Suho nervously walked up as he was called to the stage. We were in a huge auditorium filled with 3000 cadets and thousands of more spectators. Their gazes all focused on Kim Suho.

“He’s Kim Suho? Wow.”

“He’s so handsome!”

Several girls swooned at the sight of him.

“This is why they say your gift is the only thing that matters. Who cares if you work hard? People like him always take first place.”

“That guy completely lucked out with his gift.”

Naturally, every young teenager envied him.

“They say he’s got the best grades in the last 10 years.”

“Yeah, I’ve heard of him. They announced his gift too, right? What was it again... Sword Saint?”

Guild associates eagerly watched the best cadet in recent history from the highest seats. They had to be at least a kilometer away, but I could clearly hear them as long as I looked in their direction. Not only their words, but I could even see their faces, almost as if I was right in front of them. Perhaps this was my gift.

“Yeah, they said he receives the world’s protection in regards to swords.”

“That’s pretty vague, but information from the academy is always like that.”

“We called dibs on that kid, so don’t touch him.”

I recognized one of the whisperers. Yun Seung-Ah, an important assistant to the main character and one of the heroines who almost becomes his lover. Just when the two of them were hitting it off — actually, the main character was hitting it off with multiple heroines — I suspended my novel. Thus, the two never became lovers.

“Dibs? What dibs. There’s no such thing when it comes to cadets.”

Yun Seung-Ah smiled and rebutted another guild associate’s provocation.

“Is that why Essence of the Strait can’t escape second place?”

I knew Yun Seung-Ah’s face. Surprisingly, she looked like my first love from college. Probably because I imagined her when I created Yun Seung-Ah.

“Can I take that as a challenge?”

“I’m kidding, of course. We still have 3 years before we can scout any of them.”

“Two years.”

“You know scouting them before they graduate is illegal, right?”

“That’s only if you get caught.”

Yun Seung-Ah and the man glared at each other. The VIP section began to heat up from their staring contest. And so, the fight for Kim Suho began.

“Class of 2024, Rank 2 Cadet, Shin Jonghak.”

Meanwhile, the other main character stood up too. The heir to the Jinsung clan commanded the audience’s attention just like Kim Suho. But unlike Kim Suho, there was no envy towards him, only admiration and adoration. With Kim Suho they thought, How is he better than me?, but with Shin Jonghak it was, He was better than me from birth. Like a true noble, Shin Jonghak confidently ascended the stage.

Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak stood side by side and glared at each other. Electricity seemed to crackle between them.

Without a doubt, they were characters from my novel.

Then where was I?

I wasn’t on stage, but in the farthest back seat of the auditorium. I wasn’t anyone special out of the 3000 cadets, but merely one of the many thousands. No guild associates would bother to look my way.

“Chundong, what rank are you? I’m 2900.”

A chubby boy next to me asked. His nametag read, Kim Ho Sup. This meant he would eventually play a role. Although he couldn’t be a hero because of his nonexistent physical abilities, his gift was outstanding for gathering information.

“Chundong?”

“...I don’t know.”

I didn’t know who I was. I didn’t even know my name was Chundong. Shouldn’t I have been one of the two on stage?

“Hey c’mon, if you don’t know that...”

“I don’t know.”

Once again, I didn’t know. This world was the novel I wrote, but I was in the body of a character I had never written. Other than being a cadet in the Military Agent Academy, I was the most ordinary and connectionless character whose name didn’t even exist in the novel. In other words... I was an extra. [2]

...No, I was a speck of dust.

1. A chaebol is a powerful conglomerate in South Korea usually run by a single family. 🤔

2. In English, an extra usually refers to a background actor/performer/cast/etc. 🤔

Cube (1)

One day, I received an email. The sender asked if he could remake my novel. I was dumbfounded at the time. I might've been on a short hiatus, but to ask to remake a novel in paid serialization... of course I refused. In fact, I didn't reply at all. Partly because that would go against copyright laws and also because I felt ashamed.

My webnovel was called, The Returnee Hero. It wasn't sensational, but fairly popular and my best hit in 5 years. I had been on hiatus for 3 months when I received the email.

The reason was simple. The words wouldn't come.

At first, I poured my passion into writing. My description of the world was almost 50,000 Korean characters, and I poured my heart into each chapter. However, I fell into an awful slump after a year even though the novel continued for 6 more months until the story reached its mid-late stage. It was full of plot holes because I forcefully wrote and the characters' personalities all collapsed. Unsurprisingly, the number of readers significantly dropped. I was too afraid to even read the comments by then and ultimately went on hiatus. However, I couldn't continue a single sentence no matter how long I rested. Then I received another email to remake my novel as I wallowed in misery from my lack of writing skills.

[from: homosapiens@neighbor.com]

[Please. This is only for my personal satisfaction. I won't reveal the remake to anyone. It'll only be between me and you. Who knows? Maybe you'll find some inspiration to continue the story...]

It was a fairly long, but simple email. He wanted to remake my novel for his own gratification. How much did he like my novel to send an email like this? I agreed since I wasn't particularly proud of my work, feeling somewhat thankful and ashamed.

Was that the cause of this situation? The chance of winning the lottery was 1 in 8,145,060. What was happening to me had to be 1 in 7 billion.

I found myself in an ordinary home, but it wasn't my world and I wasn't me. That might've sounded philosophical, but it wasn't. That was literally the case. I had become an extra in my novel. An extra I didn't remember creating.

Kim Chundong. Chundong lived in an ordinary apartment, but he didn't have any parents or relatives. Of course, I didn't know why. At 9 years old, Chundong was admitted to the Military Agent Academy, a place that trained elites to fight against monsters and djinns, but what abilities did Chundong even possess to pass the entrance exam? I had no clue. I didn't know anything else about him. I didn't even know how he looked. Not even joking. I didn't.

When I looked in the mirror...

That's all I saw. An oval with a question mark.

I found this crazy body possession transmigration completely unreasonable! I went to bed like usual, but found myself on the last day of the semester at Military Agent Academy when I woke up.

I had 2 suspicions. First was that I was being pranked, but then I quickly ruled that out. I couldn't even bother to explain why. Second was that I was still dreaming, but I naturally dismissed that because the thought of being in a dream would never occur to the dreamer. More importantly, no dream would continue for 2 weeks with such clarity.

I spent the past 2 weeks pondering whether the world inside the novel should be treated as my new reality.

Ding Ding—

I laid in bed and blankly stared at the ceiling until my smartphone rang. I glanced over and saw that it was time to go to school.

“Why the hell do I need to go to school?”

The Military Agent Academy held its graduation 13 days ago, but that graduating class only consisted of non-combatant cadets. Non-combatant cadets couldn't be called heroes. Combat class cadets had to attend school for 3 more years. These 3 years would be spent at Cube, the Hero Academy. Unfortunately, this damned Chundong guy was a combat cadet. Again, I had no clue who he was.

“Ah... how frustrating.”

I barely did anything the past 2 weeks. I spent most of my time on the internet, ate food when I got hungry, went online to search for a solution, laughed at the surprisingly funny variety shows on TV, ate some more food... Anyways, the only noteworthy event was going to Seoul 2 days ago for the 3 hour long Cube Entrance Ceremony. I didn't want to go, but I had no choice since I would be expelled if I didn't attend.

“I do think I need to go, but...”

I couldn't figure out who put me here, for what reason, and with what power. I reluctantly accepted my fate after living idly for 2 weeks. It seemed I would live like this for a while, so I might as well make a living. In my novel, being a hero was everyone's dream job. Things would become dangerous midway because of villains, but the hiatus would be close. I just needed to survive until then. I was sure I'd figure something out when the time came.

7:33 A.M.

School would begin in 57 minutes. I got up and trudged to the bathroom. The question mark greeted me in the mirror.

“Screw this question mark. Is it ever going to go away?”

My face was literally a question mark and I didn't know why. It wasn't because I didn't describe this face. If that were the case, billions of other people in this world wouldn't have faces. So why was only Chundong's face a question mark?

"I don't get it."

I washed my face after murmuring begrudgingly. I could feel my skin and hair, which made everything even creepier.

After washing up, I changed into the Cube uniform I received at the entrance ceremony. Other than that, I had no other luggage. Anyone who saw this uniform would undoubtedly envy me, but I had no idea what I was doing. My face was a freaking question mark. How was I supposed to figure anything out?

As I opened the door, I glanced back at my home for the past 2 weeks — the apartment I barely found thanks to the address on my cadet card. It seemed I got attached in this short period and I felt like I would miss it.

Cube floated on an island in the middle of the East Sea. Once I left, I probably wouldn't come back.

"Haaah."

I left the comfortable apartment and stepped into a dark and unfamiliar world.

Cube (2)

Cube was the world's greatest training institute that boasted state-of-the-art magic, science, and engineering. It was located in the East Sea on a huge artificial island twice the size of Yeouido. ^[1] This huge area contained 5000 hero cadets, of which 1300 were first years. Although 2000 non-combatants graduated 2 weeks ago, elite cadets from all over the world would replace them and further increase the competition. In a sense, this place could be considered too harsh to be a proper home for 17-19 year olds. Starting from the second year, magicians who wanted to become heroes would also transfer from the National Magic University, adding another 200-300 cadets.

Furthermore, Cube also included training instructors, cafeteria ladies, store workers, cleaners, recruiters, government associates, engineers, security, doctors, and researchers who all took care of the cadets. All these individuals added up to a total population of around 50,000.

Naturally, investors highly regarded this place. Korea was a world power rivaling the United States according to my novel's setting. I listed several reasons, but the most obvious one was that I was Korean.

Chundong could be considered an elite as a Cube cadet. His destiny should be detached from the main storyline since I didn't write any story for him. He wouldn't have to live the burdening life of a main character and would probably live a carefree life. I wanted that kind of life too. I sighed in front of the classroom door.

[Novice – Veritas]

Novice referred to first year cadets, while Veritas was our class name. Simply put, I was in year 1 class 1. I knew that Shin Jonghak and Kim Suho were also in the same class. Cliques would form around them and Shin Jonghak would instigate many schemes that turned the class into a mess. Most likely, I would get swept up regardless of my will.

I carefully opened the door after collecting my breath.

The interior looked sleek and clean. White with no sign of dust and three long desks cascading up. Where should I sit? I looked around and found Shin Jonghak in the farthest back seat. He seemed imposing with his closed eyes and hands in his pockets. His childhood friend, Yoo Yeonha, chattered next to him. The 2 of them didn't pay any attention to me. Thank God.

I sat at the edge of the middle row. I looked straight ahead like a proper extra. A screen projected holograms instead of a chalkboard. I couldn't help but sigh as I looked at it. I couldn't believe I was back in school after having already done my mandatory military service. There couldn't be a worse calamity.

“...Yaaawn.”

Cube's semester began in February. It was cold outside and the warm room made me sleepy. Currently, it was 8 A.M and class would begin at 8:30. Honestly, I didn't plan to arrive this early. Traveling from Seoul to Cube took less time than I thought with a portal, and I also expected to get lost. Fortunately, something called the Cube bus ran every 10 minutes around campus, which didn't exist in my original setting. Now that I think about it, it was an oversight to always have the main character walk around the huge campus. Since the novel became real, it seemed to be fixing plot holes on its own.

Anyways, let's sleep a little. I don't want to think anymore. I closed my eyes and dropped my head on the desk.

“Now!”

A thunderous shout woke me up. The instructor stood behind the podium when I opened my eyes.

“Today's the first day, so there won't be any special training. But I hope all of you did your morning training. You can never go wrong with training in the morning when mana is most dense.”

Morning training? Oh, right. There was something like that. A training ground opened up from 5 A.M. to 8 A.M. I stuffed it into the story so the leading characters could meet.

“Now, let’s start with self-introductions. I’m Kim Soohyuk, the instructor in charge of all of you for the year.”

I vaguely recalled his name.

“My national rank is 3850. World rank 9737. By the association’s classification, I am a high-intermediate rank, grade 5 hero.”

The students’ eyes lit up. That was understandable. Only around 2 million heroes existed in the world, so rank 9737 meant he was quite skilled.

“That’s enough for my introduction.”

Kim Soohyuk grinned at the students’ reactions.

“The first day always feels special. You might not have slept due to excitement and worry, or maybe you’re already looking forward to improving yourselves. Heh, maybe you’re just happy to see your crush again.”

The cadets broke out into small laughter, but the instructor kept a stern expression.

“Cube isn’t the same as before. I promise you will have no time for relationships. In Cube, you will experience real combat scenarios. Look forward to experiencing true fear.”

His mischievous smile sent a chill down my back. Combat training? I had to take part in that too?

“Cube is objective. The only indicator of success will be your grade. That’ll be the only thing that guilds look at, so we will grade you accurately and strictly. You will be held back if you underperform. Statistically, less than half of Cube cadets graduate without repeating a semester. Even then, you can only be held back up to 2 years. Any more than that and you will be expelled. If you can't become a hero, you can become an agent or a mercenary. I take it that's not what you want."

The instructor scanned the students' faces after giving them a scare.

"I see a few familiar faces."

I did too. Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, Yoo Yeonha, Chae Nayun, Rachel, and Yi Yeonghan. These 6 were the important characters I spotted. Shin Jonghak sat with Yoo Yeonha. Kim Suho and Chae Nayun sat apart since they considered each other rivals. Princess Rachel sat alone while Yi Yeonghan sat behind Kim Suho.

"I repeat. At Cube, you will confirm what you've learned until now and hone your skills in battle. There will be no easy training here. Remember that."

With that, Kim Soohyuk announced the day's activity.

"Prepare yourselves. Our schedule today won't take long. The first task is to select your main weapon."

"Any weapon you can think of should be here."

A main weapon was exactly what it sounded like. High ranking heroes used treasured weapons, while those above the unique grade were called armaments.

I had no idea what weapon to choose since I knew nothing about Chundong.

"Stand in front of your chosen weapon. We'll supply you with the training weapons, but don't underestimate them. Their market prices go for 5 million won each."

There were all sorts of weapons, more than I could've ever imagined. Sword, spear, saber, dagger, rapier, halberd, greatsword, zweihander, bow, gun, whip, gauntlet, etc. The 100 students of Veritas each stood in front of their chosen weapon.

“Choose carefully. You won’t be able to switch for at least 6 months once you pick your main weapon.”

Swords and spears were the most popular. Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak stood in front of a sword and a spear respectively. Seventy percent chose one of the so-called holy trinity of weapons: the sword, the spear, and the saber. On the other hand, Yoo Yeonha chose the whip, Chae Nayun chose the bow, and Rachel chose the rapier. However, I simply stood there.

“Kim Chundong, what are you standing still for?” Kim Soohyuk asked.

I stared blankly at the one weapon no one paid attention to. The weapon of choice in the modern world, one that didn’t require an instruction manual and anyone could use with a click. However, every hero avoided this weapon and considered it a useless lump of metal. Most likely, it was only here for the sake of having every weapon.

This was my only choice. I couldn’t use any close ranged weapons. Even if Chundong had talent, I didn’t want to participate where blood splattered everywhere.

“Kim Chundong.”

The instructor’s voice deepened as all the other students looked at me, including Shin Jonghak and Kim Suho. I didn’t like being the center of attention, so I quickly walked up and grabbed the weapon. I could feel the metal weight in my hand as the smell of rust tickled my nose. More eyes continued to stare.

I had chosen a handgun.

1. Yeouido is a large island in Seoul, 8.4 square kilometers in size and home to 31,000 people. 📍

Cube (3)

Guns were still excellent weapons in this world, but only ordinary soldiers who couldn't wield mana used them.

Instead of traditional bullets, this world used magic bullets that contained compressed mana capable of killing low-intermediate rank, grade 8 monsters. In comparison, the training saber that cost 5 million won could only kill low rank monsters, so the gun was a stronger weapon on its own.

However, heroes and mercenaries who could wield magic power would never choose a gun because magic power couldn't be applied to it. A gun would be inherently limited in power no matter how strong the user.

The most important aspect in choosing a main weapon was its origin — the greater its origin, the higher the weapon's grade. For instance, guns could be categorized into three grades: mass-produced, custom-made, or masterpiece. Swords, on the other hand, varied a great deal from artifact, armament, treasured, mythical, legendary, etc. This was because myths and legends manifested in this world.

The sword held a long and deep history. Many swords descended from myths and legends like the sword of Freyr, demon blade Muramasa, magic sword Tyrfin, holy sword Durendal, king's sword Excalibur, etc. In this world, many legendary swords remained undiscovered in dungeons and towers. Each of them was a priceless treasure. Of course, these treasures could only be used by those proficient with swords. Heroes sought after such ancient weapons because a high grade weapon could help them break through bottlenecks.

“...Kim Chundong.”

Kim Soohyuk called my name once more before activating his smartwatch. For some reason, I could see the information hidden by the security feature. It contained information about me, cadet Kim Chundong.

“Didn’t you use a sword?”

As expected of an extra, Kim Chundong was an ordinary swordsman.

“I decided to change my weapon.”

“After coming to Cube?”

“Yes.”

Kim Soohyuk didn’t look happy, but nodded with a slight frown.

“That’s fine. Cadets can make their own choices. Instructors won’t interfere, but that also means the responsibility falls on you.”

Kim Soohyuk moved on, but students continued to whisper. They should’ve been too quiet for me to hear, but I could clearly hear them. It seemed this was Chundong’s gift. How useless.

“A gun? Is that guy insane?”

“Why did he even come to Cube if he wanted to be a mercenary?”

Before entering Cube, cadets experimented with all sorts of weapons to find what best suited their gift. However, guns didn’t require a gift. Anyone could place their finger on the trigger and pull.

“You can easily change the main weapon you chose today. You will all go through the same tests and training regardless of what you chose. That means a weapon’s weaknesses are your responsibility.”

Kim Soohyuk announced while looking my way. I get it. Damn it. I just didn’t have any other choice! The cadets here attended military academies from the ages of 7 or 8. In other words, they had practiced with their respective weapons for 10 years.

I was different. I didn't inherit Chundong's memories and I was far from a swordsman in my world. Heck, I wasn't even into sports. I wasn't much of a thrill-seeker either. In the end, I could only choose a long ranged weapon like a bow or a gun. I was at least familiar with guns thanks to Korea's mandatory military service.

"Now, we'll assign rooms and your personal belongings will be sent there. You're free afterward. Classes will begin in 4 days. That's next Monday."

Kim Soohyuk spoke as he pitifully looked at me. The main weapon selection came to an end.

"Yo gunner, are you for real?"

"I just don't understand. Are you one of those attention seekers? This is the first time I've heard of someone choosing a gun at Cube."

A group of boys struck up a conversation on the way to the dorm. I simply ignored their sarcastic remarks. They left snickering after seeing me unbothered. As expected of teenage boys, they were more interested in female students. Even I looked their way. Chae Nayun, Rachel, and Yoo Yeonha. These 3 beauties far surpassed my settings. We arrived at the dorm as I observed them from the side.

"Here are the dorms for the first years."

Six extravagant skyscrapers stood in front of us. According to Kim Soohyuk, each building contained 100 floors consisting of 5 rooms each. They distributed the rooms according to grades, but you still received your own room even if you ranked last. The Military Agent Academy's top 3 male and female cadets received their own penthouses. Kim Suho was the only one who gave it up, saying it was too big for him.

"Boys to the right, girls to the left. The key to your rooms will be stored in the smartwatches I'll be handing out now."

Other first year classes arrived while Kim Soohyuk explained. If I remembered correctly, the first year classes consisted of Veritas, Acceptance, Intelligence, Wisdom, Cultivation, Honor, Virtue, Friendship, Potential, and World — a total of 10 classes. Should I try looking for other major characters? Some of them should be antagonists.

“Chundong, Kim Chundong!”

“Huh, me? Why?”

“...Why?”

Kim Soohyuk was calling me. I was distracted for a moment and his eyes narrowed like a hawk. His fierce gaze froze me. Kim Soohyuk closed his eyes in disappointment and sighed.

“Your smartwatch, come take it.”

“Ah, yes.”

I almost tripped over my shaking legs. I could hear everyone laughing behind me. You dare laugh at your creator? They briefly angered me, but I generously forgave them. I didn’t have a choice since I couldn’t get back at them.

My room was bigger than Chundong’s apartment. It came with a couch, bed, rice cooker, TV, computer, and even magic tools.

“I still can’t get used to it.”

I pondered while slouching on the comfy couch. The weight of the handgun didn’t feel real in my hand. It might’ve been better to leave Cube if I was going to choose a gun. Having been a cadet at the Military Agent Academy should’ve been enough to let me live without starving.

However, my problem didn’t end there. Why was I sent to this world and how could I return? I felt I needed to stay close to the main storyline to find out. Although, I doubted I could get too close with just a gun. Should I try shooting it to see its power?

“Mmm...”

I just thought of something good. I jumped up from the couch and aimed at the wall. Then I closed my left eye. When I almost pulled the trigger...

— Ding Dong

The bell rang and an electronic voice sounded from outside.

“Rank 934, Kim. Chun. Dong. Take. Your. Luggage.”

It was a robot. I tossed the gun on the couch and opened the door to a fairly big box. It seemed Chundong sent his belongings ahead of time. I brought in the box.

[Military Agent Academy Rank 1543, Military Hero Academy Rank 934, Kim Chundong. Personal belongings.]

Rank 934, wasn't that too average? I pulled off the tape with a smirk.

“Huh?”

The big box only contained a single item, but I recognized it. This wasn't Chundong's, but mine. This was from my previous life, although it felt weird to call it that.

Anyways, this was the laptop I used on Earth to write my novel.

Synchronization (1)

Eight students gathered in a large room on the highest floor of Dorm 1. They all sat in a delinquent-like manner, laughing loudly at the smallest things. Occasionally, they stole glances at the person who called them over, but he remained silent as though he couldn't care less.

“Oh right, Jonghak. Isn't there a gun user in your class?”

A generic handsome guy with an amiable smile asked. Shin Jonghak narrowly opened his eyes and stared.

“Um, I just heard it from somewhere. Did I hear wrong?”

“I don't know. I'm not interested in trash.”

“R-Right. I'm not interested either. I was just curious who the fool was, haha.”

“Hanjun, you sure are curious about the strangest things.”

A charming voice spoke. Jin Hanjun turned and saw the long-haired girl who smiled. It was Yoo Yeonha. Jin Hanjun felt his heart beating faster and blurted.

“O-Oh, Yeonha. Y-You know, I was always like that.”

“What was his name? Chundong? Chunbun? It was a pretty old-fashioned name. Anyways, don't pay too much attention to him.”

“But he sure was pathetic. Why did that son of a bitch come to Cube if he was going to choose a gun?”

The foul language came from Kim Horak, a boy with a large muscular physique and an intimidating expression. With just a glance, it was obvious he specialized in close ranged combat.

Jin Hanjun asked Kim Horak, “You know him?”

“I’m in Jonghak’s class, idiot. I’m going to destroy him in combat training. I’ll disable him and chase him out.”

Everyone knew Cube’s schedule. They attended classes 5 days a week and combat training 3 days a week.

Classes consisted of comprehensive magic power training and physical training while combat training referred to battles, monster hunts, rescue missions, and more.

“I’ll destroy that son of a...”

“Don’t waste your time.”

Shin Jonghak shut down the coarse locker room talk with a single sentence. Kim Horak, who growled just a moment ago, fell silent.

“You’ll only be losing points if you beat someone that low rank. It’s better to challenge higher ranked cadets. For example...”

“Chae Nayun, try fighting her. I’m sure you’ll win.”

Yoo Yeonha interjected. Shin Jonghak glared at her, but she continued unfazed.

“Fists against bow. It’ll be easy.”

“Huh? Ah, yeah, of course I would win. But...”

Challenging her was difficult. However, he swallowed his words to look good in front of Yoo Yeonha.

“But?”

“It would be a pity. You know, my opponents often end up half-dead.”

“Huh?”

“Stop.”

Shin Jonghak cut off their conversation. Yoo Yeonha felt displeased, but feigned indifference and suppressed the feeling in her heart. Shin Jonghak likes Chae Nayun. I’m not so stupid as to be jealous. I just find it funny. Yoo Yeonha consoled herself.

“I’m leaving. It’s almost 10.”

At Cube, male and female students could only interact until 22:00. Yoo Yeonha stood up with a smile to mask her hurt feelings.

“Oh, good night.”

“Good night, Yeonha!”

“See you later!”

All the male cadets other than Shin Jonghak saw her off to the door.

A training facility called the Novice Fitness Center was located 5 minutes away from Dorm 1. It was a 1000 square meter facility filled with magical devices and exercise equipment. The facility cost well over 100 million won, but hardly anyone was currently using it. However, the empty training facility didn’t mean the future of heroes was bleak.

Cadets were potential hero candidates that would receive the admiration and envy of billions, but they were still teenagers. Simply put, many high schoolers wouldn’t train on the first day.

“I knew you’d be here.”

However, exceptions always existed. Even Hero Academy had weirdos that always enjoyed training. Kim Suho, drenched in sweat and wrestling with an exercise equipment, widened his eyes at the sudden voice.

“Chae Nayun? You’re also training?”

“Yeah, but I’m not as barbaric as you.”

Chae Nayun pointed to the gravity room with a wry smile. Kim Suho frowned at the terrifying cylindrical room.

“That’s a tough one. I can never last long in there.”

Kim Suho wiped his sweat with a towel.

“It’s not like you can’t. You just don’t need to. I’m an archer, so I need to train in there. Plus, it’s not that hard. I’ve been doing it since I was 8.”

“8 years old?”

“Yep. I have one at my house.”

“Ah.”

A gravity room cost several 100 million won at least. That meant she came from a very wealthy family.

Just like Shin Jonghak, Chae Nayun was a fourth generation chaebol. However, she carried a righteous sense of rivalry instead of a twisted superiority complex. She believed she could surpass her rivals through hard work and self-cultivation, but the monster in front of her made her waver.

“Oh, right. There’s another sharpshooter in our class now.”

Chae Nayun tilted her head at Kim Suho's words.

"Sharpshooter? Oh, that Chudong or whatever guy?"

"Uh, yeah, him. What's up with that look? Do you not like him?"

Chae Nayun's face darkened as Kim Suho spoke.

"He's not a sharpshooter. Guns can only shoot up to a kilometer at best. I still don't understand why that Dongchu guy picked a gun."

His name had unknowingly changed from Chudong to Dongchu, but Kim Suho wasn't foolish enough to correct her.

"He probably gave up. Maybe there was trouble at home or something. He's probably just going to stay for a while since being a Cube cadet won't stay on your records if you leave early."

Chae Naeyun proposed a sympathetic explanation.

"Gave up? Don't say something like that so easily."

Kim Suho remained optimistic even for others.

"Who are you to tell me what to do?"

For a moment, slight anger appeared in Chae Nayun's eyes. Kim Suho's patronizing tone didn't sit well with her since she saw him as her rival.

"Cough. Sorry," he quickly apologized.

"Anyways, keep working hard if you don't want to lose. I'm going."

"Yeah, see you later."

"Please, I'm right next door."

Chae Nayun smirked and entered the gravity room. It multiplied normal gravity by a certain factor, increasing the pressure on one's bloodstream. Training in this cylindrical room required one to operate magic power under heavy gravity, and it was one of the most painful training methods.

Just looking at the room made Kim Suho shudder. He could only shake his head as Chae Nayun nonchalantly walked in.

I held my breath in Kim Chundong's room as I looked at the laptop screen. I still couldn't understand what I was seeing. I saw it, but my brain refused to process it. It just seemed too absurd.

"What is this?"

I blurted in a shaky voice after a long silence.

"What is this?"

I recognized the window on the monitor and this format. It was the format of my settings book, but I had never written or even thought of a setting like this. This incomprehensible phenomenon made me sweat. My hands and legs shook, and my heart palpitated. Just who sent me this strange object? For what purpose and reason?

The laptop screen suddenly turned off and a face reflected from the black screen. It wasn't Kim Chundong's question mark, but my face, Kim Hajin. Then the laptop switched back on and words began to appear.

[Kim Chundong, synchronization with Kim Hajin has been completed.] [All status has been reset.] [Unique Authority, Setting Intervention, acquired.]

Synchronization (2)

An awakening phenomenon called enlightenment existed in this world. Often considered the first qualification to becoming a hero, this form of personal insight occurred when a person surpassed their limits.

Active-duty heroes had all experienced enlightenment, but most cadets hadn't because it required years of experience and training. Of course, exceptions like Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak already went through it at the ages of 15 and 17 respectively.

An enlightened person could view their gift, skills, and abilities to train more efficiently. Furthermore, enlightenment allowed you to acquire rewards from clearing towers and dungeons. The Hero Association called this phenomenon the status window, which could only be seen by its owner. However, I enjoyed exceptions and had made one for this setting.

Instead of your eyes, you could also use other senses or mediums like a book or a weapon to view your status. Special enlightenments naturally came with special powers. The main character would eventually undergo 2 enlightenments because of this setting.

“...Is this that?”

According to my settings, this laptop served as a medium for enlightenment. This special event excited me, but analyzing the situation came first. Several windows popped up when I hit the Enter key.

[Synchronization Complete] [Kim Chundong status reset. Kim Hajin status transferred.] [All status has been reset. 10 points acquired.]

[Kim Hajin] [Current SP: 64] ▷Stats: Variable Stats [Strength 1.2]

[Stamina 1.3] [Speed 1.5] [Perception 2] [Vitality 1.3] [Magic power 1]

*Invariable Stats [Intelligence – 4.105/10] [Perseverance – 5.010/10]
[Luck – 6.330/10] [Charm – 4.135/10]*

Points: 10 (Will disappear in 10 days if not used)

▷Gift: [Observation and Reading] [Null attribute] — Observation: You may observe characters in your vision — Reading: You may read the laptop's settings without a medium whenever you desire. ▷Arts (0/3) X
▷Physique (0/3) X ▷Setting Intervention [Authority] — You may modify or add settings to a non-living target by using SP. — You may spend SP to modify or add settings to your stats, gift, arts, and physique.

Novice Bonus: Once only, you may create a gift worth 10,000 SP free of cost. SP (Story Point): You will gain more SP as Kim Hajin's importance increases in the world. You may exchange points with SP.

▷??? — Will unlock when the main story is completed.

The words, Synchronization and reset, caught my attention. I didn't know what they meant, but I knew that it changed my name from Kim Chundong to Kim Hajin and gave me my face back. My stats also seemed to have adjusted appropriately. I was much weaker than Chundong, but obtained 10 spare points as compensation. I should be able to raise my desired stats with those points.

“Points are really nice.”

As this world's creator, I was well aware of the importance of points. An average adult had 1.5 points in each stat. This world lacked a natural leveling system, so points were extremely precious to raise stats and could only be obtained from towers or dungeons. Kim Suho's current magic power should be around 9. I could surpass that if I invested all 10 points into magic power.

“No.”

That wasn't the best plan. I would have to become a magician for that, but being a magician was exhausting. It was expensive and required extreme effort and memorization. I would need to increase both intelligence and perseverance, but invariable stats couldn't be raised even with points. A magician was out of the picture.

The suspicious question marks in the next line caught my attention.

▷??? — Will unlock when the main story is completed.

Perhaps this was the key to returning home. Even if it wasn't, it was the only clue I had. However, I didn't know when the main story would end. I would have to wait 10 years at the very least if it referred to when I went on hiatus. I had to take one step at a time. First, find a way home by accumulating power or authority, which required SP. I needed to involve myself in the story to obtain SP, which meant I needed to grow stronger or stand out.

“Looks like a gun wasn't such a bad choice.”

A gun met both of those conditions.

It didn't require high stats like a spear or sword, which demanded equal distribution into every stat. Likewise, the bow also required most stats except for stamina. Meanwhile, the gun only required speed, perception, and a bit of magic power. I could meet the minimum strength requirement easier with a gun.

Second, I stood out with it. No hero in this world used a gun, so that was more than enough to make me special.

I should continue using a gun until all my stats increased enough and I was mentally ready to fight monsters at close range.

I moved on to the next topic after deciding my main weapon.

Gift.

“I can create a gift.”

A gift held a special meaning for heroes. It still meant the natural ability or talent for something. However, the standard for this ability was very high, at least on the level of a psychic ability. Gifts were separated into many categories, but the 5 most common were: weapon, physical, element, magic, and nature. The main character had 2 gifts. He currently awakened the weapon class gift, Sword Saint. This super cheat gave him the world's protection when it came to swords. Simply put, his sword could cut water. This single gift was enough to make him the world's greatest hero.

That was the importance of gifts. It didn't need to be complex. A simpler and more efficient gift was often better. I began to type.

▷Gift: — Getting Stronger Everyday [Null attribute] Every 24 hours, all stats will increase by 0.1.

“Will this work?”

Even I found it shameless. When I went on hiatus, Kim Suho's strength was at 16. With this gift, I would obtain 36.5 in every stat in just 365 days. I gave it a go since I could just delete it before saving.

[Novice Bonus activated. A gift worth 10,000 SP will be created.] [10,000 SP is not enough to create this gift. Its quality will decrease.]

▷[Getting Stronger Everyday] [High-intermediate rank] [Spirit attribute] [Static] Cultivation Physique — Every 24 hours, all stats will increase by 0.0015.

[Would you like to save the modified result?]

I immediately canceled. That would take 1000 days to gain 1.5 in every stat. In 10,000 days or 25 years, I would gain 25 in every stat. I would be too old by then.

Next, I wrote down a gift I thought of before.

▷Gift: [Master Sharpshooter] [High-intermediate rank] [Null attribute] — Can wield long ranged weapons well.

I didn't put much details. I realized the laptop's capabilities from my previous attempt. It would appropriately modify whatever I wrote.

[Novice Bonus activated. A gift worth 10,000 SP will be created.] [10,000 SP is too much to create this gift. Its quality will increase.]

▷[Master Sharpshooter] [High-intermediate rank] [Composite attribute] [Static] Master Sharpshooter's Training Method: Unconditional proficiency in all long ranged weapons — Thousand-Mile Eyes: Can see farther away in detail and accurately predict target's movement path. Will increase perception and speed by 3. — Bullet Time: Once every 24 hours, you may spend 3 minutes in bullet time.

“Oh?”

It seemed quite good. I especially liked that it applied to all long ranged weapons. With this, I could even use a bow. The thousand-mile eyes was self-explanatory and bullet time probably increased my shooting speed or something of that nature. It was satisfactory, but I still wanted to change something. I wanted a gift that could grow stronger rather than a static gift that couldn't grow.

[A phrase has been modified.]

▷[Master Sharpshooter] [Low-intermediate rank] [Spirit attribute] [Evolving — Grade 10] [EXP 0%] Master Sharpshooter's Training: Familiarity with all long ranged weapons — Thousand-Mile Eyes: Can see far away and somewhat predict a target's movement path. — Bullet Time: Only in combat and once every 24 hours, you may spend 3 seconds in bullet time.

“Mmm.”

It fell from high-intermediate rank to low-intermediate and the skills became weaker overall, but an evolving gift was much better in the grand scheme of things. Not to mention, the main story would continue for at least 7 years. Ah, I'm getting sad again.

“Fuck.”

I swore and shook it off.

[Points: 10]

Next, I went back to my stats. How should I spend these 10 precious points? I shouldn't be able to increase my invariable stats. In that case, I had to pick from variable stats. However... I just might be able to modify my invariable stats.

“Should I exchange these points for SP?”

Points could be exchanged for SP, which I could then use to increase my invariable stats. I decided to test it out first before making an irreversible mistake. Thankfully, I already had 64 SP. I tried increasing my perseverance stat from 5.010 to 5.500.

[You have modified an invariable stat using 64 SP.] [You do not have enough SP. The value will be adjusted. Perseverance has increased to 5.060.]

“It worked?”

My eyes widened. If this worked, what I should do next was obvious. I had to convert the points into SP and invest in invariable stats. The question was which: intelligence, perseverance, luck, or charm? Honestly, charm was extremely enticing as a man.

“Luck it is.”

I knew all too well the importance of luck in this world and recalled a line from my novel.

[The luck stat doesn't just affect the chances of finding treasures in dungeons. It also affects the chances of receiving bonus stats from training, chances to land a critical strike, and even chances to win the lottery. It was the best stat that applied to every situation... Luck mattered the most in life.]

With no hesitation, I exchanged the 10 points for 10,000 SP and spent all of it to increase my luck. What I wanted was [Luck — 10/10].

[You do not have enough SP. The value will be adjusted.]

The laptop rejected my ridiculous wish, but returned a reasonable compromise.

[Luck — 9.100]

“9.1 is the highest I can go, huh.”

Since 9 was the limit for humans, 9.1 was extremely high. However, I didn’t hit save and canceled the modification. It would take a bit longer, but a more efficient method existed.

First, I raised my luck from 6.3 to 6.4 before saving. Next, to 6.5. Then, to 6.6, 6.7, 6.8... I kept repeating this...

[A mysterious luck has been applied! Your luck stat has further increased by 0.01!] [A strange luck has been applied! Your luck stat has further increased by 0.05!]...

With this method, my luck reached 9.1 with just 9000 SP and I saved 1000 SP. For reference, the Great Sage of this world had a 9.5 intelligence stat. As 9 was the limit for normal humans, spending the remaining 1000 SP was unlikely to increase my luck any further. Invariable stats scaled exponentially, so it was wiser to spend the remaining SP elsewhere.

“Perseverance should be good.”

I would never be able to handle Cube’s training with my current mindset. I didn’t even want to do 10 push-ups. Without hesitation, I invested the remaining 1000 SP into perseverance. I wrote, [Perseverance — 8/10].

[You do not have enough SP. The value will be adjusted.] [Perseverance — 6.600]

I didn’t feel too satisfied, but pressed save. My luck would only apply after saving.

[An incredible luck has been applied!] [Your perseverance stat has increased from 6.600 to 7.207!]

“Wow.”

Now I was satisfied, but I didn't feel any changes yet. The normal stat for an average person was 4 and 7 would be a talented individual. I would become just as overpowered as the main character by increasing my invariable stats whenever I gained SP. Immediately after such a blissful thought...

[An error that could greatly affect the plot has been detected. From now on, invariable stats cannot be modified with SP.]

A warning window popped up and shut down my plans.

“Hmmm.”

Intervention by the world? It displeased me, but I had no choice. Nothing would change even if I argued with the air. Plus, I already increased my luck and got what I wanted.

“Whatever.”

I closed the laptop and got up with a grin. Now, it was time to test my new gift.

Synchronization (3)

I left my room in the middle of the night with the handgun rattling uncomfortably in my pocket. I headed towards the shooting range, a dome-shaped building consisting of 20 training rooms located east of Dorm 1. The targets were oddly distributed around the sharpshooter because magic arrows could easily change their trajectory.

— Rank 934, Kim Hajin, confirmed.

An unfamiliar robotic voice called my name when I held my smartwatch against the entrance. Indeed, my name had changed from Kim Chundong to Kim Hajin. I walked inside feeling a bit odd. Ten doors evenly stood apart past the wide circular lobby. I held up my smartwatch against a door.

— Rank 934, Kim Hajin, confirmed.

It opened to a simple shooting range. The center of this circular 130 square meter area contained a scaffolding for the shooter. I walked towards the low scaffolding and stood on it. A courteous robotic voice rang out from the ceiling.

— Initializing targets. Please select the number of targets. You may choose between 2 and 20.

“Ten.”

My voice rang out and blue insects popped up from the ground. I looked at the targets surrounding me, mole crickets that could barely be considered monsters. They were similar to the mole crickets everyone knew, but bigger.

— Select your difficulty from stage 1 to stage 9.

Higher levels naturally meant targets moved faster. At stage 9, targets also attacked. Their attacks would only sting at best, but I still considered them dangerous.

“Stage 4.”

I set the difficulty to 4 and loaded my magic bullets. It would’ve been possible to compress magic power into bullets, but the current me didn’t have such talents. Even if I did, using a bow would be much more destructive and efficient.

“Start.”

I notified the system and aimed at the leftmost target. The slow mole cricket seemed to notice as it sped up. It scuttled around without a set pattern, but I could see an afterimage of its future path. I pulled the trigger after predicting its movements.

A blue flare shot out from the barrel. It didn’t make a loud bang like the guns from Earth. The bullet silently pierced the mole cricket. I didn’t even bother to check the results. I moved on to the next target as I fired. My hand moved on its own. One, two, three, four... ten. I pulled the trigger 10 times as the mole crickets scattered into mana particles. Only 2 survived.

“Oho.”

I was quite impressed. I managed to hit every mole cricket except the farthest 2 after gaining my gift.

— Your training has ended. Elapsed time: 1.37 seconds. Sharpshooting score: 80/100

In just 1.37 seconds.

An eternal truth. The better you are at something, the more fun it is. It was fun because you were good. I felt like I was at the arcades and shouted start once more.

An eternal truth. No matter how fun something is, doing it 20 times makes it boring. I ended my shooting practice at around 3 A.M. After leaving the room, I relaxed my sore finger and heard a noise from next door.

— Whoosh Whoosh Whoosh

The faint sound of shockwaves from arrows cutting through the air. Curious, I snuck a peek. I shouldn't have been able to see, but I saw through the door. It turned faint and the interior revealed itself. The scene I saw showed why bows were superior to guns.

"It's Chae Nayun."

Chae Nayun practiced with a serious face. Four magic arrows sat on her bow. She still lacked magic power technique, so she couldn't perform a split shot that multiplied a single arrow into different directions.

— Whoosh!

Chae Nayun released the bowstring. Her arrows left a blue trace as they hurled towards 20 targets and obliterated them.

"Amazing."

I exclaimed in shock. Still, Chae Nayun's real aptitude wasn't for bows. Another weapon suited her more, but just what kind of a setting did I make if she was already this good? Suddenly, Chae Nayun turned around and met my eyes. She couldn't see through the wall, but I still felt strange and quickly escaped.

*[Sharpshooting training has increased your gift's proficiency by 3%]
[Repeated sharpshooting training has increased your gift's proficiency by 2.9%] [Luck has been applied! Your perception and speed have increased by 0.1!] [Repeated sharpshooting training has increased your gift's* proficiency by 2.8%]...

The above messages appeared on my laptop. Master Sharpshooter's proficiency shot up along with bonus stats from my luck. I gained 50% in proficiency EXP thanks to the gift's low grade. Achieving grade 9 didn't seem too difficult.

▷[Master Sharpshooter] [Low-intermediate rank] [Spirit attribute]
[Evolving — Grade 10] [Proficiency EXP 50%] — Master Sharpshooter's Training: Familiarity with all long ranged weapons — Thousand-Mile Eyes: Can see far away and somewhat predict a target's movement path. — Bullet Time: Only in combat and once every 24 hours, you may spend 3 seconds in bullet time.

This gift seemed better the more I thought about it, especially how it applied to every long ranged weapon. It was easier to currently raise my proficiency with a gun, but I would have to switch eventually since bows were stronger.

“But what's up with the SP?”

[You have obtained 0.2 SP!] [You have obtained 0.2 SP!] [An auspicious gift! You have obtained 1 bonus SP.] [You have obtained 0.2 SP]...

I only obtained 5 SP after practicing for 20 rounds. Choosing a gun as my main weapon gave me 64 SP, which meant standing out gave more SP than quietly training.

“Tsk.”

I only received a small amount, but I still had uses for it. Our dreaded combat training would take place tomorrow. I needed to make up for my lacking physical abilities to score even the fewest points. My biggest problem was stamina. I was weaker than an ordinary person after investing everything into luck.

[Training Sneakers] — Specially crafted sneakers. Will increase stamina and speed by 0.3 points.

“Maybe with this...”

The easiest way to fix my problem was with equipment. I began to tap on the keyboard.

[Mystical Training Sneakers] — Specially crafted sneakers with a mystical power. Will increase stamina and speed by 0.3 points. Will enhance energy and stamina recovery.

[You do not have enough SP.]

The modification I made was canceled without any adjustments. I wasn't too surprised. After all, I only had 5 SP, but it was still too early to give up.

[Mystical Training Sneakers] — Specially crafted sneakers with a mystical power. Will increase stamina and speed by 0.3 points. When activated, energy and stamina recovery is enhanced for 1 hour. After use, this effect cannot be used again for 24 hours. This effect disappears after 1 month.

I added 3 restrictions to save SP. A 24 hour cooldown, a 1 hour duration, and its effect would disappear after 1 month.

[You have used 5 SP. Would you like to save?]

“Oh! It worked!”

I ecstatically hit the Enter key and a blue light flashed from the laptop. The dancing light melted into sneakers with a streak of color on them.

Combat Training (1)

Outcall was a magic power explosion that shook the world 50 years ago. Mysterious entities like towers, dungeons, and monsters appeared after this incident. These chaotic existences destroyed the very foundation of humanity and transformed the blue planet into hell. Towers and dungeons endlessly produced monsters that devoured humans.

Humanity's science and technology lost all meaning in front of these newfound calamities. Society collapsed and the rule of law returned to law of the jungle. Survivors crumbled to their instincts and lost all human virtues.

Heroes emerged like shining stars within this hellfire. They wielded transcendental powers and corrected the chaos. The world was reconstructed just as quickly as it collapsed. They brought about miracles with gifts bestowed by the heavens. With their help, humanity regained its virtues and developed magic science and magic engineering.

Towers, dungeons, and monsters were all eventually designated as targets to destroy. However, the differences among them were great. Towers required many people and a long period of time. On the other hand, a single person could conquer a dungeon depending on its difficulty. Towers bestowed the greatest rewards that humans could never dream of.

What was the name of the tower conquered by the guild, Apostle of Saints, on August 17, 2023 and what was its reward?

"Minor questions like these don't come up often, but you should still know about the conquests of towers and dungeons."

Morning class was Post-Outcall History. The few sentences I had written turned into a 400 page textbook. We had to remember rewards from towers, names of monsters, dungeons in Korea, conquerors of towers and dungeons, and countless other facts.

I couldn't process all that information even as the author. Thankfully, it didn't pose a problem with my gift, Observation and Reading.

[On August 17, 2023, the Apostle of Saints conquered the Tower of Floods and obtained an ocean stone.]

I had nothing to worry about since I could obtain something's information whenever I looked at it.

"Huuu..."

On the other hand, the girl in front of me scratched her head and sighed. I couldn't help but laugh as I looked at the character I had created. Chae Nayun hated studying. She could've been the number one ranked female cadet, but she had to give up first place to Rachel due to written exams. Written exams were too much for her even if she gnashed her teeth in mortifying defeat.

Chae Nayun half-turned and glared at me. She must've heard me laugh. After all, sharpshooters had keen senses. I pretended to be calm and lowered my head into my notes. Chae Nayun clicked her tongue and faced forward.

The lesson continued about locations with high mana, monster behavior, djinns on the wanted list... The bell finally rang after 2 hours.

"Make sure to review your notes today. Otherwise, you'll cry on the exam."

The grey-haired professor wearing round eyeglasses left with those words.

"Argh, so annoying. Why do I have to learn all this? Written exams are so annoying."

Chae Nayun complained the moment the professor left. However, she happily looked forward to the next class.

Anti-monster combat training. As its name suggested, we would fight against monsters. The monsters were mana puppets, but their appearance and destructive power matched the real thing. They were slightly weaker than their real counterparts, but a high chance of injury still existed.

I felt scared.

“We’re meeting at the field in 20 minutes!”

A loud voice rang out in the classroom. I turned towards the oval face, small gentle eyes, and muscular body that didn’t quite match. He was Kim Suho’s supporter, Yi Yeonghan. The instructor chose Yi Yeonghan to be class president since Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak didn’t get along.

Sigh.

I just hoped it wouldn’t hurt.

After a 20 minute break, everyone from Veritas gathered at the Novice Field. It seemed quite crowded with 100 students. The cadets shared their nervousness and excitement with friends, but I stood alone. Only I was alone.

“Fuck...”

Instructor Kim Soohyuk showed up as I wallowed in loneliness. The cadets immediately lined up into 10 columns in front of him.

“I’ll get straight to announcing the teams since I’m sure you all know what this lesson is about. Unless something special happens, your teams will remain the same until after midterms.”

Team formation. The cadets grew restless.

A team generally consisted of 5 members: 2 warriors, 1 sharpshooter, 1 supporter, and 1 utility player. Warriors were usually close range combatants like spearmen or swordsmen, sharpshooters were long ranged attackers, and supporters were people like Yoo Yeonha and Yi Yeonghan who attacked and also supported main attackers.

Finally, the utility player was generally a magician, so that would be excluded until after the first year. Supporters also had the additional role of protecting magicians. After all, magicians could easily turn the tides of battle.

My role would be a bit iffy. Roles were assigned based on our main weapon. I wasn't a warrior, but I was also too lacking to be a proper sharpshooter. Guns had a much shorter range than bows and were weaker compared to melee weapons.

[Sharpshooter (long range) — Rank 4 Chae Nayun, Rank 9 Im Yeongjin... Rank 934 Kim Hajin, Rank 945 Oh Jiyun]

It seemed I was assigned as a sharpshooter.

“Team members will be selected fairly. Lower ranked cadets will be paired with higher ranked cadets.”

Kim Soohyuk announced to the class.

An artificial intelligence developed by the Great Sage administered Cube's training classes, so there was no room for foul play. I could see the pitiful results with my own eyes.

[Team 1] [Kim Suho / Kim Lang] [Sung Seung-Un / Paine]

[Team 2] [Demian / Rosen] [Chun Lee / Chae Nayun]

...

[Team 5] [Jin Hoseung / Hazuki] [Kim Hajin / Yoo Yeonha]

“...”

I became speechless at my assigned team. Yoo Yeonha. Yoo Yeonha was on my team. In my novel, she was one of the most beloved and hated characters. Her eyes briefly flashed with contempt as we made eye contact. Her negativity disappeared by the time I blinked. Surprisingly, she walked towards me with a smile. Her long hair fluttered with each dignified step and her beautiful lips moved.

“Ah, um, I...”

“Hoseung.”

I wasn’t the one she greeted. Meeting eyes with her was also my imagination. She spoke to the boy behind me.

“Ah, hello.”

“Weren’t we on the same team before?”

Yoo Yeonha talked too politely for a 17 year old, but that was how she kept her distance.

“Yes? Ah, right, haha.”

Jin Hoseung broke into a cold sweat after exchanging just 2 sentences. Yoo Yeonha was difficult to talk to, and it wasn’t just because of her background or personality. Yoo Yeonha and Shin Jonghak were officially a couple in everyone else’s eyes, but it was just a one-sided crush from Yoo Yeonha.

“Ah, Hazuki is here too.”

“Hello...”

Hazuki was a Japanese cadet as her name suggested. She walked over with teary eyes. Yoo Yeonha glanced at her slightly displeased, then spoke.

“Who’s the other person?”

Yoo Yeonha didn’t like people who lacked confidence, so I confidently stepped up. Hazuki and Jin Hoseung turned towards me.

“Uh...”

Hazuki tilted her head as though she didn’t know who I was.

“Ah, the guy who chose a gun.”

When Jin Hoseung mentioned that, I checked Yoo Yeonha’s expression. Unexpectedly, she didn’t show any emotion, but I found that even more frightening. Then Kim Soohyuk suddenly shouted.

“There’s no time for chitchat. You should’ve received the coordinates and information on your smartwatch regarding your target. Get going!”

Our class consisted of 25 teams. There were a total of 100 teams after the other classes joined. Our mission was to kill the monster at the coordinates. We would be ranked on how quickly and safely we completed the mission.

Wiing — Yoo Yeonha projected her smartwatch into the air as soon as the instructor shouted.

[Blackhump Octopus 37° 31’ 32” N]

The monster’s name and coordinate were displayed. Yoo Yeonha spoke briefly.

“Let’s go. We can talk while we’re moving.”

I ran through a field. The black hump octopus should be beyond this ocean of golden reeds, but I felt exhausted due to my horrible physical stats. The sneakers I made last night seemed useless. Its 1 hour duration hadn't run out yet, but my stamina bottomed out. In the end, I fell and the team had to stop.

"It's fine. What matters is whether or not we can kill the monster."

Jin Hoseung handed me a water bottle as I gasped on the ground.

"He's right. Apparently, this is common when you work with magicians."

Hazuki also consoled me with her mediocre Korean. I felt thankful, but I was concerned about Yoo Yeonha's reaction the most. Contrary to my expectations, she didn't seem too displeased. She simply sat modestly on the ground, reading information about the black hump octopus on her watch. I also pulled up the information in my head.

[Blackhump Octopus] — low-intermediate rank monster — Special features: The main body is weak, but numerous baby octopuses will pop out from the hump on its head. They are quite difficult to deal with as dozens pop out at a time. The baby octopuses can suck human blood and turn them into mummies in just a second. They are classified as low rank monsters. — Strategy: Eliminate all baby octopuses. Alternatively, destroy the black hump where the main body's magic power is stored. — Weakness: Black hump — Strength: Suction cups and baby octopuses.

I received thorough information about the blackhump octopus perhaps because I wrote the setting for it.

"I'll deal with the babies while you two take care of the main body."

Yoo Yeonha turned off her smartwatch and ordered Hazuki and Jin Haseung. Ah, I get it now. Yoo Yeonha acted like I didn't exist. I was on the same level as air, which was why she didn't reprimand me or seem displeased.

"...Let's go now."

I forced myself to stand after her offensive treatment. My stamina had recovered thanks to the sneakers.

“Yeah. I’ll go first. Hup!”

I ran ahead of them. I was much faster than when I was on Earth, but I found myself far behind them again after 10 seconds.

Combat Training (2)

“There.”

We found our target when my legs almost gave out. A giant octopus ran amok near the beach. Its black hump looked like a second head.

“I’m ready.”

Yoo Yeonha lowered her body into the thicket as Jin Hoseung and Hazuki took out their sword and axe respectively.

“Baby octopuses will pop out of its hump when we charge. When that happens, the two of you should fall back until I kill them all. Warriors need to save their magic power as much as possible. Black hump octopuses have high regeneration, so we need to remove its hump in a single blow...”

Yoo Yeonha continued explaining. Honestly, it was best to leave the baby octopuses to me. A handgun had a high base power, so it could kill any number of baby octopuses in 1 blow. On the other hand, it would be quite difficult for me to damage the main body unless a critical hit occurred. However, Yoo Yeonha didn’t say anything to me, so I just stood there and refrained from yawning.

“Then let’s start.”

The moment her words fell, Jin Hoseung and Hazuki charged. Jin Hoseung let out a deafening roar after closing in.

“Kueeeek!”

“Kyaaak!”

My ears throbbed, but it had the desired effect. The black hump octopus lowered its head after discovering us and pointed its cannon-shaped hump at us.

BOOM!

A thunderous noise erupted and dozens of creatures shot out. Mushy lumps rained down on us. Jin Hoseung and Hazuki stepped aside as Yoo Yeonha brandished her whip, but I held up my gun before she could do anything.

“Hey, you don’t have to...”

Yoo Yeonha tried to stop me, but I ignored her. Now was the only time I could shine. I activated bullet time. Immediately, the blood in my body began to boil. My vision grew clearer and the world slowed down. I could see and predict the trajectory of every raining octopus. Their one-dimensional movements made them easier targets than the mole crickets. I had 20 magic bullets loaded and just had to aim and pull the trigger. My additional luck would be icing on the cake.

The magic bullets silently cut through the air and left behind blue traces. One bullet per target. I emptied the clip in a second, but instantaneously reloaded. I shot another 20 bullets, then another 20. The world returned to normal after I fired 60 bullets nonstop.

“...Huh?”

The creatures that covered the sun disappeared without a trace. The sudden change confused Yoo Yeonha and the others.

“C-Come on. Let’s go.”

“Ah, right.”

“Yeah!”

Yoo Yeonha snapped out of her daze and rebuked Hazuki and Jin Hoseung. Only then did the 2 warriors charge at the main body. Yoo Yeonha’s long whip shot out and grabbed onto its hump.

A mole cricket shot out from the ground the moment she crushed the hump. Kieeek — It cried and jumped towards Yoo Yeonha. I fired my last bullet and hit it on the mark. The mole cricket exploded and all its blood and mucus splashed on Yoo Yeonha. She quickly spread out her magic power before the goo covered her. The mucus slid down after hitting her barrier.

“Uk...”

However, she couldn't block everything. Yoo Yeonha gave me a deathly glare, but she knew it wasn't the time to complain. Her whip shot towards the octopus once again. It danced among the sword and axe against the tentacles.

Yoo Yeonha brilliantly severed 4 of the 8 tentacles without straying more than a foot away from me. She thoroughly fulfilled her duties of supporting the warriors and protecting the sharpshooter.

Yoo Yeonha closed her eyes and sighed after the battle ended. The mole cricket's blood and mucus had dried around her ankles and snow-white collarbone. She took out a handkerchief and wiped it off. Then she turned towards me.

“Excuse me.”

Her eyes smiled, but she didn't seem so friendly. I silently looked at her. The hidden anger in her eyes shone like blades. Yoo Yeonha was a fearsome woman. She hated getting dirty more than anything else.

“You didn't need to bother. I can take care of a mole cricket just fine. And much more cleanly.”

“My clothes ended up dirty because of you.”

Two insensitive warriors suddenly approached.

“Whew, that was swift thanks to you. You killed all the baby octopuses, right? Guns have their advantages, huh.”

“That was amazing!”

Jin Hoseung and Hazuki were covered in blood and ink. Yoo Yeonha slowly stepped away, afraid of getting dirtier.

[Team 5 — Total time: 58 minutes 58 seconds. 16/100]

We placed 16th out of 100 teams. Yoo Yeonha didn't seem too happy even though we placed high, but she didn't mind too much since grades were based on individual performances filmed through the drones. Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak's teams obviously took first and second place respectively. She was bitter that Chae Nayun's team came in higher.

“Drones filmed everything. They'll be sent to your smartwatches, so analyze why you were quick or slow, your team's compatibility, and how you can improve for next time. It'll be part of your grades.”

Kim Soohyuk gave a long-winded statement. Yoo Yeonha looked behind her. A dull-looking man yawned in a daze. It was entirely his fault they couldn't reach the monster sooner. What should've taken 10 minutes ended up taking 50.

However, they also managed to finish 16th thanks to him. His bullets quickly killed every baby octopus in just 3 seconds. Yoo Yeonha had prepared to fight them for 15 minutes, so he contributed a great deal. Of course, she played the biggest role since she crushed the main body.

Yoo Yeonha held back her impulse to blame someone, but that only increased her envy towards Chae Nayun. She faced forward and glared at the back of Chae Nayun's head. She would've smacked the back of that head if she could get away with it. Yoo Yeonha's hands trembled towards Chae Nayun, but she only lightly tapped Chae Nayun's shoulder instead of doing anything extreme.

"Nayun, how was it?"

"Hm? Ah, as you can see, 4th place. What a shame. I wanted to beat Shin Jonghak and Rachel. What about you?"

"I'm... 16th."

"Oh? Wow, you got 16th with that gun-using sharpshooter?"

"We got the black hump octopus, so we just had to remove the hump."

"You were the one who did it, right?"

Yoo Yeonha nodded with a bright smile.

"Yep."

I worked out in the training room late at night. I felt like dying after I ran. It was necessary, so I focused on working out for 3 hours. Thankfully, the training equipment wasn't too different from Earth's, only that the weights were heavier. For example, the leg extension machine went from 15 kg to 500 kg.

"Ugh."

I fumbled back to the dressing room like a zombie and collapsed on a seat. I took out my laptop and a fatigue recovery drink after catching my breath for 5 minutes. First, I checked today's results on the laptop.

[Luck has been applied! Your accuracy has greatly increased because the enemy is low-ranked!] [All attacks have hit their mark! Your gift's proficiency has increased by 20%!] [Perception has increased by 0.03.] [Luck has been applied! Your eyes and ears seem to work better!] [You have gained 27 SP.]

As expected, I got lucky with my accuracy during today's combat training. I gained some SP too because I stood out to Yoo Yeonha.

[Your strength has increased by 0.02 after working out.] [Your stamina has increased by 0.02 after working out.] [Your vitality has increased by 0.02 after working out.] [Mana has mysteriously seeped into your torn muscle fibers! Your strength, stamina, and vitality have increased by 0.03!]

I received more stats from working out than I expected. Something like this would've been impossible on Earth. My enlightenment and luck played a huge role.

I wasn't sure I could even get up tomorrow with sharp pains all over my body. Of course, I already had a solution in mind.

[Fatigue Recovery Drink] — Will restore your body from fatigue. Contains a tiny amount of temperate mana.

Current SP: 36

This was a fatigue recovery drink provided by Cube. I planned on modifying its effect. Of course, something that completely restored the body probably wouldn't be possible. Even if I could, it would be a huge waste of SP. I could come up with a decent product with the right amount of restrictions. I added a line to the drink's description.

— If Kim Hajin goes to sleep within 2 hours of use, he will slowly recover from physical fatigue over 8 hours.

I added 4 restrictions: only Kim Hajin, sleeping within 2 hours, physical fatigue only, and non-instantaneous recovery, but slowly over 8 hours.

[You can save the modified setting using 0.5 SP.]

The drink already had a similar effect, so it only required exactly what I gained from working out. I gulped down the drink after saving the modified effect.

Burp.

Now, I had to go back and sleep. Otherwise, the drink would be a waste.

“Agh, my joints.”

I staggered away like a zombie.

At the same time, Yoo Yeonha analyzed the day’s video from combat training. She could watch the battle from multiple angles with several drones filming each team.

“At least he’s quick.”

She became more curious the more she watched it. The black hump octopus fired a total of 59 babies, but the sharpshooter killed all of them before they could even touch the ground. Black hump octopuses usually reabsorbed the babies they shot out to recover their energy. Then they’d shoot more out from their hump. Yoo Yeonha had prepared for a drawn-out battle because of this annoying trait, but the actual fight ended in just 10 minutes.

“I don’t remember seeing him in Military Agent Academy.”

This sharpshooter grew stranger the more she thought about it. He had abnormally low stamina and had also suddenly changed his weapon. That was all Yoo Yeonha noted down about Kim Hajin. Then she suddenly received a message.

[What’s up?]

It came from Shin Jonghak. Yoo Yeonha tapped away on the hologram keyboard with a grin.

[Analyzing the video from today.]

[Why are you doing that now?]

[I'm going to inherit a guild in the future, so I have to look for promising talents.]

[There are none in your team. They're all trash.]

Yoo Yeonha snickered. He was right, but also arrogant. She would've found such behavior detestable from anyone other than Shin Jonghak, but the fact that he was Shin Jonghak turned it into chicness. It wasn't logical, but the reason she liked Shin Jonghak was far from logical.

[How's that gun-shooting guy?]

"Haha."

So he was curious after all. He had a pretty cute side.

[He's okay. He did a man's worth of work. Exactly what you'd expect from rank 934.]

In 2.78 seconds. He shot 60 bullets and hit 59 in that short amount of time. Yoo Yeonha pulled with her index finger. Was it possible to pull the trigger 20 times in a second? Or did that handgun have an automatic firing function?

Ding Dong —

The bell rang in the middle of her thoughts.

[Ah, my room service is here.]

Yoo Yeonha hopped towards the door and opened it. Her neatly dressed butler waited in front. She was happy to see the butler her father picked out for her.

"Thank you, Sechan."

The butler respectfully bowed. Yoo Yeonha took her food and came back to her seat.

[I'm back. Were you waiting?]

Yoo Yeonha lifted the dome-shaped lid off the elegant silver platter.

[No.]

She had ordered fast food. A hamburger with a side of french fries and a bottle of Coke, a meal only for commoners.

First, she munched on a fry.

[What did you order?]

Shin Jonghak asked. Yoo Yeonha casually replied.

[Just the usual. A little bit of foie gras entier.]

Within Everyday Life (1)

Wednesday's first class was anti-personnel training, a 2 hour class where cadets simply paired up and sparred. Cadets used training weapons to avoid injuries and make grading easier. Kim Suho paired with Yi Yeonghan and Shin Jonghak paired with Kim Horak.

"Uwooh."

"Rank 934 Kim Hajin, get up!"

"I, I can't."

As for me, I paired with the anti-personnel combat instructor rather than a cadet because there were no training guns. I was stuck fighting the instructor since a real gun could cause serious injury.

"What do you mean you can't!"

The female instructor ordered me to give my all. Exactly 1 minute later, it was the instructor giving it her all. It seemed my gift threatened her more than she anticipated.

"Get up!"

She furiously grabbed my collar when a bullet grazed her forearm. I suddenly regretted spending my first 2 weeks in this world loafing around. I should've been working out.

"I can't continue."

"Yes, you can!"

"My body won't move."

“It will!”

The instructor forcefully pulled me up.

“Put your guard up and do something!”

She ordered, but the handgun in my hand felt heavy. I pulled the trigger half-heartedly. The instructor blocked the bullet with her hand and tackled me. I couldn't resist and fell. A stinging pain coursed through my body.

“I give up. I give up.”

“You didn't move after shooting. I said do something!”

Chak! She slapped my face.

“GET UP!”

Chak! I was starting to get annoyed. Come to think of it, wasn't this woman younger than me?

“I said, GET UP!”

I refused to take it a third time. I grabbed her arm, then...

“You fucker.”

I bit the instructor's hair.

“Ah! What are you doing!? 934... Ak! Let go! Let go! Let go!”

I gnashed on her hair and pulled back as though my life depended on it. My strange actions turned the surroundings silent, but I didn't have the time to pay attention to something like that.

“T-This is a warning! Let go! I said, LET GO!”

This hair, I'll bite it off. I swear I'll bite it off.

“Y-You...!”

I could see the instructor's fist in front of my eyes. I had no memories of what happened next, but it didn't feel too bad since I managed to gain 40 SP.

Cube also had various clubs. Head instructor Kim Soohyuk said we wouldn't be able to enjoy our youths, but I didn't create Cube to be so horrible. While it was normal to be covered in monster blood or to kill djinns from time to time, Cube encouraged cadets to enjoy their hobbies for mental health. Being in a relationship was technically prohibited, but tacitly allowed by all the faculty.

Cube's clubs were no different from college circles. Club promotions happened in the second week after first year cadets arrived.

I set the number of clubs in my novel to around 100, but that might not have been realistic considering the school only had 5000 cadets. A club existed for practically any topic: hobby clubs like bowling, pool, VR, and also academic clubs like studying, martial arts, and training.

I planned to join more than one to stay close to the main characters. I already knew who was in which. Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan were in traveling. Chae Nayun was in traveling and hunting. Yoo Yeonha was in traveling and academics. Shin Jonghak wasn't in any and Rachel was in reading. Obviously, I had to choose the traveling club. Next, I had to decide between the hunting club, reading club, or academic club. I could join all 4, but that would be too tiring. I only had one body, and the easiest club to gain SP seemed to be the academics club. Among the academic clubs, the academic circle called Veritas contained an important antagonist early in the story.

“VR club, Folklore Village... Interesting.”

I felt strange sitting on a bench in Cube's Hero Park. The park bustled with students after classes had ended. It all felt too mysterious. The setting I had scribbled took a life of its own, filling up missing holes and creating this complete world. Many things were new to me, like the VR club and the couple secretly making out behind the bushes.

“Sigh, that’s a bit...”

I left with a frown after seeing their public display. Then I busily ran around to collect club applications around the park. Four forms. I didn’t receive favorable looks when I asked, but I succeeded nonetheless.

“I’ll need to join the traveling club for sure.”

Four leading characters participated in the traveling club because I simply wanted them together for major and minor events. The club played a major role, but it wasn’t popular. It only had 20 students from all three grades, but third years were usually busy with guild interviews and internships, so the club really only had about 14. That was just how I set it because more people seemed troublesome.

I confirmed the traveling club. I decided to join just 2 more after some thought. I chose the hunting and academic club instead of the reading club.

Clubs began after classes and these 3 never overlapped. The academic club met on Tuesdays, hunting on Thursdays, and traveling was either Saturday or Sunday. I ended up leaving Rachel out, but I couldn’t interact with her yet anyways.

“Okay.”

Thwack. I flicked the application papers and stood up. The club leaders would surely give me strange looks.

The capital of Korea, Seoul was filled with guilds that vied for the world’s top position. Distinguished guilds such as Essence of the Strait, Desolate Moon, and Frost Sanctuary were all located in the collective guild district of Seoul, making it the center for djinn and monster subjugation requests, technological advances, and businesses.

“The guild visit is set for the Friday in 2 weeks.”

Skyscrapers filled Seoul’s guild district, but one particular building wasn’t too tall. However, the geometric design would catch any passerby’s attention. It belonged to the guild, Creator’s Sacred Grace.

The building’s interior was double its appearance with cutting-edge magic engineering and its mana density was always maintained above grade 3.

“Mmm, understood.”

Vice-leader Yun Seung-Ah reviewed her secretary’s report in this mana-rich environment for heroes. Currently, Yun Seung-Ah was solely devoted to finding promising talents. Everyone widely acknowledged that Cube’s freshmen class was exceptional. Some had gifts that could alter guild rankings. Their first place position would be jeopardized if she let her competitors take them. Yun Seung-Ah stared at the guild’s intranet database, which contained videos from Cube’s first combat training.

“Kim Suho really is something.”

Her screen displayed the combat training’s 1st place finisher, Kim Suho. His sword qi looked extremely sharp, but that wasn’t the only awe-striking scene. His techniques flowed like water. Like a formless style, his swordsmanship didn’t resemble anyone else’s. With this, he seemed to tear apart space along with the monster.

“Yes, he doesn’t seem close to any guilds either. He’s first on our priority.”

“I want to bring him in no matter what. Oh? Someone’s using a gun?”

Kim Suho’s video ended and another caught her curiosity.

“Yes. There were some talks about it in the guild community.”

“Was there? Sorry, I’ve been too busy lately.”

"It was uploaded from the Cube community. He was in Yoo Yeonha's team, which was why it gathered so many views in the first place. He's quite the strange one according to insiders."

"Mmm... Strange one, huh?"

Yun Seung-Ah watched the video out of curiosity.

[Team 5] [Jin Hoseung, Hazuki, Yoo Yeonha, Kim Hajin]

It didn't awe her, but the 10 minute video most certainly drew her attention.

"He wasn't using an automatic rifle, but still managed to fire 60 shots in 2.78 seconds?"

That was physically impossible. The gun wouldn't endure even if you could pull the trigger 60 times. A trans-physical power was at play.

"Yes. It seems he changed weapons from a sword to a gun as soon as he entered Cube."

"...Enlightenment."

"I think so too."

Enlightenment at just 17 years old... Yun Seung-Ah leaned back in contemplation. Changing weapons after enlightenment. It was rare, but it happened. Gifts presented cadets with individuality, but it was impossible to know one's gift before enlightenment. In cases like this, it would take at least 3 years to catch up after changing weapons. This was why Cube's lower academy, the Military Agent Academy, encouraged cadets to experiment with a variety of weapons. Knowing how to wield several weapons made it easier to transition should it be necessary.

"He experienced enlightenment early, but I can't say it's too desirable if using a gun is all his gift can do."

"Right, he would've chosen a bow if his gift allowed it."

Yun Seung-Ah agreed, but enlightenment at 17 was still rare.

“We should keep an eye on him at least. Is there a free recruiter?”

“No. Everyone is full because of this year’s exceptional cadets.”

Yun Seung-Ah hesitated. Recruiters were expensive nowadays. They could simply run away with the information if she hired a new one from outside the guild.

“...Then let him be. I’m sure he’ll stand out again if he’s special.”

Her secretary nodded without objection.

Within Everyday Life (2)

I needed to make money. Not out of greed, but necessity. I almost fainted when I looked at the bill that came to my room. I had 300 million won in debt. Chundong had taken out all the loans a Cube cadet could get.

The loan only had 1% annual interest, but that still meant I was losing money since I wasn't making any. Unfortunately, Chundong's bank account only contained 3 million won. That was nowhere near the amount needed to live in this world where power and money meant everything.

Thankfully, I knew multiple ways to get rich.

First was the stock market. Towers and dungeons constantly formed in this world. I knew the guilds that would discover or conquer them. Guilds in this world functioned like companies, so I could buy their stocks.

Today was March 2, 2025. My settings book should be full of juicy information. I opened my laptop.

▷Settings List

[March 15, 2025. The newly found guild, Packhorse Master, goes public. July 4, 2025. They conquer the dungeon, Suwon Royal Devil's Nest.]

Djinns had established the Packhorse Master guild. I noted them down because they played an important role in the story. Conquering Suwon Royal Devil's Nest would skyrocket their stock prices by 1000%. It wouldn't be until 3 years later that they were discovered and delisted.

[December 8, 2025. Guild, Creator's Sacred Grace, announces its plan to conquer the Tower of Miracle.]

This incident would become the lowest point for the current first place guild, Creator's Sacred Grace. It was also the decisive event that made Yun Seung-Ah their leader. This plan, which Yun Seung-Ah opposed, would lower their rank to 7.

I had 2 opportunities to make money with this incident. First was before they announced their plan and second was before the plan failed. I could make a fortune with just these 2 early incidents in the settings book.

"The problem is..."

I didn't have any money to start with.

"Do I need to visit the field?"

Fields referred to danger zones with monsters. Unlike towers and dungeons, the danger level of fields vastly depended on their grade. Less dangerous ones didn't require permits. I should be able to enter the field in Gangwondo.

"Wait."

I remembered something. I had arranged a setting in Gangwondo. I wondered what it was again and specifically searched for the word with CTRL + F.

[Year 2026. Djinn Tomer discovers aether from Gangwondo's Gari Mountain Dungeon.]

Found it. Aether was a mystic grade formless weapon. I wanted to take it for myself, but Tomer wouldn't have a weapon without aether. Tomer was an important antagonist, so the story would become much easier. However, I might unknowingly impact the future if I took aether. I feared that uncertainty...

"Well, whatever."

Tomer was strong even without aether. I should go obtain aether once all of my stats increased to around 3 or 4.

Wiing —

I felt a vibration on my wrist as I received a message.

[Traveling Club Announcement] — There will be a short trip on Saturday for freshman orientation.

“Oh right.”

That was a thing. My smartwatch vibrated again after I recalled that.

[Academic Club Announcement] — There will be a freshmen orientation on Friday.

“And there was this too. So annoying.”

I thought I could rest on the weekends, but there were clubs. Not to mention, the academic club was tomorrow.

Cube's combat training took place on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays. I should've been able to relax on Mondays and Fridays, but I walked towards a certain clubroom on this precious Friday. Yoo Yeonha entered the room some distance ahead.

The academic club met in room 304. As expected, I saw many first years inside. About 30 in total and 23 were girls bewitched by the club president.

I sat behind Yoo Yeonha after looking around. I could smell a flowery scent from her hair. After unavoidably smelling this scent for 5 minutes... The club president finally arrived.

“Nice to meet you. I'm Yun Hyuk. Welcome to our academic club, Veritas.”

The club president was a third year named Yun Hyuk. I didn't enter this club just for Yoo Yeonha. Yun Hyuk was a djinn. Soon, several incidents would occur in Cube, including a monster invasion with Yun Hyuk as the mastermind. Of course, I couldn't just shout, That guy is a djinn! Honestly, that would probably give me a decent amount of SP.

Yun Hyuk contracted with the devil of enchantment, Lilith. He obtained a beautiful appearance and an ability called enchantment in exchange for his soul. Currently, he should be targeting Yoo Yeonha. That was why Lilith gave him a high rank ability.

“We'll only briefly discuss what our club is about since today's just orientation.”

The eyes of the female cadets sparkled from his charming voice.

“In Veritas, we research and discuss the classifications, weaknesses, behaviors, and attributes of monsters. Topics include how they behave, where their vital points are, what their attribute is, and how to efficiently deal with them.”

Yun Hyuk mentioned an important topic in modern society. Monster analysis was one of the most competitive college majors with even non-combatant heroes. These heroes weren't fit for combat, but were still revered because their gifts aided in trans-human knowledge.

“I'll give a quick example. Let's take a look at this monster. I'm sure you all know a totem scallop.”

A hologram popped up. As its name suggested, the totem scallop was a scallop that produced a totem. Totem scallops were high-intermediate rank, grade 3 monsters with high intelligence and magic. Thankfully, they acted gentle and didn't attack as long as one stayed out of their territory. However, their pearls fetched an incredible price and every guild targeted them.

“As you know, it's extremely hard to kill totem scallops, but careful analysis shows they're classified no differently than an ordinary scallop. It's quite difficult to locate their vital points because no other monster shares similarities with them.”

Yun Hyuk continued explaining. I couldn't help but yawn since I already knew everything.

“Yaaawn...”

Immediately, Yun Hyuk frowned and every other female cadet glared at me. I wouldn't be surprised if they attacked me for yawning one more time. Only Yoo Yeonha kept her eyes on the screen.

“Cough.”

Yun Hyuk let out a dry cough before continuing.

“The totem scallop's vital point hasn't been discovered because of its ambiguous attribute and behavior. As for other monsters like the thousand-mile horse...”

The orientation ended after 40 minutes. This time, I inwardly yawned to avoid being attacked. I almost left when I saw Yun Hyuk approaching Yoo Yeonha. Then I paused.

“Cadet Yeonha.”

“Yes?”

“You forgot this.”

Yun Hyuk handed her a paper she left behind. I didn't write this in my novel, but I knew he was scheming. He probably pulled it out with his magic power instead of Yoo Yeonha forgetting it.

“Ah, yes. Thank you.”

Yoo Yeonha took the paper with a smile. That seemed to be the end of their encounter.

After leaving, I went to a nearby vending machine and bought a Coke and Sprite. I couldn't help but laugh at the names on the cans. I named them Coin Cola and Spring Sprite to avoid any copyright issues and that was exactly how they appeared.

I blocked her path with the Coke and Sprite in my hands. Then I handed her the Coke.

“Here.”

“...?”

Her face was full of question marks.

“I’m in the same club. Same team, same club. Funny coincidence, right?”

This was a test. Working out like my life depended on it only gave me 4 SP. How much SP would I get for talking to a leading character?

“Do you think I’ll drink something like this?”

Yoo Yeonha frowned and her lips protruded as though she was angry. I casually played it off since I expected such a reaction.

“I just got it from the vending machine.”

Yoo Yeonha was likely attracted to bad boys. Of course, being handsome was also a requirement.

“I’m fine. You can have it. Also...”

I could feel the hostility from her glare. That was the only trace of her true feelings behind her mask.

“Don’t talk to me so casually. This is your first warning.”

That was it. Yoo Yeonha walked past me without waiting for my reply. I popped the Sprite open as her perfect figure strode away.

Psssh — Gulp, gulp.

Yoo Yeonha's shoulders twitched at the sound. According to my settings, Yoo Yeonha loved unhealthy food like carbonated drinks, hamburgers, fried chicken, and ramen. She couldn't buy them out of embarrassment, so she made her trusty butler or attendant buy them for her. Even then, she could only enjoy it once a week.

The reason was simple. Not only did she hate showing such a side, but her mother also detested unhealthy commoner food.

I threw the Coke into her luxury bag to make up for the pitiful setting I gave her. It drew a clean arc and landed inside.

“Carry me next time too.”

Yoo Yeonha glanced back as I spoke. Then she walked away muttering to herself. However, I could hear just fine.

“Who is this crazy guy?”

Yoo Yeonha soon noticed the slight change in her bag. The condensation from the Coke made her textbook wet.

“That nutjob.”

She took out the Coke with a frown. Just when did he put it in? That little rat.

“Huuu.”

After a deep sigh, Yoo Yeonha released her magic power. It seeped into the paper and separated the moisture from her textbook. The collected moisture fell to the ground as she retracted her magic power.

“Huuu.”

Yoo Yeonha broke out in a cold sweat. She felt extremely proud at the same time. The magic power application she just showed was difficult for even heroes. It looked simple, but was actually quite mysterious and complicated.

“When I see him again...”

Yoo Yeonha twisted her lips as her sense of pride turned into anger.
That talkative bum. I'll need to ask the guys to educate him.

That thought only briefly lasted. She fiddled with the Coke in her bag and checked for anyone nearby.

Cough. She took out a handkerchief and wrapped it around the Coke before placing it back in her bag.

“Hmmm.”

Then she quickened her pace as if nothing happened.

Chapter 11

Change (1)

Saturday arrived before I noticed after spending the rest of Friday training.

[Traveling Club Announcement] — There will be a short trip on Saturday for freshman orientation.

The traveling club's orientation was today, and we planned to meet at the Cube portal station that connected to Seoul. I walked to the meeting place after packing my gun into my cross bag. Kim Suho, Yi Yeonghan, Chae Nayun, and Yoo Yeonha were already waiting there.

They seemed completely oblivious to my existence, but being with all of them still made me nervous. An unexpected incident would occur in Seoul today. This would be the story's first major incident. The club president arrived as I organized today's impending event in my head.

"Hello, I'm the club president, Oh Hanhyun. I didn't believe it when I saw so many applications, but... it's true. Who knew such amazing cadets would join?"

Oh Hanhyun had an average height and a gentle impression. He looked around while scratching his neck.

"First, I'll give a short introduction about the traveling club."

He bashfully smiled and took out a piece of paper from his pocket. He had prepared a speech. I described Oh Hanhyun as a timid person, so I wasn't too surprised.

"Cough. Once or twice a month, we will take a trip out of Cube to simply relax. Training during trips will be strictly forbidden. It's also why our club is nicknamed Healing Rain."

Cough. After clearing his throat once more, he put the paper away.
What? That was it?

“Today, we’ll take a short trip to Seoul for orientation.”

From here on, things proceeded as I had written. The club members would pair up and visit Seoul together.

“We usually have a theme for each trip, but today will be an exception since it’s orientation. We’ll split into pairs.”

Kim Suho would be paired with Chae Nayun and run into trouble at a museum. As for what trouble, I would experience it soon.

“Then we’ll start by drawing lots.”

Drawing lots was completely based on luck, but not for me. I could clearly see the contents with my gift, Observation and Reading. I pondered with a hand on my chin. Should I choose Kim Suho? Or Chae Nayun?

“I’ll go first.”

Yoo Yeonha stepped up. I watched her pull out a name and realized I had overlooked my own existence. Yoo Yeonha’s lot contained my name.

“Kim Hajin.”

My heart sank, but Yoo Yeonha’s face remained unchanged. She calmly stared at me with her usual mask.

Thankfully, everything else remained unchanged. Kim Suho paired up with Chae Nayun and Yi Yeonghan paired up with the club president. After drawing lots, the members gathered in front of the portal.

Portals were cutting-edge technology utilizing magic science and engineering. With a height and width of 15 and 30 meters respectively, over 100 of these giant gates could be found throughout Korea. Traveling from Seoul to Busan took less than 3 seconds.

“Cadet Kim Hajin. Confirmed.”

The portal operator handed us a seal that would resonate with the portal and teleport us to Seoul.

“Let’s go.”

The club president entered first. Then Kim Suho went through the swaying blue portal next, followed by Yi Yeonghan, Chae Nayun, and finally me.

A strange feeling briefly enveloped my body.

In the blink of an eye, the surroundings changed into an unfamiliar place. The Seoul portal station looked quite futuristic. With just 2 steps, I had crossed the East Sea.

We were the only ones around since our portal connected to Cube. However, the portal next door connecting Seoul to Busan should be much more crowded. After all, they were both global cities.

“Follow me for now.”

We received another seal from the portal employee as we followed the club leader. I read the words, Yongsan Station, as we left.

“You can go wherever you want as a pair using public transportation. We won’t require you to write a report today, but make sure you’re back by 6. You’ll be penalized if you’re late.”

The club president warned as we left in pairs. Yoo Yeonha didn’t say anything as I followed her. She suddenly stopped as I thought about how Yongsan Station had changed from what I knew. Yoo Yeonha turned around and blurted.

“Let’s split up.”

“Hm? Oh, yeah. Sure.”

Most likely, she planned to visit her father’s guild. I was fine with it. I planned to join Kim Suho no matter what.

“Again.”

She glared at me with a hand on her hip as though I ticked her off again.

“Don’t talk to me so casually.”

“Huh?”

“This is your second warning. There won’t be a third.”

I knew she wasn’t bluffing. She might really get back at me in an unthinkable way if I did it a third time.

“Yes, I understand. I apologize.”

“Tsk.”

Yoo Yeonha walked away without saying goodbye. She clearly disliked me. We split up after just 5 minutes.

“Whew, I thought I got lost.”

I finally arrived at the National Weapons Museum after switching buses 3 times. The museum displayed replicas of weapons excavated by Korea. Today, an incident would occur here. I walked in with a trembling heart.

“Daddy, what’s that?”

“Oh, that’s the Four Tiger Sword...”

Perhaps because it was a weekend, the museum bustled with parents and children who hoped to become heroes. No matter the crowd, some people would always stand out like Chae Nayun and Kim Suho. I quickly spotted Chae Nayun.

“I want it.”

Smacking her lips, she greedily eyed a bow in a glass display, but she wasn’t the one I was looking for. It didn’t take long to find the tall and handsome main character who always stood out. I carefully approached Kim Suho and happened to recognize the weapon he was looking at.

“Is this the famous Seven-Branched Sword?”

The king of Baekje who ruled the most powerful kingdom before Korea was unified bestowed this iron sword to the Japanese emperor. It was a historical weapon found in the final room of the Wiryeseong Dungeon. [1]

“Hm? Ah...”

Kim Suho turned towards me. However, he was at a loss for words. I had a good idea why.

“Kim Hajin.”

“Ah, right. Sorry, I didn’t expect to meet you here, so I forgot.”

With a kind smile, he pointed to another section of the museum.

“Apparently, Napoleon’s rifle is also here. Have you seen it?”

“Napoleon’s rifle?”

According to my world setting, any weapon used by a legendary figure could become an artifact. Since that was the case, it wasn't weird for Napoleon's rifle to exist even though I never mentioned it. I did want a rare weapon, but I wasn't interested in replicas.

"No, I don't think I'll have time."

I unexpectedly answered without any excitement. It felt strange talking to the main character I created. I wasn't quite sure how to describe this feeling, but it wasn't pleasant. Kim Suho was handsome, exceptional in martial arts, and had a fantastic personality. He was too perfect, so he felt inhuman. That was why some readers rooted for Shin Jonghak. Anyways, it should be about time. I tapped on the ground with my sneakers.

"Then..."

Right when Kim Suho was about to say something...

— BOOM!

A thunderous sound reverberated. Everyone grew silent. Koong. Koong. Koong. A thud repeatedly pulsed throughout the deathly silence. A giant creature's footsteps began to make crushing sounds. The atmosphere took a quick turn.

"Kyaaaak!"

"What is that!?"

The unknown led to anxiety and anxiety quickly turned into panic. Visitors began to scream and run. However, only death waited outside. The safest place was still inside.

"Stay here! Don't go out!"

Kim Suho shouted to warn everyone as he sensed the dangers outside. Currently, an intermediate rank monster and its subordinates were attacking outside. Just a single intermediate rank monster posed little threat. A hero would arrive in less than a minute and 20 minutes was enough to take care of the entire situation, but that wasn't the only problem. A djinn was also here, making it a double-pronged attack. Heroes usually rushed to the most dangerous areas. They wouldn't prioritize the museum since it had security guards. The Djinn Association took advantage of this and dispatched an assassin to target a special child the Hero Association had discovered.

Clang —

Glass shattered from not too far away. Kim Suho turned in that direction and shouted.

“Chae Nayun!”

Chae Nayun broke a display and took out the bow inside.

“Are you crazy!”

“No, I'm perfectly sane.”

It was only a replica, but the museum's alarm rang and its defensive mechanisms activated. All exits closed in just 3 seconds. People panicked even more, but even an intermediate rank monster couldn't break through the barriers.

“This is better than stopping to warn people one by one.”

With that, she cleared her throat and shouted at the panicking citizens. “Everyone! Stay calm! It's safer here! We're heroes too!”

“Hey, you...”

“Shut it. Don't just stand there. Grab a weapon.”

“What? Why should I?”

“Because it's dangerous outside.”

Looking at us... No, at Kim Suho, Chae Nayun nocked a magic arrow onto her bow.

“Look there.”

She pointed with her eyes at a man wearing a black coat. Chae Nayun fired without a shred of hesitation before Kim Suho could say anything.

“Hey, don’t —”

Her magic arrow pierced the man’s throat. Immediately, Kim Suho froze. He seemed dazed by the sudden murder.

Any ordinary person would have died, but the man grabbed the arrow sticking out of his neck and pulled it out. Black magic power rose from his hand and burned the arrow to ash. Tap, tap. The man turned around in the direction where the arrow came from. His eyes burned red with hostility.

Without a doubt, he was a djinn. Kim Suho’s face paled. Just like Chae Nayun, he shattered a display and took out the Seven-Branched Sword. It was only a replica, but its faithful reconstruction made it a high grade weapon. It should be strong enough to kill the djinn.

“Oh, that’s a nice weapon. I heard it splits into seven branches.”

Chae Nayun smirked and stood by Kim Suho’s side. I also took out my handgun. I thought about standing next to them, but took 2 steps back after some consideration. I was still too weak. It would be the end if I showed off too much and the djinn targeted me.

1. Wiryeseong was the name of two early capitals in Baekje. 📖

Chapter 12

Change (2)

Blue sword qi surrounded the Seven-Branched Sword. The blade shone from the pure mana. Sneaking a glance at Kim Suho's Seven-Branched Sword, Chae Nayun asked.

"You ready?"

"Yeah."

Meanwhile, I slowly backed away. There was nothing I could do here. Kim Suho would reveal his hidden power and easily take care of this djinn. Overwhelmed by Kim Suho's might, Chae Nayun would give up being his rival and admire him instead.

"Support me."

Kim Suho spoke as he adjusted his grip on the sword.

"Support? Please, I'll be the one to kill him."

Chae Nayun playfully rebutted and nocked another magic arrow.

"Guooo—!"

The djinn ignited his magic power before she could fire. An evil black qi hurled towards them like hellfire, but a single streak of light extinguished it. A sword saint could cut fire, wind, and even magic power.

Chae Nayun's arrow flew through the lifted magic power. The condensed mana arrow pierced the djinn's shoulder.

Kim Suho didn't miss this opportunity. Leaping up, he slashed down diagonally. This attack should've immobilized the djinn, but he only smiled despite being cut. Kim Suho instinctively felt something was wrong. Immediately, fierce magic power shot out from the wound. The shockwave blew Kim Suho away as if a storm had crashed through. He didn't even have the chance to scream and crashed into a wall across the room.

Both Chae Nayun and I became speechless. Strange. Something was definitely strange. This shouldn't have happened. After being pushed back a bit, Kim Suho should've released his hidden power and overwhelmed the enemy.

“Uuu...”

Thankfully, Kim Suho stood back up, but he didn't seem to be in good shape.

“Hey, are you okay?”

“I'm fine... Kuu.”

Kim Suho needed time to heal. The djinn walked towards Chae Nayun as her face stiffened.

Chweek— Chweek—

Chae Nayun fired two arrows, but none of them worked. The djinn didn't stop even though she continued to shoot until he looked like a porcupine.

“This isn't regeneration.”

Chae Nayun murmured in a daze. As she said, this djinn didn't have high regenerative power. He simply had a sturdy body. In the first place, I didn't design him to be an opponent Chae Nayun could defeat.

Chae Nayun's face turned pale as fear and horror crept up inside her.

"Just support me!"

Kim Suho jumped in front of her and blocked the djinn's path. However, the djinn kept his eyes on Chae Nayun. Condensing his black mana onto his arm, he produced a giant wolf-like beast that bared its fangs toward Kim Suho.

"Uuuk!"

The djinn fought Kim Suho with one hand and grabbed Chae Nayun's face with the other.

"Are we screwed?"

I murmured.

By now, I had run away to the back of the exhibition. However, this place was already occupied by a father and child.

"Go that way."

"Y-Yes?"

"There, go farther back. It's dangerous here."

I could feel my voice shaking. Honestly, I was scared to death.

"B-But..."

"While the djinn's too busy fighting, hurry!"

At my urging, the two quickly scurried away. I took out my laptop from my cross bag. The djinn in my setting shouldn't have been that strong. What was up with that arm? I sneaked a glance and saw the djinn's wolf-like arm evenly fighting against Kim Suho. I didn't recall making such a setting.

I had to do something. At this rate, both Kim Suho and Chae Nayun could die. I unloaded my gun magazine and placed a bullet on the laptop. My damned hands kept trembling. I checked the bullet's setting with the laptop.

[Mana Bullet] [Null attribute] [Attack Power (3/10)] — A bullet with condensed mana. It is much stronger than a gunpowder bullet.

That wasn't enough. With an attack power of 3, even scratching that djinn would be impossible. Would increasing the attack power be enough? Thankfully, I had a solution within my settings. The reason this world required a variety of heroes was because of attributes. An attack could have varying effects depending on attributes. Contradicting attributes like water and fire could allow one to overcome a difference in power.

The djinn clearly had a darkness attribute. The opposite of darkness was undoubtedly light. I just had to change the bullet's attribute.

[Mana Bullet] [Light attribute] [Attack Power (5/10)] — A bullet with a condensed essence of light. Will explode a second time after hitting its target.

It was expensive. That cost 80% of what I had earned in the past week, but I still wasn't sure if that was enough. It was better to overdo it than fall short. I tried adjusting the attack power to 6.

[You do not have enough SP. The value will be adjusted.] [Attack Power (5.6/10)] [Would you like to save the adjusted modification?]

I hit save. White light erupted from the laptop before melting into a magic bullet with a shiny iron casing. Modification complete. With this single bullet loaded, I took a deep breath and peeked past the wall. Chae Nayun struggled to escape from the djinn's grasp while Kim Suho fought the djinn's right arm. No, Kim Suho was pushing the djinn back now. We were at an advantage. It seemed he would defeat the right arm soon. The problem was Chae Nayun. Either she couldn't breathe or the djinn's magic power was poisoning her, Chae Nayun's neck had turned purple. I clicked my tongue and jumped out.

“Hey!”

Then I shouted.

“Move!”

Kim Suho rolled to the side without even turning around. The djinn’s right arm chased after him, but that only increased the target for me. I pulled the trigger with a slightly calmer mind. A bright light flashed from the barrel as though a flash bomb had gone off. The bullet emitted as much pressure and heat as its brightness. The handgun couldn’t withstand the power and exploded in my hand. The broken parts fell as I writhed in pain. Thankfully, the trajectory of the bullet didn’t change. It accurately struck the djinn’s left shoulder.

Bull’s eye.

The bullet exploded and purified the djinn’s arm, which was now gone.

Chae Nayun, on the brink of death, fell to the ground. Kim Suho didn’t miss this opportunity. A metal attribute surrounded his sword. He finally used the sword saint’s all-severing technique. It should be limited to just once or twice a day, but that was enough. I could just watch from the side now.

“Hmm?”

A child suddenly approached me. It was the child I met before with a pretty face, but it was hard to discern a gender from the short hair. The child grabbed my hand and completely healed it. I see, this must’ve been the child the Hero Association barely managed to find. The child with the authority of healing.

“Thanks.”

I stroked the child’s hair with a grin.

Guuuu—!

A deep growl rang out and I quickly turned. The djinn gasped without an arm and kneeled in front of Kim Suho.

He managed to win.

“Huuu...”

I felt all my strength leaving my body and sprawled onto the ground.

“Gueeek!”

Chae Nayun regained consciousness and began to vomit. She continued vomiting everything she ate and drank. She seemed frantic like she was coughing blood. I empathized with her at the horrific scene.

The reason Chae Nayun chose a bow was similar to mine. She acted tough on the outside, but was still a sheltered lady on the inside. It wouldn't be until much later that she overcame her delicate nature.

“...”

Kim Suho approached her to pat her back, but Chae Nayun angrily slapped his hand away. He reluctantly backed off.

“Leave her be. I'm sure her older brother will come to comfort her.”

I thoughtlessly said as I recalled what would happen. Her older brother would arrive first. Then her father would come to clean everything up, but it seemed Chae Nayun took my indifference as an insult.

“You, you... Gueeek!”

Her bloodshot eyes stabbed at me. Did she want something or someone to blame? It was understandable. Unlike Yoo Yeonha, Chae Nayun was a real lady. Anything but the highest quality food would upset her stomach. A cockroach or a rat would ruin her mood for an entire day.

“...You.”

“I’ll head out first.”

Kim Suho tried to say something. For some reason, his face went stiff. I ignored it and turned around. I also needed to reflect. The djinn’s strength was far greater than what I had set. I couldn’t understand why.

A single sword cut through the air. The blade slashed out white magic power in every direction and obliterated every monster. A clean execution. Yun Seung-Ah retracted her sword and turned around. Her hair fluttered in the gentle breeze. Dozens of ordinary people who saw her were left speechless. Their eyes contained unshakable respect and admiration. Seeing the world’s most popular hero would become a great story for a long time.

“You can rest assured.”

“Vice-leader!”

A coarse voice interrupted Yun Seung-Ah. She was slightly surprised as a man quickly ran over and relayed surprising news.

“A djinn appeared at the National Weapons Museum!”

“What?”

“You should head over immedi... What? What?” He tilted his head and focused on the transceiver in his ear. “...Ah, yes.”

“What’s wrong?”

“Um... Apparently, the djinn has been taken care of. Three cadets from Cube happened to be at the museum.”

“Oh? That’s great. Who were they?”

“Kim Suho, Chae Nayun, and... Ugh!”

Before he could finish, a violent gale rose and momentarily blinded him. By the time he opened his eyes, the hero who decimated dozens of monsters disappeared.

Yun Seung-Ah quickly arrived at the museum as an ordinary young man walked out. He flinched before quickly bowing when he saw her.

“Hello.”

Does he know me? Well, there aren’t many who don’t. Something felt off, but Yun Seung-Ah greeted him without much thought.

“Ah, yes, did something happen inside?”

“Yes. A djinn appeared. He just died though.”

“I see... And you are?”

“I’m a cadet.”

The young man replied with a grin.

Yun Seung-Ah was taken aback. She finally understood the strange feeling. She acted humble, but Yun Seung-Ah was still one of the most popular heroes in Korea. Most cadets would freeze or act nervous in front of her at the very least.

“Oh, I see.”

“Then I’m off. The ones you’re looking for should be inside.”

The young man introduced himself as Kim Hajin and walked away smiling without a hint of nervousness. Yun Seung-Ah observed him for a moment.

“Who is he?”

Quite daring for a young cadet. But Kim Hajin...? I wasn't familiar with the name. How did he know who I came for? Yun Seung-Ah sauntered into the museum.

Inside was a mess. The tiled floors were destroyed and an ominous magic power still lingered as proof of the djinn.

“Nayun!”

An emotional voice rang out from the entrance. Yun Seung-Ah turned and saw a middle-aged man looking around with reddened eyes. It was Chae Nayun's father, Chae Shinhyuk.

“Chae Shinhyuk?”

“Vice-leader Yun Seung-Ah?”

“Ah... You must be busy lately. It's been a while. Should we go together?”

Yun Seung-Ah smiled and pointed further inside.

I managed to find a seat on a bench beside a curved telephone pole. A car stuck out of a nearby window. In this strange place, heroes busily ran around cleaning up while I inwardly panicked.

The story had changed. This shouldn't have happened if this world was the one within my novel. Of course, an oddity known as Kim Hajin existed, but his role was minimal. Everything had been fine until now. I most certainly hadn't done anything that could've affected... A thought flashed across my mind.

I forgot. I wasn't the sole author of this story anymore. To be precise, this world wasn't the novel I wrote. This world was the remake of my novel.

"There's a co-author..."

An unknown emptiness rose within me. Why was I so relaxed this entire time? Live a comfortable life? No, that was impossible from the start. Just like when someone stopped me from modifying invariable stats, that someone wouldn't let that happen.

Wiing— The laptop suddenly vibrated. I saw a message when I opened it.

[Flaw. There was no semblance of danger for others and the main character. If the story continued like that, readers would become bored thinking, "The main character will always win anyways."]

"This crazy motherfu..."

No danger? Of course, there was no danger. Readers didn't like extreme danger! This thoughtless amateur...

However, there was another line below.

[Makeshift solution. Even if things become a mess, antagonists have increased in power.]

Change (3)

— At around 1 P.M. today, a group of monsters appeared in Seoul, leaving 500 wounded and 7 dead.

A news anchor reported today's incident. With a deep sigh, Chae Shinhyuk stroked the bedridden patient. Her pale complexion stabbed at her father's heart. Although she was an adult who would soon become a hero, Chae Nayun was still a little girl to Chae Shinhyuk.

— According to investigations, the monsters were led by an intermediate rank, grade 1 monster called beast inciter. This man-sized, badger-shaped monster has never before appeared in Korea. The association believes a third party brought it in and has set out a search.

“...Mmm.”

Chae Nayun opened her eyes as Chae Shinhyuk called for a doctor.

“You're awake. How are you feeling?”

“...Fine.”

Chae Nayun raised her feeble body. A doctor came running in to check her pulse, but Chae Nayun pushed him away with a smile.

“I'm fine, Dad.”

“Really?”

“Of course. I'm not injured. Didn't the doctor tell you?”

“I, I did.”

The doctor spoke up inadvertently. Chae Shinhyuk was a powerful figure with the country's economy in his palm. Being on this man's bad side would only make his life difficult.

“...She seems fine, so you can go.”

“Yes, sir.”

The doctor hurriedly left. Chae Nayun spoke as the door closed.

“...Dad.”

“Hmm?”

Chae Shinhyuk kindly responded.

“About brother.”

Her low-spirited voice called up the dark past he wanted to forget. Remembering his son always caused a sharp pain in his heart. With a gentle smile, Chae Shinhyuk held his daughter's hand.

“Can I go see him when I'm discharged? I'm on sick leave anyway, right?”

“Of course you can.”

Chae Shinhyuk softly agreed as Chae Nayun leaned her head against her father's shoulder and recalled what happened earlier in the day. The djinn from the museum, the black hand that strangled her, and a voice that mentioned her older brother. Chae Nayun's fury suddenly reignited.

“Dad, by the way...”

Chae Nayun's tone turned dark. Her voice carried a heavy emotion. Chae Shinhyuk worriedly asked.

“What’s up?”

“...No, it’s nothing.”

She began to loathe someone from the bottom of her heart, but she couldn’t tell her father how she felt. She thought back to how her stomach felt like burning from the djinn’s poison magic. She could clearly hear that guy even as she writhed in pain.

— I’m sure her older brother will come to comfort her.

He had mentioned her brother. Everyone in the world knew on the day the sky fell 4 years ago. She didn’t even have the opportunity to grieve then. After that day, she etched her brother’s name deep inside her heart and he became an untouchable subject. As a Cube cadet, that guy should’ve known about her brother’s condition. Even so, he mentioned her brother like that. Chae Nayun suppressed the fury in her heart and engraved his name in her head. Kim Hajin. Kim Hajin. From that day forward, Chae Nayun would no longer forget his name.

Seoul’s sky was dyed orange. The setting sun was no different than usual, but the scene below could only be described as pandemonium. Broken asphalt littered the road. A child cried under a telephone pole snapped in half. Ambulances drove back and forth, carrying wounded civilians or corpses. Although the dispatched heroes had taken care of the situation, the chaotic aftermath remained.

“Kim Suho, Kim Hajin. We heard the story.”

Kim Soohyuk waited for them at the portal connecting Seoul to Cube.

“We will ask for the details later. You can go back and rest for now. Agents will take care of the rest.”

For the record, agents were different from heroes. They graduated from the Military Agent Academy, but never attended Cube. They were non-combatants who had very useful abilities in day-to-day life. For example, I saw a man who fixed the broken asphalt with the wave of a hand.

“Um, instructor. Chae Nayun is...”

Kim Suho wanted to ask, to which Kim Soohyuk briefly replied.

“She’s taking a sick leave. She’s with her family right now.”

“Yes, understood.”

Kim Suho didn’t ask any more questions.

“Go back.”

Other cadets seemed to have helped with the emergency, as even Yoo Yeonha looked tired. One by one, we trudged through the portal. The odd sensation enveloping my body no longer interested me. After a short sigh, I found myself back at Cube. Without any words, the group returned to the dorms.

“...Hey.”

After the girls went ahead, Kim Suho stopped me on our way to Dorm 1.

“What.”

“Why did you say that?”

“Say what?”

“To Chae Nayun.”

What was he talking about all of a sudden? Kim Suho suddenly became more hostile when I furrowed my brows in confusion.

“Why did you bring up her older brother? In such a condescending way too.”

“What do you mean? I didn’t mean much by...”

Then I swallowed my words. This world had a co-author. My setting wasn't the only one anymore. Something had changed.

"What about her older brother?"

Kim Suho paused in his steps at my question. He gritted his teeth and glared at me.

"Every cadet knows, but you're going to pretend you don't?"

"What? No, I really don't—"

"Whatever. We can talk about it later. For now..."

Kim Suho quickly walked past me and entered the elevator. He had dark circles under his eyes. He needed to crash since he used that ability. My room was on the first floor, so I didn't need the elevator.

I turned on my smartwatch the moment I sat on the couch. An internet window popped up in the air. This world's main search engine was called Neighbor. The interface looked no different from what I was used to. First, I looked up Chae Nayun. What Kim Suho said and how Chae Nayun reacted were indeed strange.

[Chae Nayun] (Hero cadet) Family – Father: Chae Shinhyuk, Older Brother: Chae Jinyoon Education — Military Agent Academy Rank 4 — Currently attending Military Hero Academy (Cube)

"So what's the problem?"

Chae Jinyoon. It's not like he was dead or missing, so why were they so worked up? I tilted my head and looked up Chae Jinyoon. Then my jaws dropped.

"Huh?"

[Chae Shinhyuk's son, Chae Jinyoon, is in critical condition from a djinn attack. The djinn suppression operation, Fireflake, succeeded... However, rookie hero Chae Jinyoon fell into a coma.]

I couldn't understand these headlines.

"What?"

Djinn suppression operation, Fireflake. I knew what it was. It was the first operation that made Chae Jinyoon famous. He would've been promoted to an intermediate rank hero after successfully leading this operation and rescuing three comrades. Chae Nayun, who was only 13, bragged about her older brother who suddenly became famous. No, that was how things should've been.

"What the hell is going on?"

I couldn't take it all in and took out my laptop. There must be a hint somewhere.

[Thanks to your high luck, the light bullet has dealt critical damage to the Dog of Lucius.] [With great luck, your understanding of the light attribute has increased!] [With extreme luck, you have absorbed part of the magic power from the light bullet! Your magic power has increased by 0.03 points.] [You have dealt critical damage to a more powerful enemy. The skill, Sharpshooter Reversal, has been added to your gift, Master Sharpshooter.] [You have gained 131 SP.]

I received many pleasant alerts, but turned them all off and looked for my settings book. No, I didn't need to look for it. This settings book was something I wrote. Since what happened today wasn't part of my setting, looking for it was useless. However, I received a message on my laptop.

[Chae Jinyoon – In the original story, he was Chae Nayun's reliable older brother and Kim Suho's trustworthy helper. However, it has been judged that the main character has too many helpers and this setting was changed.]

[Modified setting – Chae Jinyoon received a devil's brand and fell into a coma in his first hero mission 4 years ago. Currently, he is a devil's seed.]

[Note: Modified settings will appear as messages once the target, Kim Hajin, notices the change.]

I stared at the screen with a gaping mouth until saliva drooped. I barely managed to eke out a voice.

“Fucking...”

That was all I could say. If this message was true, this was an extremely serious problem. The devil’s seed was something that only appeared in the latter half of the novel. If it sprouted, the current Kim Suho was nowhere near strong enough. A master rank hero could stop it, but most had left the secular world. Even if high rank heroes came together, a few of them would surely die. That couldn’t happen because their strength would be needed later in the novel. Everything would go awry if this devil’s seed sprouted. Of course, things had already gone awry, but it was still manageable. Then what could I do? There was only one solution.

“He needs to die.”

Thankfully, the devil’s seed had an incubation period of 5-6 years. Four years had already passed. Chae Jinyoon had to be killed before the devil inside him woke up. The problem was who would kill him? I couldn’t hire an assassin. Even if I offered billions, no mercenary would be crazy enough to kill a chaebol. Not to mention, no one would believe me because the devil’s seed was undetectable. I would surely be labeled as crazy.

He needed to die and there was only one way.

“I have to kill him.”

I closed my eyes with a deep sigh. Although Chae Jinyoon was an idiot when it came to his sister, he was a reliable friend and helper to Kim Suho. In this world, he had become a character that needed to die. This shocked me, but I didn’t have the luxury of not doing anything. I stood up. My body felt heavy. My sense of familiarity towards this world transformed into greater anxiety. Perhaps thanks to my high perseverance, I headed to the training room instead of going to bed.

For Growth (1)

The Tower of Hero was a Hero Association headquarters located in the heart of Seoul. On the 103rd floor, Yun Seung-Ah secretly read the reports on the recent incident and watched a video filmed by the museum's camera. Naturally, it contained the battle between Cube's cadets and a djinn. She hesitated because of the consequences, but an agent's leaked information compelled her.

— A trace of light attribute mana was found at the scene.

Light attribute mana. Not only was it strange, but also extremely valuable. Light attribute heroes played a vital role in suppressing djinns who possessed the darkness attribute.

The fact that the light attribute was detected naturally meant that 1 of the 3 cadets who defeated the djinn had the light attribute.

Yun Seung-Ah often emphasized the importance of attributes and wanted to know the owner of this rare mana.

“But this person...”

Indeed, a young man caught her attention. From head to toe, he looked ordinary in every way. He spoke with Kim Suho and stealthily retreated when the djinn appeared.

He hid and made some strange actions as the djinn pushed Kim Suho back. Then he unloaded his gun except for a single bullet and began to tap on thin air.

After about a minute, he loaded the bullet and headed to battle.

What happened next was even more mysterious.

His gun exploded as he fired and a brilliant white light dyed the surroundings. The camera froze for 3 seconds because of the light. Everything had already been settled by the time the screen returned.

“Hmm.”

Most people assumed the attack came from Kim Suho, but Yun Seung-Ah doubted it. The light came from that young man’s attack no matter how she thought about it. Even Kim Suho admitted in his report, “Kim Hajin covered me.”

“Kim Hajin. I remember now. He’s the cadet who chose a gun. So he had a reason.”

Thud!

The door suddenly burst open. Startled, Yun Seung-Ah turned and saw the association’s executive. Aileen had a small build at only 153cm, but Yun Seung-Ah knew a 10 meter giant resided inside. Aileen glared at her with terrifying eyes. Yun Seung-Ah’s face paled as she jumped in horror.

“Un, Unni?” [1]

“I knew you were here. Come out.”

“Ah, wait, Unni. I can explain. I can...”

“Shut up and follow me.”

Yun Seung-Ah didn’t want to follow even if it cost her life, but her body moved on its own. It was Aileen’s one-of-a-kind gift, Spirit Speech. Of course, the price she had to pay for that power was equally great. It had a high risk of magic power recoil and her body remained underdeveloped.

“Unni, I’m a hero too! Please spare me!”

Her ability was honestly too much of a cheat.

“Only the association’s heroes are authorized here.”

“I know! I’ll leave, so let me go!”

“You better hurry before I throw you out the window.”

In the end, Yun Seung-Ah was chased out of the recording room.

“You have 2 choices. One, be punished. Two, help me with something.”

“I’m sorry. Please, let me go this one time. I don’t want to do either.”

The video Yun Seung-Ah watched was left playing in the empty room.

“Save me—!”

[Tuesday’s combat training, labyrinth exploration.]

Team 5, which included Yoo Yeonha and I, were in the middle of combat training inside a cave created by Cube.

“Hoseung, Hazuki, can you see anything?”

Yoo Yeonha asked with a frown.

We were in an artificial dungeon modeled after a dark labyrinth. Our goal was to break through the undead monsters and reach the labyrinth’s center. Even heroes would find it difficult to light up this cave because of the mist created with dark mana.

“No, I can’t.”

“Me neither.”

Jin Hoseung and Hazuki answered.

“Tsk.”

Yoo Yeonha clicked her tongue and didn’t ask anymore. She still treated me as invisible even after I gave her a Coke.

I shook my head and spoke.

“I can see.”

“Huh?”

“Really?”

Jin Hoseung and Hazuki seemed surprised, but Yoo Yeonha ignored me.

“I said I can see.”

Her attitude annoyed me as I loudly spoke to the back of her head.

“I can see through the dark.”

Yoo Yeonha quickly around and glared. However, she faced Jin Hoseung instead of me.

“Stop fooling around.”

Insulted out of the blue, Jin Hoseung was taken aback while I casually retorted.

“I’m just saying. You’re going to fall if you go that way.”

“What nonsense— Kyak!”

Yoo Yeonha missed her footing and fell. I jumped to grab her arm as she clutched my shoulder with trembling hands.

“...Cough.”

She climbed back up using my body like a rope. Yoo Yeonha dryly coughed as though nothing happened.

“Looks like you aren’t lying. How can you see?”

“I have good eyes.”

It was thanks to my gift. The thousand-mile eyes weren’t hindered by distance or obstacles, which included lighting.

“Good. You should at least be able to do that much. So where should we go?”

“Just follow me.”

Jin Hoseung placed his hand on my shoulder as though we were friends. I brushed off his hand and walked forward.

Things proceeded smoothly from that point onwards.

I just had to walk, dodging what I could and notifying Yoo Yeonha of what I couldn’t. If the unavoidable enemy was a fluid-bodied spirit, Yoo Yeonha’s merciless whip took care of it. If it was an undead, Jin Hoseung and Hazuki took care of it.

My stamina had increased thanks to working out. Although not having to run played a big factor, this particular training was a breeze.

And now, I could see the result with my own eyes. We managed to reach the center of the labyrinth and saw only 8 people. In other words, we scored third place.

“Yoo Yeonha?”

“Hey, Jonghak.”

Shin Jonghak sat on a rock acting needlessly cool and called her. She ran towards him with an adorable smile and treated him completely different from how she treated me.

“Over here.”

Kim Soohyuk called out our time without paying attention to Yoo Yeonha’s touching reunion.

“Team 5. 48 minutes 10 seconds. Third place.”

Jin Hoseung and Hazuki cheered.

“Whoo. It’s all thanks to you. You have great eyes!”

“You do, you do!”

For now, I sat on the ground with them. Yoo Yeonha had already left for Shin Jonghak and Kim Suho slept on the ground. It seemed he still suffered from using that ability at the museum.

I also relaxed.

Another team arrived after about 5 minutes. I wasn’t surprised who it was. Sharpshooters generally had good eyes.

Yoo Yeonha approached her and pretended to be happy. Chae Nayun was covered in dust for some reason. It seemed she fell into a trap. She walked in my direction and paused. Her cold eyes pierced at me.

“Nayun?”

She completely ignored Yoo Yeonha and marched towards me.

“What was your time?”

I bluntly replied to the simple question.

“48 minutes.”

Chae Nayun clenched her teeth. Sharpshooters often acted as the team’s pathfinder. She rightfully believed that I guided my team.

“Looks like even you have something you’re good for.”

She was clearly provoking me. I hesitated to reply. Should I strike back? I did have a good reason.

The novel’s antagonists had become much stronger, so it was necessary for our side... although Chae Nayun might not be on my side... Anyways, the lead characters also needed to grow stronger.

To do that, Chae Nayun needed to quickly abandon the bow. In this world, her potential was second only to Kim Suho, but it would be wasted with a bow.

I didn’t find the need to respond to her provocation. Between negative and positive motivation, the former influenced her more according to my setting. However, the agent of motivation was also important. A weakling like me provoking her wouldn’t have much impact. Now wasn’t the time yet. I felt confident I would surpass her soon in archery. I just had to wait.

“Hmph.”

Chae Nayun seemed bored by my passiveness and strode off with a snort. I shook my head. Then I also made eye contact with Yoo Yeonha and her eyes carried a slight hint of interest that didn’t exist before.

“Hmph.”

However, she also walked away with the same disdainful snort.

1. Unni means older sister and is used by a female to respectfully address another older female. 🙌

For Growth (2)

Today's combat training ended, but I still had to attend the academic club in exhaustion. After that, I also had my daily workout. The agony of this routine made me depressed. I would've invested more points into perseverance if I knew this would happen.

I headed to the academic club and spotted Yoo Yeonha ahead of me. Perhaps this was her usual route or we just had similar preferences.

Yoo Yeonha didn't see me and continued walking. She took out a hand mirror and lightly checked her appearance in front of the clubroom. Then we suddenly made eye contact.

"What a coincidence, right?"

"..."

Ignoring me, Yoo Yeonha walked in as I followed. She chose a sunny seat while I took a corner seat under the shade. Yun Hyuk, the club president, stood at the podium with his glasses while organizing the day's lecture notes.

Not long afterward, 43 first years arrived along with 20 upperclassmen. At 7 on the dot, Yun Hyuk began the first lecture.

"Good evening, everyone. The weather's starting to get..."

Any useless talk went through one ear and left the other.

"Today, we will discuss the vital points of monsters. As I'm sure you all know, finding vital points is essential to defeating monsters. Senior Seo Youngji is an excellent example of this skill. She reached the top 2000 in hero rankings by reaching the pinnacle of this ability."

A hologram of Seo Youngji's stats projected on the screen. A hero's stats could be summarized into strength, dexterity, endurance, constitution, and magic power. Seo Youngji's stats were all under intermediate rank except for dexterity, which was at master rank. For the record, only 300 heroes in the world had attained master rank in dexterity.

"Senior Seo Youngji even hunted a high rank monster by herself."

As he said, Seo Youngji was a well-known character in this world. Although she had an introverted personality, I was sure we would meet since she played an important role.

"But don't think a monster's vital points are the same as a human's. Our eyes, heart, and head serve as vital points, but that isn't always the case for monsters."

The higher a monster's rank, the more obscure its vital points.

"Now, let's take a look at an example."

A hologram of a monster appeared on the screen. It looked similar to a mountain tiger, but its giant body, bloodshot eyes, and ferocious teeth indicated it wasn't a normal tiger.

"This monster is called the mountain tyrant. It can be classified anywhere from intermediate to high rank. It has been known for 50 years as one of the first monsters to appear during Outcall, but its vital point still hasn't been discovered."

With that, Yun Hyuk paused and smiled.

"At least, that's how it is publicly. In reality, an individual or guild wouldn't reveal it even if they knew. They likely wouldn't be allowed to either."

He was right. Information was an industry in this world. Some large corporations solely focused on researching monsters. Private detectives and agencies also gathered and sold this information on a smaller scale. All of them would heavily penalize leaking such information.

Of course, publicly releasing this information would greatly benefit humanity, but the power of capitalism prevailed.

“Now, where do you think is the mountain tyrant’s vital point?”

Yun Hyuk gave Yoo Yeonha a meaningful look. She likely had no clue. I created the setting, but never used it since the main character never had a chance to hunt tigers.

“...”

As I thought, she didn’t know. She fiddled with her hair and looked around, ashamed of not knowing.

“Would anyone like to guess?”

Of course, I knew the answer. It was a good opportunity to stand out, but I refrained. Yun Hyuk acted like he knew with a pretentious face, which irritated me. I wanted to see what he was scheming.

“I...”

A girl suddenly raised her hand. I was surprised. Who the heck was that?

“Is it his nose?”

She guessed with a flushed face. She was just an extra who fell for Yun Hyuk.

The academic club continued for 2 hours. Unexpectedly, there was a lot to learn like the vital points of certain monsters, compatibility between attributes, and the difference between magic and spells. I learned the details of things I had lazily explained in my novel, all the while watching cute female cadets.

“We have an after-party at a nearby restaurant! It’ll be great if you can come!”

Yun Hyuk announced as the club ended. Yoo Yeonha seemed interested for some reason. I felt a bit worried and followed her. I knew she wasn’t the type to participate in things like this.

“Hey, you going?”

I casually approached her and asked. She didn’t respond. Maybe because of how I said it, so I asked again.

“Are you going?”

She continued to ignore me. I asked even more politely this time.

“Are you also going to the after-party, Yeonha?”

Only then did she respond with a faint nod.

“Why? Aren’t you busy?”

“Tsk.” This fool. That was what her eyes were saying.

“Why are you going?”

I wanted to know.

“Aren’t you curious about the mountain tyrant’s vital point?”

“Huh?”

Oh, I get it now.

Public information on the mountain tyrant was scarce, to say the least. Not only did its strength vary greatly from individual to individual, but it also lived in an extremely remote location. Although the mountain tyrant’s leather sold for a hefty price, it was hard to plan a hunt without knowing for sure how many people to bring.

Yoo Yeonha was the successor of a major guild, so Yun Hyuk acted like he knew to approach her. I never wrote how Yun Hyuk managed to coax Yoo Yeonha because my novel wasn't from her point of view. It seemed her guild was the key to luring her. Yoo Yeonha's clan had risen to power during Outcall 50 years ago thanks to the massive success of her family's first head. Her family was still a successful hero clan, but Yoo Yeonha had a bit of an inferiority complex. She felt her family was lacking compared to a true noble clan. This was why she favored Shin Jonghak and also overly obsessed about decorum.

"The mountain tyrant's vital point?"

Was this a good chance to invest? I could gain a lot from a cordial relationship with Yoo Yeonha. She would become the future ruler of Seoul with her outstanding proficiency in business.

"I'm not curious. I already know."

"What?"

Yoo Yeonha asked again as she furrowed her brows. She looked thoroughly annoyed on top of disbelief. I made my decision. Using this information, which would eventually become public, I would draw Yoo Yeonha's interest and instill a sense of mystery into her. It was an acceptable trade considering the SP and additional benefits I would gain. I whispered the information to her in a serious tone.

"The mountain tyrant's vital point is on the heel of its hind leg."

"What nonsense are you..."

"There's a blue mark on the heel of its hind leg, but its DNA determines whether it's the right or left hind leg. That's probably why its vital point hasn't been discovered yet."

Inspired by the story of Achilles' Heel, I was the one who created the mountain tyrant's setting. It was unlikely this setting had changed as tiny details seemed untouched.

"The mountain tyrant's body is tough, but the blue mark on its heel is the only place that's soft. That's the mountain tyrant's vital point. It should be easy to rob its 2 hind legs if you strategize around this.”

The value of this information had to be tens of millions, but it likely wouldn’t be over 100 considering my current credibility.

“Nuthead.”

As expected, Yoo Yeonha looked at me disdainfully like an insect. She walked away as I followed.

“Would you believe me if our positions were switched?”

“...”

Of course, I wouldn’t believe her either.

I hoped she would.

“Hey!”

Yun Hyuk suddenly cut in between us. He slightly shoved me back.

“Don’t you think you’re being too pushy?”

I had to look up to this cheesy son of a bitch’s height, so I turned to Yoo Yeonha.

“Am I bothering you?”

“Yes.”

She coldly replied.

“Heh.”

Yun Hyuk's mocking laughter angered me.

"By the way, are you also coming to the after-party?"

He spoke condescendingly. I shook my head.

"I'm not."

"Then don't bother other people too much. Um, Yeonha?"

However, Yoo Yeonha had already walked away.

"Heh."

I returned what I received. Yun Hyuk chased after her with a distorted face. I simply watched them leave.

I gave Yoo Yeonha valuable information, but I didn't know whether she would use it or not. If she did, I would gain a profitable ally. If not... nothing would happen.

I had nothing to lose.

On a dark winter night, Yoo Yeonha deeply contemplated as she tapped her pen on the desk.

Tomorrow, Essence of the Strait's elite team would hunt a mountain tyrant. They had secretly purchased information about a lone mountain tyrant in Kumgang Mountain and already confirmed its size with a scout.

It was estimated to be a high-intermediate rank, grade 1. The strength of its pelt reached promentium, a tough ore found after Outcall. As such, the guild would gain an astronomical income if they succeeded.

Yoo Yeonha was worried about one thing. It wasn't the safety of the elite hunting team, but the current vice-leader of Essence of the Strait who held too much power. She felt that threatened her seat as the guild's successor. She had to start contributing to inherit the guild without any issues.

Yoo Yeonha turned on her smartwatch and made a phone call. Soon, the receiver picked up and a hologram appeared.

“Um, Uncle?”

— Yes, Young Lady.

Kim Sangho appeared on the screen. He was a veteran in his forties, her father's trusted right hand. Yoo Yeonha treated him like her real uncle ever since she was a child.

— What's wrong?

She made the call, but was too embarrassed to say anything.

A blue mark on its heel? You can disable both of its hind legs by attacking it? Just what was I doing, fooled by that nuthead's nonsense?

“Um, I'm saying this just in case...”

The possibility wasn't zero and it wouldn't hurt to try. It came from that nutjob, but he had to have a reason for being so confident. Yoo Yeonha justified it to herself and caught her breath.

— Yes, Young Lady?

“Um, I know it sounds crazy, but...”

She closed her eyes and clenched her fists.

“If things are looking rough, try looking at the heels of its hind legs.”

— Hind legs' heels?

Kim Sangho furrowed his brows. Yoo Yeonha knew what that meant, but if she could be of use and this information was real...

“Yes, its hind legs’...heels. Either on its left or right heel, there should be... Well, I’m not sure if it’s true, but...”

Yoo Yeonha continued while risking embarrassment.

“If there is a blue mark there, try aiming for that place.”

For Growth (3)

I returned from working out in the middle of the night and collapsed on my bed. I found it difficult to fall asleep ever since I came into this world. My body felt tired, but countless random thoughts filled my head.

How could I survive? What should I do? Should I just secretly support the lead characters? Or should I become a villain and fight evil from the inside like the noir movie I just saw?

I grew curious about my current stats and checked them on my laptop.

▷Stats: Variable stats [Strength 1.735] [Stamina 1.845] [Speed 2.15] [Perception 2.605] [Vitality 1.65] [Magic power 1.3]

All my stats, except for magic power, had surpassed an average adult male at 1.5. My perception was already beyond an ordinary person. Still, I was far from ready. I needed money and it wouldn't be long before Packhorse Master went public. A thought flashed in my head. Indeed, going to the field was the most honest way of making money. I put it off because of my lacking stats, but I could make up for that by using the laptop to strengthen my weapon. Like how Kim Suho would later sever a mountain with a holy sword... It seemed like the quickest way to become stronger, but also required the most SP.

Currently, I only had the training gun provided by Cube and 380 SP from destroying my potential friendship with Chae Nayun. The training gun would likely only equal a famous handgun like the Desert Eagle if I invested all my SP into strengthening it. I should invest more efficiently into weapons with a better base performance.

“Hmm...”

I suddenly grew curious about the Desert Eagle since it was the only firearm I included in my setting.

Without getting up from bed, I turned on my smartwatch and entered a weapons dealer website called Essential Armory. It was operated by Essence of the Strait. Essential Armory was the most popular website for factory-manufactured weapons since weapons above the artifact grade were only sold in auctions.

[Welcome to Essential Armory.]

As expected, the most popular weapons dealer had a well-designed website. The homepage featured new items and the top bar included multiple categories such as sword, spear, bow, and rapier. They also provided a wide selection of guns for regular mercenary customers.

I clicked on the [category – gun]. It displayed several types such as handguns, assault rifles, and sniper rifles. For now, a handgun suited me best since it didn't hinder my movements. The Desert Eagle seemed quite popular.

Desert Eagle — Feel the transcendental power! Built-in magic amplification that boosts the power of magic bullets! The Desert Eagle is only recommended for the most proficient sharpshooters because of its huge recoil. Weight: 3.5948kg (1.2938kg with weight reduction magic add-on) Length: 333mm (Identification and contract required for purchase.)

Its picture looked much more beautiful than the original design. The barrel was an elegant platinum with a majestic eagle inscribed on the grip. This weapon looked like a work of art and boasted a heavy weight with its bulky size. I could tell it was powerful from just a glance. There was only one problem.

“It's too expensive.”

The base price was 20 million won and the price doubled when I clicked on full attachments. I needed the weapon to make money, so buying it for that much almost seemed counterproductive.

“Sigh.”

I tried to think of a solution, but I felt tired and went to bed. I turned off the smartwatch and postponed it for tomorrow.

It was Wednesday when I woke up. A bright light shone through the curtain. I always found it unpleasant since it signaled the start of another exhausting day.

“Whew.”

I brushed off such negativity every morning. After trudging to the bathroom and washing up, I put on my uniform and left. This routine only took 10 minutes.

Once outside, I saw other cadets going to school. They busily laughed and chatted early in the morning. I realized why I felt so lethargic watching them enjoy their school life.

I didn’t have any friends in this world. I didn’t even have someone to talk to. What kept school from being boring was friends, but I was no longer in my world.

Should I try to look for a girlfriend? No, I was too lazy. My situation could worsen if I spent too much emotion on needless human relationships. Yep, I should just be content with dying alone.

I quickened my pace to the classroom.

“As you know, a guild’s database contains various useful information, but you must reach a certain rank to access it.”

I thought about my weapon as I half-heartedly listened to an old professor’s lecture. The figure of a majestic eagle shimmered in my mind. How could I make enough money to buy it? The first thing I thought of was selling information. I had designed most of the monsters myself, so I roughly knew their vital points and attributes. Since each guild had different data, if I sold them the information they didn’t have... No, this wasn’t the best idea. It took 5 years for an information broker to build up their reputation. It didn’t seem like a good idea to disrupt the world’s balance just to make money.

Break time rolled around before I noticed. I turned on my smartwatch to enter Essential Armory, but I received an unexpected message.

[Excuse me.]

I was familiar with the sender, Rank 7 Yoo Yeonha. Cadets’ smartwatches all connected to Cube’s intranet, so we could message each other without contact addresses. This was the first time I used this feature. Yoo Yeonha sat in the front row. After glancing at the back of her head, I replied.

[What?]

[What are you?]

What nonsense was this?

[What do you mean?]

She didn’t reply for a while. I wondered where this was coming from. Then I remembered what I told her before. I peeked at the time. It was 1 P.M. I gave her the information yesterday and she already confirmed it?

[Ah, is it about that? I’m surprised you believed me.]

[What?]

[So? Wasn’t I right?]

Honestly, I was also dying to know whether the mountain tyrant’s setting had remained unchanged. I would have a tough time ahead if this unknown co-author changed everything.

[Yes.]

“Whew.”

Thankfully, it seemed that wasn't the case. I breathed a sigh of relief.

[How did you know?]

[You think I'd tell you?]

Yoo Yeonha's shoulder twitched. She briefly replied.

[No.]

A smirk emerged on my face. I recalled the Desert Eagle when I was about to end the conversation. The elegant, dignified bird of prey. I gave her the information for times like these. Coincidentally, Yoo Yeonha's guild owned Essential Armory.

[Anyways, I'd like to ask for a favor if you benefited from the information.]

Yoo Yeonha suddenly turned around. She knew exactly where I sat as though she kept an eye on me. She still looked sharply at me, but her gaze held less weight now.

How should I put it? Right, she looked like a big bag of money.

Chapter 17

For Growth (4)

I knew Yoo Yeonha would agree because she couldn't stand one-sided favors.

Now, I wondered what I should ask for. Money didn't seem right as Yoo Yeonha was still a minor. She likely couldn't give out tens of millions of won.

[It's simple. I need a weapon.]

After sending her the message above, I also sent her the link to Essential Armory's Desert Eagle. Yoo Yeonha checked it and looked back at me. She didn't seem to have any issues with it.

[I think it's pretty cheap.]

[...I understand.]

Great, she agreed.

[Is it possible to get it by tomorrow?]

The quicker it was, the more money I would make. Even if tomorrow was too difficult, I hoped to receive it by the end of the week.

[Yes, I'll take care of it.]

Surprisingly, she replied without hesitation even though her parents should still be in charge. Her decisiveness impressed me.

“Get back to your seats.”

The break ended at just the right time as the old professor resumed class.

Wednesday’s theory class ended and anti-personnel training began at 3 P.M.

Each cadet met with their sparring partners at the fairly large training field. Meanwhile, I pitifully looked for the instructor.

“Hey.”

A voice pierced my ears from behind. It seemed to be directed at me, so I turned and instantly froze at Chae Nayun’s terrifying glare.

“Spar with me.”

Her hostile tone bordered on killing intent. Gulp. I swallowed a mouthful. As the saying goes, A word causes a debt worth a thousand gold taels. I had made a dangerous enemy out of her with a single sentence. To live a peaceful life, I should mend our relationship even at the cost of kneeling and begging.

I fell in thought as I looked at her. Would she forgive me just because I apologized? Seeing me silent, Chae Nayun pointed at my gun.

“Your gun. Take it out.”

The first training gun broke when I fought the djinn. This was a new one. I looked down at my holster, then back at Chae Nayun.

“I don’t want to.”

“You scared?”

Those 2 words carried a great echo, causing all eyes on the training field to fall on us.

“Mmm...”

How should I act in front of Chae Nayun? Without a doubt, every cadet knew about her brother's incident. The original Kim Chundong would've known too, so it might seem like an even greater insult if I apologized.

“No.”

It might be better to remain as a bad guy to her. The reason I worked so hard without resting was to kill her older brother within a certain amount of time.

My actions would only leave a cruel sense of betrayal even if I mended our relationship and became friends.

“I'm afraid you might get hurt. This thing uses real bullets, you see.”

Immediately, the atmosphere grew heavy. Chae Nayun clenched her bow with so much force I could see the veins popping out of her hand.

“I don't think your bullets will even hurt.”

Chae Nayun forcefully suppressed her anger and sneered. I simply responded.

“You won't get hurt. You'll die.”

“Ha, say that again, punk.”

Chae Nayun approached me up close. She looked like she would explode at any moment. Technically, she was 165cm and I was 174cm, but she seemed much bigger for some reason.

“Really, who do you think you are?”

The atmosphere turned for the worse as more spectators gathered. At that moment...

“Chae Nayun, get back.”

The instructor stepped in as I sighed in relief. Thankfully, she came before it was too late. Chae Nayun turned towards the instructor.

“Why should I?”

“No one can spar with cadet Kim Hajin before he gets a gun for sparring.”

“But I don’t mind.”

“I mind.”

“Why —”

“Failure to heed an instructor’s order will be met with disciplinary action.”

“...”

An instructor’s words were absolute. Chae Nayun clenched her teeth with a bitter expression and glared at me one last time before leaving. The spectators dispersed and went back to training. Everything returned to normal.

“Take your gun out.”

The instructor spoke as she wrapped her hands in bandages. Her name... was it Park Hyun-Ah?

“Does a gun for sparring even exist?”

I asked the instructor.

“How the hell would I know?”

Crack, crack. The instructor cracked her neck and knuckles.

“Now, come.”

With a smile, she gestured with a finger.

This person... Did she enjoy this?

Thursday was the hunting club’s orientation, but I decided to skip it since it wasn’t required. Partly to avoid Chae Nayun, but mainly because I wanted to test out the new weapon I would be receiving.

“Ah, I can’t wait.”

I waited for the item at Angel Box, a coffee shop near Seoul. For the record, cadets could use portals 5-6 times a month as long as they filled out a form.

The time passed from 5:29:55... 5:29:56... 5:30:00. The shop’s door opened at exactly the appointed time. A man in a black suit and sunglasses walked in with a suitcase. His eyes met mine after looking around. I happily waved. His expression didn’t change as he strode up to me with his long legs.

“Kim Hajin?”

“Yes, that’s me.”

I felt like I knew this man. Only one person popped up when I thought of Yoo Yeonha’s attendant. Jin Sechan. The man presumed to be Jin Sechan placed the suitcase on the table without sitting down.

“Here’s the item. Please take a look.”

“Are you in a hurry? You can sit.”

I pointed at the chair in front of me. I wanted to test something before

I received it.

“Hmm.”

He sat down without complaint. I took out the laptop from my bag. Yesterday, I made some changes after realizing I could use the laptop to modify itself.

“Are you doing something?”

“What do you mean?”

The man tilted his head.

“Why are you tapping in the air?”

“You can’t see this?”

I lifted my laptop.

“...”

He looked at me as if I was crazy. I see. I had a suspicion, but it seemed I was correct. Only I could see this laptop.

“Haha, I’m kidding.”

That was fine with me. I turned on the laptop with the additional setting I recently added.

*[When Kim Hajin is within 50 meters of a target with an altered setting, the content and summary of the change(s) will be sent to Kim Hajin’s laptop. Does not work on targets above a certain level of importance.]

I added this setting because I thought it would be more efficient if I was told about a change through an objective medium than having to notice it and being told by the co-author. Either the co-author didn’t care or encouraged it, but I only spent 200 SP.

[A change in the setting has been detected.]

An alert popped up on the laptop.

[Jin Sechan – His feelings for Yoo Yeonha have deepened.]

I didn't mind this change.

"Anyways, I'll take a look now."

I opened the suitcase. Click. Click. It opened with a pleasant sound and a brilliant light shone from inside.

"Wow."

A platinum handgun and magazine sat on top of fancy red velvet. It looked even more beautiful than the pictures.

"As promised, it's the Desert Eagle with full attachments and a 60 round magazine of pinnacle grade magic bullets."

"Thank you. You may leave now."

I no longer cared about Jin Sechan. I checked my new weapon's setting with the laptop.

[Desert Eagle] [High rank] [Metal attribute] A masterpiece. Contains several added effects. [Attack Power Amplification – 1/10] [Low rank Weight Reduction Magic] [Intermediate rank Recoil Control Magic]

[Magic Bullet] [Pinnacle grade] [Null attribute].44 Macon steel mana bullet with condensed high purity mana. [Attack Power – 4/10]

I felt much better after reading the descriptions. I could easily kill a low-intermediate rank monster without even modifying the gun or bullets. I should be able to obtain aether from the Suwon Devil's Nest.

"Then I'll be going."

“Ah, yes. Take care.”

After sending Jin Sechan off, I checked my SP and had 250 left. Now, how should I spend this?

Jin Sechan contacted Yoo Yeonha after leaving. She asked as soon as she picked up the call.

— Did you deliver the item?

“Yes.”

— Was there anything special about him?

“That’s...”

There wasn’t anything special, but he did find something strange. No matter how much he thought about it, the young man’s demeanor wasn’t that of a 17 year old. Not to mention, it almost felt like he knew Jin Sechan.

— Yes?

“...No. There wasn’t anything in particular.”

He couldn’t conclude anything with just a short exchange. After all, the young man was a Cube cadet. Even Yoo Yeonha carried an air of dignity and elegance that didn’t suit her age.

— Yes, I understand. Thank you for your work, Sechan.

“My pleasure.”

With that, the call ended. He wanted to talk a little more, but remained content.

Chapter 18

Connections (1)

“170,000 won?”

My tone went up at the unexpected price. The portal worker responded unfazed.

“Yes. It’s 170,000 won from Seoul to Gangwondo Wonju.”

Unlike from Cube to Seoul, traveling from Seoul to Gangwondo required payment. I brought my card, but 170,000 won wasn’t a small amount when I was trying to save money.

“Mmm...”

“Customer, others are waiting in line.”

The female portal worker coldly warned. Indeed, I could see a line behind me. They all carried a weapon, so it seemed we shared the same objective.

“Um... Can something be done with this?”

I showed her my Cube cadet card before I reluctantly paid. Kim Soohyuk said something about cadets having benefits, but I never made such a setting so I wasn’t sure about the specifics.

“Huuu...”

The portal worker sighed as though she was annoyed and accepted the card. Her eyes suddenly widened and her voice brightened up.

“Ah, you’re a Cube cadet. Cadets are allowed 6 free passes per month.”

“Oh really? That’s great.”

“Would you like to use one?”

“Yes.”

The portal worker stamped a seal on my wrist. Her complete change in attitude genuinely surprised me. Being a hero really was one of the best jobs in this world.

“Thank you.”

“Yes, have a safe trip, cadet Kim Hajin.”

She even memorized my name.

I walked into the portal with a bitter smile.

I could summarize Gangwondo Wonju with a single sentence.

“So many foreigners.”

Wonju was a global city according to my settings. Its buildings were limited in height due to monsters, but sturdy modern structures filled the city. Foreigners of every skin color walked around with weapons and their agents busily tapped on tablets. Agents calculated the prices of the day’s haul. It was an unusual scene compared to Seoul and Busan.

“We took down a good amount today. How much do I get?”

I couldn’t help but laugh hearing clumsy Korean. Korean had become one of this world’s preeminent languages alongside English. Naturally, this reflected Korea’s authority in the international community. Although Korea was now prosperous, it remained quite close to hell.

Korea endlessly produced towers and dungeons that churned out monsters. Textbooks contained several explanations, both scientific and religious, but neither were close to the real reason.

The country would've long been destroyed had it not been for heroes who turned monsters into marketable resources. In addition, 5 of the Nine Stars (nine of the strongest heroes) were Korean. One of them even served as Korea's 20th President. As a result, Korea thrived and became a powerhouse.

"You killed 3 hobgoblins, so it should be about 600,000 won after fees and taxes."

Foreigners paid more taxes under the law, but they still flocked to Korea because hunting here was safer. If in danger, one could simply send out a distress call and heroes or agents would arrive in less than 3 minutes. Korea was the only country with such a system.

"Take this. You'll feel better afterward. It's a troll blood potion."

"Ah, thank you."

I walked through the streets of the world I created. The city was full of interesting things: blacksmiths, potion shops, bars, etc. Shops that looked like they belonged in the Middle Ages operated in modern buildings. It felt like a game world. The sentence I wrote without much thought, Wonju is a famous tourist city, transformed into a vibrant scene.

Before I noticed, I found myself among a crowd at the field's entrance. I would have to go to Hamgyong Province if I wanted to hunt in peace, but it was currently too dangerous for me.

"E-Excuse me?"

A tall, average man with slouched shoulders and circular glasses struck up a conversation when I was about to enter. I didn't know him, but he was most likely an agent.

"Yes?"

“Are you perhaps here to hunt monsters?”

“Are you an agent?”

“Ah, yes. Here’s my business card.”

I took the card for now. I didn’t know who he was, but an agent was necessary to sell monster parts. I was shocked when I read his name and company.

[SH Agency Head Manager, Park Soohyuk]

“Mr. Park Soohyuk?”

“Ah, yes. Nice to meet you.”

The man smiled as he tidied up his shabby clothes. Park Soohyuk. I knew who he was. Indeed, he looked similar to how I described him. Park Soohyuk was the most famous agent in the novel because SH Agency would later become Korea’s greatest agency.

“Haha, you might not have heard of me. I started this work not too long ago.”

For now, he didn’t seem to be doing too well. I smiled. Connections were one of the most important aspects in life. A person’s future was often the result of ill or good relationships. Many successful individuals in the future were still weak. The best way to associate with a famous person was to become friends before they became famous.

“SH Agency, I don’t think I’ve heard of it before.”

What bothered me was that this connection was supposed to be Kim Suho’s, but it should be fine since agents had multiple clients.

“It feels like a trustworthy name.”

“Ha, haha, thank you.”

“Ah, by the way...”

I naturally took out my laptop and checked for any changes. Thankfully, none showed up, which meant his extraordinary abilities hadn't changed.

“My main weapon is a gun. Is that okay?”

“I don't see why that would be a problem. Gun or sword, mercenary or hunter, it doesn't matter to me! New customers are always welcome!”

Park Soohyuk put his hand out with a bright smile.

I loaded 8 bullets into my gun. Each pinnacle grade magic bullet cost about 150,000 won. Since each low rank monster went for 300-400,000 won, I couldn't spend more than 1 bullet per monster considering the agent fee I would also have to pay.

With that in mind, I walked into the field.

Park Soohyuk followed. It seemed he was desperate considering agents without vehicles usually waited outside the field.

“Ah, there's one there.”

We finally encountered a monster after about 30 minutes of wandering.

It was a low rank, grade 9 monster called iron hog with a large body and protruding teeth. The iron in its name wasn't because it was made of iron, but because its skin was tougher than iron.

“I think we should ignore that one.”

Park Soohyuk held me back as I approached it.

“Why?”

I asked.

“Yes?”

Park Soohyuk’s eyes seemed to say, Do I need to explain?

“You can’t kill an iron hog with a gun. Even piercing its outer skin will be difficult.”

“But it’s expensive.”

“Yes?”

The price of a monster faithfully followed the law of a free market economy. Monsters like the undead gave zero benefits and had no value. Consequently, monsters like these were subsidized by the government.

“Even if it’s expensive, attacking it won’t do any good...”

“You’ll just have to wait and see.”

I took out my Desert Eagle and aimed forward. The barrel shone under the blazing sun.

“W-W-Wait just one min—”

Park Soohyuk made a fuss, but I didn’t hesitate to pull the trigger. The bullet tore through the iron hog’s tough skin and pierced its brain. It helplessly collapsed before it could even notice anything.

“Perfect.”

Both the weapon’s power and my skill felt satisfactory. I struck the iron hog’s vital point with pinpoint accuracy.

“Wow.”

Park Soohyuk exclaimed in awe.

The setting I added to my Desert Eagle was quite simple and effective.

[The Desert Eagle's attack power will be amplified when a monster is one-shot killed.] — Attack power will increase by 1% per kill starting from low-intermediate rank. — Repeated kills of the same ranked monsters will slightly decrease the boost in attack power.

I added a comparatively good effect for the SP spent by setting a restriction that required effort.

“So? Clean, isn’t it?”

Once again, I felt certain about my choice of weapon. Sniping from afar without getting close was the perfect low risk hunting method.

“Uh... That’s a great gun! Your sharpshooting is amazing too.”

“Haha, I’m flattered.”

I pointed to the iron hog’s corpse.

“So how much will this go for? It looks pretty expensive.”

“Well, iron hogs are already pricey and since this corpse is in such good condition, it should be at least 600... no, 800,000 won even after the fees.”

“Wow.”

“Hold on. Let me store the corpse first.”

Park Soohyuk took out a pouch from his bag. It should be a magical pouch with space expansion magic. I grabbed the hog’s front leg as he struggled to drag the hog into the pouch.

“I’ll help out.”

“Ah, thank you.”

“This is really heavy.”

My strength stat wasn’t that high either.

“Uuk, uk, god.”

“Wow, it is heavy.”

“Aren’t you an agent? Shouldn’t you have known beforehand?”

“You’re right.”

“I’ll hold its hind legs. You hold the front. Wait, don’t we have to carry the pouch around afterward?”

“Ah, don’t worry. Anything inside the pouch will have its weight reduced by half.”

“Only half?”

I couldn’t help but sigh. Indeed, Kim Suho only met Park Soohyuk in his third year. Park Soohyuk was in a bad state even then, so now... Well, I could only be thankful he hadn’t starved to death.

“Ugh.”

“Uuu.”

“Come on, put more strength into it.”

“Sorry, I didn’t have lunch...”

We finally stuffed the hog in the pouch after an hour of groaning.

“Whew...”

I collapsed to the ground. My strength and stamina stat should have increased from that.

Before I noticed, the sun had set and darkness descended on the field. A fearsome cold enveloped my body. From the looks of it, today’s hunt would end with just 1 kill. Although I regretted the huge waste of time, I wasn’t too sad since I established a valuable connection.

“So how do we bring this back?”

“Oh, don’t worry. We can just call 119 if it looks like we really can’t handle it. We just need to reimburse them for the trip.” [1]

“That’s genius.”

We laughed together. Suddenly...

“Hold on.”

Rustle. A faint sound rang out from a tree.

“Shhh.”

I took out my gun with an index finger over my mouth. Then I fired in the direction of the sound.

Thud.

No scream. Only the sound of a beefy body crashing down.

“Huh? What happened?”

“Yes?”

Park Soohyuk might not be able to, but I could see it clearly. My eyes could see a thousand miles away.

“Black pelican?”

1. 119 is Korea’s emergency contact number. 📞

Chapter 19

Connections (2)

I opened my eyes in bed on Friday and my entire body ached.

The iron hog and black pelican I hunted yesterday were too heavy. Thankfully, I made it back before curfew. Otherwise, I would've faced disciplinary punishment on top of minus points.

“Argh.”

Fortunately, no classes required my body today. With some effort, I got up and checked my smartwatch. I received 3 new messages.

[810,130 won has been deposited.] [450,270 won has been deposited.] [Here is the payment for yesterday's monsters. I hope to work with you again. SH Agency Head Manager, Park Soohyuk.]

The payment came faster than expected. If I remembered correctly, exclusive contracts had monthly payments. Mine must've been quick as a one-time deal, but he still took care of it overnight. As expected of Park Soohyuk.

Thanks to him, I could now open up a brokerage account and buy Packhorse Master guild stocks. One million won sounded like a good start. I went to shower with various thoughts.

Then I dried myself, put on my uniform, and headed to class after washing away my drowsiness.

Friday's first class was phenomenon realm analysis. From what I heard, today was the most difficult theory class because we didn't have physical training. Of course, that didn't apply to me.

I sat at a random seat and took out my laptop. I openly fiddled with it after finding out that only I could see it.

▷[Master Sharpshooter] [Low-intermediate rank] [Spirit attribute]
[Evolving — Grade 8] [Proficiency EXP 13%] — Master Sharpshooter's Training: Familiarity with all long ranged weapons — Thousand-Mile Eyes: Can see far away and predict a target's movement path. Has increased speed and perception by 0.3 points. — Bullet Time: Only in combat and once every 24 hours, you may spend 10 seconds in bullet time. — Sharpshooter of Reversal: You may deal bonus damage against a stronger enemy depending on your luck.

Sharpshooter of Reversal, the low ranked skill that I received from defeating the djinn, was quite decent. Master Sharpshooter had also reached grade 8. Of course, its growth speed would decrease the higher it became.

“Sit down.”

The professor walked in as I admired my growth.

“There is a written exam today as I mentioned last time.”

He announced a test out of the blue. The cadets all groaned. It seemed I wasn't the only one just hearing about this.

“Really? I didn't study at all!”

Chae Nayun despaired in front of me. Kim Suho, who sat next to her, promptly showed her his notes from yesterday. Chae Nayun coughed in embarrassment.

“Now, now, quiet down.”

The professor silenced everyone before handing out the exam sheets. After a few scuffling sounds, I also received it.

Problem 1. Describe the monster, pygmalion.

Problem 2. Describe the Nine Evils (djinnns).

Problem 3. State the attributes that humans can manifest in the phenomenon realm.

Problem 4...

The problems were much more ambiguous than I imagined. Other cadets also sighed the moment they glanced at them, but I was different. I had all the answers on my laptop.

[Pygmaliions are fallen ghosts whose intelligence exceeds that of humans. They cannot be seen in the phenomenon realm, and act as humans after possessing them. Some argue that they should be classified as djinns because of this behavior.]

Of course, I would be wrong if any of their settings changed, but that would also benefit me as I could learn more about new changes.

“What?”

When I almost finished writing all the answers...

“What happened?”

My laptop suddenly shut down. That is, my lifeline disappeared. I began to sweat from this unexpected occurrence. I couldn't do anything because I was in the middle of the exam. Blue words suddenly appeared on the LCD screen.

[A month has passed.] [The laptop's functionality will be updated.] [Kim Hajin's Observation and Reading will be strengthened.]

Yoo Yeonha planned a social leadership meeting called Noble Society every even-numbered Friday. She wanted to establish important connections for after graduation, but one of the important figures didn't seem to care. For Chae Nayun, Noble Society was simply a reunion with her childhood friends. Today's meeting took place at a coffee shop in Seoul.

“How are your grades?”

“The Jonghak I know isn’t content unless he places first.”

Only Shin Jonghak and Yoo Yeonha were in the coffee shop. It was popular, but Yoo Yeonha had rented the place out.

“Like I said, it’s good enough.”

“Yeah, okay.”

Clang— The bell on the door rang. Yoo Yeonha and Shin Jonghak turned to see Chae Nayun, who wore Chae Nayun-like clothes, blue jeans and a black jacket over a slightly see-through white shirt. She walked like a man, but her elegant figure was more charming than any other woman.

“Chae Nayun, you came today?”

Shin Jonghak waved. Chae Nayun walked over and spoke after looking around.

“Hey, where did your lackeys go?”

From Chae Nayun’s perspective, Shin Jonghak always brought along his lackeys. His followers were generally sons of large corporations or guilds. The hierarchy was clear despite labeling them as friends.

“They’re training. Midterms are coming up.”

“Oh, those guys also prepare for exams?”

Chae Nayun snarkily commented and took a seat.

“Rather than that, how did you do on the last written exam?”

“Are you making fun of me?”

“No, it’s just that you asked whether the others prepared for exams.”

Unlike when he was with Yoo Yeonha, Shin Jonghak actively brought up conversation.

“That’s different. I’m talking about the combat exam. Who cares if you’re good at theory.”

Chae Nayun replied no differently than usual.

Yoo Yeonha quietly watched them. She didn’t think much of it. They were just friends, but she wasn’t too fond of Shin Jonghak’s soft smile and kind eyes towards Chae Nayun.

Krrk. Yoo Yeonha lightly clenched her teeth and grabbed the coffee she ordered for Chae Nayun 30 minutes ago. It was lukewarm, but she simply heated it with magic power.

“By the way, do you know Kim Hajin?”

Yoo Yeonha’s ears suddenly perked up. She inadvertently joined the conversation.

“Kim Hajin?”

“Yeah.”

“What about him?”

“What do you think about that bastard, Yeonha?”

Chae Nayun’s face distorted.

Kim Hajin. Normally, she wouldn’t even think about someone like him. Even if she did, her assessment would have been, I don’t care or That crazy psycho, but circumstances had changed. She wasn’t exactly sure why, but he wasn’t so simple. Yoo Yeonha hid her inner thoughts.

“What do you mean? He’s just average.”

“No, never mind.”

Chae Nayun forcefully grabbed her coffee. Her strange reaction surprised Yoo Yeonha.

“That bastard is definitely hiding something.”

“What are you so angry about?” Shin Jonghak asked. He smiled as though he enjoyed seeing an angry Chae Nayun.

“You don’t know? There was a djinn at the National Weapons Museum during the recent monster incident in Seoul. Then that bastard...”

Chae Nayun gulped down her coffee and immediately spurted it back out.

“Aak! Fuck, it’s hot! Water! water!”

She shouted for cold water as she panted. Yoo Yeonha comforted her, but secretly rejoiced.

“Nayun, that’s coffee, not cold water.”

“You haven’t changed, have you?” Shin Jonghak laughed as an employee ran over with cold water.

“H-Here.”

Chae Nayun quickly gulped it down.

“Aagh, I burned my tongue.”

She caught her breath before continuing.

“Anyways, that djinn was stronger than Kim Suho. Even I...”

Chae Nayun paused again and looked at her two listeners. She didn’t want to talk about it in detail because what happened was embarrassing.

“Even I struggled a bit. Kim Suho’s a different story, but how can an ordinary cadet like him deal such fatal damage to a djinn?”

“What happened exactly?”

“I don’t want to explain in detail. Just know he blew up that djinn’s arm. With a gun at that! A gun! How does that make sense?”

Blowing up a djinn’s arm with a gun. Indeed, it was hard to believe without seeing it in person. Yoo Yeonha pondered as she rubbed her chin. She’d seen Kim Hajin fight. It was true he was quick, but it was hard to say he had the attack power to destroy a djinn’s arm.

“Ah, wait.” Chae Nayun suddenly turned serious. She seemed nervous and hesitated. Naturally, Shin Jonghak and Yoo Yeonha waited.

“Could it be that he’s... a djinn?”

“Nayun, he wouldn’t have attacked a fellow djinn if he was also a djinn.”

Yoo Yeonha quickly shot down her hypothesis.

“I guess you’re right. Anyways, there’s something about that guy.”

“So you’re telling me you don’t like him?”

Shin Jonghak listened without a word and finally broke his silence. Chae Nayun and Yoo Yeonha both understood the hidden meaning behind those words.

Chae Nayun pondered how to answer. She knew Shin Jonghak’s personality. That guy’s future would noticeably change depending on her answer. She replied after some contemplation.

“I’m not sure, but something like that.”

Chapter 20

Connections (3)

[Updating in progress... 79%]

It was currently 9 A.M. on Saturday. My laptop still remained unusable. It only went up to 79% after I anxiously waited an entire day for the new amazing features.

I stared at the update until my smartwatch rang.

[Brokerage account for Kim Hajin has opened.]

“Oh, it’s done!”

I was concerned about this too. It would’ve been easy as an adult, but I was still a minor. Like my previous world, a minor couldn’t open a brokerage account without a guardian. It would’ve been impossible if I wasn’t a Cube cadet.

I quickly went to work now that I had an account. First, I transferred money over to my new brokerage account using my smartwatch. One million won from the previous monster hunt and 2 million won I already had for a total of 3 million. It was pocket change compared to many other traders, but it was enough to start. I opened the stock trading program. The guild stock market operated on weekends to differentiate from the normal market.

[Guild — Packhorse Master]

The exchange also listed the Packhorse Master guild. Each of their stocks cost worth 170 won. I simply bought however much I could since I wasn’t knowledgeable about complicated things like short selling, short buying, or price fluctuations.

[17,647 stocks of Packhorse Master guild purchased.]

It didn't take long, so I looked up a stock-related forum before leaving. [Gathering of people who enjoy the stock exchange.] This was the biggest forum for stock-related topics with 930,000 members. I searched up Packhorse Master.

[List of new guilds.] [Guilds newly listed] [Guild market is hard nowadays
TT None of the new guilds look promising...]

None of the posts specifically discussed Packhorse Master.

“Well, what did I expect from an online forum?”

I clicked my tongue and turned off the smartwatch. Information equaled money in this world, so one had to pay for the proper websites. Expert brokers didn't spare a glance at free forums. Information guilds possessed their own intranets where one could buy information and those who wished to stay anonymous could use something like the Violet Banquet.

Speaking of secrecy, a group called the Chameleon Troupe lurked in the shadows. They first appeared halfway through the story and were the most powerful gang in my novel. Their members would play important roles later in the novel. Just like how a chameleon changed its colors to hide, the Chameleon Troupe was a secretive group whose identities always remained hidden. Currently, one seat in the Chameleon Troupe should be empty. This seat would remain open for another year or two and would play an important role later. I knew who the Chameleon Troupe's leader was and where she operated. I should be the only one with this information other than their members.

The Chameleon Troupe was a gang of criminals, but they also rejected djinns. Djinns were the absolute evil in this world. If I could become a Chameleon Troupe member... that was unrealistic. If I could just befriend their leader, they might even support me. Just when I was thinking...

“Uk!”

An intense pain suddenly came over my upper left arm as though a hot knife was carving my skin. Blood spurted out into my eyes. I quickly pulled up my sleeve and saw a strange scar on my upper arm.

“The hell...”

It was incomprehensible. I clenched my teeth and put my hand over the mark gushing with blood. A tsunami of information flooded my brain at the same time.

[This stigma containing magic power is one of the Creator’s authorities.] [One streak of stigma will be inscribed each time your total acquired SP reaches a certain level along with your fame.] [You may freely use the magic power stored inside the stigma, which will slowly regenerate over 24 hours.]

“Ah.”

An indescribable pain throbbed throughout my head and arm. I read the laptop screen despite my paralysis.

[Update List] ▷Book of Truth has been added to the gift, [Observation and Reading].

The weekend sky was clear and blue. The early spring weather felt chilly, but still held some warmth. I was unable to enjoy this beautiful day as I was summoned to Seoul’s Association Tower for subjugating the djinn. Really, couldn’t they just deliver it?

The conferment ceremony took place at a garden in Association Tower. Many people had already gathered by the time I arrived. However, the ceremony seemed nowhere close to starting. Kim Suho, Chae Nayun, and I were forced into a rehearsal to receive our commendations from a dignitary, but the dignitary himself was late and we were forced to wait. It felt like sitting on needles with Chae Nayun next to me.

“Yaaawn.”

“Happy?”

I yawned once because I was bored. Chae Nayun looked for an excuse to pick a fight.

I briefly retorted, “What.”

“You’ve had a smirk for a while now.”

“...”

It was unfair that she could look so pretty while making such remarks. I planned to stay silent, but suddenly recalled why I was here.

“You didn’t forget, did you?”

“Forget what?” she asked.

Each of her words stung like a thorn. I spoke as I stared at her.

“That I saved you.”

“...”

She still looked angry, but shut her mouth.

“That’s that and this is...”

“Stop, both of you.”

Chae Nayun tried to strike back, but Kim Suho cut in.

“W-What?”

“Chae Nayun, switch seats with me.”

For the record, our seats were ordered: Kim Suho, Chae Nayun, then me.

“And if I refuse?”

“Hurry.”

“No, why? I don’t want to.”

Seeing them all touchy didn’t feel too good. Thankfully, their scuffle ended as Kim Suho sat next to me. He looked at me and coughed.

“Thank you for back then.”

"What?"

I wanted to be left alone, so why was he still talking to me?

“Back at the museum, we wouldn’t have won if it wasn’t for you.”

“No, you would’ve won even without me.”

If I wasn’t there, Kim Suho might have awakened an even greater power. Main characters were always like that.

“No.”

Kim Suho turned back after a single word. An extraordinary magic power suddenly undulated. The dignitary finally arrived.

“H-He’s here. Everyone get ready!”

Today’s commendation conferrer was the master rank hero known as the Wolf of Valhalla. His shoulder-length hair slightly curved up and he had a well-trimmed beard uncommon for an Eastern man. His regality was more than just an invisible feeling. As though a wind blew, each of his steps caused a tiny tremor of magic power. His raw power had reached a realm where even he couldn’t fully control it.

“Huu.”

The master rank hero, Yoo Sihyuk, looked around with wolf-like eyes and murmured, “These fuckers telling me what to do.”

It was so quiet that only I could hear it with my gift. With arrogance and apathy, Yoo Sihyuk pushed back the guests flocking towards him.

He walked up to the podium overbearingly as his attendant ran up and handed him a paper that listed the order of the ceremony. Yoo Sihyuk clicked his tongue and glanced at the paper before throwing it away. His attendant ran off with the discarded paper.

— Now, the conferment ceremony will begin.

The host announced the start of the ceremony.

— The commendation will be conferred by rank 37 master rank hero, Sir Yoo Sihyuk.

Kim Suho, Chae Nayun, and I walked up to the podium as we rehearsed. Yoo Sihyuk smirked when he saw Kim Suho.

“Are you Kim Suho?”

“Yes.”

“Mmm. I can see why those guys want you.”

Intense interest reflected in his eyes. Yoo Sihyuk advised Kim Suho with unusual kindness.

“Don’t join the association. It might be better to join the Vast Expanse and become a hunter. Being a hero is nothing but a baggage of responsibility and no fun.”

“Still, a hero fits my personality best.”

Kim Suho refused with a smile.

The corner of Yoo Sihyuk's mouth twisted up.

"You're a boring guy. Fine... And you, it's been a while, eh?"

This time, it was Chae Nayun. She made a bitter expression when they made eye contact.

"It's been a while."

"Your father told me to take care of you, but I don't plan on doing that."

"I... Master—"

"I'm not your master. A bow user like you thinks you can call me master? Do you want to die?"

Chae Nayun pouted at his reproach. I struggled to hold in my laughter at her pathetic state.

"And who are you?"

"I am cadet Kim Hajin."

"Oh... Okay."

That was it for me. A completely different treatment from Kim Suho and Chae Nayun.

It seemed indifference really was more painful than hatred.

Chapter 21

Second Incident (1)

“He has shown himself to be a model citizen by risking his life to subjugate a djinn. This commendation proves his excellent service for the good of society and his exemplary behavior which motivates others. Cadet Kim Suho.”

Yoo Sihyuk handed Kim Suho the commendation certificate without any needless commentary. Kim Suho took the certificate with honor and dignity.

“Chae Nayun, same as above.”

Next was Chae Nayun.

“Kim Hajin, same as above.”

Then me.

“The conferment ceremony is now over.”

The conferment ceremony concluded with the host’s announcement. One hour and 30 minutes of rehearsal and 1 hour of waiting for just 5 minutes. It was so quick that I didn’t even have time to feel wronged.

“Oh, by the way...”

Yoo Sihyuk, who was about to leave, suddenly stopped as though he recalled something.

“The reward for the djinn subjugation is 15 million won. I almost forgot.”

The moment I heard that I felt grateful for everything. To the Cube associate who forced me out of bed this morning, the 1 hour and 30 minute rehearsal, even the man who was late by an hour.

“Good luck. We’ll meet again if chance allows.”

Yoo Sihyuk left with a bored smile. We saw him off, then came down from the podium. Guild associates flocked toward us before we even reached the ground. However, they were only interested in Kim Suho and Chae Nayun. No one approached me. Most likely they thought I was just lucky to have been there, but that didn’t mean I felt disappointed. Such was the life of an extra. I blushed at being ignored, but quickly left.

I went to a nearby coffee shop and ordered a drink. Then I sat down and turned on my laptop. The reason was simple. I hadn’t checked the laptop’s new features yet because I fainted from the pain yesterday and was dragged to the conferment ceremony today.

[Updated Features] ▷Book of Truth has been added to the gift,
[Observation and Reading] ▷Internet has been added to the laptop.
▷Stigma.

I received 3 new features. The second addition caught my attention first. Internet has been added to the laptop. It seemed too ordinary. After all, my smartwatch could access the internet, but the laptop’s new feature couldn’t be that ordinary. I accessed the internet on my laptop.

“...Aha.”

I immediately understood. The internet window displayed rows of familiar texts.

[List of Currently Accessible Websites] ▷Righteous Mind ▷Violet Banquet... ▷Sword of Jeremy

The laptop’s internet allowed me to access paid websites. The new feature was like a hacking tool. One caught my attention among those numerous sites.

▷ *Violet Banquet: Website for trading undisclosed information, weapons, bounties, and commissions. SP needed to obtain an ID: 200

Violet Banquet was the most famous website on the dark web with over a million members. Its real attraction wasn't actually the website, but its sellers. Violet Banquet served as a lawless place to sell anonymous information, weapons, bounties, and commissions. While the government knew about this underground black market, they had no choice but to stay silent as almost all heroes frequented it. As a joke, a hero wasn't a real hero unless they had a Violet Banquet membership.

Naturally, one needed to pay an enormous sum for membership, but I only needed 200 SP to obtain an ID.

"Ah, there you are."

A charming voice and scent approached me. I recognized her voice and immediately straightened. Yun Seung-Ah nonchalantly walked over and sat in front of me.

"You know me, right?" Her eyes formed an arc as she stared.

"You don't?" Yun Seung-Ah asked again. I shook my head. Only a few in the world wouldn't know vice-leader Yun Seung-Ah.

"No, I know."

"That's a relief. I was surprised because you suddenly disappeared. I wanted to give you something."

Yun Seung-Ah handed me her business card adorned with gold.

[Guild, Creator's Sacred Grace, vice-leader Yun Seung-Ah.]

Yun Seung-Ah continued while I sat speechlessly.

"There's a lot I want to talk about, but I don't have enough time. I spent too long looking for you, cadet Hajin."

Yun Seung-Ah giving out her business card wasn't a simple matter. It was the first step of how she recruited according to my novel.

"There's something I want to ask. Can I?" She politely waited for my response.

I stared into her calm and beautiful brown eyes.

"No."

"Did you destroy the djinn's... Hmm?"

Yun Seung-Ah might appear kind and graceful to the media, but she was actually extremely cold-hearted. She didn't hesitate to throw away talents she once eagerly recruited if they didn't meet expectations. Taking what's necessary and throwing away what isn't. The media was unaware of her survival of the fittest attitude. She believed a lazy person would continue to be lazy, and a person falling behind would continue to fall behind.

"Don't ask."

I gave back the business card.

"Eh? Um, cadet Hajin? I think you're misunderstanding something. I'm interested in you, as the vice-leader of the number 1 ranked guild."

"I'm thankful for your interest, but only if it's real interest."

According to Yun Seung-Ah's personality, she was probably here because I used a light attribute bullet. Her interest in me was only curiosity. With a single gust of wind, it could cool and she would even forget my name. Playing hard to get would probably be more memorable for the sake of SP.

"I'll be off. There's a lot I need to do. It's almost time for midterms, you see."

I got up before the surprised Yun Seung-ah. Her eyes followed me, but I quickly left the coffee shop. What she was thinking was none of my concern.

The reward money had arrived by the time I returned to the dorm at 1 P.M. It was a clean 15 million won, untaxed. Without hesitation, I purchased more Packhorse Master stocks. I was likely a majority shareholder now with over 100,000 stocks.

“Huhu... Ah, right.”

I suddenly remembered what I couldn't finish at the coffee shop. The other 2 features of the update, the Book of Truth and stigma. First, I looked at stigma.

[You may freely use the magic power stored inside the stigma, which will slowly regenerate over 24 hours.]

“...So how do I use it?”

Stigma looked like a tattoo on my upper left arm, but I couldn't even wield magic power in this body. That would likely never change as I described magic power in my novel as an innate talent that required early education. Perhaps this was why the co-author gave me such a unique ability.

“I can freely use it?”

Since I could freely use it, I simply thought about it. That was all I did. Immediately, stigma's magic power unleashed a blue light that enveloped my upper arm. The magic power flowed down my veins to my fingertips before shooting out and manifesting different shapes. First, it formed a triangle, a circle, then a blade.

It grew even more mysterious when I thought about the Book of Truth.

The magic power formed a book with a wavering cover as though it was made of water. I glanced at my veins, which had turned blue, and the strange book that formed in the air. A voice sounded in my head.

[This book contains the truth. Ask it anything and it will answer as long as you have enough magic power.]

“So that’s how it works.”

The words, as long as you have enough magic power, stuck out, but it was undoubtedly a great gift.

When I was about to ask something as a test...

Wiing— Wiing— Wiing—

An emergency alarm rang from my smartwatch. It sounded similar to a disaster alert which couldn’t be ignored. I retracted my magic power and turned on my smartwatch.

[Looking for the last person who has seen World class novice cadet, Jin Hajung.] [Looking for the last person who has seen World class novice cadet, Jin Hajung.]

I immediately knew what happened. The next arc had begun. The name of this arc was Cube’s Serial Disappearance Incident. There would be 6 victims and it was fairly important in the story because Yoo Yeonha was the final victim. This would bring Kim Suho and Yoo Yeonha closer together.

Speaking of the devil, Yoo Yeonha suddenly messaged me.

[What?]

[The text just now, that isn’t your doing, right?]

Was she insane?

[No, why?]

[Then never mind.]

[Alright.]

[By the way, I heard you fought a djinn last week.]

[...What are you trying to say?]

Changing the topic over and over until the other side brought up what she wanted to talk about, that was Yoo Yeonha's specialty.

[Do you know about the giant swamp soldier?]

I couldn't help but laugh. It seemed she wanted me to tell her its vital point.

The giant swamp soldier was a high rank monster known for its 30 meter height. It was rare because Korea didn't have large swamps. Her guild must have received information about its location.

[I wouldn't tell you even if I knew.]

Many guilds in the country wouldn't know the giant swamp soldier's vital point.

[I can buy the information.]

[No.]

I firmly cut her off. The mountain tyrant should've been enough to serve as her accomplishment.

[Why not? I can offer a lot.]

It was true Yoo Yeonha would become successful in the future, but her personality hadn't matured yet. Currently, she wouldn't hesitate to mercilessly cut down her enemies. It was dangerous to give her wings before she could grow on her own with the right influences.

[Honestly I don't know. How would I know the vital point of a monster that doesn't appear in Korea?]

I wasn't lying. Although I was this world's author, I didn't know everything. I created the giant swamp soldier, but I only gave it a rough sketch. Since it was a golem-type monster, I only mentioned that an attribute that countered swamps would work well against it. I never wrote any specific details.

After a long while, Yoo Yeonha ended the conversation with a single message.

[From now on, don't talk to me so casually.]

“Pfft.”

I couldn't help but smirk. As I thought, even though Yoo Yeonha acted all adult-like...

“Still a high schooler, huh.”

She was only 17.

Chapter 22

Second Incident (2)

[Information Agency – Truth]

Welcome. If you seek the truth, visit the following room.

¿Room of Inquiry?

Please write your question in the space above. As long as it meets the following guidelines, it will be answered.

— Condition 1. Naturally, only answers known by the agency will be answered. If we do not know the answer, we will admit it so do not worry.

— Condition 2. We cannot answer about a person with just their name. We require the person's name, picture, physique, identity, and other personal information.

— Condition 3. We do not answer trivial questions. For example, I lost my cat. Where is it? is not an acceptable question. However, the same question can be answered if the scope is narrowed with specific details.

Note 1. The minimum cost is 100,000 won but is subject to change drastically depending on the question.

Note 2. Please keep in mind that replies will be faster if you are respectful.

Note 3. The information we provide is all true. No refunds.

The above cost and conditions are subject to change at any time.

I proudly looked at my laptop with the form I submitted to Violet Banquet as an information seller. Now that I had a gift like the Book of Truth, it felt like a waste not to use it.

For now, I gave it the grandiose name, Truth Agency. I didn’t expect many customers yet since reputation played a big role in the Violet Banquet. That was perfect since my magic power wouldn’t last anyway. In 2-3 years, Truth Agency would surely spread because of small interests like, Why is this still here? or Should I give it a try since I’m bored? I would have 3-4 streaks of stigma by then, so I wouldn’t need to worry about running out of magic power. It was a risk-free, long-term investment. If it worked, great. If it didn’t, that was fine too.

“Okay.”

I pressed the [apply for seller] button after looking over the form again. Finally, I had taken care of everything now. The only thing left was my daily workout. I stretched and stood up.

Kim Suho worked out at the Novice Fitness Center late at night on Sunday. He was a regular, but today looked totally different from the beginning of the year. The fitness center was full of cadets because of the upcoming midterm exams.

“Kuu.”

After finishing a set, Kim Suho looked around while resting. Jin Hanjun, Kim Horak, Shin Jonghak, and even rare visitors like Yoo Yeonha and Rachel.

“Are you checking out girls?”

A sudden coldness touched his face. Kim Suho pulled back his head in surprise and glared at the one person who would prank him. Yi Yeonghan shrugged and handed him the drink.

“So, are you?”

“No, I just...”

“Yeah?”

“I just thought it was a rare sight.”

Kim Suho pointed at Rachel with his chin. Yi Yeonghan nodded in agreement.

“I guess you’re right. This is the first time I’ve seen a real princess working out at a fitness center.”

Blonde hair that shone brilliantly and eyes like sapphire. Her elegant figure flaunted no imperfections. Even while covered in sweat, she exuded charm and looked like a painting. Rachel was the descendant of a noble lineage from England’s royal family.

“Who do you think she’ll marry in the future? Not us, right?”

Kim Suho smiled at Yi Yeonghan’s wishful thinking.

“Is that a sneer? What, you think you can marry her?”

“No, it’s not that. I agree. I don’t think she’d marry someone like us.”

“Uuk!”

While they joked, a sudden loud grunt grabbed their attention.

“Huuuk!”

The strange breathing came from a guy having a life-and-death battle with the fitness equipment. However, there was only a pitiful amount of weight on the equipment.

“...Is he really struggling with that?”

Yi Yeonghan looked on with pity. It wasn't just Yi Yeonghan. Almost every cadet snickered as they walked by. Kim Suho couldn't tell whether Kim Hajin was oblivious or too focused to notice, but he continued struggling resolutely.

"At least he's hanging in there," Kim Suho briefly replied.

"Please, with that weight, I could do the same for half a day. I'm curious how he was even admitted. Even sharpshooters have a minimum physical requirement, and wasn't he a swordsman before? Why don't I remember him?... Oh, look, it's Chae Nayun."

Chae Nayun came out of the gravity room at just the right moment. Covered in sweat, she slightly staggered in exhaustion. It looked like she planned on heading straight back, but she stopped to glare at Kim Hajin. Jiing— Two laser beams shot out of her eyes.

"What's she doing?"

"They're not really on good terms." Kim Suho smiled bitterly.

"Tsk."

After glaring at Kim Hajin for a while, Chae Nayun clicked her tongue and turned back. At the same time, her eyes met Kim Suho. She let out a dry cough as though she was embarrassed and walked toward them.

"Hey, Kim Suho. Isn't he a bit strange?"

What nonsense was she spouting?

"Strange?"

"That bastard. He's acting."

"What are you talking about?"

Both Yi Yeonghan and Kim Suho furrowed their brows. They didn't understand what Chae Nayun meant, but she glared at Kim Suho as though he was dense.

“I can understand Yi Yeonghan, but Kim Suho, you’re being a bit too naive.”

“What? What are you saying out of the blue?”

“You saw him that day and you still don’t get it?”

Chae Nayun’s suspicion was well-justified. Magic power was one of the most important abilities of a hero. What Kim Hajin displayed during the Seoul incident was abnormal. An explosion of magic power strong enough to dye the world white... A guy with such magic power struggled to lift a tiny weight? It didn’t make sense. Kim Hajin had to be acting for whatever reason.

Although the logic wasn’t perfectly sound, it was a justifiable suspicion.

“Hmm...”

Yi Yeonghan stared at Kim Hajin again. His face turned so red it was about to explode.

“If that’s acting, he should win an Oscar.”

“Sigh. Whatever. Stay dense, you two.”

Chae Nayun shook her head in disappointment as 3 male cadets approached Kim Hajin. Kim Suho frowned since they were well-known delinquents.

“Hey, what are you doing, loser?”

“Look, he’s struggling with this. I only need a finger to lift this.”

They nudged Kim Hajin, but he didn’t react. He focused on working out without giving them a single glance.

“Hey, are you mute? Say something.”

“Let’s take pictures of this son of a bitch and post it online. Look at him, working all hard when he’s a complete waste.”

Annoyed, the three delinquents began to openly curse: Why live, you’re a waste of money. I feel bad for your parents. You’re not going to graduate anyway, so just leave, etc...

“...Hey, I’m leaving.”

Chae Nayun left feeling slightly uncomfortable. Kim Suho got up, unable to hold himself back, but Yi Yeonghan stopped him.

“Just leave him be. By the looks of it, they’re Shin Jonghak’s lackeys. Nothing good will come out of fighting them.”

“But still...”

“Plus...”

Yi Yeonghan smiled as though he found it funny.

“Who knows? Maybe he is acting.”

I woke up on Monday morning and thought back to what happened yesterday. Applying as an information seller on Violet Banquet, buying stocks, and working out...

Let’s shower first.

Chwaaa— The cold water washed away my drowsiness. I looked at my wet body in the mirror. It had definitely improved. My shoulders and biceps bulked up, my abs became well-defined, and my thighs felt rock-hard. I could’ve never achieved such fitness on Earth. I wondered how my stats looked?

After drying myself, I left the bathroom and turned on my laptop.

*[Strength 1.835] [Stamina 1.945] [Speed 2.15] [Perception 3.055]
[Vitality 1.765] [Magic power 1.315]*

I had grown a lot. Of course, I was still at the level of someone who diligently worked out, but it wouldn't be long until I could obtain aether from Gari Mountain. After all, the real reward of the Gari Mountain Dungeon wasn't the completion reward, but the hidden stage.

Wiing— Wiing—

I turned on my smartwatch before heading out and was greeted with anonymous messages.

[Retard.] [Hey, coward, get ready to have your spine broken in the combat exam. I'll disable you and...]

“These guys again.”

It seemed I was being bullied. I had an idea who the instigator was, but I couldn't be sure. Of course, something of this level wasn't enough to bother my 26 year old mind. After all, I had suffered through Korea's military service. It was just kids being kids.

I walked outside after blocking the 2 fools who messaged me. They had written some stuff on the nameplate outside my door. Retard, loser, pushover... There was one more, but the handwriting was illegible. They seemed to have carved it with magic power to avoid being detected by CCTV. For now, I really couldn't do anything. Classes would begin in 10 minutes, so I hurried before I was late.

They greeted me as I opened the classroom door.

“Oh, you're here, loser?”

Some kid I didn't even know struck my head. I started to get a bit annoyed. Sure, it was just kids being kids, but I made sure to remember their faces. Jokes on you, my SP increases the more you bully me!

"What? You mad?"

I didn't respond. Kim Hyuksoo. I memorized his name and ignored him. I walked past a few more sneering cadets and sat at my usual seat. I made eye contact with Chae Nayun, but she didn't act hostile like usual. Instead, she looked at me somewhat bitterly before turning away.

"Hey guys, the exam results are out for phenomenon realm analysis."

Yi Yeonghan walked in with an armful of scrolls. Cube had a custom where the results of every written exam, big or small, were publicly posted on large posters. Yi Yeonghan put up the posters as the cadets groaned.

The results were as such:

Rank 1. Kim Hajin

Rank 2. Rachel...

Snap. I heard a sound similar to chopsticks breaking and peeked behind me. Two halves of a pen rolled on the table. Next to it was Rachel. She stared at the results in shock.

"Oh, right."

I remembered a setting I had forgotten.

For every written exam, big or small, Rachel had never lost first place.

Chapter 23

Second Incident (3)

Cube's classes and exams were all conducted in Korean. Even the few foreign professors spoke fluently since it had become a shared language and culture across many countries.

However, just because Korean became a shared language didn't make it easier to learn. Foreigners still struggled to master it.

Despite this disadvantage, Rachel understood most of the lectures and could properly write the correct answers on exams. Anyone would understand how much effort she put into studying.

As royalty, she had to maintain a certain level of grace and dignity. She wanted to become the perfect hero in theory and combat. Then she would write a textbook for the English Royal Hero Academy.

Naturally, the citizens of England took pride in Rachel. They believed it was finally time for a master rank hero to emerge from England.

Master rank heroes referred to the world's top 70 heroes. Currently, 33 of the 70 were Korean, while 18 were American and 9 were Chinese. Only 2 came from England, but that was debatable since they had obtained Korean citizenship 15 years ago.

The citizens of England hoped she would become the symbol of their nation.

Rachel never slept more than 2 hours a day to meet their expectations. However, the first place record she painstakingly kept had been broken.

Rachel wasn't sad, only apprehensive and apologetic. Of course, the result of a single exam was unlikely to spread to England, but phenomenon realm analysis was a difficult topic. The gap between her and first place was unlikely to change for a while.

“...”

She felt someone looking at her. It was an average-looking boy. She didn't know his name, but she noticed all the other cadets also looked at him. Then she realized he was Kim Hajin. He turned back as she committed his face to memory.

She wanted to take a look at the notebook in front of him.

There was a slight uproar that I placed first on the phenomenon realm analysis exam, a topic widely considered to be the most difficult. Rachel remained silent, but the professor publicly praised me.

“I also looked at cadet Kim Hajin's answer sheet. His knowledge and vision impressed me, to say the least. I hope everyone else can learn from his passion. Once again, theory is very important.”

The professor encouraged the entire class. I found it uncomfortable and quickly left the moment class ended. I had a lot to do. No, I had a lot of SP to spend. I couldn't hoard SP anymore if I wanted to protect myself from upcoming events. Cube was no longer safe now that the second arc had begun. Several djinns should've already laid traps within the academy.

To briefly explain, a djinn was a human who contracted with a devil. A devil gave them power in exchange for their soul. Naturally, high ranked devils bestowed greater powers.

However, an ordinary human who formed a contract would only become a demi-djinn, a mere puppet without intelligence. The Dog of Lucius from the museum was one such example.

In exchange for his sanity, the man gained enough of Lucius' magic power to fight Kim Suho, but couldn't even accomplish his master's mission. Lucius would've been satisfied if he had ignored Kim Suho and killed his target.

It was more difficult, but devils favored humans with magic power and an underdeveloped mind. Naturally, cadets made the perfect targets.

I felt the need to prepare another weapon because I wouldn't survive if I encountered another djinn.

"Hmm..."

I stared at the laptop on my desk. For now, I planned to add another setting to the Desert Eagle. I gained a lot of SP thanks to Chae Nayun or Shin Jonghak's efforts.

[Transformation function has been added to the Desert Eagle. Handgun to 12-gauge shotgun] — Condition: Requires stigma's magic power.

It didn't take a genius to know a shotgun was more powerful than a handgun. The shotgun's power would increase the closer the target. A handgun couldn't just magically transform into a shotgun, but I wondered if my setting intervention could achieve such a miracle?

[Transformation function has been added to the Desert Eagle. Handgun to 12-gauge shotgun] — Condition: Requires stigma's magic power. — Will amplify attack power by a maximum of 100% depending on the target's distance.

Indeed, a miracle had occurred. The laptop modified what I wrote with more details and stated a reasonable cost of 250 SP. Without a doubt, I hit [save].

A silver current shot out of the laptop and surrounded the Desert Eagle. The gun shone before the light gradually subsided. I picked it up and checked whether anything had changed, but it looked the same.

I poured stigma's magic power into the handgun and it immediately dismantled.

Kirik— With a robotic sound, the magazine split as the gunstock and barrel stretched. Soon, the Desert Eagle took on a new form.

Two platinum barrels the size of my arm lay parallel. It looked clean and elegant.

“It’ll surprise them for sure.”

I didn’t know much about shotguns, but the Desert Eagle’s destructive power definitely went up with this modification.

Click— I opened the empty magazine. I would need to purchase 12 gauge ammo or modify the bullets I already had. That could wait for later.

I finished modifying my weapon, but still had a few more tasks.

Creating an art.

An art was a specific skill typically acquired through practice. For example, a painter with an art for drawing or a singer with an art for singing. The difference between an art and a gift was that an art didn’t produce supernatural effects.

▷Arts (0/3) X

I could create 3 arts. For now, I had one in mind.

[Parkour] — Can rapidly ride walls and freely run, jump, or climb through obstacles. — The art’s performance scales with the speed stat.

Positioning determined life or death for a sharpshooter. Naturally, parkour was the perfect skill for me. My laptop conveniently modified my vague description.

[Art] [Parkour] [Proficiency 0%] [Low rank] — Grants flexible and efficient movement. — Is not affected by terrain and can freely run, jump, or climb through walls and obstacles. — The art’s performance scales with the strength and speed stats.

I would've shuddered at the cost if it wasn't for recent events. Now, my SP increased by 2 every hour without doing anything. I pressed [save] without hesitation and got up.

It was time to test the new changes.

Tiriring— Tiriring—

I opened my eyes as the alarm sounded. My entire body ached, but I expected that after parkouring through walls and trees until 4 A.M. I had so much fun I couldn't stop.

“Argh, my joints...”

I climbed walls using the tiniest cracks and leaped up trees using the smallest protrusions. Every time I landed, excitement coursed through my veins like a runner's high. Looking down from a lofty height gave me a refreshing sense of ecstasy.

“God damn it.”

I had to go to class now. Combat training resumed starting today. It would be hell since midterms were coming and djinns would also act.

[This message is for all cadets ♪♪. Has anyone seen Seungyeon from World class? I haven't been able to contact her since yesterday ♪♪]

Looking at my smartwatch, a second victim had disappeared. I couldn't do anything about the djinn yet. Of course, I knew his identity and the next victim, but if I exposed him (how I would even go about that was another question), I feared that would greatly distort the story.

“Huuu.”

I sighed. Just because the victims were fated to die didn't make me feel any less guilty. I didn't treat what happened as just another page in a novel.

“Why can't Yoo Yeonha just be kidnapped first?”

Through this arc, Kim Suho and Yoo Yeonha would form a meaningful relationship. Kim Suho would positively influence Yoo Yeonha, curbing her temperament, and Kim Suho would obtain the valuable connection known as Yoo Yeonha.

But there would be 4 more victims until Yoo Yeonha.

Mock Dungeon Trial (1)

Cube created a variety of artificial terrain for more efficient training: mountains, hills, limestone caves, volcanic caves, etc. Each environment contained its own unique puppet monsters. Naturally, they also created artificial dungeons with their cutting-edge magic technology.

“Today’s combat training is a bit special.”

Kim Soohyuk announced to the 2 classes participating together. We gathered outside an eerie cave with a black tunnel-like entrance that oozed ominous energy. Indeed, it was full of traps and puppet monsters. Djinnns would’ve also set lethal traps and real monsters inside. I felt myself trembling.

“Today, you’ll be entering this cave with another class as a joint training exercise. A team from each class will combine to form a larger one.”

The name of this training was Mock Dungeon Trial. Cadets formed a team of 8 to clear the massive grade artificial dungeon. Two hundred cadets would participate, so one could only imagine its size.

“Now, get in your usual teams.”

I looked for Yoo Yeonha, who nervously stared at the cave entrance. The fact that Yoo Yeonha felt nervous showed how threatening this dungeon was.

“I’m shaking.”

“Me too. Look, I have goosebumps.”

Jin Hoseung and Hazuki joined us. The other cadets also found their teams and quickly formed into 50 groups.

“Next, we’ll announce your team pairs. For the record, the cadet with the highest grade was chosen to be the team leader.”

Kim Soohyuk pressed his smartwatch and projected a hologram of the team list.

[Team 1] Veritas class – Team Kim Suho, World class – Team Jo Yoon-Ah

Kim Suho’s team joined another led by a girl named Jo Yoon-Ah. She was just a generic filler character who acted haughtily before realizing Kim Suho’s greatness. I wondered if the co-author changed anything, so I approached Jo Yoon-Ah.

[Jo Yoon-Ah — Her personality has gotten worse.]

Thankfully, that was the only change. I prayed for Kim Suho who would suffer.

[Team 2] Veritas class – Team Shin Jonghak, World class – Team Kaine

I didn’t know much about Team 2. Honestly, I had never heard of Kaine.

[Team 3] Veritas class – Team Chae Nayun, World class – Team Sven

“Huuu...”

Team 3 formed just like the novel and was the team to watch out for because Sven was dangerous. He was an international student from Germany who had a crush on Chae Nayun. Sven was an elite star in his country ever since he was young. He must’ve thought he would top Cube’s rankings in Korea, but unfortunately, Cube was filled with heaven-defying characters. Sven couldn’t come close and struggled with an inferiority complex. His pent-up frustration would explode during this dungeon trial.

The result?

Sven would sell his soul to a djinn, but that wouldn't happen today. He would form a contract after contemplating it for a day... At least, that's what I wrote in my novel.

My laptop alerted me of a change.

[Sven – His mental weakness has intensified. Has a significantly increased chance of contracting with a devil's servant during the Mock Dungeon Trial.]

The keyword was during. It meant the incident would happen today. That posed a serious problem as I stared at Team 3.

"H-Hello, Nayun. I saw you in the hunting club."

Sven reached out to Chae Nayun. His eyes filled with affection, but Chae Nayun replied apathetically, "Ah, yes, how old are you?"

"I, I'm the same age as you."

I focused entirely on Sven as other teams were announced. I wanted to tell Chae Nayun not to treat him so rudely.

"Team 8. Veritas class, Team Yoo Yeonha. World class, Team Jayden."

Team 8 was announced. The name Jayden sounded familiar. I immediately looked him up in my settings book. There was only a brief summary because he didn't play an important role.

[Jayden] Typically acts strong in front of the weak, and weak in front of the strong. Has a potential of 7.5/10, enough for Essence of the Strait to scout him.

"Hello, haha."

Jayden greeted us with a hearty laugh. He looked generically Western with deep brown eyes and a tall nose. An alert popped up on my laptop. Jayden's setting had also changed.

[Jayden – Potential has increased from 7.5 to 8.]

His potential had increased by 0.5 points. I had assigned potential to characters so I could easily estimate their overall worth. The number wasn't a part of this world. Kim Suho's potential was 10 as the main character and Chae Nayun's was 9.5. Even if one worked their entire life, it would be impossible to make up for a 0.5 point difference. This showed just how important Jayden's half-point increase was.

"You must be Yoo Yeonha! It's great to meet you. I've heard a lot!"

"Ah, yes. Nice to meet you."

Jayden held out his hand. I wondered if Yoo Yeonha would shake someone's hand in their first meeting. She answered my question by readily shaking his.

"Next to me are Kim Jingyu, Oh Soojung, and Lee Shuang."

"This is Jin Hoseung, Hazuki, and Yi Hajin."

"...?"

For a moment, I doubted my ears. Who's Yi Hajin? Was she doing this on purpose? I'm Kim Hajin! Yoo Yeonha spoke respectfully to Jayden while his teammates listened. I didn't know whether or not she was managing her image because she had determined Jayden's worth, but I found it interesting.

"I'm a sharpshooter. My main weapon is a bow."

"Mine's my fist."

"Mine is a shield."

Kim Jingyu, Oh Soojung, and Lee Shuang introduced themselves. Hazuki, Jin Hoseung, and I went next.

"Swordsman. Typical, right?"

“I use an axe.”

“...I use this.”

I held up the training handgun. Although I had my Desert Eagle, which was a much better weapon, cadets were prohibited from using personal weapons. Of course, I had my Desert Eagle conveniently stored inside stigma. Since I could use stigma’s magic power at will, creating an extradimensional storage wasn’t difficult.

“Ah, you’re that guy. The one who chose a gun. I heard.”

“It feels strange seeing you in person.”

The 3 of them looked at me, but I couldn’t say it was pleasant. Their looks seemed to say, At least I’m better than this guy.

“Aren’t you wasting your gift? Or is your gift not good enough?”

That was brutally honest. I turned toward the voice. As expected, Jayden slyly smiled as no one defended me. I didn’t expect much from Yoo Yeonha, but Jin Hoseung and Hazuki didn’t say anything either.

I felt a bit disappointed, but I understood. The rumors circulating about me weren’t a joke.

Things like using my position as a Cube cadet to blackmail or rape a girl, going to Seoul every weekend to enjoy women and drink... I was practically a societal evil. After today, these rumors would surely spread even more among other classes. I didn’t know whether to laugh or cry. Well, at least my SP would increase.

The team assignments ended and cadets quickly moved at Kim Soohyuk’s words.

“Go in one by one starting from Team 1.”

“Let’s go!” Kim Suho bravely shouted and took the lead. Jo Yoon-Ah followed after him annoyed.

“Yoo Yeonha, I heard you were number one among this year’s supporters.”

“Haha, really? I heard a lot about Jayden too. I think the instructors misbalanced the teams. We’re at too much of an advantage.”

“No, that’s just how the teams are. When there’s one exceptional person... I’m sure you know the rest. Yoo Yeonha clearly has baggage to carry.”

Yoo Yeonha and Jayden chatted. Even from my perspective, Jayden did a good job pleasing Yoo Yeonha without going too far. He was a good talker for a high schooler. Maybe I should have approached Yoo Yeonha the same way.

“Team 8, enter.”

Kim Soohyuk signaled our team’s turn.

The 8 of us walked through the cave. Our formation was perfect with 3 warriors in the front, supporters in the second row, sharpshooters in the third, and a single warrior in the last row.

After walking for a while, we arrived at a fork. There were 8 paths to choose from.

“Which path should we take?” Yoo Yeonha spoke to me for the first time.

“Jingyu, what do you think?” Jayden also asked his sharpshooter. Sharpshooters often acted as pathfinders.

“I don’t know.”

“Take the sixth path.”

I walked up and stood in front of the sixth path. However, the sixth path would likely be difficult. In truth, the difficulty of the paths was in order. The sixth path had a level 6 difficulty, but I had no other choice since Chae Nayun should’ve chosen this path. If Sven contracted with a djinn, Chae Nayun wouldn’t be able to handle him alone.

“Let’s take the sixth path.”

No matter what, I couldn’t lose a righteous character with a 9.5 potential. Not only would the future story become a mess, but it would also be a huge loss for this world.

“Huh? Who are you to tell us where to—”

“Just do as he says,” Yoo Yeonha interrupted Jayden. It was nice to know she trusted me as a pathfinder.

“He might look like that, but his eyes are exceptional.”

“Look like what? Do you have to put it that way?” I muttered.

“I’m praising you.”

Our team walked into the sixth path.

It was completely silent with only a dry wind from the entrance hitting our backs. After 10 minutes of tension... We finally encountered a target.

The salamander flashed its terrifying eyes and flickered its tongue. It seemed to be low-intermediate rank at best from its size, but monsters that could wield the 4 elements (water, wind, earth, fire) were tricky. Salamanders used the most destructive element, which was fire.

“You can see it?” Yoo Yeonha asked.

“It’s a salamander. That should be the switch.”

The scenery should change once we defeated the salamander. A dungeon was an extradimensional space created with magic power. It might look like a cave at first, but the interior could change completely once we set off the switch. More often than not, a specific monster served as the dungeon’s switch.

“You can see? I don’t believe you,” Jayden doubtfully muttered.

“I’m telling you because I can see it. Just listen to me, jackass.”

He started to get on my nerves.

“What did you say?”

“Tsk. Quiet, both of you. Prepare for battle.”

Yoo Yeonha audibly sighed as she held up her whip.

Chapter 25

Mock Dungeon Trial (2)

“Salamander? Does anyone have the water attribute?”

Jayden asked as he stretched, but no 17 year old cadet would have that. One had to be enlightened to gain an attribute. Jayden didn’t expect much as he held up his sword.

“Well, I’m sure it’ll be easy.”

I took out my handgun. A salamander of that size should be low-intermediate rank, grade 6. Eight people were more than enough, but it seemed too easy. The members proceeded forward with their guard up.

“Oh, there it is.” Jayden pointed at the salamander loafing around.

“So you were right. I guess it’s true you can find dog turd to use as medicine.”

Jayden glared at me before quietly asking Kim Jingyu, “Wasn’t I right?”

“About what?”

“The proverb. That you can find dog turd to use as medicine.”

“It’s the opposite. You won’t find dog turd even if you want to use it for medicine.”

“Oh.”

Jayden glanced at Yoo Yeonha, afraid he had disappointed her. Instead, Yoo Yeonha seemed uninterested as she imbued her whip with magic power.

“Get ready. If it’s a switch, it should be a piece of cake.”

Yoo Yeonha swung her whip at the salamander’s tail.

“Kueek—”

The salamander couldn’t use its most powerful fire breath attack with its tail tied up. Immediately, Kim Jingyu shot an arrow at its eye while the warriors rushed forward. We killed the salamander in the blink of an eye. I didn’t even have the chance to do anything.

“Piece of cake. That was amazing, Yoo Yeonha. How did you grab its tail like that?”

Jayden flattered her, which made her smile. They felt proud of such an easy fight. I stepped toward them. At that moment... Thwack. I tripped on a rock and fell forward. Instinctively, I grabbed what was in front of me, most likely Yoo Yeonha’s head.

“Kyak—”

A high-pitched scream rang out. At the same time, a sharp object brushed past my hand and Yoo Yeonha’s hair. Thud. Yoo Yeonha fell.

“W-What? Is it an ambush!?”

Jayden made a fuss as he pointed his weapon in every direction. Soon, his eyes landed on me. I kneeled with my hand pressing Yoo Yeonha’s head into the ground.

“...”

“...”

Jayden and the rest of them stared blankly at a loss for words. An ominous and dreary silence descended.

“...Let go.”

Yoo Yeonha said coldly. I could feel my heart squeeze. I took my hands off and pretended as if nothing had happened.

“You...”

Yoo Yeonha staggered up and glared at me without caring about her messed-up hair.

“Huh? What’s that?”

“What’s what?”

Hazuki pointed at the wall. I caught my breath thanks to the interruption. I saw an arrow stuck in the wall when I looked at where Hazuki pointed. Then I finally understood the situation. The sound of something cutting through the air and that strange brushing sensation... It wasn’t hard to figure out what just happened.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha turned. I was genuinely terrified. Her eyes widened as she saw the arrow. Although I didn’t intend it, I let out a dry cough and bluffed.

“Wow. How did you know? I didn’t feel it at all!” Hazuki expressed genuine awe.

“...Sharpshooters have great perception.”

Perception or whatever, the real reason must’ve been my high luck. All our perceptions far surpassed normal humans. If the others couldn’t detect it, I wouldn’t have either.

That arrow was most likely a magic power trap. I mean, just look at the power of that thing. It completely dug into the wall! It was too strong to be a trap for training.

“That was close. Are you ok, Yoo Yeonha?” I approached the arrow while making idle remarks.

“Huuu...”

I could hear Yoo Yeonha breathing behind me. Did she forgive me? Or was she still angry? I squatted in front of the arrow and turned on my laptop.

[Poison Arrow] [Killing Power – 4/10] [Additional Effect – Silent Ambush] — An arrow tipped with a nerve poison.

As I expected.

“I’ll take this.” I put the arrow in my bag along with my laptop.

“...Let’s go.”

Yoo Yeonha spoke. I flinched before turning around. Yoo Yeonha tidied herself up and stared at me while biting her lips. Jayden asked as he saw her expression.

“Yeonha, are you sure you’re okay?”

“Don’t chitchat.”

“Yes, got it.”

After that, we walked without much talking. The scenery began to change past the salamander’s corpse. The dark surroundings lit up. Plants and trees appeared. The trees looked like red maples. A wind began to blow, but it didn’t feel cool or refreshing. Instead, it felt hot and made it difficult to breathe.

“...So hot,” Jayden murmured as he took off his outer clothes. We all took off a layer of clothes except for Yoo Yeonha. She kept her dignity even as she sweated.

“Haa... It must be a field type.”

Dungeons could generally be categorized into 2 types, stage or field. Stage dungeons contained multiple layers that had to be cleared in order while field dungeons just had monsters that needed to be killed until the boss appeared.

“Did the advance team hunt everything? There’s nothing here.”

Jayden yawned after walking for about 20 minutes.

“No, each team had different entrances. The other team should’ve started from the west if we started from the east. Also, I just spotted a group of monsters ahead.”

“Oh?”

Four salamanders and 11 peanut flames stood around tiny craters.

“15 in total, salamanders and peanut flames. Looks like it’ll be tough.”

“That many?”

Hazuki’s eyes widened.

I held up my gun as Jayden condescendingly sneered.

“Pfft, what can you do with a gun? You won’t even be able to kill a peanut flame... retard.”

Jayden whispered the last bit so Yoo Yeonha wouldn’t hear. I had to admit. This training handgun couldn’t pierce the salamander’s skin. Peanut flames could also wield magic power and constantly covered themselves with flame barriers. However, I wasn’t entirely out of options. I should be able to break the flame barriers if I hit 3 bullets in the same spot.

“You’ll see.”

“Hmph.”

Jayden twisted his lips as he released sword qi. “Do you want to bet if you’re so confident?”

“...”

I wasn’t strong enough to beat Jayden. When I was about to refuse...

Whish!

A whip struck the ground like lightning between Jayden and me.

“Whoa!”

“...!”

We turned towards Yoo Yeonha, but she coldly spoke only 2 words.
“Please. Focus.”

At the same time, Chae Nayun’s team suffered various setbacks because a trap had paralyzed Sven.

“Where did that arrow even come from?”

Chae Nayun grumbled as Sven murmured.

“You can leave me behi—”

“Leave you behind? Just stay put if you know you’re a bother.”

Even without Sven, Chae Nayun led her teammates this far. She would receive an overwhelming score if she could clear the dungeon. Chae Nayun couldn't give up the chance to win against Kim Suho.

"What should we do?" Her teammate Demian asked.

"Wait here for now. I think the dungeon boss is up ahead. Can you see it?"

Chae Nayun looked into the distance and spotted a giant golem with a lava body. The lava spilling from its body marked its territory.

"Yeah, it has to be the boss."

The magma golem was at least intermediate rank, grade 5. Chae Nayun and her team somehow managed to reach it, but they couldn't defeat it even if Sven was uninjured.

"We won't be able to beat it with just us. Another team should be arriving soon. Let's wait to join forces."

"But what if no one chose the same pathway?"

"That shouldn't be possible. At least 3 teams should come through by design."

Other cadets might've randomly chosen, but Chae Nayun knew a pathway would disappear once 3 teams entered it.

"Remember, we're graded on our individual performance, not who finishes first."

Sven couldn't hear Chae Nayun's irritated voice.

Huu. Huu.

His surroundings turned utterly silent. He felt like he was in a vacuum as he slowly collected his breath. The guilt he felt, his self-loathing, and his inferiority complex all seemed to disappear. Tranquility descended upon him.

— Child, don't you want to become stronger?

A bewitching voice invaded his heart, causing a ripple on the calm surface. Sven slightly opened his eyes. Two brilliant spheres of light lit up the dark. Like eyes, they curved into an arc before pouring into his pupils.

— Isn't it painful? I can give you power.

The voice grew clearer as his heart pounded. A wave of emotions surged from the deepest depths of his heart and Sven teared up.

I want to become stronger. I want to become stronger. I want to meet the expectations of my country, everyone who calls me their greatest hope, and my parents who believe I will become the world's greatest hero. I don't want to suffer from this endless hopelessness and defeat. I don't want to hate myself anymore...

— You only have to pay a small price. It's far lighter than giving everything up.

Sven nodded at the warm voice. He slowly reached out towards the gentle light caressing him.

Chapter 26

Mock Dungeon Trial (3)

“I’m sure everyone knows what peanut flames are.”

Peanut Flames were low rank, grade 2 element type monsters. They looked like tiny will-o-wisps, but were actually lizards the size of an adult forearm. They looked like wisps of flame because they encased themselves in an oval flame barrier.

“We’ll have to kill the peanut flames first.”

The peanut flames only shot out fireballs, but they weren’t easy to deal with because they had tough barriers and traveled in groups.

“Who’s going to draw the salamanders’ attention?”

“I can do it.” Hazuki raised her hand at Jayden’s words.

“I’m pretty quick. I placed 5th in speed.”

“Perfect,” Jayden replied in English.

Yoo Yeonha spoke with a soft smile, “Salamanders are a lot slower than peanut flames, so you just have to draw their attention.”

“Yes, I’ll leave you to cover me.”

Hazuki stretched before shouting, “I’m going!”

She reached the cluster of monsters in the blink of an eye and hurled her axe with a lively grunt. The angry salamanders waddled towards Hazuki. Using this opportunity, Jayden rushed into enemy lines.

“Huap!”

His sword clashed against a peanut flame’s barrier. A flash of light erupted from the collision. Jayden cracked its barrier as a magic arrow struck it. Kim Jingyu’s follow-up attack easily shattered the barrier and Jayden cut down the defenseless lizard.

They displayed perfect teamwork, but many enemies were still left.

Jayden turned to a different direction. A terrifying whip shot past his shoulder, grabbing 3 peanut flames together. He charged towards them.

I also made my move. I didn’t need to run around like the others. I pulled the trigger 4 times after spotting a peanut flame. Simple and elegant. Four bullets shot out in a line towards the peanut flame.

The first bullet struck its barrier and exploded. The barrier still stood, but the second bullet immediately struck the same spot. The barrier shook, but remained. Next was the third bullet. It struck the same spot and finally broke the barrier. With its barrier gone, the fourth bullet instantly killed the lizard.

“...What?”

Next to me, the sharpshooter Kim Jingyu expressed his shock. Admittedly, what I did must’ve seemed quite impressive. I simply killed a peanut flame by pulling the trigger 4 times instead of arduously weaving an arrow with magic power and pulling a bowstring.

“Guns lack destructive power, but have less recoil and delay.”

I boasted as I waved my gun around. Honestly, this was only possible against weak and slow monsters like peanut flames. My luck also played a role.

“...”

“Focus, focus.”

Seeing Kim Jingyu dumbstruck, I pointed at the other peanut flames. Yoo Yeonha struck them down with her whip, which elongated and swept through the ground. I could feel a spark of electricity from her weapon. That was Yoo Yeonha's gift. It seemed she was close to achieving enlightenment.

Now wasn't the time to feel impressed or congratulate her. I looked for another peanut flame. They became more aggressive now that they were fully aware of our attack. Killing them wasn't as easy as before, but that didn't mean it was difficult. Although I couldn't break its barrier after 6 bullets, the seventh luckily pierced its magic core and killed it in one shot.

The battle was almost over by the time I killed 3 peanut flames. We attacked the 4 salamanders together once all the peanut flames died. Hazuki held them back and there was nothing they could do. I understood why salamanders were only low-intermediate rank. No matter how powerful their fire breaths, they couldn't use it once their tails were tied.

"Whew, it's over. I managed to kill 6 thanks to Yeonha."

"That's good to hear. Let's count them."

We approached the mana puppets. 1, 2, 3... 15. We had killed them all.

"Do we keep going?"

A light flashed from far away as Jayden spoke with a smile. I turned towards it and my mind blanked. A salamander breathed a beam of fire the size of a pillar. It hurled towards us and melted the ground. I felt my brain screaming. This would be a direct hit. There was no way to dodge. I would die if it hit. I had to block it, but how? Immediately, I thought of stigma's magic power. I might be able to block it if I could form a water barrier like the peanut flames' fire barrier.

Stigma shone blue as pain spread throughout my arm. The magic power released into the air according to my will.

A wave of fire swept through us. Tzzzzzzzz— A terrifying amount of steam erupted from the collision. It clouded around like fog and blinded us. The fire breath destroyed the barrier I just created. A momentary silence descended until a deep voice spoke what everyone thought.

“...T-That was no joke.”

Thick terror could be seen on Jayden’s face. He was on the verge of a panic attack.

“That last attack, wouldn’t we be dead if it hit?”

Yeah, we would’ve been fried up good. I agreed in my head and collapsed. I couldn’t muster any strength left in my legs. My entire body felt numb and I thanked the dense fog of steam for hiding my pathetic state.

“Oy, sharpshooter. The salamander’s still alive, but we can’t see. Tell me where that bastard is before my heart explodes.”

Jayden’s voice still trembled. I also tried to stay calm. Calm down, Kim Hajin. It can’t see us either. We just have to kill it before the steam disappears.

“Follow the trajectory.”

I held up my gun. It was better to just show it than describe it with words.

“I’m shooting.”

I pulled the trigger. The bullet shot towards the salamander and left a blue trace. The trail lingered even though the bullet reached the salamander in under a second. The others immediately threw everything they had in the trail’s direction. The salamander died without a yelp, almost as though it had spent all its energy in the previous attack. I could hear the unpleasant sound of metal slashing through flesh.

“Wait, is this blood?”

Jayden murmured in surprise. Fresh blood streamed from the salamander's wound.

"A mana puppet with blood? That's impossible."

"Then what the fuck is this? It's sticky as hell. And what was that last attack? That was a real fire breath. I didn't even touch it and my skin burnt a little."

Mana puppet attacks were lowered by 2 ranks compared to their real counterparts. An attack from a low-intermediate rank mana puppet wouldn't even be at the level of a low rank monster. Mana puppets in combat training attacked according to the data set by Cube scientists.

"Calm down."

"You think I can just calm... Yes, you're right."

Jayden, who was about to erupt, calmed down in front of Yoo Yeonha.

"They didn't say something like this wouldn't happen. It's entirely possible that a normal salamander naturally evolved into a monster. After all, we're still in a dungeon even if it's artificial."

"..."

Jayden remained silent after Yoo Yeonha's explanation. He collected his breath. Yoo Yeonha was always like this, but Jayden was fairly composed for a high schooler. The steam around us began to dissipate. Everyone was slightly wet.

"Are you okay?"

Yoo Yeonha asked, likely because I was directly in front of the fire breath. My luck was 9.1, so why did it aim towards me of all people? Was the world trying to tell me to gain more SP? Or was it because I was the only one capable of blocking it? Yoo Yeonha dying would've been a great calamity.

"I'm fine."

I was fine, for now.

“Oh right. What the fuck was that?”

However, Jayden approached me with a fuss.

“What?”

“I said in the beginning that anyone with the water attribute should come out.”

“I don’t know what you’re talking about.”

“Oh, please. How did you block that fire breath then? That fucking steam was created because it clashed with water, didn’t it?”

“Sharpshooters normally carry a shield or two to protect themselves.”

“What?”

Stigma’s magic power followed my will and created a water barrier. This shield blocked the salamander’s attack, but I didn’t have any magic power remaining. This wasn’t something I could explain.

“This son of a bitch...”

“Quiet. Let’s get out of here for now. What just happened... I’m sure we’ll be compensated with additional points.”

Yoo Yeonha spoke as she stared at the salamander’s corpse.

Yoo Yeonha stole a glance behind her while walking. A dumb-looking man brushed his sweaty hair up. It would’ve looked cool if he was Shin Jonghak, but it was a bit unsightly when he did it. In any case, Yoo Yeonha couldn’t hide the strange feeling inside of her. A water attribute had undoubtedly blocked the salamander’s fire breath, but could a cadet who wasn’t Shin Jonghak or Kim Suho have an attribute?

Yoo Yeonha recalled Chae Nayun saying that Kim Hajin was hiding his true strength.

Kim Hajin explained that he had a magic armament. Indeed, such defensive armaments existed. This equipment called cloth armor looked exactly like ordinary clothes, but could release magic power to protect its wearer.

For a moment, Yoo Yeonha wondered if Jin Sechan gave him cloth armor without telling her. Of course, that was impossible. Although salamanders were only low-intermediate rank, items that could block their fire breath cost at least 40 million won. Jin Sechan couldn't have possibly afforded that. He also had no reason to either.

Only 2 possibilities were left. Either what Chae Nayun said was true or Kim Hajin actually prepared cloth armor in fear of his life. Yoo Yeonha found the former more likely. In that case, how Kim Hajin knew the mountain tyrant's vital point would also make sense. The question was why he was hiding his power. She couldn't understand. Just why...

"We're here." Kim Hajin spoke up as Yoo Yeonha flinched from a guilty conscience.

"W-What's here? There's nothing here."

"We're almost there. The dungeon boss is up ahead along with another team."

"Oh?"

"Yeah, let's hurry. It looks like they're in trouble."

Kim Hajin took the lead and quickened his pace. Yoo Yeonha followed, still harboring suspicion.

Chapter 27

Mock Dungeon Trial (4)

[15:29:07]

Chae Nayun's team remained dead silent. They had no choice but to wait for another team. She wanted to stay far away from the boss so they could relax, but she also had to stay close enough to spot another team.

“Kuaaaak!”

A sudden scream broke the silence. Sven was suddenly having a seizure. Chae Nayun and her members turned to him in shock before turning back towards the magma golem in terror. Just as they feared, the magma golem spotted them. The team members all turned pale.

“—Guooooo!”

With an earthshaking roar, the magma golem slammed its fists on the ground. Lava flowed from its body as Chae Nayun carried Sven and shouted, “Dodge!”

Immediately, lava erupted from where they stood. The magma golem's terrifying ambush sent lava underground and erupted it into a pillar of fire. The cadets managed to spread out in time, but the magma golem was only getting started. Its mouth opened wide and a lava current poured out. Then it rode the current and charged at them.

“—Guooooo!”

The entire team ran away in fear. It targeted Chae Nayun, who was slowed by Sven. Instantly, it arrived in front of her and brandished its arms, slamming down and swinging sideways. Chae Nayun concentrated on dodging. Meanwhile, Sven murmured strange words on her back. Chae Nayun couldn't understand because he spoke in German.

“Hey! Stop screwing around and wake up!”

Chae Nayun shouted as a pillar of fire shot up from where she stood. She quickly jumped back, but that wasn't the only pillar. Lava erupted all around her and trapped her inside several pillars. The magma golem raised its arms in front of her.

At that moment, Chae Nayun could feel her death. This golem is going to kill me. This terrifying monster can't possibly be a puppet... Petrified, she couldn't think. She stared at the 2 fists crashing down on her.

Tang!

The magma golem's head bent forward when the horrifying lava torrent almost devoured her. Then it suddenly stopped with its arms raised. It seemed angry, but froze from the previous attack.

Chae Nayun turned in the direction of the mysterious attack. There, she saw the guy with a handgun.

We stood in front of a giant wall made of volcanic rocks at least 10 meters tall. This wall blocked the path to the boss, but it wasn't here a moment ago. Figuring out who put it here would have to wait.

“Hey, sharpshooter, didn't you say the boss was up ahead? It's a dead end.”

“It should be past this wall. Break it.”

“Acting like the leader, huh.”

Jayden took out his sword even though he complained and diagonally slashed with magic power.

Pang!

However, not even a scratch appeared on the wall. Only Jayden's hand trembled.

"Aaak! Yeah, genius idea!"

It must've hurt as he ran around in pain. I stood still and thought. It must be made of magic power if Jayden's sword qi couldn't break through. Yoo Yeonha wouldn't be able to break it either.

"Is this the right path? There was a fork in the road on our way here."
Yoo Yeonha asked in doubt as she touched the wall here and there.

"This is the right place."

No matter what anyone said, I could see Chae Nayun and her team fighting the magma golem beyond the wall. I closely inspected it and raised my head. I could see a faint stream of light from the top.

"Up there."

"What?"

The team members all looked up.

"There's a gap."

Was it for ventilation? Or was it carelessness by whoever created this wall? It was most certainly a mistake.

"How are we going to climb up there?" Jayden asked.

"You can't?" I retorted, genuinely curious. Warrior cadets could jump 4 meters on average. With magic power, it shouldn't be difficult to jump several times that height. It shouldn't be impossible for them even though the wall was a bit high.

“What, you think you can do it? What are you going to hold on to when we can’t even make a dent?”

“...”

Jayden gave up, but I felt like I could do it. Just as he said, we couldn’t make any dents on the wall. However, the surface of volcanic rocks was rugged by nature. I should be able to climb it with my art.

I didn’t think parkour would come in handy so soon...

“I’m going ahead, so you can do whatever you want.”

“Stop joking. Let’s go back and try the other path.”

Yoo Yeonha turned back, but I lightly jumped up. I grabbed a jagged part of the surface and put my legs up. Then I reached up with my other hand. My hands and feet stuck to the wall like magnets.

Just like that, I reached the top in the blink of an eye. I looked down and felt lightheaded for a moment. It was higher than I thought.

“Is that guy a cat?” Jayden murmured in disbelief. I enjoyed surprising my team, but didn’t have the leisure to admire the view.

“Guooooo—!”

A terrifying roar came from beyond the wall.

“W-What! What was that!?”

“You guys come up too. I’m going first!” I squeezed through the gap and climbed down with parkour.

After landing, I caught a glimpse of the magma golem chasing Chae Nayun and her team. I knew it wasn’t a puppet the moment I saw it. It melted the field every time it moved, so how could it be a puppet?

I ran towards them and opened my extradimensional storage with stigma. The tattoo on my upper arm glowed and magic power gathered in my hand. It instantly condensed into the Desert Eagle and several bullets.

I loaded a water attribute bullet I had prepared for an emergency. It was an expensive investment that cost 30 SP. With my high luck, it should be incredibly powerful.

“Whew.”

I paused to catch my breath after getting into range, but didn't have time to rest. The magma golem surrounded Chae Nayun with fire pillars. I aimed at the back of its head and fired.

Tang!

The bullet squarely struck its head and the magma golem bent forward. The water attribute reacted with its lava body and petrified it thanks to the so-called paralysis state.

I looked past the magma golem and spotted Sven on Chae Nayun's back. She seemed shocked, but Sven looked like he had already fallen to a djinn. I shouted at Chae Nayun.

“Hey! Snap out of it!”

“...Huh?”

Thankfully, Chae Nayun responded.

“First, put that guy on the ground.”

“What, where are the others? Why are you the only one...”

“Put him down!”

Chae Nayun put Sven down.

“Happy?”

“Yeah.”

I ran in since the situation looked grim, but now I broke out in cold sweat. The magma golem’s body trembled. It tried to eject the bullet from its body, so it could move again. I signaled Chae Nayun.

“Hurry up and...”

Save me.

“Battle position!”

Chae Nayun shouted before I could finish my sentence. A spear flew in and pierced the magma golem’s neck. Her teammates followed suit. I turned around and ran behind Chae Nayun’s team.

“Buy time for me!”

Chae Nayun shouted as she pulled on her bowstring. Soon, her magic power condensed onto her bow. She was making a special magic power arrow. It seemed she learned from her previous defeat to the djinn at the museum. As expected, Chae Nayun was diligent when it came to self-reflection and training.

“...”

My jaws dropped at the sight in front of me. Chae Nayun’s magic power created a fierce current as it rushed towards the bow and formed an arrow. In truth, it was too big to be called an arrow. It was a pillar. An attack on this level would be impossible without exceptional mental and magic power.

The magma golem freed itself before her arrow could finish forming.

“Guooooo—!”

Her teammates held out as long as they could, but the magma golem sent them flying with a single swing. It roared and charged towards Chae Nayun. I held up my gun, but a sword struck the magma golem before I could fire.

The sword strike... came from Sven. After blocking the magma golem with his sword, Sven turned around and muttered.

“Sorry, I recovered late.”

Chae Nayun let loose her bowstring without an answer. Sven jumped to the side. With a brilliant light, her giant arrow pierced through the magma golem’s heart.

“Haa... Haa...”

Chae Nayun collapsed as soon as she shot her arrow. It would take roughly 15 seconds for her to recover.

“—Guooo...”

The magma golem didn’t die even after such an enormous magic attack. Chae Nayun bit her lips.

“I’ll take care of the rest.”

Sven sliced off its head before the magma golem could recover. Then it turned into hard volcanic rock before crumbling into dust. Silence descended.

Sven sheathed his sword and gave me a slight nod.

“Thank you for helping us.”

“...”

I stared at him. He had undoubtedly formed a contract with a djinn, but he hadn’t lost control yet like in the original story. I felt thankful since I had no energy left to fight a djinn, but Sven was destined to go berserk. He would only tread further onto the path of destruction because the devil he contracted with was far too powerful for him.

“Sure took your sweet time, bastard.”

Chae Nayun muttered on the ground. She had a lot to say, but ran out of strength.

Chapter 28

The Djinn and Gari Mountain (1)

I stared up while lying on the ground. The dungeon boss had been killed, but the scorching heat remained and dug into my clothes.

Bored, I tilted my head to the side. Chae Nayun's team chatted some distance away. They offered me to join them, but I refused. I was too tired to answer any questions they'd inevitably ask.

"Huum."

Chae Nayun took a deep breath and got up. She walked over after stealing some glances.

"..."

She cast a shadow over me and looked down at my face.

"What."

I curled my upper body. Chae Nayun frowned as her sweat dripped. She straightened her expression and sat next to me. Of course, she was still about 10 feet away.

"...I thought I should say this."

I wasn't sure if she was embarrassed or ashamed, but Chae Nayun stuttered with great difficulty.

"T-Thanks."

"..."

I was genuinely at a loss for words and stared in shock. I never thought I'd ever hear that from her.

Chae Nayun. Age 17-27 in the story. She was only 16 by American standards. [1] Despite her youth, her life was far from normal. On the contrary, it was filled with tragedy.

The first should have occurred on her sixth birthday. A djinn killed her mother on what should've been her happiest day. Her personality completely changed after that incident. The child who dreamt of becoming like her mom cried tears of blood and sought to become a hero. She trained to hit and destroy targets while other children laughed and played.

The scar from that day was deeply etched in her heart. As a fourth generation chaebol, she couldn't even confide in a friend to mend this wound. Revealing one's deepest thoughts was akin to weakness and the hyenas would jump at any opportunity.

The only person she could rely on was her sibling who also shared the same pain, Chae Jinyoon. She rarely saw her father because he was too busy as the family's successor.

However, this cruel world had even taken Chae Jinyoon from her. What she must've felt... I had no idea because I never wrote them. Most likely, Chae Nayun must've honed her conviction even sharper. Believing only in herself and pursuing strength as the way of life, she must've ignored her wounded heart. Telling herself she could overcome everything without ever opening up to anyone. She must've painfully trained and trained...

Not many people would've ever received a thanks from her. I knew this better than Chae Nayun herself because I once wrote her saying sorry instead of thank you.

Just now though, she said thanks. That was the greatest praise she could give someone, but my heart sank because of what I had to accomplish.

I had to kill the person she loved the most. I had to make her experience losing her family once more.

“By the way...”

Chae Nayun’s voice cut off my thoughts. She smacked her lips as though she had something else to say.

“What.”

I urged her in frustration. Chae Nayun added just a sentence while still looking up.

“...Why aren’t you fighting back?”

“Hm? What do you... Oh.”

She meant Shin Jonghak’s lackeys. She felt regret even though she instigated it.

I simply replied, “Because I can’t win even if I fight back.”

Chae Nayun furrowed her brows and finally looked at me. She truly had a baby face. Unlike the adult-like Yoo Yeonha, Chae Nayun’s cheeks still had a bit of baby fat. Was it because the magma golem beat her up? She looked like a bun. I laughed inwardly.

“What are you talking about? I saw the power of your gun with my own eyes.”

“Oh, that?”

I took out the Desert Eagle from my bag. I couldn’t use my extradimensional storage until stigma recovered its magic power.

“My personal weapon. Does that explain it?”

Chae Nayun stared in shock at my high rank weapon.

“You know you could get expelled if you’re found out, right?”

“That’s why I only use it when I need to.”

Chae Nayun closed her mouth and rubbed her chin. I had no idea what she thought, but I waited since she looked serious. After about 3 minutes, she finally voiced her thoughts.

“It still doesn’t add up completely... Ah, wait, your gift! You must have a gift that strengthens guns!”

I held myself back from laughing. A gift and enlightenment were 2 different things. Even before enlightenment, a gift could be observed and developed through hard work.

“You can think what you want.”

I shrugged without correcting her misunderstanding. Chae Nayun concluded her guess as the truth and proudly nodded.

“Huhu, I knew it. Oh, I’ll let you off the hook for using your personal weapon. Just don’t use it again.”

Chae Nayun stood up and dusted herself off. She paused before walking away.

“...By the way.”

“What.”

She asked in a much lower tone with her back still facing me.

“...Don’t you have anything to say to me?”

“...”

Her question made me flinch. This might be her offer of reconciliation that she would forgive me for my remarks about her brother. This was a huge concession from what I knew about her personality.

“...I don’t.”

However, I rejected her and got up. My current relationship with Chae

Nayun was at the perfect distance. Cold, but not freezing. I called it the uncomfortable neighbor distance. Anything more would burden me.

“...I see.”

I made eye contact with Sven as she left. He didn't avoid my gaze and tilted his head with emotionless eyes. I felt a chill down my back.

— Emergency alert. All cadets must evacuate the dungeon immediately. Once again, all cadets must evacuate the dungeon immediately.

A sound rang out from above. The mock dungeon trial had concluded. I turned back to where I came from.

“Huh?”

Although others might only see a faint silhouette, I could see Yoo Yeonha in the distance. She made it up the wall all covered in dust, but the mock dungeon trial just ended. She went through all that trouble for nothing.

“Argh...”

Yoo Yeonha shook at the injustice with her eyes shut.

The mock dungeon trial ran into several problems. The first was that many of the internal cameras had stopped working. The second was a systematic error. The instructors had discovered the broken cameras too late. The final and biggest problem was that real monsters had trespassed into the dungeon. As a result, they canceled the mock dungeon trial and postponed everyone's grades.

“Wow, really? A natural born magma golem?”

“Yeah, I heard it was intermediate ranked.”

“No way... So what happened? Who killed it?”

“It was Chae Nayun and Sven...”

The cadets outside the dungeon chattered loudly while the instructors checked everyone off to make sure there were no casualties.

“Sigh.”

...Then what was all the trouble I went through for?

Yoo Yeonha felt lethargic and staggered. Then she spotted Chae Nayun at the dungeon entrance. Yoo Yeonha wanted to ask several questions.

“Nayun.”

“Hm? Oh, Yeonha. What’s up?”

“Are you okay? I heard the magma golem...”

She brought up a topic she wasn’t interested in before bringing up Kim Hajin when Chae Nayun looked bored.

“Oh right, you know Kim Hajin, right? The guy you brought up during our last—”

“Mmm? Ah, Kim Hajin?” Chae Nayun murmured.

“...Eh?”

Chae Nayun reacted completely different from before. Previously, she growled when Kim Hajin was mentioned, but now she seemed fine.

“Uh... Yeah, Kim Hajin.”

“What about him?”

“Well... Remember what you said before? That he—”

Chae Nayun lightly cut her off. “Oh, that? It was a misunderstanding.”

“...Yes?” Yoo Yeonha was dumbfounded.

Just a few days ago you coughed up blood talking about him, and now you're saying it was a misunderstanding? I don't think it's a misunderstanding!

“It was a misunderstanding. Well, I wouldn't say he's someone I want to be friends with, but he's not such a bad guy.”

Yoo Yeonha stared at Chae Nayun. She was so annoyed she wanted to strangle her.

“Oh, hey! Kim Suho!” Chae Nayun suddenly shouted. Yoo Yeonha felt like her eardrums would burst.

“I'll talk to you later, Yeonha!”

Chae Nayun ran past Yoo Yeonha and disappeared. She acted like a puppy chasing after her master. Yoo Yeonha turned and saw Kim Suho. Chae Nayun ran up to him as he left the dungeon, slapped his back, and stood in front of him.

“Whoa, that surprised me.”

“Did anything happen to your team?”

“It was no joke. I almost died from exhaustion.”

Kim Suho had chosen the 8th pathway.

“I can see it on your face. You look like a grandpa.”

“Really?”

Yoo Yeonha watched their affectionate interaction with interest. She was happy to see them hit it off. Kim Suho seemed to resemble Chae Nayun's older brother.

“Oh, Chae Nayun. Here you are.”

Shin Jonghak cut in between them as if to break them apart.

“Huuu.”

Yoo Yeonha sighed. She began to walk towards them since Shin Jonghak showed up, but noticed someone staring at Chae Nayun from a distance.

The way Kim Hajin looked at Chae Nayun seemed... strange. His eyes carried a deep sadness. Yoo Yeonha stared at his disgusting eyes for a moment before coming up with her own conclusion.

“What? He likes Chae Nayun too? The heck... What's so good about a tomboy like her?”

Yoo Yeonha shook from the frustration in her heart, but even if other boys liked Chae Nayun, Shin Jonghak couldn't. She quickly walked over to the 3 of them.

1. In Korea, you are considered one year old at birth. 📌

Chapter 29

The Djinn and Gari Mountain (2)

I finally returned to my room at 11 P.M. It took 12 hours after the Mock Dungeon Trial. Cube told the cadets that an internal investigation would occur rather than deploying the police or heroes from the association. That was only because no cadets had been killed or injured.

The djinns in the upper brass of Cube had successfully masked the incident. An extensive external investigation wouldn't occur until after the second incident.

“I got super lucky.”

The fitness center was closed because of the incident today, so I loafed around in my room and looked at my laptop.

[An incredible luck has been applied, you have avoided a silent ambush!]

[Narrow Escape from Death (1/9) – You have partly unlocked the special stat, accumulation of luck.]

I had dodged that poison arrow by pure luck, which unlocked a special stat called accumulation of luck. A special stat was... Well, to explain this, I had to first explain how stats worked.

In this world, stats were divided into 3 major categories: variable stats, invariable stats, and special stats. Variable and invariable stats existed from birth. Even a baby had strength, magic power, vitality, intelligence, and other basic stats.

However, most people didn't have special stats. For example, every human was born with magic power, but not magic power control or mental power, which one needed to use magic power. These 2 abilities came from innate talent and continuous effort. Most cadets generally had 2 special stats like magic power control and mental power. Kim Suho had one called resistance and Chae Nayun had one called intuition.

“Hmm.”

[Accumulation of luck – 11%]

It was only 11% unlocked, so I couldn't do anything with it. The stat had no explanation, so I didn't even know its purpose.

Well, I'm sure I'll find out eventually.

More importantly, I needed to know what Sven was planning. He was undoubtedly scheming something regarding Chae Nayun and would likely lose control once they were alone. After all, one of the negative side effects of a djinn contract was intensified emotions like obsessions.

Should I contact Chae Nayun? No.

I opened my laptop. It felt like a crime... no, it was definitely a crime, but I had no choice. I hacked Chae Nayun's smartwatch with my laptop's internet functionality. I only needed to spend a small amount of SP.

[Chae Nayun → Kim Suho] [Hey, what's up?]

[Shin Jonghak → Chae Nayun] [Hey, do you want to grab a late night snack?]

Several messages flew by. I tried my best not to look. I only needed Sven's. As expected, Chae Nayun received messages from male and female cadets. I only found Sven's name after scrolling for a while.

Sven: [Thank you for yesterday.]

[Yeah, you did well too. By the way, why do you keep talking politely? It's uncomfortable.]

Sven: [Is it? I'll talk casually then.]

...

Sven: [I hear the hunting club is going to Gangwondo this week. Wanna hunt together?]

[Yeah, sure.]

It looked like a basic conversation between acquaintances, but Sven's last message caught my eye. In the original story, Sven went berserk during the hunting club's trip.

At that moment...

[Hajin.]

I received a message on my smartwatch. I saw the sender's name and couldn't help but feel curious. It was Kim Suho.

[Are you free on Thursday?]

"What's up with him?"

Why was Kim Suho suddenly contacting me? Oh, it's that.

For the internal investigation of the previous incident, Cube decided to select the most trustworthy cadets from each grade to search for the culprit. The freshman representatives were unsurprisingly Shin Jonghak, Kim Suho, and Chae Nayun.

"...But isn't it too early?"

I wasn't sure of the exact date, but I remembered it being around early April. Currently, it was the end of March. The investigation team formed quicker than I thought. I still couldn't understand why he contacted me.

[Why?]

[I can't tell you yet. I'll tell you about it in person. For now, just know that Nayun recommended you.]

“Chae Nayun?”

Why would Chae Nayun recommend me? Because I have good eyes?

I hesitated because the timing wasn't good. Classes were canceled on Wednesday and Thursday, so I planned on going to the Gari Mountain Dungeon on Wednesday and the hunting club on Thursday. I replied.

[I'm busy on Thursday, but I'm free on Friday.]

[That's fine, we can meet then.]

Kim Suho instantly replied.

“Well, it's better the closer I am to the storyline.”

After agreeing, I went back to looking at my laptop. Next on the list was Sven's social media accounts.

Gangwondo was Korea's biggest mountain range. The region included Baekdu Mountain, which was known for its rich life energy, and other mountains like Mount Kumgang, which were rich in spiritual energy. Martial artists referred to this area as the mecca of training. It attracted all sorts of people like hunters, poachers, heroes, and mercenaries. Among these was also a special occupation known as a ginseng digger.

A ginseng digger searched the mountains for ginseng. They weren't strong enough to combat monsters, but had heightened senses of sight and smell. Ginseng could be found in many countries, but the most expensive came from Korea. Naturally, ginseng diggers commonly inhabited Gangwondo.

Kim Yunjoon was such a ginseng digger.

Gangwondo's ginseng sold for sky-high prices even if they were young because it increased the body's mana capacity. Kim Yunjoon didn't fully understand the effects, but he spent 10 years in Gangwondo's dangerous mountains to dig up money.

The last ginseng he discovered was a 4 year old one a year ago. He hadn't earned any income since, but his family didn't complain since he received 300 million won from it.

Today marked the twentieth time Kim Yunjoon climbed Gari Mountain.

"Hmm?"

As always, he walked while looking down. When he raised his head to wipe his sweat, he spotted a young man who was neither ugly nor handsome, simply average. Still, his body seemed well-built, although that was also common for ginseng diggers. The young man repeatedly walked, paused, and looked at a map.

"A ginseng digger, but ginsengs can't be found on maps. He must be a newbie."

Kim Yunjoon grinned and walked towards him. The young man turned around, noticing his presence. Kim Yunjoon cheekily asked, "Are you also a ginseng digger?"

The young man stared at him before shaking his head.

"No, I'm just looking for a place."

He hid his map behind him. Kim Yunjoon found his actions quite cute.

"Haha, I understand where you're coming from, but ginseng isn't something you can find with maps."

"...Yes?"

"That map, I don't know where you got it, but don't believe it too much. Only heaven knows where ginseng is."

“What?”

The young man tilted his head. Kim Yunjoon had a lot he wanted to teach this novice. He felt it was his responsibility as an elite ginseng digger.

Kim Yunjoon began to talk about his experience and showed off his cutting-edge equipment. He explained how to dig while avoiding damage to the ginseng, and showed some pictures of his wife and 13 year old son before laughing and smacking the young man’s shoulder.

“When I see young’uns climbing the mountain, I can’t help but think they’re simply dreaming of striking a fortune. Jumping into the mountains with such a flimsy mindset is no different from throwing away your life. Forgive me, but I hope what I taught you will come in handy.”

“Ah... yes.”

The young man nodded with a blank face. Kim Yunjoon felt deep admiration and respect from his eyes. His effort felt worthwhile.

“Then take care. I wish you good luck. I hope you can grow up to threaten me as a competitor. Don’t forget the advice I gave you today.”

Kim Yunjoon walked past the young man. He waved just in case the young man was watching him leave.

I stared at a man’s back. Then I looked down at my smartwatch. Unknowingly, 30 minutes had passed.

“Who was he?”

I ended up wasting time because of some talkative guy. I wanted to cut him off in the middle, but hesitated because he might have been a named herbalist. I didn't notice anything special about his appearance or pictures. He was just a normal ginseng digger.

"I think it's this way..."

I looked at my map once again. It pointed to the Gari Mountain Dungeon. I obtained it from the Book of Truth. Just like a genie lamp, all I had to do was ask, Where is the Gari Mountain Dungeon?, and it gave me this map.

The map showed my live location like a GPS. I continued towards the dungeon's location. After about 10 minutes of walking...

"Uk!"

Thud. I tripped on something.

"Agh, what is it now?"

I got up after falling pathetically. A stem of some sort tangled around my leg. At first, I was afraid it was some sort of plant monster, but it was just an ordinary stem.

"Whew, that surprised me."

I pulled on the stem. It didn't seem very deep and I didn't use much strength. When I pulled the stem out, something resembling a bellflower root popped out.

"What's this?"

I threw the root on the ground. After dusting myself off, I suddenly remembered what the man just told me. Ginseng. I looked at the root again. It did resemble a mandrake. I took out my laptop and read the description.

[7 year old Ginseng] — A plant that achieved magic power on its own through condensed life energy and spiritual energy. Has strong efficacy no matter how it's used. — A treasured item full of nutrients.

“ ... ”

I became speechless. I wanted to say something, but I was too dumbfounded. I could only murmur inwardly.

Jackpot.

Chapter 30

The Djinn and Gari Mountain (3)

Ginseng served many purposes such as increasing one's stats by consuming it or grinding it into ingredients for high rank potions. Its magic power could also be used to enchant items.

I didn't have the equipment to make potions or a magician to help with enchantment. I could either eat it or sell it.

"Eating it is a bit..."

This ginseng should be worth 700 million won. I could avoid being scammed by selling it through the Violet Banquet. If I sold it, I could invest the money into stocks and make 4-5 billion won. That was enough to buy 7 ginseng.

"Argh, this is hard."

The unexpected fortune increased my worries. For now, I put the ginseng in my bag. I could think about this first world problem after the Gari Mountain Dungeon.

I dusted off my hands in front of the cave.

"So this is why no one has discovered it yet."

Huuu. I glanced behind me at the razor-sharp cliff that stood an inch away. The Gari Mountain Dungeon was located in the middle of the cliff, buried in moss and vines. I could feel my heart thumping. Even with parkour, the journey had been difficult. Without stigma's magic power, I would be too scared to jump.

“Hmm.”

I looked into the dark cave before entering. My thousand-mile eyes could see through everything, including the dark. Not long afterward, I discovered a ghost that should’ve been the switch monster.

Like in the original story, the Gari Mountain Dungeon was an undead dungeon. Monsters included dullahans, banshees, and other undead that ranged from low-intermediate rank, grade 9 to grade 3. The boss should be a death knight, which I wouldn’t be able to beat. Not even Tomer had fully cleared this dungeon. A death knight was a high-intermediate rank, grade 1 monster that only a high rank hero could defeat.

I was satisfied with just finding the dungeon. With my current strength, beating the hidden stage would be impossi...

“No.”

I looked into my bag. Suddenly, the ginseng I picked up became more dazzling.

“...”

A hidden stage was a completely isolated space from the standard dungeon, making it significantly easier to clear. The quicker one cleared it, the better the reward. Above all, I worried if Tomer might come here sooner than planned if I didn’t clear this stage now. The hidden stage’s reward was a formless weapon called aether. It lacked a clear form and could easily be mistaken as a lump of magic power, but aether was considered a weapon because it had no form. Therefore, it could change into whatever the user desired. Furthermore, aether was an evolving weapon.

It was worth it, even if I had to sacrifice the ginseng. Of course, I wouldn’t use the entire thing. Instead, I broke off 3 of its 7 roots.

[7 year old Ginseng Root] — The root of a 7 year old ginseng. Contains condensed magic power.

First, I tried modifying the root’s setting.

— For 1 hour, will increase all variable stats by 4 points.

I thought it wouldn't cost too much SP since I edited the effect it already had.

[You do not have enough SP.]

I was wrong. It seemed that raising stats required more restrictions than I thought. I had no choice but to try again.

— For 30 minutes, will increase all variable stats by 2 points.

[5 SP will be used. Would you like to save?]

This was satisfactory. I modified 2 ginseng roots with the above setting. My stats would increase by 4 points for 30 minutes after eating them. Other than magic power, my variable stats would be on par with Yoo Yeonha.

However, I gave the last ginseng root a different setting.

— Soaks into magic power and strengthens it.

[5 SP will be used. Would you like to save?]

I hit [save]. With this, I should be able to clear the hidden stage.

I confidently entered the cave. An extreme chill penetrated my body as soon as I entered.

“Ugh.”

I walked forward while regulating my breath.

Ssssss.

I heard a strange sound and hid behind the cave's wall. I could see the hologram-like ghost wavering in the air even without the thousand-mile eyes. That was the switch monster. I could kill a monster of that level even without the ginseng.

I took out my Desert Eagle. My gift, Master Sharpshooter, had already reached grade 8. Piercing the vital point of such a slow monster was easier than push-ups.

I pulled the trigger.

The bullet phased through without doing any physical damage, but its magic power squarely hit between the ghost's eyes. Then the ghost burst into light without a sound.

A strange wind swept by and absorbed the light like a vacuum.

I started following the incredibly faint stream of light to the hidden stage where an inferior witch waited.

After about 10 minutes, I finally arrived in an isolated space.

The witch that carried aether stood in the middle. I took out my laptop.

Whiiiiish.

[Witch] — Evandel the Witch. Possesses a spirit body and produces low rank ghosts.

Countless monsters and devils appeared after Outcall, but witches were rare. It was difficult to classify a monster as a witch.

First, a witch had to have the ability to produce ghosts. A witch's home was often called a stronghold because of the high number of undead they produced. Second, a witch needed a human body to properly use their magic. Finally, a witch also required intelligence on par with humans to efficiently command their ghosts.

The witch in front of me was inferior because she didn't meet the second and third requirements.

However, Evandel would become infamous in the future.

Adult witches were difficult to deal with. The most efficient way to subjugate them was to kill them when they were young before its intelligence and body fully developed. However, djinns had raised Evandel in the original story. After reaching adulthood, she established her stronghold in an abandoned school in Suwon. This stronghold, known as Evandel's Castle, became the most fearsome in history. The Hero Association famously considered it no different than a tower.

I would obtain 2 things from killing this inferior Evandel. One was aether and the other was Evandel's seed. In the original story, Tomer only took aether and gave Evandel's seed to the followers of Isabel. I needed to kill Evandel since I planned on taking both. There was only one problem...

"She's a child."

I hesitated because of her appearance. She had a tiny face and was only 140 cm tall. With soft hands, she squished the soul of the ghost I just killed. Tomer had killed that child and I had to do the same.

"Huuu."

I had to do it. I was the one who created her anyways. I released stigma's magic power after resolving myself. A bullet couldn't kill a witch in a spirit body even if I modified it. That would only waste SP.

Light attribute, spear.

I breathed my will into stigma's magic power. I desired a spear with the light attribute. It used all of stigma's magic power, but the size and sharpness came out horrible. The amount of stigma's magic power wasn't even enough to properly form an arrow, so a spear was too greedy.

However, I could easily sharpen the spear. I placed a ginseng root on it and increased its size and luster. Next, I swallowed the 2 modified ginseng roots from before. Immediately, I could feel my body surge with vitality.

A stat increase of 4 points... no, probably less since I took one after the other. Still, my body felt completely different from before. My muscles brimmed with strength as though they would explode. I felt hot, yet light like I was no longer human, but some sort of radioactive monster. Breathing roughly, I looked down at my body. It had bulked up and my 5 senses felt extremely sensitive. As I thought, the spear was the most powerful choice with amplified stats.

“Huup!”

I hurled the spear with all my strength. It shot through the air like lightning towards the target. The spear had already pierced Evandel’s head the moment I let go.

—...?

However, Evandel had survived with the spear in her head. She turned towards me and I felt an indescribable terror. A muddy stream began to form from her hands as a vengeful spirit took shape.

“Um, wait. Can we talk this out?”

— Uuaaang...

Evandel suddenly collapsed with a strange cry. The life energy disappeared from her body and a seed fell to the ground.

“Was that an instinctive reaction before death?”

After calming down, I went and picked up the seed. Then I proceeded into the dark to retrieve the slime-like weapon with a blue glow. This was the weapon that made Tomer one of the executives of Wicked. Before I reached for it, I checked its description with my laptop.

[Aether] [Mystic – Formless] [Evolving] A corporeal, but formless weapon. Will adhere to its master or a weapon, reinforcing their strength.

— Master selection: Will not adhere to another being once a master is chosen.

— Physical body reinforcement: Will increase the variable stats of its owner by 0.6 points.

— Weapon reinforcement: Will adhere to its master's weapon and strengthen the weapon's attack power. Aether can also form into a weapon by itself. (Current aether rank – high rank)

— Evolving weapon: All of the above functions will evolve along with its owner. Other functions may develop depending on aether's awakening.

I had obtained my weapon, but I didn't expect things to end so easily.

Clack clack clack—

Bones joined together to form the shape of humans. Soon, I found myself surrounded by skeletons.

Chapter 31

Same Bed, Different Dreams (1)

“Ah...”

I groaned as I lay on the ground with bones all around me. I had no talent for close ranged combat, but I didn't want to waste precious bullets on skeletons. I had transformed aether into a club. The ginseng's effect had worn off, but I wondered why I acted so bold.

“I would've died if they were black skeletons...”

I destroyed 3-4 white skeletons every time I swung the club. My body felt stronger, but the fight still took 25 minutes. If they weren't low ranked white skeletons... I didn't even want to imagine the outcome.

“Agh.”

I scratched my back with a bone. Finally, I managed to obtain aether and Evandel's seed. This was my most significant accomplishment since entering my novel. I opened my laptop.

[A fraction of the ginseng's effect has dissolved into your body. Your strength and stamina have increased by 0.02 points!] [You have obtained 47 SP.]

I didn't gain much from the system. Was it because aether wasn't a well-known weapon yet?

▷Variable Stats [Strength 2.455] [Stamina 2.545] [Speed 2.85]
[Perception 3.705] [Vitality 2.465] [Magic power 1.925]

The increase in my variable stats felt worthwhile. Aether boosted each by 0.6 points, raising them above 2 except for magic power. Finally, I could barely qualify as a real cadet.

I closed the laptop after appreciating my stats. I wasn’t sure if I could properly walk, but I would die if any more monsters came.

I forced my creaking body up.

I barely made it to the dorm before curfew at 10 P.M. Immediately, I showered and washed away all the dirt. The warm water felt so refreshing after a rough day.

“Phew.”

I wiped myself off after showering. The 0.6 stat increase physically showed. Without flexing, I had a clear six-pack. I guess it was the same for other cadets too. I stopped fooling around in the mirror and left the bathroom. After putting on my underwear, I set my laptop and Evandel’s seed on the desk.

“I brought it, but...”

[Evandel’s Seed] — Seed containing the soul of the witch Evandel.

When this seed germinates, Evandel the Witch of Despair will be born. Her title sounded evil, but she could become a powerful ally. The environment where one grew up was crucial in raising any living being. I just had to raise her well.

Feeding the seed required small amounts of blood instead of water. A witch’s personality and growth depended on whose blood. Chae Nayun’s or Kim Suho’s would be best, but acquiring it wouldn’t be easy.

“I’ll just hold onto you for now.”

I wrapped Evandel’s seed in a handkerchief and placed it in a drawer. Chae Nayun and Kim Suho regularly donated blood. Perhaps, I could pull some tricks and steal their blood.

Next, I hacked Chae Nayun's smartwatch to prepare for tomorrow. Coincidentally, she was chatting with Sven.

Sven: [You're coming to the club tomorrow, right?]

[Yeah, when are we meeting?]

Sven: [Come to the Portal at 4.]

[Why so early?]

Sven: [The meeting is in Gangwondo, so let's bet who will get more kills before the seniors arrive.]

[Sure, sounds good.]

They seemed to have gotten fairly close. The official meeting was at 5 P.M., but Sven had asked to meet an hour earlier.

4 P.M.

After noting the time, I accessed Violet Banquet to sell the ginseng. Packhorse Master stock was on the rise. I wanted to buy more before it was too late.

[Violet Banquet Online Auction House] [Item for Sale] [Description: 7 year old ginseng from Gangwondo's mountain.]

[Please place the item on the portal for appraisal.]

A circular hologram projected from the laptop screen. Once I placed the ginseng there, it would be transported to Violet Banquet's appraisal center where they would appraise and auction it. Unfortunately, I couldn't explain the technology. Magic engineering created a portal, but I had no clue how it projected remotely. Modern technology wasn't advanced enough to achieve such a feat.

However, Violet Banquet could do it. The reason was simple. It was the reward from the Tower of Information. Towers gave rewards beyond anyone's imagination.

[The item has been transported. It will be appraised within the next 24 hours.]

I closed the laptop after the ginseng disappeared.

Thursday, 3:30 P.M.

I got dressed before it was too late. I felt in peak condition thanks to the modified fatigue recovery potion. Now, I just had to coincidentally join up with Sven and Chae Nayun. I wanted to chase Sven away if possible, but that was beyond my ability.

I left the dorm and arrived at the bus station. A bus soon arrived, but I passed. I waited for Chae Nayun and noticed her from a mile away. Her face radiated wherever she went.

Chae Nayun acknowledged my existence at least. I tilted my head nonchalantly. Sven should already be waiting at the portal station, but I knew Chae Nayun would be late. That was just her personality. I also peeked at the message she sent Sven.

“Why didn't you get on the bus?” Chae Nayun asked. I flinched for a moment. So she had seen me waiting for the bus. Come to think of it, Chae Nayun also had good eyes.

“I came too early for the club meeting, so I skipped it since I don't have anything better to do.”

“Oh? What club are you in?”

“Hunting.”

“Hunting? I'm in hunting too. I don't remember seeing you...”

The bus arrived while Chae Nayun spoke. I hopped as she followed.

“I didn’t go to the orientation, so that’s probably why.”

I sat on a seat.

“...I see.”

Chae Nayun sat across from me and doubtfully glanced before opening her mouth.

“Just how many clubs are you in? I heard from Yeonha that you were in her club.”

“Three.”

“Wow, what a waste of time.”

“You’re in 2 too.”

“I’m... So what?”

I forced myself to smile before closing my eyes. I didn’t want to continue this conversation. Chae Nayun didn’t seem to mind ending it either.

We arrived at the portal station without talking for the rest of the ride. I could see Sven in the distance. He ran towards the bus, but paused when he saw me. Then he walked up with a smile.

“You came earlier than I expected.”

“Mhm. Oh right, Sven. You know him, right? He’s the one who helped us before. Kim Hajin.”

“Yeah, I know. Hey.”

Sven and I shook hands. He tried to let go, but I didn’t let him. Instead, I firmly grasped his hand and stared into his black, lifeless eyes. My observation gift peered deep into his pupils and caught a glimpse of Asmodeus' evil energy.

“Hey, what are you doing?”

Chae Nayun stepped in and separated us. No, she separated Sven from me.

“Why are you picking a fight?”

She snapped at me, but I turned around without saying anything and walked to the portal station's entrance. I wasn't particularly skilled at distinguishing the state of djinns, but Sven was undoubtedly in a dangerous condition. I could simply tell by looking at my laptop.

[In the original story, he died after going berserk without accomplishing anything.] [Modified setting – Has increased self-control and mental power to help restrain Asmodeus' power.]

We arrived at a residential area in Gangwondo. Many monsters and wild animals roamed around because of the high mana density. The hunting club, Leonidas, cooperated with the local government and residents to hunt in the area. The cadets helped the citizens while enjoying their hobbies by hunting these creatures.

“You met on the way here?”

Sven asked Chae Nayun at the club's meeting place.

“Yeah.”

Chae Nayun narrowed her eyes at Kim Hajin's movements. He sat on a rock and looked at his watch. He kept doing that while pretending to be oblivious and loitered around them.

“Doesn't it look like he's following us?”

“Yeah.”

“...”

Sven stared at Kim Hajin for a while before continuing, “Be careful.”

“You heard about cadets going missing lately, right?”

“He wouldn’t do something like that.”

“But...”

“He has an alibi.”

Kim Hajin had been recorded using a portal during the estimated time of the third victim. That’s why Chae Nayun recommended him to the djinn investigation team. After all, Yoo Yeonha, who was known for her objective judgment, also praised his eyesight.

“Really?”

“Hm...”

Chae Nayun pondered as she rubbed her chin.

Although he wasn’t a suspect, he acted strangely. Even today, Kim Hajin skipped a bus to take the next one with me.

"It can't be that he likes me, right?"

It didn’t sound completely absurd now that she thought about it. He must’ve brought up my older brother to get my attention. It all makes sense. Not to mention his aggressive stance towards Sven today... Oh, and even before then, at the National Weapons Museum, his partner should have been Yoo Yeonha, but he came to the museum.

Of course, it was only suspicion, but he went about it completely wrong if that was his intention. Harassing someone for attention was so shameless and awful. Secretly following someone was no different from stalking.

“Nah, no way.”

Chae Nayun shook her head.

It didn't make sense. She couldn't even remember if they had met before the museum incident. Of course, she knew lots of guys had crushes on her. But still...

“Look, the others are here.”

Sven pointed ahead. Startled, Chae Nayun looked up. The hunting club's leader and the other members walked over.

My ginseng sold for 546 million won half a day after the auction. Even after the 11% auction fee, I received around 500 million won for the ginseng with 4 missing roots (I snapped off another one in case of an emergency). If I invested all this into stocks...

“Now, gather around everyone!”

A cheerful voice rang out. The club leader and everyone else had arrived.

Today's event would finally start.

Honestly, I didn't exactly know what would happen today. I only roughly wrote the conclusion.

[The berserk Sven gravely injured Chae Nayun before turning into dust.]

That was it. The whole point of this event was for Kim Suho to look out for Chae Nayun. He would mistake Chae Nayun as the djinn's target and Yoo Yeonha would be kidnapped while everyone paid attention to her. Something like that.

The biggest problem was that Sven had become calmer and more elaborate. Chae Nayun might suffer even more since he could better control Asmodeus' power.

"It's nice to see everyone again. Our hunting club helps citizens by hunting wild animals, killing two birds with one stone."

The club leader began his speech.

"Oh, by the way, who might you be? I don't recall seeing you at the orientation."

He suddenly paused his speech and asked me.

"I'm Kim Hajin. Unfortunately, I couldn't attend the orientation due to a personal matter."

"Ah, that's fine. We didn't do much at orientation. For today..."

I looked for Chae Nayun while ignoring the club leader. I quickly found her, but almost jumped in surprise. Chae Nayun was also staring at me with a suspicious look.

Chapter 32

Same Bed, Different Dreams (2)

I climbed the tallest red pine on the mountain. From the treetop, I could see everything within the horizon. The thousand-mile eyes saw through all the dense trees and leaves. I could see a nameless cadet chasing after a wild boar, a second-year couple making out instead of hunting, Chae Nayun skillfully shooting her arrows, and Sven throwing pebbles by a creek.

Chae Nayun and Sven separated for their bet on who could hunt more wild animals. She focused on hunting while Sven continued to stare at the creek.

Something strange happened. A wild leopard cat appeared from the opposite side of the creek. It was one of the most common animals. Sven didn't even glance at it, but a tentacle shot out from his back and pierced its neck like a spear. He dragged the leopard cat towards him like a skewer.

It was Asmodeus' power.

He continued hunting in that manner for an hour. Chae Nayun searched for wild animals while Sven killed any that came within a 300 meter range without lifting a finger. Finally, they joined up at the creek at their appointed time.

— A total of 6. Three wild boars, 1 leopard cat, and 2 rabbits.

Chae Nayun proudly declared.

— As you can see, I killed 8.

Sven smiled as he pointed to the wild animals next to him. Immediately, Chae Nayun's jaws dropped.

— Really?

Chae Nayun approached the pile of corpses and confirmed it.

— Wow, you weren't kidding. How did you find 8?

Chae Nayun sat next to Sven as she ruffled her hair.

— You bought them from somewhere, didn't you? How much did you pay?

She joked as she poked Sven's arm. It looked like Chae Nayun was leading him on, but she probably did it thoughtlessly.

— So now you have to grant me a wish, right?

— Tsk, yeah. What do you want?

They had bet on a wish. I began to understand why Sven had lost control.

— Um...

— Yeah?

—...

Sven looked straight at Chae Nayun. Then he shook his head with a grin.

— No, it's nothing.

— What is it? Tell me.

I took out my gun from stigma's extradimensional storage. I could snipe from a kilometer away without a problem. Wheesh. Aether adhered to the gun and increased its performance.

— You see...

Why Sven went berserk made sense if he confessed and got rejected. Sven fell in love with Chae Nayun at the beginning of the school year and he contracted with Asmodeus, the Devil of Lust. A djinn with amplified emotions and obsession hardly showed restraint.

— I like you.

—... Huh?

Chae Nayun frowned at the sudden confession.

— What are you saying so suddenly?

—... You don't like me?

— Of course I don't. It's only been 2 days since we first talked? You expect me to fall in love with you in 2 days? Well, maybe you did, but I didn't.

Chae Nayun coldly stood up. Sven drooped his head. His body already began to transform as black magic power rose from his body.

I aimed at his head.

— Plus, I like men who are stronger than me.

—... Than you?

— You're much weaker than me, so I don't even see you as a man.

With that, she triggered the switch. Sven's eyes turned blood red. He managed to endure it until now, but Sven was only an extra. This was his limit.

—... Really?

Sven stood up. Chae Nayun spoke without turning around to look.

— Yeah. So don't contact me from now on. I'm sorry, but cutting off our relationship will be better than staying friends and giving you false hope.

Sven leaned towards Chae Nayun. I fired at his head, but hit his shoulder because of the distance and the fact that he moved.

Sven planned to jump on Chae Nayun, but lost his balance and headbutted her because of my shot.

— Uk!

Chae Nayun flew forward after being struck by Sven. However, she avoided injury with an agile forward roll. Then she quickly turned around and saw that Sven had half transformed into a djinn.

— You, you!

—...

Sven glared at Chae Nayun and sent his tentacles after her. I fired consecutively. One, two, three, four... I emptied the magazine. The mysterious support bewildered Chae Nayun, but she acted accordingly.

She jumped back to gain some distance before firing her bow. An arrow penetrated Sven's shoulder, but he charged at her and grabbed her head.

— But I'm...

Then he slammed her to the ground while shouting.

— stronger than you!

Boom!

Sven mounted on top of Chae Nayun. She struggled and condensed magic power in her hand to form a dagger. However, Sven grabbed her wrist before she could make her move.

“Tsk.”

I couldn't help her from this distance. Reinforced magic power covered Sven's body. Ordinary bullets couldn't penetrate this barrier, but I couldn't use a light bullet either because Chae Nayun would get caught up in the explosion.

With no other choice, I jumped from tree to tree. I changed the Desert Eagle into its shotgun form. I had to close the distance and blow up his head, which was more vulnerable because of his incomplete transformation.

I quickly covered the 1 kilometer distance and smoothly landed to approach them.

“Uup, uup!”

Sven kept Chae Nayun alive because Asmodeus was the Devil of Lust and it was clear what its contracted djinn would want. I frowned in disgust at Sven licking Chae Nayun's face and put the barrel next to his head. Sven shuddered at the coldness of the steel. His eyes rolled towards me, but I pulled the trigger immediately. The shotgun shell tore through his head and sent him flying with a scream.

“Kek, kek.”

I looked down at Chae Nayun. Her face was wet with saliva and she was injured, but alive. Djinn of lust would always fool around and die in vain.

“Stand...”

A tentacle suddenly attacked me when I reached out to Chae Nayun. Aether instantly formed a shield and blocked the first strike, but Sven charged at me again with his tentacle. He struck aether's shield away and grabbed my neck.

“Uuuk!”

It was an indescribable pain. I started losing oxygen and couldn't breathe or talk. All I could do was struggle as my vision turned cloudy and I lost sense of my limbs. Everything felt numb, but I didn't experience my life flashing before my eyes. I simply closed my eyes, unfamiliar with the sensation of death.

— Let go, you bastard!

Like a bolt of lightning, someone's shout woke me from falling asleep. Chae Nayun appeared behind Sven and swung an incredibly long sword. It cleanly severed him in half from his shoulder to his waist.

“...Puhak.”

Sven fell in two as I gasped for air on the ground. This was the first time I felt so thankful for oxygen.

Haa... haa... haa...

After 3 big pants, I leaned against a tree trunk.

“Huu... Wow, what was that, a lightsaber?”

I spoke nonchalantly while pointing at the longsword in Chae Nayun's hands. She had formed a sword purely out of magic power. The blade surged with magic power while the handle remained stable. I knew how difficult it was to achieve such perfect harmony. Even Kim Suho wouldn't be able to do that. Only Chae Nayun could, as this was part of her true gift.

“...I don't know.”

The sword in her hands disappeared. We stared at each other in silence. I realized how badly she was injured the more I looked at her. Her wounds still bled and her clothes were ripped to shreds, revealing her underwear. I handed her my coat, but Chae Nayun only stared.

“Take it.”

She asked a strange question instead of taking the coat.

“Yeah.”

“I’m glad.”

“What about you? Are you okay?”

“I’m fine.”

Thud. Chae Nayun collapsed as soon as she replied.

“...”

She had used too much magic power. I turned her over to face the sky and covered her with my coat. Then I stared at where Sven used to be. He had disappeared without a trace. That was how djinns died. They belonged to their devil in death.

Chwaaa—

The trees somberly cried. Tomorrow, Germany would receive tragic news.

Sssss—

Chae Nayun opened her eyes at the sound of ruffling leaves and a chilly breeze. The sky had turned completely dark, but an intense pain swept through her head before she could question where she was. She clutched her head until the pain subsided.

“Haa.”

Once the pain died down, Chae Nayun collected her breath while lying on the ground. Only then did she remember what happened.

“Was it a dream?”

Everything she experienced felt so distant. She naturally wondered if it was all a dream, but her wounds and the coat covering her meant it was real.

“Oh, right.”

Chae Nayun raised her upper body. Then she discovered the silhouette of a man and shouted in surprise.

“Ah! Oh god, you scared me!”

“You’re up.”

Kim Hajin stared at his smartwatch while leaning against a tree. Again. He was always there every time something happened. She had escaped death 3 times thanks to him.

“What time is it?”

“10 at night.”

“What? It’s curfew soon.”

Chae Nayun tried to get up, but she couldn’t feel her legs. She wondered what was going on and tried again. However, her legs wouldn’t budge no matter how many times she tried. An indescribable terror swept over her and she began to panic.

“W-What, m-m-my legs, what’s w-wrong with m-my...”

“Magic power exhaustion. Is it your first time?”

“Huh? Magic power exhaustion?”

Magic power exhaustion. Chae Nayun had heard about it. It was a state in which a person had utterly exhausted their magic power. Their magic power recovery rate would decrease drastically and the person would be bedridden for at least 2 days.

Kim Hajin approached Chae Nayun and kneeled with his back facing towards her. Chae Nayun furrowed her brows at this incomprehensible action.

“What?”

“Get on. You can’t walk.”

“Do I look crazy?”

“Then what, you want to stay here forever?”

His look of pity felt humiliating, but she didn’t have a choice. It would be difficult without his help. Chae Nayun wrapped her arms around his neck and pulled herself up.

“I’m going.”

“...Yeah.”

Kim Hajin slowly descended the mountain.

Chae Nayun fell in thought as she gazed at the scenery. Sven was a djinn. Then was he the culprit behind the disappearances? Djinnns were once humans, so since when was Sven a djinn? And where did Kim Hajin pop out from? Don’t tell me, was he constantly following me?

This guy... Does he really like me?

Chae Nayun needed more time to process everything that happened today.

Chapter 33

Exam Period (1)

I safely arrived at Gangwondo's portal station with Chae Nayun at 10:55 P.M. Thankfully, many people weren't around. I put her down on a nearby bench as she glanced at her smartwatch and murmured.

"It's almost curfew."

I was speechless at her priorities. Returning to Cube in her current state was ridiculous.

"Contact your father."

"Why?"

"You know why. Go get treated at a hospital."

I turned to the portal, leaving Chae Nayun alone.

"I'm going."

"What? Where?" she exclaimed.

"To Cube. You can give my coat back later."

"Take me too! Hey! Aak!"

Chae Nayun tried to get up and fell forward. I couldn't help but sigh at her pitiful state.

"...You should go to a hospital."

Her lips trembled because she didn't want to call her father. I could understand why. Her father was a busy and influential man as the head of a chaebol group. Even though he would run over if his daughter was hurt, Chae Nayun didn't want that.

"You have a butler or an attendant, right?"

"...Yeah, you can go," Chae Nayun bitterly replied.

"Alright."

I walked towards the portal employee, then stopped. I suddenly remembered something. Today, Chae Nayun had subconsciously unleashed her gift. She needed to develop that gift that cut down the djinn in a single slash.

"Hey, are you still going to use a bow?" I asked.

"What? What are you talking about?"

"You felt it today, didn't you?"

Chae Nayun's gift specialized in close ranged combat. More specifically, it specialized in war. She could amplify the length of her sword as long as she had a conductor of magic power. For example, her gift could transform a 2 meter sword into a monstrous 20 meter sword. Furthermore, the sword wouldn't be any heavier because magic power was weightless.

It was similar to Sun Wukong's Jingu Bang. ^[1] The only difference was that Chae Nayun didn't need a legendary grade weapon to display similar strength. She would slaughter hundreds of monsters with a single blow, an imperial might that made djinns shudder in fear. They would call her Empress of the Battlefield.

"You should be using a sword, not a bow."

Like the original story, large weapons like a zweihander or claymore suited her best. She even had the money to purchase the most expensive weapons.

“Oh yeah? What do you know about me?”

Chae Nayun didn't know her future. She refused to accept the idea because she hadn't yet overcome her fear of close ranged combat.

“...Never mind then.”

I stepped into the portal with a resentful gaze piercing at my back. She might have thought, ‘Is he going to just leave me?’ Yes, I did precisely that.

Nothing travels faster than words. Last night's matter had already spread that a cadet named Sven turned into a djinn and attacked Chae Nayun. She won, but was seriously injured. Even amid such rumors, Friday's class resumed like normal. I planned to meet Kim Suho today. He asked me to come to room 303 before 5 P.M.

“It's an important matter, so don't forget! If it goes well, your grades could go up too.”

He reminded me once more after class. He should have heard about what happened to Chae Nayun, so he probably planned to visit her after the meeting.

“Yeah.”

I nodded. Kim Suho tapped on my shoulder and busily walked away. I yawned while looking at his back. Since it was 3:30, I had some time. I wanted to go back and take a nap at the dorm.

While I was walking down the hallway...

“...What?”

It felt like someone was following me, but when I turned around, no one was there. The presence was too calm to be a djinn. Was it an assassin? Why would an assassin be following me?

“Hmm.”

Was I mistaken? I took out my laptop and continued walking.

[383,013,160 points have been deposited. These points can be used in Violet Banquet or traded for cash. (At least 10,000,000 points required)]

Violet Banquet's enormous fee had shrunk the 600 million won to 400 million, but I knew that would happen. The first trade with Violet Banquet always cost more.

[Purchaser Youngfly has requested to speak with you. (Seller's nickname will show up as anonymous.)]

[If you have any more ginseng, I'd like to buy them.]

I rejected his request. I didn't have any more ginseng to sell.

I turned around.

Shashashak—

Someone quickly hid behind the wall, but my eyes could see through it. I was surprised to see Rachel. With her back against the wall, she held her beating heart.

“Hmm, was I mistaken?”

I pretended not to notice to find out why she was following me. Then I turned off the laptop and used its black screen as a mirror to look behind me. When I started walking, Rachel peeked her head out. Her gaze was fixed on my bag, but why my bag? The only thing in it was a notebook. Ah, thinking about it now, this was the way to the library. The dorm was right next to it.

“...Is she trying to steal my notebook?”

No, a princess wouldn't do something like that. Besides, it didn't contain anything worthwhile.

I continued walking as Rachel tenaciously chased me. She didn't stop until I entered my dorm.

"She followed me all the way here?"

She stared regretfully at the dorm when I looked out from the window. Interesting. I walked into my room with a grin.

After taking a short nap, I left and arrived at room 303. A small group had already gathered: Shin Jonghak, Yoo Yeonha, Kim Horak, and Yi Yeonghan. It almost looked like a scene from my novel, Kim Suho and his friend versus Shin Jonghak and his lackeys. Even Kim Horak, the weakest one here, had a somewhat important role until the middle of the story. I felt entirely out of place. They didn't say anything when they saw me, so I opened my mouth first.

"Why did you call me?"

I asked, pretending not to know. Shin Jonghak frowned at my innocent question. Thankfully, Kim Suho explained before Shin Jonghak could express his dissatisfaction.

"I haven't told Hajin why we're meeting yet."

"So, what is it?"

Kim Suho stood up at my question. He should've just stayed sitting. His height made me slightly uncomfortable. I set his height as 185 cm. Now, I somewhat regretted it.

"Hajin, you've heard about cadets going missing, right?"

"...Yeah."

"It's about that. Cube entrusted us with investigating the cause. Of course, they're going to do their own investigation, but since the culprit is likely a student, they think it'll be easier for students to also investigate."

I was about to nod casually, but after realizing this was supposed to be my first time hearing about this, I pretended to be surprised.

“...But why me?”

“You have good eyes. I heard you can see over a thousand miles away.”

“Well, yeah... I do have good eyes.”

So it was for that single reason? I feigned a smile and sat down on a nearby chair. Kim Suho naturally sat at the head of the table. He looked at me and asked, “Will you help us?”

“I don’t know if I can, but...”

I didn't want to give up on potential SP.

“Thanks.”

Kim Suho smiled. Then he cleared his throat and brought up yesterday’s incident.

“First, I don’t think the djinn who attacked Nayun is this incident’s culprit. But...”

Shin Jonghak interrupted him. “Nayun?”

He interjected at the fact that Kim Suho didn’t address Chae Nayun with her last name.

“...But I think there’s a high chance that Chae Nayun is the real culprit’s next target. Djinn follow their contracted devil’s orders, so if Sven’s contracted devil ordered him to attack her, it makes sense that another djinn would also go after her.”

It was a good theory, but incorrect. Sven’s contracted devil and the culprit’s contracted devil weren’t the same. Asmodeus and Lilith had completely different dispositions.

“So I’m wondering, can you think of anyone suspicious? Someone who has been acting strange recently...”

Before the investigation began, Kim Suho asked for everyone’s opinions. No one stepped forward, but Yoo Yeonha stared at me. Soon, Shin Jonghak and Kim Horak also turned to me.

I knew the real culprit, but I hesitated to reveal his name without proof. The culprit should be leaving traces, but he proceeded faster than I thought. In the original story, six people went missing in two months, but three had already gone missing in two weeks. I felt guilty letting more people die for the story to catch up. There could be more victims than the original story at this rate. Perhaps I should mention his name to speed up the investigation.

“Yeah, I have someone in mind.”

Five pairs of eyes focused on me.

“Who?”

Kim Suho asked. I slowly opened my mouth and spoke the real culprit’s name.

“Yun Hyun.”

...A deep silence descended. No one reacted to my comment.

“Pft.”

Soon, Yoo Yeonha’s mocking laughter broke the silence, and Kim Suho gently rebutted.

“That person has an alibi. We already looked into him because he was close to the first victim.”

It was obvious that Yun Hyun had an alibi.

“But what if the victim went to Yun Hyun on her own?”

“A mental magic that could lure a cadet? Yeah, that makes sense.”

Shin Jonghak sarcastically remarked. He stared at me with contempt and disdain like I was an insect. As Shin Jonghak said, it wasn't easy to lure a cadet with mental magic. Even if possible, it couldn't have escaped people's suspicion. After all, victims under mental magic moved like puppets or scarecrows. However...

“If it's mental magic, yeah. But...”

It was different if it was love. That was the most significant difference between enchantment and mental magic. Someone who was in love wouldn't realize they were bewitched.

“Screw the useless talk.”

Shin Jonghak cut me off before I could finish my sentence. He kicked an empty chair, which fell towards me.

“As for me...”

Yoo Yeonha smiled and slowly pointed at me. “I'm more suspicious of you.”

“...What?”

My head blanked because it was so sudden. I froze at a loss for words.

“Yoo Yeonha, that's not correct either. Hajin also has an alibi.”

Kim Suho quickly refuted the idea, but Yoo Yeonha rebutted him.

“His alibi is a record of him using the portal. If he's a djinn, tampering with something like that should be easy. Compared to senior Yun Hyun who was with others, that person is much more...”

“Why don't we beat him up first?”

Kim Horak daringly stood up. He looked like a mini ogre as he cracked his knuckles and displayed his muscles.

“I’m sure he’ll sing or transform if he’s beaten. Hey, get up.”

Yoo Yeonha, Kim Horak, Shin Jonghak, and Yi Yeonghan. Everyone other than Kim Suho looked suspiciously at me. I became furious. This had never happened to me before even in a mafia game. So this was what it felt like to be falsely accused. Should I not have brought up Yun Hyun’s name? No, even if I didn’t, this would have happened anyways. Yoo Yeonha must have planned it.

“Jonghak, I can break an arm or two, right?”

The ogre asked for Shin Jonghak’s consent. Before Shin Jonghak could reply, I jumped out of my chair.

“Yeah, come at me, you fat son of a bitch. I’ll drill a hole in your head.”

“...What did you say? Look at this crazy motherfucker.”

Kim Horak raised his voice. I took out my gun from my back pocket, but he only snorted disdainfully.

“Retard, you think that can make me flinch?”

Kim Horak positioned himself to charge forward. I also lowered my center of gravity. I had aether. I could cook up some stupid pig whenever I wanted.

“Stop.”

Kim Suho stepped in between us. He even had his training sword out.

“Now’s not the time for this. Hajin, you calm down too.”

I snapped back to reality, looking at the chilling flash of his sword. Although I grandly shouted, Kim Horak was too strong of an opponent. Don’t get angry. If you get mad, it’s your loss. After telling myself that, I took a deep breath and pointed at Yoo Yeonha.

“You, if you’re doubtful, ask Chae Nayun.”

“...What does Nayun have to do with this?”

I spoke to Yoo Yeonha, but Shin Jonghak reacted sensitively.

“When the djinn attacked her, I was there too. We killed him together. She didn’t tell you yet?”

“...”

I said so as I glared at Yoo Yeonha. She received my look in a perfectly calm manner without a single word.

“Anyways, I made myself clear. The culprit is that piece of shit Yun Hyun.”

After saying that to Yoo Yeonha, the final victim, I turned around.

“Uk.”

In the middle of walking out, I accidentally tripped. My body slipped to the side as a fat boar suddenly flew in and smashed the wall. However, the charge was too quick and dangerous for a boar as a crack appeared on Cube’s reinforced wall.

“Oh? You dodged that?”

Shin Jonghak’s lips twisted up in interest. Kim Horak had tried to tackle me just now. It wouldn’t have ended with just a few broken bones if he had hit.

“You... son of a bitch.”

Kim Horak stood up. For someone who attacked first, he sure was angry. I pointed my gun at him.

“I think I need to teach you a lesson.”

Kim Suho stopped us again, but he did it with action rather than words. Magic power rose from his sword and separated me from Kim Horak.

“If you’re that suspicious, just ask Nayun! Yoo Yeonha!” He shouted at Yoo Yeonha. Kim Suho’s furious look even made the proud Yoo Yeonha shrink.

“...Wait one minute.”

Tsk. Yoo Yeonha clicked her tongue and turned on her smartwatch.

1. Jingu Bang is the magical staff used by Sun Wukong, which can elongate endlessly. 🙌

Chapter 34

Exam Period (2)

Yoo Yeonha called Chae Nayun and asked if what Kim Hajin said was true. Chae Nayun carefully explained what happened, and it was as Kim Hajin had said. She went so far as to make a definitive claim.

“There’s no way Kim Hajin is a djinn,” she said.

They disbanded the meeting as Kim Hajin stomped out while Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan chased after him.

Room 303 became silent as the three remaining people didn’t speak. Yoo Yeonha looked at Kim Horak massaging his right shoulder.

“...Does it hurt?”

“N-No, I’m fine.”

“That was your gift, right?”

Many cadets knew about Kim Horak’s gift. It simply amplified his body’s explosive and destructive power. This brute and straightforward gift was one of the strongest for martial arts. However, Kim Hajin had dodged his attack with movements that were neither flashy nor nimble.

“...”

Kim Horak looked away from Yoo Yeonha’s gaze. He didn’t feel sorry about accusing Kim Hajin, only embarrassed that his attack had been easily avoided.

“Sigh.”

Yoo Yeonha glanced at Shin Jonghak. He stared at his smartwatch. Was he messaging Chae Nayun? Yoo Yeonha worried.

“Jonghak, what are you up to?”

She approached him with an affectionate smile. Shin Jonghak answered without bothering to look at her.

“I’m looking to see if there’s more of an item I bought.”

“Item?”

“Yeah, I bought something.”

“What did you buy?”

Yoo Yeonha pulled on Shin Jonghak’s arm and acted cutely.

“You don’t need to know.”

Shin Jonghak pushed her away. Yoo Yeonha froze at his cold action.

“...Tsk. If we’re done, I’m leaving.”

Shin Jonghak clicked his tongue and stood up. He believed his actions were justified. He had been looking at the famous Violet Banquet website. However, Cube cadets were prohibited from being a member. It wasn’t just Violet Banquet. Any black market ID could result in expulsion. Even so, his indifferent attitude hurt Yoo Yeonha’s feelings.

“Kim Horak, aren’t you coming?”

“Huh? Oh, yeah.”

Kim Horak peeked at Yoo Yeonha, but followed Shin Jonghak like a puppy. She stood alone and looked around the empty room. Suddenly, anger filled her heart. This wasn’t the first time something like this happened. She started to get upset.

Shin Jonghak, you bastard, just which part of Chae Nayun is better than me? Sigh. What can I do? I just have to try harder.

Yoo Yeonha was about to chase after Shin Jonghak, but her smartwatch vibrated. A message came from Yun Hyun.

— There's going to be a preparatory exam next Monday. You're coming, right?

Club activities had paused during exams, but the academic club offered peer tutoring. Yoo Yeonha began typing, but she suddenly remembered what Kim Hajin said. The culprit was Yun Hyun...

“Stupid.”

Yoo Yeonha dismissed it and sent her reply.

I chased away Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan. Then I sat on a bench until 9 P.M. and stared at the night sky in an empty park. Finally, I released the bitterness in my heart.

“...Haa.”

I reflected on what had happened. Not only was I thrown into my novel, I even got into an argument with the characters I created. All sorts of feelings pent up in my heart exploded today. I wanted to just quit and go back to my old, one-room house. I wanted to see my parents, whom I always avoided, saying I was too busy, but now I was full of regrets.

How was time flowing in my old world? If it was the same, I should be a missing person by now. I might even be considered dead. After all, I would have to spend at least 10 years in this world.

I was glad I raised my perseverance stat. In this world, I had nothing. My memories, relationships, feelings, none of them were here. My old self wouldn't have been able to endure it. Even if I didn't commit suicide, I would have given up on returning home. I might have given up being part of the main storyline and lived a normal life.

“Ah, I want to see you, Mom.”

It didn't feel right saying this as a 26 year old man, but my voice trembled from the sincerity in my heart. I hoped she was healthy. I hoped she was getting along with Dad. If time flowed normally in the other world, I hoped they would find out I was missing as late as possible. I didn't want to imagine them sad because of me.

Once I thought along this line, it didn't seem to end. I remembered my friends whom I cursed from time to time for calling me when I was busy, but I missed them, especially today. Even the seniors from college and the army, who liked to mess with me, popped up in my head. Both good and bad connections lit up in my heart like stars.

But it was dark outside, and not even a faint star existed. Dreaming of stars in a starless world only filled me with anguish.

“...Huu.”

I wiped my eyes and stood up. The handgun in my hand still felt cold and heavy.

Thanks to my high perseverance stat, my broken mentality quickly recovered after a day. The weekend flew by after working out, hunting, and buying stocks like usual.

“Exams are next week, starting with written exams. Combat exams will be on the following week. Remember that written exams are just as important as combat exams.”

Today was Monday. The professor purposely spoke in a grave tone. Midterm exams would begin in just a week. I was also a bit apprehensive. I had nothing to worry about for written exams, but my problem was combat exams. In duels, cadets fought in one-on-one battles. In monster wars, they fought illusionary monsters summoned by magicians rather than mana puppets. Cadets never showed mercy in duels to maximize their points, and the summoned monsters were no different than real monsters. I had to prepare myself for the pain of getting cut or having my bones broken.

Setting aside the exams, I couldn't focus in class today because of someone next to me. Rachel always sat by herself in the back, but ever since the results for phenomenon realm analysis came out, she had been moving closer seat by seat, and now she sat next to me. There was still an empty seat between us, but Rachel kept sneaking glances at my notebook. She also wrote something down. Just to be sure, I wrote down a random string of words.

[Yoo Kim Ok Jun Ja Hyuk]

Yoo Okja. Kim Junhyuk. It was my mother's and father's name. I rolled my eyes to the side and observed Rachel. She snuck a glance before quickly jotting something down in her notebook. I could see the words, Yoo Kim Ok Jun Ha Hyuk????

Next, I scribbled a string of numbers next to my parents' names.

[19680529.19660912]

It was my father's and mother's birthday. Rachel also jotted down the numbers. I scribbled the name of the dog I used to have, then iputsmid, which was an anagram for I'm stupid...

The class ended while I messed around with Rachel.

“Good luck with your exams next week. The results will be posted for everyone to see, so don't embarrass yourselves.”

The professor left after reminding the cadets. Chae Nayun's seat became noisy as she had returned from the hospital today. She still had trouble moving and used all sorts of equipment. Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak ran up to her like in the original story.

“What's wrong with you guys. I can move just fine by myself.”

They backed off at her complaint, but hovered around.

“Kim Suho, you should leave.”

“...Why?”

“Can’t you see Nayun is uncomfortable with you around?”

Shin Jonghak provoked Kim Suho as usual, and another girl watched from the side with somewhat lonely eyes. She smiled as though she was fine, but I knew she felt alienated. Yoo Yeonha approached them and spoke.

“Jonghak, Nayun, I’m going first.”

“Yeah.”

Shin Jonghak and Chae Nayun only greeted her out of courtesy. Yoo Yeonha left the classroom biting her lips. I stuffed my laptop and utensils in my bag and walked out the back door. Suddenly, I ran into Yoo Yeonha. She should have left to the dorms, but she went the opposite direction.

“...”

We looked at each other awkwardly.

“Where are you going?” I asked.

“...To the dorm.”

This wasn’t the way to the dorm, but I didn’t want to continue talking.

“I see.”

Yoo Yeonha didn’t say anything more either. She slightly bowed and walked past me.

Yoo Yeonha opened the clubroom door. It looked no different than usual, but the empty room was slightly chilly. The only person inside was Yun Hyun, reading at the podium. Yoo Yeonha tilted her head. Where was everyone else? Yun Hyun noticed her and walked over.

“You’re here?”

“...Yes.”

“Come take a seat.”

Yoo Yeonha sat down for now. Not having anyone else around made her uneasy, but she soon calmed down thanks to Yun Hyun. His scent made her feel cozy.

“Where did everyone go?”

“They’re coming soon. Oh right, Yeonha, I heard you joined the team.”

“Team?”

“You know, the djinn investigation team. I’m in it too as the second year representative.”

Yun Hyun’s voice was clear and firm. At least, that’s how Yoo Yeonha felt.

“Oh really?”

As expected, Kim Hajin’s suspicion was complete nonsense.

“But we haven’t made any progress. Do you guys have any leads? Any suspects?”

“No, not yet.”

“Really? So you guys haven’t made any progress either?”

Yun Hyun asked softly. Yoo Yeonha pondered for a moment at his courteous manner of speech. Progress. There wasn’t any. The meeting disbanded before anything happened.

“Mm... One person did say something, but it was stupid.”

“Stupid? I’m curious what it was.”

Yun Hyun leaned against the desk she sat on and placed down a scented candle.

“What’s this?”

“A scented candle. It’ll help when we’re studying later. Anyways, what did this person say?”

Yun Hyun asked with a kind smile on his face. Yoo Yeonha smelled the scented candle. It was gentle and aromatic. Her body relaxed, and the day’s exhaustion seemed to wear away.

“Tell me.”

Yoo Yeonha smirked. “Some guy said you were a djinn. That you could use some sort of mental magic. Absurd, isn’t it?”

After answering, Yoo Yeonha sniffed the scented candle once more. The wonderful fragrance smelled addicting. She missed Yun Hyun’s face because she was focused on the scented candle.

“...Does he have proof?”

“No...?”

Yoo Yeonha suddenly snapped out of her daze. Tension welled up in her body. She turned towards Yun Hyun and glared at him. Most innocent people wouldn't ask if there was any evidence when being suspected. At least, not as the first question. After all, there couldn't possibly be any evidence against someone who didn't commit a crime.

“Oh, oops, I misspoke. What a funny kid. On what grounds is he calling me a djinn?”

Yun Hyun realized his mistake and quickly corrected himself, but it was too late. Yoo Yeonha retreated, taking out her whip and pointing it at Yun Hyun.

“Who are you?”

“...What's wrong, Yeonha?”

Yun Hyun smiled. The gentle arc in his eyes and lips twisted viciously.

“It's not your turn yet.”

Exam Period (3)

Cadets filled the fitness center because exams started next week. Haaap—! Yaaaap—! Enthusiastic shouts from the sparring rooms pierced through the walls, while magic power created sharp sonic booms. In the physical training room, cadets effortlessly lifted 120kg dumbbells.

I also worked out among such monsters. Admittedly, what I could do was pitiful compared to them, but I sweated out effort in my own way.

Wiiing—

“Uuk.”

I put down the bar using my smartwatch’s vibration as an excuse. Dizziness overcame me. A 130kg bench press was still too much. I wiped my sweat off with a towel around my neck and checked my smartwatch.

[The documents are ready... But are you sure about investing so much money in us?]

It came from Park Soohyuk. Of the 500 million from selling the ginseng, I bought more stocks with half and invested the other half into SH Agency. I knew SH Agency would become just as successful as Packhorse Master.

[Of course. I’ll see you tomorrow.]

[Um... Why us?]

Park Soohyuk was quite confused, but I couldn’t blame him. The current SH Agency was a small company that had yet to accomplish anything.

[It's fun, growing bigger together. Don't you think it'll be nice to see each other grow?]

I wasn't investing in a company, but a person. That was how highly I valued Park Soohyuk. He was a future tycoon, jumping into this business without any connections and achieving the world's most brilliant enterprise.

[Ah... Yes... Then I'll see you tomorrow with all the documents and contracts. Thank you once again.]

[No problem. See you then.]

After ending my conversation with Park Soohyuk, I lay back down on the bench press. Just as I gripped the bar, my smartwatch vibrated once again. Who was it now? When I checked, I couldn't help but furrow my brows. It was Yoo Yeonha.

[9]

I couldn't understand why she suddenly messaged me, but the content seemed even more mysterious. Just a single number. Did she press the wrong button?

"What's up with her?"

Since she didn't say anything else, I ignored it and put my hands back on the bar. Then, putting some strength into my body, I lifted it while breathing. One, two, three, four... nine. Nine. 9. Suddenly, I thought of something.

"...Don't tell me. Is this a rescue signal?"

Yun Hyun had detained Yoo Yeonha in the penthouse of Cube's second year dorm. Not even an elite like Yoo Yeonha could do anything against a djinn favored by Lilith. Yun Hyun had easily subdued Yoo Yeonha before storing her in an extradimensional space and moving her here. He usually hid his tracks, but the CCTV surely caught Yoo Yeonha's struggle. Since he planned to leave Cube after this, he didn't care.

"Oh, this is him? The quick-witted one who said I was a djinn?"

Yun Hyun looked at Yoo Yeonha's smartwatch and grinned. The screen displayed the message Yoo Yeonha had sent Kim Hajin.

"Looks like I'll need to kill him later... Anyways, what's this 9? That's all you sent to ask for help? Who would understand something so cryptic?"

Yun Hyun dropped the smartwatch and easily crushed Cube's expensive device with a stomp.

"Of course, even if he understood what you meant, he wouldn't be able to come here. There's a barrier around this place, you see."

Yoo Yeonha fiercely glared at Yun Hyun while clenching her teeth. He trembled in ecstasy at how she looked.

"Ah, amazing. Those eyes are amazing. It's okay, Yeonha. Soon, you'll come to like me too."

Tap, tap. Yun Hyun slowly approached Yoo Yeonha, who he tied to a chair. She struggled, but the restraint spell prevented her from moving.

"You have beautiful skin."

Yun Hyun placed his hand on her thigh and left a faint handprint on her white skin. Yoo Yeonha teared up at the disgusting sensation that felt like a snake licking her.

"Once is enough. You won't be able to escape afterward. Lilith allowed it too. That's right, Lilith wants you."

Yun Hyun spoke leisurely. The Devil of Enchantment bewitched humans on a fundamental level. Once Yun Hyun had his way, Yoo Yeonha would become a completely different person.

“Yeonha, weren’t you lonely? I know that feeling too.”

Speaking persuasively, Yun Hyun placed his hand on her neck. His breath contained a hypnotic magic power. Yoo Yeonha trembled. No matter how powerful her mental power, she couldn’t resist ecstasy forced by magic power. She would not have hesitated to bite her tongue and end her life if she could.

Yun Hyun caressed Yoo Yeonha’s face and whispered. The magic power of passion flowed into her from his hand. It stimulated many parts of her body and urged her to submit. An intense pleasure akin to euphoria overwhelmed her. In the end, she let out a small moan.

CLANG! A flash of light erupted from the window and a translucent beam of light pierced Yun Hyun.

“...What?”

He fell to his knees at the unexpected attack. As he struggled to comprehend what just happened, an unidentifiable voice rang out from the room.

— Serves you right for not listening and suspecting me.

“...!”

Yoo Yeonha’s eyes widened at the familiar voice. Yun Hyun used this chance to heal his injured leg with magic power, but the extraordinary regenerative power of djinns didn’t activate. Only the pain increased.

— Don’t think about recovering from that wound. I refined that bullet to be a bit more efficient. Unless you undergo surgery to take it out...

“Shut it!” Yun Hyun roared. Red magic power erupted from his body.

His eyes, which turned bloodshot, glanced around the empty room in vain.

“Where are you! Show yourself!”

Yun Hyun swung his magic power around desperately and swept through the surroundings like a storm, but nothing appeared out of the ordinary.

— You can try all you want, but you won’t be able to reach me. I’m far, far away, you see.

“You little rat—!”

As if in response to Yun Hyun’s curse, another bullet shot through the window and pierced his shoulder. Yun Hyun felt rage before the pain.

“You, You—!”

He frantically swung his arms.

“Show yourself—! Show yourself, you son of a bitch—!”

His frenzied cry muddled his speech, and it became harder and harder to tell whether it was a human or an animal crying.

A few more bullets flew in through the window. Yun Hyun erupted in rage. Now, he was no different than a beast.

Yoo Yeonha watched this overwhelming scene in a daze. Setting aside where the bullets came from, how could mere bullets injure a djinn to this degree? She grew curious about this unprecedented power.

— So this is why people enjoy sniping.

With a mocking taunt, another bullet flew in. This time, the bullet hit Yun Hyun’s chest. He collapsed from the shock and began pitifully crawling with his hands. Immediately, bullets pierced his knees and shoulders. The critical blow prevented him from further movement.

“This...”

The bullets all came from the window. Yun Hyun thought he just had to hide, but the cold-hearted sharpshooter showed no mercy. Another white shooting star flew in and pierced his back. Yun Hyun’s hands trembled as his bloodshot eyes swelled.

— So durable... Oy, Yoo Yeonha, I’m about to use up all of the bullets you gave me. If you have a conscience, provide me with better ones.

Yoo Yeonha couldn’t even laugh at the joke. Yun Hyun looked pathetic now as Kim Hajin protected her from a faraway place. She relaxed, knowing she would survive. Drowsiness overwhelmed her as the tension in her body disappeared.

— If you’re tired, just sleep. Kim Suho should be arriving soon.

Before she fell asleep, Yoo Yeonha asked the one question on her mind.

“By the way... Where are you talking from?”

— Above you. I hacked into the ceiling’s speaker.

“...Oh.”

I see... Yoo Yeonha chuckled and closed her eyes.

At first, I thoughtlessly asked the Book of Truth whether Yun Hyun had kidnapped Yoo Yeonha. The Book of Truth answered yes, and I shot up in surprise. The schedule had moved up, and I received a notification about a settings change. Because my novel was for all ages, I made Yun Hyun impotent, but an absurd setting had been added to his genitals...

I alerted Kim Suho, but proceeded on my own since every second counted.

I ran to a mountaintop with a clear view of the second year dorm. Thanks to my increased vitality and stamina, I only needed five minutes to climb the mountain. As a result, I could save Yoo Yeonha before it was too late.

“Thank god I chose to come.”

Just now, Kim Suho barged into Yun Hyun’s penthouse after breaking the barrier. Yun Hyun resisted with little strength, but Kim Suho cut him down with a single slash.

“...But this, it’s better than I expected.”

I admired the giant anti-material sniper rifle in my hands. With a length of 1.5 meters, it flaunted a domineering and beautiful appearance. The gun barrel looked extremely vicious with amplified firepower, but its platinum color and golden patterns exuded a noble aura. I had fused aether with the Desert Eagle and transformed it into this sniper rifle using my SP.

[Sniper rifle mode – transforms into a high-powered sniper rifle when fused with aether.]

Even after adding the restriction that required aether, the modification cost 250 SP. I sniped a target 1.5km away using this anti-material sniper rifle. I shot the enemy from a distance where he couldn’t even see me or attack. It was quite exhilarating.

“I’m sure Kim Suho will take care of the rest.”

I canceled the fusion between aether and Desert Eagle. The 1.5m sniper rifle returned to its handgun form.

[You have obtained 457 SP!] [An incredible luck has been applied. You have obtained an additional 11% as bonus!] [You succeeded in a long range snipe. Proficiency of Master Sharpshooter has increased to grade 7.]

I gained a lot of SP in one day since I completed a major arc.

I sat on the ground and watched what happened far away. Kim Suho put Yoo Yeonha on his back as Cube's heroes rushed into the dorm.

With this, the number of victims had decreased. Although faint, Kim Suho also established a connection with Yoo Yeonha. I was confident he would take care of her as the main character. Things became a bit messy, but the outcome satisfied me.

Chapter 36

Exam Period (4)

Yoo Yeonha opened her eyes to a white ceiling and the sound of something being cut. She turned and saw Kim Suho slicing an apple with a fruit knife.

“...What are you doing here?”

Yoo Yeonha asked dumbfoundedly. Kim Suho glanced at Yoo Yeonha before smiling bashfully.

“You’re awake? It doesn’t hurt anywhere, right?”

“...I’m fine.”

“The doctor said there’s nothing wrong with your body.”

Yoo Yeonha sat up. She felt slightly stiff and sore, but could still move.

“What I want to know is why you’re here.”

“We’re taking turns nursing you. Me, Nayun, Shin Jonghak, and Kim Horak.”

“Why?”

Yoo Yeonha asked, genuinely curious.

“Well, it’s kind of our fault...”

“...Huh?”

Yoo Yeonha pondered Kim Suho's incomprehensible words. How was it their fault? She couldn't understand after contemplating what had happened. Did they do something I didn't know about? Yoo Yeonha glared at Kim Suho and demanded an explanation.

"As members of the same team, we should have been more careful. Unfortunately, we were too absorbed in caring for Nayun that we neglected you..."

The sheer stupidity of Kim Suho's statement astonished Yoo Yeonha. It wasn't like they could have known she would get attacked. The investigation team only met twice, and a huge argument occurred in the second meeting.

"...Sorry."

"Pfft."

Yoo Yeonha chuckled at Kim Suho's apology. If anything, she realized he was stupidly kind.

"You don't need to be sorry. I got what I deserved."

Kim Suho scratched his neck and gave Yoo Yeonha a plate of sliced apples shaped like rabbits. She subconsciously smiled. Naturally, she liked cute things like any other girl.

"They look cute."

"Thanks."

Kim Suho laughed innocently. His handsome face seemed to shine. Yoo Yeonha stared at him before suddenly remembering something.

"...Oh right, um, did that person come?"

"That person?"

Kim Hajin. Yoo Yeonha couldn't say his name. She still had a conscience and didn't expect him to visit after what she had done.

“No, never mind.”

She looked outside the window and didn't see a cluster of clouds in the East Sea's blue sky. The world appeared exceptionally bright under beaming sunlight.

Yoo Yeonha fell in thought at this dazzling scenery. She had learned many things. Of course, her 17 year old personality wouldn't entirely change with just this one incident. Tomorrow's Yoo Yeonha might not be too different than today's, but she undoubtedly felt many things from the bottom of her heart. She wasn't sure whether it was self-reflection, introspection, or just plain gratefulness. Before writing everything down in her diary, she picked up her smartwatch. She still needed to do something.

I received a message.

[Thank you. I'll repay today's debts for sure.]

It came from Yoo Yeonha. I smiled as I saw her name and read the message. I wanted to say something cool, but the person in front of me asked for another affirmation.

“Um... So I can just take this money? Really?”

I stared at him. Park Soohyuk had been like this for a while now. I lost count of how many times he asked if this was real. Haa. I couldn't help but sigh. It was my money, so why was he so hesitant? Just buy a HUV (hunter utility vehicle) and a proper magic pouch!

“Yes, yes, yes. Please take it! Please!”

I stood up and bowed at a 90-degree angle.

“Please take it!”

“Ah, um, I—”

“Do I need to kowtow? I’ll do it!”

“No, no! I’ll take it! Thank you so much for investing in SH Agency!”

He finally put the signed documents in his suitcase. How did this easygoing person become the world’s greatest agent? I created this setting, but couldn’t understand it.

“By the way, how old are you?”

“I’m 29.”

“Ah, you’re more than a decade older. You don’t have to talk so formally.”

Talking casually would be better for our relationship.

“How can I do such a thing to an investor...”

“Don’t think of me as an investor. Think of me as a business partner. You know, like we’re building SH Agency together.”

“But still...”

“Don’t worry. I’m fine with it.”

“But...”

A back and forth argument went on about talking formally or casually. Eventually, Park Soohyuk submitted.

“Okay... I won’t talk so formally then.”

“Good.”

I got up.

“Then let’s go hunt. We’ll stop at just two for today.”

“Alright, this hyung ^[1] will support you from the back.”

Park Soohyuk laughed as we left the coffee shop. We planned to head out to the field, but I spotted a convenience store.

“Um, Soohyuk hyung?”

I suggested talking casually, but I felt somewhat shy now.

“Hm? What’s up?”

“We should buy a lottery ticket.”

I pointed at the poster that said [lottery tickets for sale]. Honestly, this was the first method I thought of to make money with my absurd luck. I hadn’t been able to until now because I was a minor without a guardian.

“Come on. Lottery tickets are a waste of money. You might be too young to understand, but the lottery is a scam.”

“It’s not a scam. I have good luck, so I’ll probably win something. I’ll invest what I win into SH Agency, so give it a try.”

“No, I’m telling you it’s a scam...”

“Just follow me.”

I dragged Park Soohyuk to the convenience store. I grabbed ten instant lottery tickets from the counter. The clerk didn’t even ask for ID because of Park Soohyuk’s older face. After buying the tickets, we went to a nearby table.

“I need something to scratch them with.”

“Oh, here’s a coin.”

Even though he said lottery tickets were a scam, he gave me a coin with anticipating eyes.

“I’ll start then.”

Shashak. I started scratching the silver foils on the ticket. The first was a failure. Immediately, I moved on to the second. Then the third.

“Yaaawn.”

Park Soohyuk had already lost interest. Unperturbed, I continued scratching. Fourth, fifth, sixth... While Park Soohyuk walked around the cup ramen aisle, I scratched the tenth ticket.

“Oh, finally.”

“You won? How much?”

Park Soohyuk casually asked after picking up a cup ramen.

“20 million won.”

“Oh, nice.”

Park Soohyuk started walking towards the counter before stopping and tilting his head. Did I mishear that? Murmuring so, he turned towards me.

“...Can you repeat that?”

“I won 20 million won. Looks like winning the first place jackpot is asking for too much.”

First place was 100 million won. I showed Park Soohyuk the lottery ticket. His jaws dropped.

“W-What, is, is this real?”

“It’s real, so take it.”

I handed him the ticket.

“W-Why are you giving this to me?”

“I’m still a minor, so I can’t claim the money. You can take it as an additional investment, so send me a modified contract.”

Park Soohyuk stared at me in shock. His gaping mouth didn’t seem to close. The cup ramen could probably fit in it.

“Take it.”

“Oh, yeah.”

Park Soohyuk quickly put the lottery ticket in his pocket. Then he looked around and began to sweat as though he had committed a crime.

“You can put your guard down. No one is going to steal it. “

“No, you don’t understand how scary the world can be...”

Moonlight shone through a broken window and lit up dusty ruins. Only vines and mosses lived in this desolate place.

This abandoned factory in Suwon served as the Chameleon Troupe’s temporary base.

— Boss.

A voice rang out in the empty space. The call woke an existence sleeping in the darkness.

— You’re awake?

The existence slowly opened its beautiful yet threatening eyes.

— Those bastards started moving. They just listed themselves as Packhorse Master on the stock market.

The voice relayed the information.

“Understood.”

The existence briefly replied in a dull voice.

— What should we do next?

It put off answering the question and slowly raised its body. Meanwhile, a full moon appeared from behind the clouds. The bright moonlight shone through the window and lit up the existence’s body.

— That aside, Boss is beautiful as always.

She had a graceful figure with long black hair seemingly weaved out of shadows, full pink lips, and smooth white skin. A woman who seemed to be the manifestation of modern beauty spoke without the slightest change in her expression.

“Do you have a death wish?”

Dark blue magic power crackled from her hands.

— I’m kidding, but it’s not like I can say Boss is ugly. Forgive me.

The magic power akin to an erupting volcano calmed down.

— Anyways, what are we going to do? Packhorse Master is making its move.

“We will only steal. We don’t care about anything else.”

She answered apathetically, but her command was clear.

— Oh, by the way, someone is buying Packhorse Master’s stocks en masse.

“Stocks?”

— Yep. I thought it was just a small investor with 3 million won at first, then another 10 million, but he suddenly threw in 250 million won on top of that. A small investor wouldn’t randomly do that.

“Coincidence?”

— Mm... 95%, I’d say. But Boss, I’m concerned with the other 5%. There’s no reason to buy this stock. Packhorse Master doesn’t even have a guild page yet.

The guild stock market posed much more risks than the regular stock market. Few investors would support new guilds without accurate information, and no one would have information on Packhorse Master.

“Don’t mind it. We only have one job.”

— Mmm... If you say so. I’ll tell the troupe members.

“Un.”

With that, the voice disappeared. Then it quickly came back.

— Oh right, a few exciting pages appeared on Violet Banquet.

The woman tilted her head.

— Artifact Search Corp, Jonggak's Dog Meat Soup, and Truth Agency.

“Are they of any use?”

— The first two are slowly building their reputation, but I don’t know about Truth Agency. I just included it because of how confidently it introduced itself. Since it’s boasting on Violet Banquet, I’m sure it has some skill.

“Take it out.”

— Come on. You know how things are. It wasn't just once or twice we hit the jackpot with ordinary pages. I'll give you the page number later, so take a look. It says it'll answer any question. Who knows? Maybe it can help us find that son of a bitch.

However, the woman remained uninterested.

“That doesn't happen often.”

— Still. Alright, I'm going. See you later, Boss.

The conversation ended, but the voice came back once again.

— Oh, one more thing, Boss.

“...”

Veins popped out on the woman's white forehead.

“What now?”

— Cube's exams start next week. You'll go watch, right?

Huuu. The woman sighed before replying.

“Yeah, I will.”

Chapter 37

Intruders (1)

The sound of scribbling pencils filled the classroom on Thursday. Every cadet worked hard to prepare for the exam in four days.

“Argh... I want to play soccer or something.”

Of course, at least one cadet hated studying. Chae Nayun’s entire body expressed her boredom.

“My body’s healed, but I can’t move.”

The news reported this week’s incident worldwide, and combat training was canceled because Cube’s executives were under investigation. As a result, we only had review and theory classes until the exams. It must be like hell for Chae Nayun.

“Exams are next week. Study hard, or you’ll regret it when the results come out.”

Kim Suho spoke with a laugh next to her. As the diligent protagonist, Kim Suho was also good at written exams, but not enough to contend for the top ranks, so he asked Yoo Yeonha whenever he had any questions.

“Um, Yeonha, can you tell me how to solve this?”

Yoo Yeonha glanced at the problem Kim Suho showed her.

“...Can you not forget my last name?”

“Oh, yeah, sorry.”

I yawned as I watched them. Then someone poked my shoulder. I tilted my head towards Rachel as she handed me a piece of paper. It was another complex problem. Rachel started asking me for help on problems like these, but I hadn't even heard her voice.

[Suppose the dungeon boss is a high-intermediate rank, grade 3 demi-devil. It is a stage dungeon, and each stage consists of a minimum of 10 and a maximum of 30 low rank and intermediate rank monsters. Assuming this dungeon is medium-small, find the minimum and maximum mana density, and approximate the number of people needed to conquer this dungeon.]

I had no clue. Was this going to be on the exam? I glanced at Rachel. She tapped on the desk while staring at me. I should probably answer the question using my gift. Observation and Reading should be able to solve this problem as long as it followed the world design I created.

[A high-intermediate rank, grade 3 demi-devil has a minimum magic power capacity of... medium-small stages have four to six floors... 878ppm-1133ppm. Nine people can use and recharge magic power without being overburdened.]

I wrote down the sentences that popped up in front of me on a piece of paper and handed it to Rachel. Immediately, her eyes widened. She buried her face in the paper and carefully scrutinized every calculation.

Ding dong—

The bell rang as class ended, but few cadets rose from their seats since it was just a self-study class. They all continued studying hard. Of course, I planned on returning to the dorm. That's just what intelligent students did. A shadow loomed over my desk as I packed my utensils and laptop. I raised my head curiously at Chae Nayun.

"Hey, help me study."

She spoke with a sweet smile as I stood up to leave.

"...I don't want to."

"What? Why?"

Written exams began next Monday. That was less than four days, so her grades wouldn't change much. Not to mention, I had no way of helping her study.

“H-Hey! Um, please! How about a study guide on phenomenon realm analysis?”

She sounded desperate, but I cold-heartedly left.

The written exams flew by like a breeze. From the first exam on Monday to the final exam on Friday, time quickly passed. I felt like I got everything correct. At first, I thought about aiming for an average score, but since I might score near the bottom for combat exams, I did my best not to get held back.

Today was Saturday, and combat exams would begin on Monday. During combat exams, Cube opened up to cadets' families, various hero associates, and every institution that hired heroes. Naturally, Cube bustled with people.

“Oh, it’s Cube’s rank 117, Kim Junha! I saw you on YouTube. My son is a fan. Can we take a photo?”

The combat exams felt like a festival because of all the people. I found it odd that teenagers fighting each other was considered a festival, but this was Cube’s tradition.

“We are in Cube, the world’s best hero academy...”

Reporters also came in from approved broadcasting companies. Since heroes were like celebrities, they should also become familiar with cameras.

“There sure are a lot of people.”

I sat in Hero Park, located in the center of Cube. The place boomed with people like Disneyland.

“Ah! Hajin!”

Someone called my name. Tap tap. I turned in the direction of the footsteps. It was Hazuki.

“Hajin, what are you doing here?”

“Oh... Just taking a break. Who are the two behind you?”

“My parents. This is my mom, and this is my dad. Mom, Dad, this is my teammate.”

“H-Hello.”

I shook hands with Hazuki’s parents. They smiled and said something in Japanese. Since I couldn’t understand, I just smiled.

“Hajin. His name is Kim Hajin.”

Hazuki introduced me to her parents as they asked for my name. After Hazuki told them, they grabbed my hands. “Hajin-san, Hajin-san.” I didn’t know what they said, so I replied, “hai, hai.”

After the greetings ended, Hazuki left with her parents. Once again, I sat alone on the bench. I couldn’t help but feel jealous.

Huuu. If only my parents were in this world too...

As I wishfully thought, a particular person caught my eyes.

A woman slowly walked through the crowded park. Her long black hair flowed like shadows, and her eyes shone like obsidian. She seemed tired, but held a certain melancholic charm that darkened her surroundings.

I felt like I knew her. She was exactly as I described in my novel. One of the few wanted criminals on the Hero Association’s blacklist, the leader of the Chameleon Troupe, and the person who inherited the title, Yasha of the Eight Legions. She disguised herself with countless identities, but I was the only one who knew her real name.

She suddenly paused and turned her head to meet my eyes. I looked away, but my body froze. Her eyes seemed to strangle me. I felt out of breath and broke out in cold sweat.

“...”

When my mind almost turned blank, she turned away. Clack, clack. Her high heels rang out as she walked off.

“Haa... Haa...”

I collected my breath after the immense pressure.

Suddenly, I felt her gaze on me again even though her back faced me. My instincts roared. I had to say something to explain why I stared at her...

With a gulp, I muttered, “Wow, she’s so hot.”

She slightly tilted her head, but continued walking away.

“Whew.”

I let out a sigh of relief. I beat my stifled chest and put my hands over my hot face.

I almost forgot. The Chameleon Troupe would sneak into Cube during combat exams to scout anyone worthy of filling their vacant position. In the original story, they targeted Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak, but disqualified Kim Suho because of his beliefs. They would return peacefully with Shin Jonghak in mind and wouldn’t cause any trouble.

However, heroes from the association currently patrolled Cube.

“I’m looking around constantly, but everything’s normal,” Oh Junhyuk reported. He was a high rank, grade 6 hero with a world rank of 1737.

“Just focus.” The high rank, grade 7 hero Seo Youngji responded. Seo Youngji also held a world rank of 2000.

Several heroes in disguise acted as security because of the incident with Yun Hyun before the combat exams. The Hero Association had also dispatched them to investigate.

“Let’s eat pizza.”

“Shut it. Just keep your eyes out for anyone suspicious.”

If the Chameleon Troupe clashed with them, it wouldn’t end with just one or two dead.

Clack, clack. A woman stopped in an artificial forest. After confirming that no one watched her, she murmured, “Someone saw me.”

The forest was empty, without a shadow of a person. However, a strange voice came from the ground.

— Really? Maybe you were mistaken.

“No, he said I was hot.”

— Pfft. Well, did you like it, Boss?

“Do you want to die?”

— Check again. Maybe the necklace isn’t working.

A full-body mirror rose from the ground. She looked at her reflection and the Siren’s Necklace around her neck, an item that prevented people from recognizing her.

“The necklace is working fine.”

— Really? So someone saw through the necklace? He must have good perception. I’ll keep an eye out. Do you remember his name and face?

“Stop joking. You saw him too.”

— Huhu, I know, I know. I’m already looking into it. Wait just a bit.

Tadak, takdak. A keyboard typed away. The woman closed her eyes and waited for the report.

Chapter 38

Intruders (2)

— There's nothing special about him.

The voice answered after ten minutes. The woman smacked her lips when she was dissatisfied.

— Really. He's an orphan without parents or relatives. The orphanage held an examination for potential heroes, and the Military Agent Academy admitted him at the age of 6. He never stood out with a below-average rank before Cube. He also has a 300 million won debt. That's about it.

“...”

Then how did he notice me? The Siren's Necklace was a mythical grade accessory with perception distortion, among many other abilities. Named after the half-human half-bird creature from Greek mythology, it was impossible to see through without exceptional perception and eyesight.

— Do you still have doubts? I can put his name down in the notebook if you want.

“...No.”

The woman shook her head.

“We still have many chances. We can write his name down after finding out more about him.”

“Oh, Boss, you were here.”

An imposing voice resounded. The woman turned and saw a huge man smiling viciously.

It was a bit funny seeing him call her Boss when she didn’t even reach his shoulders. However, the man treated her with great respect.

“This place is filled with powerful heroes.”

Click, click. The man clenched and unclenched his gauntlets.

“Take it off. We didn’t come here to cause trouble.”

At the woman’s command, the man’s black gauntlets scattered into dust. He scratched his neck in silence while she coldly glared at him.

“W-What?” Startled, the man asked.

— The report.

The mysterious voice asked instead of Boss.

“Oh, right. There’s nothing to report. I can pop everyone’s head with the flick of a finger.”

— Idiot. That’s obvious. I’m talking about their future potential.

The man rubbed his chin.

“Hmm... I’m not sure. I went to watch the second year’s rank 1 cadet, but he wasn’t anything special.”

— You should be watching the first years. They said this year’s freshmen were exceptional, so look again. Oh, Boss, I have something to do now, so I’ll talk to you later.

“Yeah, screw off.”

— You shut up.

The voice disappeared, and the man smiled as he stared at the woman.

“Boss, I don’t think there are any good saplings. What do we do? Since we’re here, can’t we fight these self-proclaimed heroes?”

The man couldn’t hold back his desire to fight. He flaunted his battle spirit by releasing his magic power, which fluttered in the air. Although it was careless and a keen hero could notice, the woman watched apathetically.

“...Gyeong.”

“Mmm?”

“Let’s test something.”

She imbued magic power into the necklace, and it changed color from gold to blue.

“How is it? Can you see me?”

“Oh, is that the treasure you got before? I can see a faint silhouette, but not your face. Ah, I have to focus. Even though you’re not moving, I keep losing sight of you. Ah, you just fused with the tree, Boss!”

“...”

As expected, the necklace worked fine. Although the man was a muscle-brained brute, he still had a high perception that matched his skills. Even he couldn’t see her, so how did a mere cadet do so?

“Oh, dang. I can’t tell where you are now, Boss. Let me borrow that too. I’m way too noticeable because of my large body. If there’s someone I wanted to kill...”

“We’re done here. Go.”

The woman cut off his chatter.

“Make sure you complete your mission.”

“Yes, Boss.”

He turned around without a fuss as she watched him walk away. His bulky back, mountainous shoulders, and flawlessly refined physique definitely stood out. He was an irregular who inherited the old Martial God’s spirit and vigor.

— Cheok Jungyeong wasn’t always that stupid, right Boss?

His name was Cheok Jungyeong. Through enlightenment and inheritance, he awakened his past life as Korea’s strongest swordsman who commanded the country’s fate.

The weekend passed, and combat exams began. Monday’s exam was a duel. Cadets could nominate other cadets to fight. Each cadet had 3 nominations, and a nominated cadet couldn’t refuse.

Although it might seem like the strong would bully the weak, Cube wasn’t that stupid. They designed the exam to be fair and gave bonus points based on differences in rankings. For example, if the rank 1 Kim Suho fought a bottom-ranked cadet, he would receive negative points even if he won, while the bottom-ranked cadet would gain points even if he lost.

Furthermore, an ungraded element called fame encouraged cadets to challenge stronger opponents. Thousands of cadets fought in numerous duel arenas under limited time. Naturally, scouts from multiple countries and guilds spectated the high ranking cadets, so low ranking cadets could also appeal to these scouts by challenging up the ranks.

“...I knew this would happen.”

Even with this mechanism that encouraged fairness and challenge, the rank 18 cadet nominated me.

[Duel 1] [Rank 18 Kim Horak vs. Rank 934 Kim Hajin]

If Kim Horak won, he wouldn't gain more than three points. In a fight between rank 934 and rank 18, this muscle-brained buffoon would obviously win.

"Well, what can I do." He wanted to beat me up.

I put my laptop in my cross bag and left the dorm. The scenery outside felt heartwarming with a flowery scent in the wind.

"Yunseok, say cheese! Wow, isn't that Kim Suho? O-Oppa, are you friends with him!? I want to take a picture with him!"

Cadets went about with their families. Since last Friday, their families stayed with them in the same dorm room. I walked alone, watching other cadets laugh and joke with their families.

"Where are you going?"

Someone scurried next to me like a cat. I paused and turned.

"To the duel arena."

"Oh right, Horak nominated you." Yoo Yeonha feigned ignorance.

"...Is there something you want to say?"

"I tried to stop him, but he insisted on fighting you. I had no choice."

"Oh, I see."

I continued walking. Yoo Yeonha followed me, then suddenly backed off. She didn't want a camera to record us together. Once the camera disappeared, she came back.

“Oh, also...”

Tak. She snapped her fingers. A tall man walked up and handed her a suitcase.

“Here are 100 pinnacle grade bullets. If you need more, just tell me. Of course, you can also ask for any defensive equipment.”

“Oh?”

Yoo Yeonha suddenly pulled the suitcase back when I was about to take it.

“But don’t misunderstand. This isn’t payment for saving my life.”

“Huh?” I was confused.

Yoo Yeonha stuttered somewhat bashfully.

“T-This is... just a present.”

“Yeah, I get it, so give it here.”

I snatched the suitcase.

“Also, they're asking for my testimony.”

“Hmm?”

“For the djinn incident.”

“Oh yeah, what about it?”

“They want me to testify, but I’ve been delaying it since it looked like you wanted to hide your power.”

So she purposely didn’t report that I sniped the djinn.

“...Then keep doing that.”

Yun Hyun contracted with an especially dangerous devil. Lilith's djinns were all ill-natured and heinous, so things could get problematic if they found out I killed Yun Hyun.

“Understood. Ah, by the way, will Horak win?”

Her question had a strange connotation. It sounded like she was asking if I would lose on purpose. I couldn't win even if I wanted to.

“Then I'm off.”

Before I could reply, Yoo Yeonha left. Was there another camera? A group of reporters noticed Yoo Yeonha and ran towards her.

* * *

I arrived at the second duel arena. It was only eight in the morning, but the place bustled with people. Numerous reporters filmed with cameras and microphones.

Coincidentally, a nearby reporter explained why.

“Today, Kim Suho, Chae Nayun, and Kim Horak are scheduled to duel from 9 A.M. to 11 A.M.”

I maneuvered through the crowd and proceeded towards the arena. Suddenly, a man in an official Cube uniform stopped me. I asked, somewhat disgruntled.

“I'm wearing a cadet uniform, can't you see?”

“Haha, it's not that. Cadets need to go that way.”

The man pointed at a pathway next to the main entrance.

“Oh, thank you.”

I walked through and arrived at my assigned waiting room.

[Waiting Room 5]

This room should be full of extras like me. People like Kim Suho and Chae Nayun resided in waiting room 1, closest to the reporters.

I opened the door, and the 30-40 cadets talking among themselves suddenly turned quiet. They all stared at me for about three seconds before resuming their previous activities.

I walked in and sat down on a random seat.

“I heard Kim Horak nominated you.”

As I rested, a stranger struck up a conversation. His face looked somewhat familiar, probably someone from my class. I nodded without replying.

“Damn, Kim Horak must have you marked. You shouldn’t have shown off so much.”

“...”

I wanted to say something but gave up. Instead, I murmured inwardly.

Unlike you guys, I get stronger by showing off.

“Oh right, why do you keep leaving Cube? Are you really throwing money away in cabaret clubs and brothels?”

It seemed these rumors still went around. I shook my head silently.

“No way, you do?”

Somehow, he interpreted my gesture however he wanted. I opened my mouth without a choice.

“No. Even if I wanted to, I don’t have the money.”

Chapter 39

Intruders (3)

Cube designed the duel arena as a miniature version of the Roman Colosseum. The central stage was slightly bigger than a soccer field with about 5000 seats circling around. Ten minutes before the start, guests filled in all the seats.

“How did you get such nice seats?”

The high rank hero, Oh Junhyuk, asked in surprise as he handed Seo Youngji a hotdog. She had grabbed front-row seats with the best view.

“You tell me to focus, but you come here first thing in the morning to grab the best seats...”

“Shut up and sit down.”

Oh Junhyuk snickered and sat next to her. “Wow, it sure brings back memories, doesn’t it?”

“You must mean bad memories. I remember you got beaten up so bad you couldn’t even watch mixed martial arts anymore.”

“...I’ve gotten better because it’s always on TV. My son loves it too.”

Mixed martial arts was one of the most popular sports, especially among kids. It featured one-on-one and team battles between superhumans. Naturally, the fights looked flashy with magic power explosions and strikes cutting things in half. The mighty display motivated children to pursue strength.

“Really? That’s nice to hear.”

“Nice to hear? Please, the world must be coming to an end. Djinnns are more active than ever, but a sports star is ranked third in career choices. They'd rather go into sports than join a guild."

"I don't see what's wrong with that."

"You don't see what's wrong? Because of people like you, the association is pitiful."

Suddenly, Oh Junhyuk felt an extremely battle-thirsty gaze.

"...Who's that guy?"

He stared at the seat on the opposite side of the arena. A menacing man smiled with his teeth out at Oh Junhyuk and Seo Youngji.

"He's been doing that for a while. Must be a fan."

"A fan? He can see through our disguise?" Oh Juhyuk was surprised.

"I guess so. Ah, it's starting."

The host announced the start of the duels, and Seo Youngji took out her laptop.

"Typical associate executive... Alright, who should I be looking out for?"

"Kim Suho and Chae Nayun. They're at the top of their class. And I guess Yi Yeonghan and Kim Horak too."

"Oh! Two of the top 6 are here? Who are they fighting?"

Kim Suho and Chae Nayun were well-known in the association. Even Oh Junhyuk, who didn't care about duels, showed interest.

"Kim Suho is fighting Yi Yeonghan. Chae Nayun is fighting Joseph. And Kim Horak is fighting Kim Hajin."

"Other than Kim Horak, most of them chose appropriate opponents.

So, who's Kim Hajin?"

"Kim Hajin, rank 934"

"...Rank 934? Isn't that too low? Is there anything special about him?"

Seo Youngji pushed up her glasses.

"I heard some bad rumors. My cousin in Cube told me he's quite distasteful."

"Ah, so Kim Horak's punishing a delinquent. I see. Who would have thought Kim Horak had a sense of justice? He's sacrificing his grade too..."

Tak. Seo Youngji closed her laptop.

"It's starting."

"...Tsk."

Oh Junhyuk crossed his arms and leaned back into his seat.

— The first duel is between rank 18, Kim Horak, and rank 934, Kim Hajin! How will Kim Hajin overcome the difference in their rank? Why did Kim Horak nominate such a low ranked cadet?

The host tried his best to hype up the match, which had an obvious winner. A mana barrier rose around the arena to prevent attacks from leaking out.

"That must be him."

"Yep."

Oh Junhyuk looked at the cadet walking out from the right passageway. He looked... average. So average that Oh Junhyuk wouldn't remember his face the next day.

Cadets couldn't use their personal weapons, so scouts could accurately assess their abilities. I couldn't use the Desert Eagle, and I wanted to hide aether if possible.

I only had the training handgun and protective armor provided by Cube. My chances of beating Kim Horak were slim to none, but that didn't mean I planned on losing one-sidedly, especially against that bastard.

"Let's go."

"...Yes."

I followed the staff up the stage. First, I took a good look around the arena. A translucent mana barrier surrounded it, with thousands of spectators looking down. I felt indescribable pressure and excitement. As I shook from this strange sensation, Kim Horak walked up from the other side.

"Oh, Kim Horak."

I smiled and waved my hand.

"How did you do on your written exams?"

I provoked him, but Kim Horak silently equipped his gauntlets. I held up my handgun. Our physical stats differed by at least 4 points, which was the difference between an ordinary human and an adult elephant. He would snap my body in half the moment he closed in.

"Let's take it easy, alright?"

— Counting down! Three!

The host must have thought we were ready as he counted down.

Crack— Crack— I could hear Kim Horak cracking his knuckles.

— Two!

His magic power ignited and covered the surface of his body. The layer of magic power around him was a technique called qi reinforcement. Kim Horak was still inexperienced, but my bullets wouldn't be able to penetrate his incomplete qi reinforcement.

— One!

He leaned forward, and he dug his feet into the ground. Currently, we were 150 meters apart. Kim Horak could easily close that distance in just three seconds, but I didn't come unprepared.

— Start!

Immediately, he charged forward like a beast. My sense of time slowed as I activated Bullet Time.

I released stigma's magic power, which flowed into my handgun and adhered to a bullet. With stigma's magic power, the bullet carried the special property of anti-magic I set beforehand. When it clashed with reinforced magic power, it would shatter it instantly.

“Sigh.”

I used half of stigma's magic power, but it was worth it. I pulled the trigger at the wild boar who didn't even bother to dodge. In his mind, my shots couldn't hurt him.

Clang—

When my bullet clashed with his qi reinforcement, a strange explosion occurred. The blast shattered his qi reinforcement like a glass window. Now he was nothing but a target as I freely pulled the trigger.

Kim Horak jumped to the side to circle around, but I followed his movement and shot accordingly. He helplessly backed off at the barrage of gunshots. I continuously pulled the trigger after him. He held on, jumping, rolling to the side, and lifting the arena's tile as a shield.

“...Hmm.”

I paused and rubbed my chin as I stared at him. A blue aura rose from his body once again. His qi reinforcement had regenerated, but qi reinforcement wasn't a technique that could be used repeatedly. It was thinner than the first and was probably his final one.

“Huuu.”

He licked his dried lips and charged at me once again. This time, his movements became quite complex. Like a crab, he zigzagged while steadily moving forward without a set pattern. I could no longer shoot because he moved faster than my bullets.

However, I had prepared for this. I took a dagger from my belt and tethered the blade to stigma's magic power. Then, I lightly threw it as Master Sharpshooter also applied to throwing. The dagger flew forward like a boomerang, but it had no special power and wouldn't even scratch his qi reinforcement.

“Fuck!”

Kim Horak didn't know that. He would think the dagger was special like my first bullet and couldn't help but be suspicious.

Kim Horak hopped to the side to dodge the dagger. I pulled on the string of magic power connected to the dagger and changed its trajectory. The dagger turned at a ninety-degree angle and chased after him. Judging by his surprise, he must've thought, This dagger is definitely special.

However, Kim Horak didn't dodge the dagger because it wasn't as fast as a bullet. He attempted to grab it and succeeded with incredible hand-eye coordination. But as he caught it, he stopped moving. I fired a bullet that penetrated his qi reinforcement.

“Uk!”

The bullet shattered his magic power as he staggered, and I retrieved the dagger. Now, Kim Horak was completely open. What would he do next?

“...Damn it!”

As expected, he recklessly rushed in. He didn't back off or move to the side. He simply charged forward while taking all my bullets. Right arm, left arm, right thigh, left calf... He held on even after I shot him in multiple places.

“Huaaaap—!”

After finally closing in, he swung his fist. I tumbled back to dodge, and Kim Horak chased after me. Eventually, I arrived at a dead end with the wall behind me, but I quickly climbed up the wall with parkour before Kim Horak could celebrate. My hands and feet adhered to it like magnets, and I continued to fire from a distance that Kim Horak could never reach.

“Hey! You fuck, this is cheating!”

Exactly as I had planned, I shot his legs. Kim Horak wouldn't have enough strength to jump this high.

Now, I one-sidedly attacked him. Kim Horak constantly moved, hoping to dodge, but even a single hit caused him pain. Thigh, shoulder, foot... His injuries piled up, and Kim Horak gradually slowed to a halt.

I aimed at his stomach for the final attack. Every cadet had a device around their stomach that would end the duel if a critical injury hit.

Click—

“...?”

No bullet came out. I rummaged through my pockets, but I had no ammunition left.

“Ah.”

I brought 240 bullets, but I used them all. I jumped down with no other options. I also exhausted stigma's magic power and only had my daggers left. All I needed to do was stab Kim Horak's stomach, but it didn't seem like he would surrender.

"Huu... Huu..."

He glared at me with ferocious killing intent. He would undoubtedly rip me to shreds if I got close. One of his arms was still uninjured. I looked around, but the excited crowd had grown eerily quiet as though I was in a library.

"Mmm..."

This was good enough payback. Kim Horak couldn't hit me once as I continuously pummeled him. Not to mention, my score would go up even if I lost. I sneered at him and raised my hand. Then I spoke.

"I surrender."

Hweee—

The referee blew his whistle as the mana barrier around the arena disappeared. I walked away while leisurely whistling.

Chapter 40

Intruders (4)

The duel ended after about eight minutes. Neither fast nor slow, the result was as expected, but no one could have predicted what just occurred. The audience remained dead silent.

“How terrifying. Those were real bullets, right?”

Oh Junhyuk looked down at Kim Hajin walking back to the waiting room.

Seo Youngji nodded.

“But he doesn’t look hurt at all, even though he looks like a beehive.”

He pointed to Kim Horak, whose body was full of bullets. The protective armor covered his vital points and he didn’t bleed much or seem to be in pain.

“For martial artists, their bodies are their weapons. Recovery is their specialty.”

“So, what did you think?”

“Kim Hajin did well, but Kim Horak was too reckless. Kim Horak showed off and lost. If he took it slow... Well, I guess the result would have been the same.”

Honestly, Kim Horak didn’t need to use qi reinforcement. Instead, he could have simply imbued his gauntlets with magic power and slowly overwhelmed Kim Hajin.

“I guess it was Kim Hajin’s tactical victory. He still lost though.”

Oh Junhyuk scratched the back of his neck. He wasn’t sure how to feel since Kim Hajin surrendered a won fight.

“It leaves a bad aftertaste,” Seo Youngji murmured with a frown. Her laptop displayed a picture of Kim Hajin as she wrote a report.

“What, that he lost on purpose?”

“No, Kim Hajin put up a good fight, but I understand his loss.”

“...Really?”

Oh Junhyuk looked at Kim Horak being treated in the arena. No, it couldn’t even be called treatment. Kim Horak simply drank a high rank potion, and the bullets popped out of his muscles after he flexed. His expression contained both anger and relief at the results.

“At first... no, from the start until the end, Kim Hajin overwhelmed him. His initial reaction speed and dynamic vision honestly surprised me. His firing speed was unbelievable too.”

“I agree. His firing speed was something else.”

“However, he slowed down just as much as Kim Horak, even though he never got injured. I think Kim Hajin can’t maintain that movement for long.”

Tak tak tak. Seo Youngji spoke as she tapped on the keyboard.

“And before Kim Hajin surrendered, he tried to finish off Kim Horak. I saw him pull the trigger, but nothing came out. His face stiffened, and he rummaged through his pockets without taking anything out.”

“So he used up all his bullets.”

“Yep, but he didn’t try fighting Kim Horak, even though Kim Horak only had his left hand. Why?”

“Because he wasn’t confident in winning?”

Seo Youngji lightly nodded.

“Right. He used up his bullets, but he hadn’t won. Kim Horak only had a single arm left, but he could still fight. At that point, Kim Hajin lost.”

Oh Junhyuk took a deep breath. Then he tilted his head.

“Oh right, how did he break Kim Horak’s qi reinforcement? He only used a single bullet, and twice at that.”

Seo Youngji took off her glasses. It looked like she was getting ready to explain in detail. Oh Junhyuk swallowed his saliva.

“Most people, including you, probably missed it, but I spotted the movement of magic power on his bullet.”

“...Is that possible? He’s only a cadet!” exclaimed Oh Junhyuk.

Mana was extremely difficult to control. Making it thin enough to coat a bullet and compressing it to destroy qi reinforcement, even Oh Junhyuk wasn’t confident.

“I’m looking it up on the market in case it’s a trick that uses an item, or if it’s related to his gift. If he used an item, it’s cheating. But if it’s his gift... It might be the first of its kind.”

Oh Junhyuk sighed at Seo Youngji’s serious expression.

“Huu... Anyways, I don’t like it. I thought Kim Horak was carrying out justice, but Kim Hajin crushed him.”

Kim Horak won, but suffered enormously. In a one-on-one fight, warriors countered sharpshooters. Kim Horak should have overwhelmed Kim Hajin, but Kim Hajin toyed with him instead. Not only would this be traumatic, but his scout evaluations could also plummet. On the other hand, Kim Hajin attracted everyone's attention, including the guild associates present.

— Yes, Kim Hajin. Never heard of him? Me neither, but he just fought with Kim Horak and he...

— He uses a gun. Yes, his limit should be clear, but he broke a qi reinforcement. Yes, it was an incomplete qi reinforcement, but just the fact that he broke it...

— I don't know how he destroyed a qi reinforcement either. That's why I'm calling you...

Guild associates started calling.

“Justice doesn't always win. Well, we don't really know which side is justice.”

“...Yeah, yeah. Just keep writing your report. New talent discovered. Nice title.”

The host announced the next duel as Seo Youngji glanced at her watch.

“Kim Hajin, I'll have to remember him. Let's leave after we watch Kim Suho's match. It's coming up in three fights.”

“Yeah, I planned on doing the same. What is he complaining about?”

Oh Junhyuk gestured across the arena. The man who previously grinned at them stared at Kim Hajin's passageway with killing intent.

Seo Youngji replied, “...He must not have liked how it turned out. Everyone has their taste.”

After the first duel, I used two of my nominations. I picked two male cadets around the 300-400 ranks. The duels started around 5 and ended around 8.

The fights were... strange comebacks.

Of course, I was no longer at my best. I had depleted stigma's magic power against Kim Horak, and couldn't use Bullet Time, which was limited to once a day. In addition, I fought against swordsmen.

Kim Horak made for an easier target because he used martial arts. Although I would have been helpless if he didn't use qi reinforcement and saved his magic power instead. He lost because of his carelessness. He might have been aiming for the quickest win record to show off.

Unlike Kim Horak, my other two opponents slowly closed in on me. They blocked my bullets with their swords and dragged the fight out.

In the end, I managed to win thanks to my luck.

The first opponent lost to a ricochet. The bullet I accidentally bounced off the ground and struck his armpit. He dropped his sword in pain and instantly surrendered.

The second opponent lost to his own mistake. It was a drawn-out battle over 30 minutes. He sweated so much from blocking my bullets that it pooled into a puddle. Before the referee announced a draw, he charged at me while I reloaded. Then he slipped on his own sweat. Hoiik—! I recalled his scream.

“God, that guy was just too funny.”

I giggled and lay in bed. The final results were 2 wins 1 loss. Sharpshooters also gained bonus points for fighting warriors, so I no longer had to worry about being held back.

“Auuu.”

I stretched and looked out the window. Darkness concealed the world like a thick curtain, and the pale moon was its only source of light.

The eerie scenery made me anxious.

“I hope everything will be okay.”

I suddenly thought about the Chameleon Troupe. I saw them at the arena. Not only the boss, but also that guy. A monster with the instincts of a savage beast, completely obsessed with strength. According to the original story, he should have felt Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak’s potential and peacefully returned after promising to fight them in the future. However, that didn’t seem to be the case. He wanted to fight immediately with the strong heroes currently patrolling Cube.

“Well, it’s not like I can do anything about it.”

He could kill me with a single breath.

“Hmm...”

My gaze wandered to the corner of my bed. Park Soohyuk gave me a rather expensive gift for being his first investor.

“A drone...”

It was a fist-sized drone with a camera.

* * *

A chilling wind brushed against the leaves in one of Cube’s artificial forests. A bulky man sat on a tree trunk in the darkness. He wore a formal suit that made him quite eye-catching.

“He wasn’t much by my standard,” the man murmured.

— By your standard?

“Yep, he’s a mouse. I don’t like him, a tiny guy who only shoots from a distance.”

— You mean you don't like his fighting style... You were supposed to find out why Boss is interested in him.

“How should I know?”

The man's voice turned hostile.

— What are you mad for?

“You would understand if you saw that little rat's fight. Rats like him... I need to pop off their heads...”

His eyes looked bloodshot. The duels he watched between rookies made his blood boil. He wanted to jump in and show them a real fight, but barely held himself back.

— What about Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak?

“Mmm... I thought they were okay... Maybe not...”

— Make up your mind.

“They were fine. Happy? I want to wait until they grow up to fight.”

At that moment...

“Who are you?”

A voice rang out from behind him. The man turned around and saw a police officer roaming around because of the combat exams. The man didn't notice him because he was such a weakling without magic power.

— Don't forget why Boss brought you.

The man nodded.

“Yeah... I know. I'm a master when it comes to recognizing the strong.”

— Right, that's the only reason.

“Excuse me, what are you doing here? The forest is off limits. Please come out.”

The police officer approached him with a flashlight. The man stared at him with killing intent, but the officer couldn't see his expression in the dark.

“Oh right, how did you get here in the first place? Sir? Come out!”

The man laughed.

“...Hey.”

— What.

“I'll go after I crack open a nut.”

“Sir, stop talking to yourself and come out!”

The man's fist cut through the air. He punched the air and caused a shockwave that crushed the officer's body.

— Did you do it?

— Boss is going to kill you.

“Keep it a secret.”

— I will until she finds out. For now, do your job.

Thanks to the weakling, his mind slightly cleared up. He stood up and walked away. The dorms were only a few minutes away. After a while, his keen hearing picked up on a few faint voices.

— Hey, what is this?

— Ueek. Fuck, this is a corpse! Contact headquarters!

Far off in the distance, he grinned as he watched the two officers vomiting.

Wiing— Wiing—

“Mmm?”

He heard a mosquito buzzing and turned.

— What?

“Nothing, just a mosquito.”

— How lame. Hurry up before I tell Boss that you killed someone.

“Yeah, yeah, I’m going.”

The man quickened his pace.

A tiny drone hovered silently above and watched him leave before disappearing.

Chapter 41

Sudden Encounter (1)

— Tak.

I closed my laptop.

“...Well, that's terrifying.”

Cheok Jungyeong killed someone purely for enjoyment. I had created this world. On the surface, society seemed functional with science and magic vastly improving the quality of life, but underneath existed demi-humans without morals. Demi-humans referred not only to djinns, but also superhumans who rejected heroes. Governments officially recognized them as wanted criminals, but the public called them villains.

“What killed him?”

The drone was unable to capture exactly what happened. Only after slowing it down ten times did I catch a glimpse. Cheok Jungyeong threw a jab and a violent pressure erupted, instantly killing the police officer.

“He killed someone without even touching them. Also, this thing...”

I stared at the drone on my bed. It could come in handy if I bought a more expensive one and modified it with my settings.

Wiing—

My smartwatch rang.

[Yo, can I nominate you?]

It was Chae Nayun. She seemed to be talking about tomorrow's duels.

[Why?]

[What do you mean why? You provoked me several times.]

I still had one nomination left. Cadets had to duel at least three times and at most six. I didn't need to fight anyone else unless someone nominated me.

[No, I'm exhausted.]

I couldn't possibly win against Chae Nayun when I couldn't even dodge her arrows which were stronger than my bullets.

[You can think about it tomorrow. Also, how did you destroy qi reinforcement with a bullet? You didn't even use your personal weapon. That's all everyone is talking about. It was your gift, right?]

So this was her real goal.

I just ignored her. I doubted she had any nominations left. Even if she did, she wouldn't waste her energy since she was fighting Rachel tomorrow.

"Whoa, it's already 12?"

I took off my smartwatch and prepared for bed. When I turned off the light, I received another message.

[You put on quite a show.]

It came from Yoo Yeonha. I briefly replied.

[I didn't want to get hit.]

[Because you destroyed a qi reinforcement with your bullet, many guilds are interested.]

[I know.]

I gained quite a bit of SP, 185 since noon. Once I collected a bit more, I could create another art or physique.

[They're already calling your gift superpower bullet and bullet reinforcement. Speaking of which, what do you think about guilds?]

[Those names suck.]

[No, what do you think about Essence of the Strait?]

“Hmm.”

Yoo Yeonha only judged people based on their usefulness. Unfortunately, this would only worsen as she grew older.

[Contacting cadets beforehand is illegal. That's a 500 million won penalty.]

I sent a joking message to end the conversation.

[First, I'm still a cadet. Cadets can recruit other cadets without violating the law. Second, I can afford to pay at least that much.]

She replied quite seriously. I felt a bit awkward.

[That's not your money, it's your parents.]

[Oh right, your acting during the second and third match was superb.]

“...This girl.”

Why did she talk like I hid my true power? If anything, Kim Suho was the one hiding his power.

[Were you watching?]

[I had some time. I think your growth rate is too quick. You were rank 934 during the initial exams, but overwhelmed the rank 18 cadet after switching to a gun. It's too noticeable...]

“What is she going on about?”

I also ignored Yoo Yeonha. Honestly, I was exhausted after three fights today.

“...Oh right.”

I suddenly remembered something else. I turned on my smartwatch and sent Park Soohyuk a message.

[Hyung, thanks for the drone. I'll take good care of it.]

The Chameleon Troupe's boss sat cross-legged on the ground in a pitch-black abandoned factory. A series of battles from the day played in her head.

Kim Suho's swordsmanship was as she had heard. His sword strikes were light as a feather, but carried destructive power. Every movement flowed like water. It was so well polished it seemed more suitable to call it a sword art than swordsmanship.

Next was Shin Jonghak. His spearmanship was truly domineering. He stabbed directly at his opponent's vitals and overwhelmed anyone's defense. Using his long reach, he relentlessly attacked from every direction. It looked more like a one-sided beating than a duel.

— Next is the man you mentioned, Boss. The one who called you hot.

She nodded silently. The video in her eyes changed to a battle between a sharpshooter and a warrior. It was obvious who would win. However, she suddenly opened her eyes. She had only briefly watched the video, but the sharpshooter's bullet destroyed the warrior's magic power. She carefully examined the magic power around the bullet. If her eyes weren't mistaken, it could only be one thing. The power of anti-magic. What she was looking for all along, the silver bullet that could kill that man.

— Interesting, isn't it? I was surprised too when I first saw it.

“Kim Hajin. Write his name down on the notebook.”

She spoke without hesitation.

—... Really?

“Yes.”

— But Jungyeong said he didn't like him.

“Gyeong hates sharpshooters.”

Cheok Jungyeong was a true warrior who believed in staring into the opponent's eyes and striking them down. He also didn't like the other Chameleon Troupe members that fought from long range.

— I guess. He did say Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak were okay.

“Then put their names down too.”

— Then we'll only have 5 slots left. Is that okay?

Individuals with their names in the notebook would have their live locations tracked. The notebook acted like a GPS. In addition, the owner of the notebook could teleport to the target's location. However, one condition had to be met: [The target cannot know their name is in the notebook]. As long as the target wasn't told, there was no reason they would notice.

— Who do we prioritize?

“Mmm.”

Boss closed her eyes and recalled that day 11 years ago when she first cried because of that man's betrayal and the death of their previous leader. She vowed revenge in front of a grave and carried the Chameleon Troupe on her shoulders.

"For now..."

The Chameleon Troupe survived after the death of its previous leader. With a new leader, they took a giant leap forward using vengeance as nourishment. However, they couldn't find the traitor. Even if they did, they wouldn't be able to do anything, so Boss kept searching.

The power of anti-magic, which could destroy the magic power physique...

"Put Kim Hajin on top priority."

I stayed in my room until noon on Tuesday. Although the duels continued until today, no one nominated me.

"I should have just stayed in my room."

Currently, it was 1 P.M. and I stood outside. I was bored, so I went to watch Chae Nayun (rank 4) fight Rachel (rank 3) and Kim Suho (rank 1) against Yohei (rank 8).

"The seats are full."

The arena had 5000 seats, but I couldn't spot a single empty seat.

Should I go back? Or should I just stand and watch?

A couple suddenly stood up and left.

"Cough."

I nervously took a seat, hoping they wouldn't come back.

— Thank you for waiting!

The host announced the start of the duels, and the crowd excitedly cheered.

Sssss.

Someone sat next to me. I glanced with a bag of popcorn in my hand and looked back ahead.

“...?”

An image of the person flashed in my head. She... looked familiar. I swallowed the popcorn in my mouth and glanced again. My heart suddenly stopped as I held my breath. The boss of the Chameleon Troupe sat next to me. She lived without a name and was only known by the title Yasha.

I stuffed my trembling hands into the popcorn and fixed my eyes on the arena. Why is she here? Did I do something wrong? Or is it a coincidence? Right, it's just a coincidence. She came to watch Kim Suho and just happened to sit next to me...

In the middle of my panic...

“Huak!”

Someone walking down the stairs suddenly tripped. This nameless person held a large soda that spun in the air before landing on someone's head like a hat. For the record, the soda was filled to the brim.

I didn't know whether my luck played a part, but not a single drop landed on me. However...

I turned to the side, feeling dizzy. Under the soda cup, Boss' eyes trembled uncontrollably.

Chapter 42

Sudden Encounter (2)

“Oh no, I’m so sorry.”

The nameless person apologized. The Chameleon Troupe’s boss looked surprised. I took the soda cup off her head as ice cubes drizzled down. Boss shut her eyes.

“Please wait just a moment. I’ll go get a towel...”

The nameless person suddenly froze. His eyes turned lifeless, and he walked away in a zombie-like manner. I glanced at Boss’ neck and saw a faint light. I almost recognized that necklace, but couldn’t quite remember. I wasn’t too keen on item settings.

“Haaa.”

She sighed and turned towards me. I scratched my neck. I had a tiny pack of tissues in my pocket, but it wasn’t enough to clean the mess on her.

“...”

She kept staring, so I took out the tissues.

“Um, you can use this...”

She looked back and forth between me and the tissues. Then she grabbed them and wiped her face, legs, and arms.

“Thank you.”

She lightly bowed. I couldn’t believe what just happened. Suddenly, the host’s loud voice resounded.

— We will now begin!

The crowd loudly cheered. Countless reporters aimed their cameras at the arena. Although they weren't allowed to film, they could take pictures. The reporters from England were incredibly excited.

— Rank 3 Rachel vs. Rank 4 Chae Nayun!

A battle between a rapier and a bow. This also happened in the original story, and I already knew Rachel would win.

I stared at them on stage. I could see as though they were only a few feet away. Chae Nayun's mouth moved, and I could hear what she said.

— Princess, our rank will be changing today.

Rachel didn't react to the provocation.

— Counting down! Three! Two!

Chae Nayun aimed her bow at Rachel, and Rachel held up her rapier. Neither side showed any openings in their stances as they waited for the signal.

— Start!

Chae Nayun fired immediately. Her magic arrow flew at lightning speed. However, Rachel efficiently skirted past by a hair's breadth.

Chae Nayun continued with a barrage of arrows that rained down from the sky. The arrows split into several offshoots with unpredictable paths. It seemed this was Chae Nayun's plan. Since Rachel would just dodge direct shots, Chae Nayun tried boxing her in.

However, Rachel elegantly evaded the terrifying barrage. Not only that, she didn't hesitate to stab with her rapier when given a chance. Her magic power shot towards Chae Nayun like beams of light. Even so, Chae Nayun didn't dodge. Instead, she emitted magic power in the form of a shield and blocked them.

The crowd erupted into cheers and applause. Chae Nayun's magic power control surpassed the level of a cadet.

However, the outcome of this battle was already determined. Chae Nayun couldn't win against Rachel.

Rachel was a swordsman who specialized in receiving long ranged attacks. Her flexible body could dodge arrows with the slightest movement, and her accurate attacks continuously disrupted an archer's posture. Chae Nayun created a shield to protect her posture, but it consumed too much magic power.

Rachel would win the moment Chae Nayun's magic power ran out.

"I saw your duel against Kim Horak."

A voice suddenly spoke next to me. I slightly jolted because I was so focused on the duel that I forgot about her. That felt incredibly foolish since she was far more powerful than Rachel or Chae Nayun.

"Um, thank you," I calmly replied.

"Was that your gift?" she asked while staring at me.

"...I'm sorry, but that's not something I can reveal."

"..."

She took out a business card from her pocket.

"This is who I am."

She handed me her business card.

[Li Xiaopeng] [Desolate Moon's grade 3 hero] [Contact address: 0103-3243-9203-93]

It was one of her many fake identities. Even so, my heart trembled as few people could contact her. I simply smiled and muttered. "It's illegal to scout cadets in advance.”

“...”

She tried to put away her business card.

“Ah, but...”

I grabbed her wrist. As I thought, she didn’t know about playing hard to get.

“I’ll hold onto yours.”

“...” She nodded and gave me her business card.

“I’ll leave now. Contact us whenever you want.”

She stood up and walked out. I stared at her back in a daze.

“...What did she come here for?”

I couldn’t figure out why she would visit me.

All the duels ended by 5 P.M. Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, Rachel, and another cadet named Joo Youngho were the only ones who won all their duels. Many unexpected outcomes occurred due to fatigue as cadets fought up to three times a day, — Wow, that was amazing. Did you see Kim Suho? He’s so stylish!

— Chae Nayun lost to Rachel... I’m a bit bitter. This is the first time I’ve seen Korea’s rising star lose against a foreigner.

By the time I left, the sky had already turned dark. Spectators brushed past me as they chatted about today’s battles. Before I returned to the dorm, I went into an alleyway at the back of the arena. I sat down and took out the drone from my cross bag. This drone was different from the original because I added several settings like battery life boost, stealth mode, and target lock-on. These modifications would only last four days until the Chameleon Troupe left, costing relatively little SP.

“Fly.”

I threw the drone into the air as it flew into the forest. Then I headed back to the dorm.

— kuk... huk... kuk...

“...Huh?”

I heard someone crying and stopped. It sounded a bit like an animal, but was pitiful enough to make me turn. My eyes saw through several walls into a nearby forest. Chae Nayun hid between the trees crying. Her body shook with her face buried between her knees.

“Ah.”

I remembered this event. Chae Nayun would completely fall for Kim Suho after he consoled her. She would view Kim Suho as more than just a friend after everything else that happened between them. Although things had slightly changed from the original, the big picture remained the same.

I turned back without much thought.

“...Tsk.”

However, I hesitated to leave. Kim Suho would comfort Chae Nayun, but his kindness wouldn't change anything. You can do better next time. Work hard with me. I will help you get stronger. Such words wouldn't help Chae Nayun. In life, sometimes it was better to give up and change. However, Kim Suho never gave up on anything and would never suggest it to others. Chae Nayun wouldn't give up the bow for a long time because of Kim Suho.

“...Huuu.”

I turned on my smartwatch. Chae Nayun's message from last night was still there.

[Hey, don't ignore me. If you don't reply, I'll nominate you for real.]

I responded after 18 hours.

[What are you doing?]

Through the walls, I could see Chae Nayun's smartwatch ring. She didn't check it because she was crying, so I sent another message.

[I saw your duel today.]

Chae Nayun glanced at her smartwatch.

— What does this bastard want now?

She planned on ignoring me, so I sent her a message she couldn't ignore.

[See, I told you. You're more suited for a sword than a bow. It's not too late to change your weapon. I did too.]

— This son of a...

It was incredibly effective. Chae Nayun fumed and tapped on her smartwatch.

[Screw off before I kill you.]

I replied with another message that would drive her over the edge.

[Come on, you defeated a djinn with a sword, so why do you insist on using the bow? I just can't understand. It's almost... pitiful. If you fought Rachel like how you fought that djinn, do you think you would have lost?]

[What? You wanna die?]

[Think a little. You beat her when you were in the Military Agent Academy, so why do you think you're losing now? It's because you don't have an aptitude for bows.]

[You piece of shit where are you do I look like a pushover you bastard don't be so arrogant just because you beat Kim Horak]

I could hardly understand her emotional message with all the punctuation errors. I didn't bother replying either. I wanted to mess with her more because of her funny reactions, but it was time.

— Huh? Chae Nayun?

Kim Suho peeked behind the tree where she hid.

— Eh?

— What are you doing here?

— W... What!

Chae Nayun quickly wiped away her tears. She tried to run, but Kim Suho caught her.

— Let me go!

Chae Nayun tried to shake him off, but Kim Suho wasn't the type to leave a crying girl. He had a typical main character personality.

“...It's time to leave.”

I didn't stay to watch what would happen between them. I only made sure Chae Nayun didn't forget about her real gift. That was the extent of my role.

* * *

The next combat exam began on Wednesday. Cadets would fight against monsters, so guests couldn't spectate. Furthermore, because the summoned monsters varied, the exam was graded on an absolute scale rather than a relative one.

“Be especially careful in today’s exam. If you refuse to give up, you might die.”

Kim Soohyuk solemnly warned. The monsters couldn’t comprehend complex orders. Annihilate the enemies and protect allies, was the extent they could understand. An order like, test that cadet’s skills, was out of the question. Not to mention, summoned monsters didn’t disappear after magicians reverse summoned them, so cadets had to be careful after surrendering.

“If you think your life is in danger, give up immediately. You can yell, I surrender, or simply tap on the ground twice.”

“...”

I calmly listened to Kim Soohyuk’s explanation. Chae Nayun glared at me, but I ignored her.

“The magicians in charge will explain the rest. Give them a warm welcome.”

The door opened and robed magicians walked in. Summoner magicians weren’t given any special treatment. The Magician’s Tower had a strict hierarchy depending on specialties, and summoner magicians were average. They didn’t have twisted personalities like most magicians because they often worked outside the Magician’s Tower.

“Nice to meet you all. I am the Chief Magician, Jin Joohwa.”

The lead magician bowed to the cadets.

“Today, you will fight monsters we will summon. Be careful, since summoned monsters are no different from real monsters. Even if we reverse summon them, they won’t disappear immediately. If things look dangerous, please surrender immediately.”

The cadets nodded at the magician's kind explanation.

“Good. Then we will tell you how the exam will proceed.”

Jin Joohwa smiled.

“Four cadets will go in at a time, and each cadet will be given 15 minutes. You will not be graded based on victory or loss, and your role will be taken into account.”

Jin Joohwa stuck up his index finger.

“First is how long you last. Next is how calm you responded. In other words, you don't have to kill the summoned monster.”

Wiing—

A smartwatch cut him off. The magician looked around the room.

“Please turn off all your smartwatches.”

He spoke nonchalantly as we turned off all our smartwatches.

Chapter 43

Sudden Encounter (3)

Chief Magician Jin Joohwa's explanation dragged on about the process, how groups would form, and the types of monsters. I understood his caution, but just wished he would start the exam already.

"Now, we will begin. Group 1, please stand up."

Group 1 consisted of Hazuki, Kim Junho, Yoo Jungjin, and Spenner. I only knew Hazuki.

"I'll do my best!"

Hazuki stood up as her friends encouraged her. The four members followed a staff to the examination grounds.

"Everyone else, please stand to the side."

The 96 remaining cadets in Veritas stood against the wall. Jin Joohwa clapped, and ten circular tables with ten chairs each rose from the floor.

"Take a seat, everyone. You will write a report for this exam as well."

The cadets all groaned.

"Sit wherever you want."

Since I already knew, it didn't faze me. I took a random seat as the other cadets sat with their friends.

"...?"

I glanced sideways and saw Rachel. She stared at her fingernails and trimmed them with a nail clipper. We made eye contact, and she hastily put away the nail clipper.

“Battle analysis will also be a part of this exam.”

Jin Joohwa explained, “It’s simple. You will carefully analyze the cadets battling monsters and write a report.”

A monitor for each seat shot up from the tables. The screen split into four, each showing a different cadet taking the exam.

“How they defeated the monsters, or why they lost. Even if they won, what did they lack? If they lost, what could they improve? This is what we are looking for in your reports.”

Chak, chak. Jin Joohwa clapped, and the other magicians handed out the papers.

“You will write three reports, but only the best one will reflect your grade. That doesn’t mean you can write only one. If you do, you will be penalized.”

I picked up the peer assessment paper and looked at it. Suddenly, I recalled my college days as I wrote my name and the name of the cadet I was evaluating. [Check the anonymous checkbox if you wish to remain anonymous.]

Thankfully, we could remain anonymous.

“For the record, this report only makes up 5% of your grade, but they will be given to the cadets you evaluated.”

The cadets looked around at their peers.

“Giving your peers advice and encouraging others are also the duties of a hero. You will be penalized if you act maliciously.”

The chief magician smiled.

“It seems we’re ready. Group 1’s exam will now begin.”

I stared at the monitor and clicked on Hazuki’s box. The other three disappeared as the screen displayed Hazuki fighting a low-intermediate rank, grade 1 monster. This ghoul should be a difficult fight.

— Clang, clang

The ghoul’s claws clashed with Hazuki’s axe. She calmly responded to its attacks, but the ghoul’s claws were sturdier than average high grade weapons. After exchanging a few blows, Hazuki concluded the disadvantage and began circling the room. She took advantage of the ghoul’s slowness as she looked for an opening, but 15 minutes passed with no change. The ghoul disappeared after being reverse summoned.

“Draw, Hazuki and Yoo Jungjin. Victory, Spenner. Defeat, Kim Junho. Next is Group 2. Chae Nayun, Hojun, Jutryn, and Carlos.”

Chae Nayun walked up in an imposing manner. The weight of her bow seemed lighter than usual. What could Kim Suho have said to her? I looked at Chae Nayun through the monitor.

“A thousand-mile horse?”

Chae Nayun’s opponent was an intermediate rank, grade 9 monster. The thousand-mile horse was one of the trickiest monsters for an archer, but Chae Nayun stood confidently in front of it. Not long afterward, the battle began. Chae Nayun drew her bow, and the thousand-mile horse charged at her. I examined the fight with the help of my gift. Master Sharpshooter had also increased my sense of judgment with my eyes. I could clearly see Chae Nayun’s faults.

[Chae Nayun]

Chae Nayun rolled to the side and missed an opportunity to attack. She should have stabbed an arrow in its flank or fired after rolling to hit the horse’s butt.

[Chae Nayun only shoots her bow in upright positions. She lacks adaptability and situational awareness as an archer.]

Chae Nayun fixated on textbook stances. As a result, the thousand-mile horse easily dodged her arrows.

[In a one-on-one fight, sharpshooters require detailed analysis and background knowledge of their targets. However, Chae Nayun lacks knowledge about monsters.]

She could easily defeat the thousand-mile horse after disabling its legs first. However, Chae Nayun attacked large areas like its neck and body.

She didn't like memorizing theory. I had created that flaw in her myself.

[Her ability to predict her opponents is superb, but she doesn't take the speed of her arrows into account.]

This was a matter of talent. Chae Nayun's talent for the bow was ranked second or third at best. In contrast, her talent for the longsword ranked first. The spear and bow came after. Chae Nayun couldn't predict what I could as a sharpshooter. That was the difference between our gifts.

[Chae Nayun only managed to win against the thousand-mile horse because of her overwhelming magic power.]

Eventually, the thousand-mile horse grew tired and couldn't withstand the endless barrage of arrows.

[Overall, I recommend Chae Nayun find a more suitable weapon for her immense magic power.]

The exam ended with her victory, but my report only criticized her. Still, they were reasonable. The person grading this report would agree if they had sharp eyes.

"Victory, Chae Nayun. Defeat, Hojun and Jutryn. Draw, Carlos."

Chae Nayun returned in the same imposing manner as when she left. I didn't give her a single glance and felt somewhat guilty as I flipped over my report.

"Next is group 3..."

The exam continued.

Meanwhile, Oh Junhyuk patrolled the west forest. He felt a faint vibration that bothered him. Normally, he would have ignored it, but someone had killed a police officer yesterday. As a result, he acted much more diligently.

Oong—

A vibration even clearer than the one before rang out.

"Youngji, did you feel that?"

— Yep, another vibration. I think it's coming from the ocean. Can you tell me exactly when you feel it?

Seo Youngji quickly replied through a micro-transceiver.

"How should I know?"

— Then just send me your smartwatch data.

"..."

Oh Junhyuk did as she requested.

— I'm in the east forest. The vibration was 0.03 seconds faster on your side. The source must be in the west sea.

"Can I use the smartwatch to calculate the same thing?"

— You should be able to since the association specially crafted it. Anyways, I'm headed there now. Wait for me.

“Got it.”

Oh Junhyuk proceeded towards the west sea through a field of weeds. Since the vibration came from the west sea, he planned to observe from a distance. Suddenly, he felt magic power. Oh Junhyuk quickly turned and saw a shadowy figure coming out of the forest.

“...”

Oh Junhyuk stared at the figure he had seen before. Tap, tap. The man walked out with heavy steps. Oh Junhyuk remembered him because of his unique aura and large build with a sinister face. The man who glared at him at the arena smiled widely. Oh Junhyuk spoke in a businesslike manner.

“This area is off-limits to outsiders.”

“Is it?”

A fierce light shone from the man's eyes.

“Then why are you here?”

His voice sounded deep and husky. However, Oh Junhyuk retorted.

“Because I'm not an outsider.”

“Mm, what a surprise.”

The giant man dryly replied as he rubbed his chin. Oh Junhyuk forced himself to smile.

“If you understand, please go back.”

“I refuse.”

With a grin, the giant man suddenly cracked his knuckles. He was asking for a fight. Oh Junhyuk deeply sighed.

“You were the one who murdered the police officer, correct?”

“Huh? I don’t know. Rather than that, don’t just stand there.”

A chilling wind blew from the sea. Oh Junhyuk’s smartwatch loudly rang.

“Move if you don’t want to get beaten up!”

As the giant man’s voice fell...

Chwaa—

A huge creature shot up from the depths of the sea with a burst of water. Oh Junhyuk quickly turned around. The creature looked like a snake, but with overwhelming size and viciousness.

A mythical serpent dragon had appeared in the west sea.

Chapter 44

Sudden Encounter (4)

“Wow, I wonder if I gained some sort of insight. Who knew I could win against a thousand-mile horse so easily?”

I looked at my laptop in boredom when I heard Chae Nayun bragging.

“Really, what happened Nayun?”

Yoo Yeonha chimed in. She was genuinely curious. Chae Nayun’s battle probably looked flawless since Yoo Yeonha didn’t know anything about bows. It looked like an amazing fight, but one shouldn’t judge a book by its cover.

“I learned from failure, something like that, hahaha.”

Chae Nayun heartily laughed. She must be feeling great since she even brought up her loss yesterday. Meanwhile, Kim Suho smiled at her. I felt a chill down my back as I imagined Chae Nayun reading my report. Should I submit it anonymously?

“Group 10. Rachel, Kim Hajin, Skid, Lee Wei.”

Jin Joohwa announced my group. I glanced at Rachel next to me, and we made eye contact. She stood up, and I followed.

“Come this way.”

Rachel and I followed a staff with the rest. We arrived at a waiting room, and the staff opened a giant door on the right.

“Please enter.”

We walked into a long hallway behind the giant door. Soon, the hallway ended, and multiple doors stood side by side.

“Stand in front of the door.”

The staff guided each of us to a door. I was next to Rachel.

“Good luck on your exam!”

I cheered her on, and she nodded.

“You have one minute to confirm your monster and terrain.”

I could see a chrome wolf in some flatlands through the door’s window.

Chrome wolves ranged from low-intermediate rank, grade 4 to grade 2. Other cadets had faced much stronger monsters. However, it would be difficult since bullets would just bounce off their skin.

*[Trait – its skin can reflect metallic objects] [Weakness – inside its mouth]
[Strength – tough skin]*

I had designed the chrome wolves.

“30 seconds left.”

They had dual metal and earth attributes, and their vital point was inside the mouth. Their dual attributes could be problematic, but I knew their weakness. I simply needed extreme heat that could melt metal and earth. I could use stigma’s magic power to heat the dagger in my pocket.

“A minute has passed. Please enter.”

We walked onto the examination grounds.

The room measured about 130 square meters. Dirt and rocks filled the ground while a wolf crunched on something. I didn’t have much time to plan since chrome wolves could attack from long range. I quickly held up my gun. Ptu. The wolf spat something out. A metallic fragment hurled towards me. I aimed at the object and fired. It clashed with my bullet, and they destroyed each other.

The chrome wolf charged at me. I activated Bullet Time and saw its movements in slow motion, but didn't dodge. I fearlessly waited for it to open its mouth. The chrome wolf opened its jaws towards my neck. I jabbed my gun into its mouth and fired consecutively. I had already jumped back by several meters by the time it shut its mouth.

My sense of time returned, and the Chrome Wolf convulsed in pain. Unfortunately, it didn't die yet and spat out ten crushed bullets after retching a few times. Then it growled and glared at me.

"Tough, aren't you?"

The chrome wolf's bulletproof trait put me at a disadvantage. I took out my dagger with no other options. With a gun in one hand and a dagger in the other, I slightly lowered my body and glared at the wolf. My lips felt dry, although my body sweated profusely. Close ranged combat still scared me. Right when the fight almost broke out...

KWANG—!

A huge explosion occurred, and the lights went out. The room turned completely dark, but I didn't let my guard down because of the savage beast.

— A problem has occurred. All monsters will be reverse summoned. Cadets must leave the examination grounds immedi— Tzzzk.

The speaker cut off into static. I stared at the wolf. It grew more ferocious instead of being reverse summoned.

"Um, is that thing going to be reverse summoned?"

One or more of the dispatched magicians must have been a djinn. I already checked my laptop that Jin Joohwa wasn't a djinn. The laptop never detected any setting changes. This could only mean I didn't know the djinn. That sounded plausible since many existed and it wouldn't be strange if an extra appeared.

“Haa... I knew this would happen eventually.”

An event that I didn't know about. My heart rate suddenly went up at the uncertainty, but I forced myself to calm down. After a deep breath, I looked through the wall to the room next door. Rachel seemed to be in a similar situation as she glared at her opponent silently. But her opponent was... a person.

— Kuwalwal!

The chrome wolf charged at me with a howl. I took out my personal weapon from stigma. The Desert Eagle materialized, and aether quickly fused with it. The grip felt snug in my hand as I fired, and the wolf fell with a whimper.

“Know your place.”

The Desert Eagle had grown more powerful than before, but I didn't have time to admire it. I didn't even have time to check my laptop. Rachel was in danger.

One of the story's antagonists wanted to conquer England, but it shouldn't be time yet. They should have only attacked after their forces grew more.

— Krrrr...

I turned towards the growling. The chrome wolf had multiplied into three, but I wasn't worried.

“Hm.”

I transformed the Desert Eagle into its shotgun mode. The three wolves flew towards me. I simply pointed and shot.

KWANG—!

Thunderous gunshots rang out.

In a dark room, a man coldly murmured with killing intent.

“I knew this day would come.”

The familiar language surprised Rachel. She glared at the man who appeared from the darkness. Although he wore a cape and covered his face, Rachel felt like she knew him. She called his name.

“...Sir Lancaster.”

The previous captain of the royal guards and Rachel's former master, Alex Lancaster. He disappeared a few years ago after his family died in the infamous London Incident, but now he appeared again with murderous intent.

“I'm honored you remember me.”

Rachel felt great malice from his sinister smile. She could see the path he had chosen.

“...You sold your soul.”

Lancaster shook his head and denied the claim.

“I lived my life for my country, but my country took everything from me. I didn't sell my soul. My master took me in after my country abandoned me.”

For a moment, deep sadness emerged on Rachel's face. What happened had been a painful memory for her as well.

“...Is that why you came to me?”

“Princess, does it look like I came here?”

Rachel furrowed her brows. Then she stabbed with her rapier, but it simply passed through his body.

“I am somewhere, but not here.”

“...”

Rachel turned around. The door was tightly shut. No help seemed to be coming.

Lancaster spoke with a smile.

“It’s quite chaotic outside right now. Of course, if this was England, Princess’ safety would be the top priority. Tens, hundreds, thousands of lives wouldn’t compare...”

Lancaster paused and smiled viciously.

“The entire country would not hesitate to throw away their lives to save Princess. After all, you are England’s hope.”

Lancaster looked smugly at Rachel.

“But that isn’t the case here. You are only one of many cadets.”

Rachel stared at him with sadness. His resentment and anger made her feel guilty. However, Lancaster clenched his teeth.

“So you still won’t remove that hypocritical mask of pretense...”

Rachel took a courageous step towards him.

“Sir Lancaster...”

“I would like to talk a bit longer, but we are out of time.”

Lancaster rejected her and bowed.

“Farewell Princess.”

He turned into black fog and disappeared.

“Wait...!”

Suddenly, an assassin jumped out of the fog and swung a sword. Rachel managed to defend against the abrupt attack, but it destroyed a chunk of her sword qi. The weight behind the magic power astonished her.

The assassin was also quite agile. His attacks focused on her left flank and shoulder, two of her weak points. The swords clashed and resounded. Hot sparks ignited, and fresh blood burst into the air.

Rachel could only defend. As the fight continued, more scratches appeared on her body. Admittedly, she couldn't defeat this assassin with normal tactics, so she decided to gamble.

“Uk!”

The assassin didn't miss the opening she purposely left and stabbed her wrist. Rachel dropped her rapier. Feeling victorious, the assassin stabbed forward once again. Rachel's rapier also reacted, still connected to her by magic power. The assassin proceeded to pierce Rachel's heart as her rapier shot up towards his neck.

KWANG—!

However, a terrifying explosion interrupted them. Rachel lost her balance along with the assassin. He couldn't reach her heart, and she couldn't pierce his neck.

KOONG!

The room rumbled with another quake. They both turned to the right at the wall that shook.

KOONG!

Another shockwave shook the wall. The assassin held up his sword, and Rachel grabbed her rapier with her left hand.

KOONG!

After the second shockwave, the assassin charged at Rachel as she rolled to the side.

KOONG!

A third and final shockwave blew up the wall and sent the assassin flying.

“Geez, so much dust. Ptui.”

Rachel saw Kim Hajin walking out of the cloud of smoke.

“...!”

The assassin ran towards him.

“Who the hell are you?”

Kim Hajin simply fired his gun.

“Kuak!”

The shotgun displayed terrifying power as it sent the assassin flying to the other end of the room.

Kim Hajin walked up to the assassin stuck against the wall. Click click clack— He finished reloading.

Rachel stared at the white magic power flowing around his arm, but now wasn't the time to ask. Kim Hajin aimed at the assassin and didn't hesitate to pull the trigger. A radiant light lit up the dark room.

Chapter 45

After the Trouble (1)

The amplified heavy shotgun shells cost 50 SP each. Although I used ordinary bullets against the chrome wolves, I used five of these special bullets to break down the wall and kill the assassin. I had consumed 250 SP in less than a minute, but I didn't regret it since I saved Rachel.

"Um..."

I reached out to Rachel on the ground. She blankly stared at me before standing up by herself. I awkwardly withdrew my hand and scratched my cheek.

"..."

Rachel stared at the broken wall to her right. My shotgun had destroyed the examination room's reinforced wall.

"Oh, the mana barrier disappeared when the electricity went out."

I made an excuse since her gaze looked suspicious. Rachel's eyes landed on my shotgun as I hurriedly stuffed it into my bag, but it didn't fit. I turned around and changed it into its handgun form before putting it away.

"R-Rather than that..."

I looked at Rachel's body riddled with bleeding wounds. I should have been concerned, but I thought of Evandel's seed first. Rachel's blood would make the perfect nourishment.

"You're hurt."

I took off the fanny pack around my waist. It was an all-purpose emergency kit for all my fears and apprehensions. Antidotes, painkillers, tranquilizers, bandages, gauzes... all sorts of medicine and supplies. Of course, I also carried the external recovery potion. Although recovery potions were expensive, they were cheap compared to what Rachel's blood was worth.

"Here, it's an external recovery potion."

When I gave her a glass bottle containing a red liquid, Rachel's eyes widened in surprise.

"Before I apply it, I'll wipe your blood first."

I nervously licked my dry lips, "May I?"

"..."

Rachel nodded and permitted me. First, I wiped the blood from her left arm with some gauze. As I took out more gauze, I kept the used ones without throwing them away. Once I cleaned her arm, I wet a gauze with the potion before applying it to her skin.

Rachel clenched her teeth from the potion's stinging sensation, similar to antiseptics. I planned to heal her left arm first, but Rachel suddenly grabbed me. Then she spoke for the first time since we met.

"...Here first."

She showed me the severe wound on her right wrist. The cut was deep to her bone. Any deeper and her wrist would have been severed. Surprisingly, no blood came out since Rachel suppressed it with magic power.

"Ah! You should have told me earlier!"

I was genuinely shocked. I only focused on the light wounds and missed the one that needed immediate treatment.

"Any later and you would've had to give up the rapier forever."

Despite costing 7 million won, external recovery potions weren't omnipotent. Sensitive areas like a person's nerves had to be treated immediately. Otherwise, not even the authority of healing could do anything about it.

"It's going to sting. A lot."

I poured the rest of the potion over her wound and wrapped a bandage over it.

"Aaak."

Rachel endured the immense pain with only a short groan. I wrapped three layers of bandages over the wound. When I let go of her arm, Rachel crouched in pain.

I put away the bloodied gauze into my cross bag. While I waited for Rachel to recover, I turned on my laptop. As expected, a settings change had occurred.

[Alex Lancaster] [Attachment to his lost family has worsened. His rage has also deepened. Has an increased chance of attacking Rachel whenever given the chance.] [His potential has risen from 7.5 to 8.5 and now poses a greater threat.]

"Hmm..."

I had created Alex Lancaster as an antagonist related to England. He appeared in the middle stage of the story and wanted to topple England's government. Such a dangerous antagonist became stronger and appeared earlier than anticipated. Unfortunately, I couldn't do anything about it.

I would have created more righteous characters if I knew this would happen. Of course, plenty of righteous characters did exist. For example, a secret service agent from MI6 named James Jone would later serve Rachel. Based on the agent that everyone knew, his love and loyalty for his country were unshakable.

"...Hua."

Rachel faintly exhaled. Sweat covered her body, but she must have overcome the pain since she looked much better. She staggered up slowly and bowed to me.

“Thank you.”

“Ah...”

Suddenly, the electricity returned along with the lights and interrupted our conversation. Rachel and I checked the locked door, but it easily opened this time.

After leaving, I stared at the examination rooms through the other side of the walls. Unfortunately, the other two cadets couldn't escape as their corpses lay on the ground. I felt mixed feelings, but I knew I couldn't have done anything. I led Rachel back with me and saw the chaotic waiting room up ahead.

Tap, tap. Someone walked towards us, and Rachel put up her guard. I simply smiled at her.

Kim Soohyuk walked down the hallway while communicating with someone on a transceiver.

“Both of you, what are you doing here? No, why did you come back here?”

“Come back?”

“Didn't both of you...”

Kim Soohyuk paused as though he'd realized something. From his reaction, I could guess what happened. Djinn who could create human illusions also existed.

“The other two are still inside.”

“Ah, shoot! You two, wait here. No, run to the infirmary!”

Kim Soohyuk ran to the examination rooms. As his back disappeared from view, I turned towards Rachel. Then I whispered, “Um, I may have to lie soon, so please match words with me when the time comes. I’ll be expelled if they find out I brought in my personal weapon.”

Rachel nodded at my request.

After the huge disturbance, a silent shadow in the empty waiting room suddenly sprung up into a human figure. The figure formed a short cute boy with a big smile.

“Boss, Boss! I just saw something amazing!”

The boy, Droon, came to observe Kim Hajin as per Boss’ orders. He couldn’t hide his excitement over what he saw. He finally understood why Boss was so interested in that guy.

“Guns, it’s a gift related to guns. It’s not just anti-magic...”

— For now, return. I’ll listen to you later.

However, Boss coldly cut him off.

“...Okay.”

Boss is no fun. Droon grumbled inwardly as he disappeared into the shadows once again. Next, he messaged another troupe member.

— Jungyeong, how was the serpent dragon? Did you kill it?

Oh Junhyuk sat cross-legged on a rock facing the clear ocean breeze. He tried to comprehend what he just witnessed. A serpent dragon popped out of the sea, but...

“Oh Junhyuk!”

Seo Youngji arrived after everything had calmed down. Oh Junhyuk turned towards her.

“What’s going on? Didn’t you say a serpent dragon appeared?”

“You knew that and you’re this late?”

“I ran into a problem on the way. Monsters suddenly escaped from the laboratory, so I had to take care of them. Where’s the serpent dragon?”

“It was chased away, deep into the ocean.”

“...Huh?”

Serpent dragons belonged to the dragon family, but they weren’t terrifyingly strong compared to a high rank hero. They ranged from high-intermediate rank, grade 1 to high rank, grade 7. Serpent dragons didn’t know how to fight and feared pain because of their high intelligence. Of course, it would be a different story if a serpent dragon found a Cintamani. ^[1]

Even so, what Oh Junhyuk witnessed still shocked him.

“Someone provoked the serpent dragon.”

“Provoked?”

“Yep. It was enraged with red eyes.”

Hurling down from the sky with its gigantic mouth, the serpent dragon felt oppressing.

“How did you chase away an enraged serpent dragon?”

“Well...”

Oh Junhyuk didn't know whether to laugh or cry as he thought back to what happened.

“Apparently, you just have to beat it until it regains its sanity.”

He recalled what he saw just ten minutes ago. The giant man with gauntlets stood before the serpent dragon and punched it. He used a simple straight punch, but the shockwave was tremendous. The ground shook, and trees lost all their leaves. The force tore through the serpent dragon's tough scales, broke through its bones, and struck its muscles. The serpent dragon's bloodshot eyes instantly cleared up.

“...You want me to believe that?”

“If you don't want to, don't. Oh, by the way, I need you to put someone on the wanted list. I filmed him on my smartwatch. He's the suspect behind yesterday's murder case.”

Oh Junhyuk sent Seo Youngji the video of the giant man. Seo Youngji tilted her head as she checked it.

“Tell them to contact me if he's found.”

“...Why?”

“Nothing. It's been a while, but I found someone I want to fight.”

Oh Junhyuk grinned.

The Cube monster incident became a hot topic across the world. They hid the fact that djinns orchestrated it, but because a serpent dragon and several other monsters critically injured two cadets (I thought they died, but were just unconscious), Cube received huge global backlash.

Cube decided to postpone the rest of the combat exams. They would keep the results of the duels, but another monster war would take place later. Finally, the group rescue mission on Friday was also canceled. In addition, classes wouldn't resume until the Thursday in two weeks.

In other words, we had no classes for the next ten days.

With the sudden holiday, cadets returned home or went on vacation with the compensation they received from Cube. Cadets filled Cube's official community forum with posts asking for good places to visit in Japan or America. Some people snarkily commented about how they could go on vacation when other cadets were injured.

None of these problems mattered to me. Even now, I simply sat in my dorm room.

"...Oh, did it just eat?"

Evandel's seed, which I had obtained from the Gari Mountain's hidden stage, sucked on Rachel's blood. The bloodied gauze returned to its white color. Once three months passed, a kind witch would be born and become my trusted helper...

A sudden pain from my upper arm overcame me. I felt it once before as I pulled up my sleeve. Another streak of stigma appeared.

Calm down and be patient, Kim Hajin. You've felt this pain before. You can do a lot more with another streak of stigma. For example, you can put more magic power... into bullets...

I couldn't continue my encouraging train of thoughts as it felt like someone had stabbed my brain. My thoughts cut off, and I clenched my teeth, unable to scream.

In front of this tremendous pain, my consciousness slowly faded.

"Wow, it's been so long."

Chae Nayun returned home to a traditional Korean house with tiled roofs and eaves. However, that was only the exterior. The interior was no different from a European castle.

“Welcome back, young lady.”

A butler greeted Chae Nayun with a warm smile.

“Long time no see, gramps.”

“I’ve been worried sick. I’m glad you’re safe.”

“Only two people were hurt. None of the ordinary visitors were injured either.”

Chae Nayun bowed to the butler who had protected her home for thirty years.

“Oh right, is the item I ordered here yet?”

“It arrived yesterday.”

“Yes!”

“Oh, and Cube sent some documents.”

“Documents?”

The butler nodded.

“Yes, they’re exam reports, 24 of them.”

“Oh that. Send it back to my dorm. I don’t want to think about school when I’m... No, wait.”

Chae Nayun recalled her might as she fought the thousand-mile horse. Other cadets must have been extremely impressed since she received 24 reports. That meant close to 25% of the class wrote about her feat.

“Huhu, send it to my room. I want to read it.”

Chase Nayun wondered what sort of praises she would receive.

“Yes, understood.”

The butler bowed respectfully.

1. A wish-fulfilling jewel in Hindu and Buddhist traditions. Wingless dragons would seek this object to gain wings and ascend the heavens.

Chapter 46

After the Trouble (2)

As expected of a wealthy young lady, Chae Nayun's huge room featured a queen size bed, a living room, a bathroom the size of a public bath, and a gaming room designed for the best virtual experience. Lying comfortably in bed, Chae Nayun opened the envelope with her exam reports.

"Whoa, look how thick it is."

The stack of 24 papers added up to quite a bit. First, she read the name on the first one. Kianu Jin. He was a spearman around rank 100.

[Chae Nayun's archery was extraordinary, and her magic power inspired my deepest respect. The thousand-mile horse is difficult for most sharpshooters because of its agile speed and sturdy body, but Chae Nayun not only dodged its charges with incredible movements, she also...]

"Haha."

He had poor Korean with grammar mistakes, but it was still readable. She especially liked the phrase, her arrows fell like rain.

After reading Kianu Jin's report, Chae Nayun worked her way down the stack. Some cadets objectively analyzed her battle, while others noticeably sang her praises. Chae Nayun's smile curled up more and more as she read them.

"Huuu, no."

Chae Nayun collected her thoughts before they reached cloud nine.

Some of them are just flattering you. Be humble.

She calmly moved on to the next report from a familiar person.

[Evaluating cadet – Kim Suho]

“...”

His name slightly shook her heart, but Chae Nayun acted unconcerned and furrowed her brows. She quietly read the contents.

[It was a victory of self-conviction. Recently, Chae Nayun seemed to doubt herself. Losing to a rival and being criticized by someone wore down her confidence, but Chae Nayun is a naturally talented archer. Against the thousand-mile horse, she showed a confident battle. Her movements contained no hesitation, and she attacked swiftly and accurately. I believe Chae Nayun has already reached a certain realm as an archer. She told me that someone said she lacked talent, but what she lacked was only trust in her abilities. If she continues like today, she will surely become the greatest hero.]

“...Huua.”

Chae Nayun softly caressed Kim Suho’s report. His heartfelt encouragement moved her. A smile emerged on her face, and her worries disappeared. With her eyes closed, she reaffirmed her belief.

A bow suits me. No matter what anyone says, a bow suits me best.

Chae Nayun carefully placed his report on her bed. Now, only two reports remained. One was anonymous, while the other was from Shin Jonghak. She decided to finish them. First, she read the anonymous report.

“Hmm.”

She picked up the report without much thought.

“...”

Not long afterward, she clenched her hands. Chae Nayun’s face distorted behind the crumpled report.

“Huu, huu, huuu...”

Chae Nayun trembled in anger at the anonymous report filled with criticisms. Its malicious words struck her deeply.

“...Who is this fucker.”

The report contained a respectful tone, but its message was clear.

You have no sense, talent, or brains. You only won thanks to your magic power.

Although it was anonymous, Chae Nayun felt she knew the writer's identity.

“Kim Hajin, Kim Hajin, Kim Hajin...!”

She picked up her smartwatch in anger.

* * *

On a fine afternoon, Cube investigators questioned Rachel and me. I still felt sore from the additional streak of stigma yesterday, but I earnestly cooperated.

“Thank you.”

I thanked Rachel on our way back to the portal station after the investigation. As promised, she matched her story with mine. The investigators who doubted me fully trusted her since she was a royal.

“No, I should be the one to thank you.”

Rachel said without changing her expression. Then she showed her wrist to me. It fully healed without a scar thanks to the timely treatment.

“Is it fine?”

“Yes.”

She spun her wrist around.

“That’s good. So where are you going?”

“Back home.”

“Ah, to England.”

“Yes.”

England would be much safer than Cube. The Queen’s residence was a fortress that even a devil couldn’t easily enter.

“Ah, I’m also going hunting right now...”

I told Rachel even though she didn’t ask because we headed in the same direction. Suddenly, my smartwatch rang. It wasn’t a text, but a call from Chae Nayun. I felt like I shouldn’t pick up, so I ignored it.

“I’m also taking Cube’s portal, so...”

My smartwatch rang once again. I immediately ended the call. Then a message arrived.

[Hey, you wrote that report, didn’t you?] [I just don’t understand, just how are you in any position to say something like this?] [I don’t have the sense or talent of an archer? Have you ever used a bow before? I’m so freaking speechless.] [And you said I’m stupid? What, you think you can mock me because you’re good at studying?] [You wanna fight? Wanna make a bet? Want me to teach you how hard it is to use a bow?]

“What is this bombshell...”

A barrage of messages arrived in just ten seconds. However, the last message caught my attention.

Bet.

I recalled my gift's proficiency level. It should be grade 7 and about 67% to the next grade. Could I beat Chae Nayun with a bow? I purposely nitpicked her flaws, but Chae Nayun's archery was undoubtedly one of the best among cadets. Although she was more talented with swords, that didn't mean she had no talent for bows. Not to mention, she trained in archery for ten years.

[Sure, let's fight and bet on it. I'll also use a bow.]

It was about time I showed her the difference between talent and a true genius. Even if grade 7 wasn't enough, I also had incredible luck. I couldn't see myself losing as long as we used regular arrows. Just in case, I should ask for a month to practice.

"...Why isn't she replying?"

For some reason, Chae Nayun stopped messaging me. Did she think it was meaningless to bet against someone who wasn't an archer? Looking up, I saw that Rachel had already gone ahead. I quickly caught up as she glanced back at me.

"Haha, I'm also using the portal. I'm going to Wonju."

"...Ah, yes."

We walked side by side without talking. Eventually, we arrived at the fairly empty Cube portal station. Most cadets had left as requested so Cube could conduct a more thorough investigation. Rachel would now take the Seoul portal, while I headed to the Wonju portal.

"Um, if it's okay... can I ask what weapon you used back then?"

Rachel asked before we separated. I guess she found it hard to accept what happened. After all, I killed an assassin that threatened her with only two shots.

"...It's an extremely expensive weapon, and cadets generally have one or more special abilities."

That was all I could say. Rachel stared at me before nodding.

“Thank you again. I’ll bring something back from England as thanks.”

Rachel left towards the Seoul portal.

I arrived in Gangwondo Wonju. The portal station bustled with people during the middle of a weekday. I plowed through the swarm.

“Hajin! Here!”

A man in a well-tailored suit and sunglasses shouted as I arrived outside. Park Soohyuk looked completely different with an HUV next to him. Although it was an older model, I approached with a smile.

“Wow, I almost didn’t recognize you. Looks like you had fun with my money. Maybe you should be investigated for embezzlement.”

“Haha, this is a proper business expense. Get in.”

Park Soohyuk opened the back door as though he had done it a thousand times.

“Are we stopping at the 1km mark again?”

“Yeah, but we’re going to hunt more today.”

“Great, then I’m going.”

Yoo Yeonha promised me an unlimited supply of bullets. I had to hunt as many monsters as possible since I modified the Desert Eagle into an evolving weapon.

“So, how’s the business lately?”

“It’s much better thanks to you. Everything is easier with a car.”

An HUV was a necessity, especially for monster hunting.

“It’s over there, but the crowds have gathered already.”

We arrived at the entrance of the field.

“Let’s get off for now.”

“Yeah.”

Park Soohyuk and I got off to get a permit for our vehicle.

“...Hmm?”

I saw a familiar face in the distance. She would stand out no matter where she went with her long black hair that fluttered in the wind. It shone under the sunlight and her charming black dress also separated her from the sea of people.

Yoo Yeonha observed the field, surrounded by her guild members. Her serious expression made her seem like an adult.

“Oh right.”

I recalled that it was about time Yoo Yeonha came to Wonju’s field for business. In the original story, she became the greatest investor for SH Agency because of Kim Suho. After finding out that Kim Suho contracted with SH Agency, Yoo Yeonha invested an astronomical sum, which turned out incredibly successful. From that point onwards, Park Soohyuk and Yoo Yeonha would walk the royal road.

“What, do you know her?”

“Mm... I do, but let’s just go.”

She seemed busy, so I pretended not to see her.

“Eh?”

Yoo Yeonha spotted me.

“Hello?”

Clack, clack. She approached me in high heels and seemed much taller and more threatening.

“What are you doing here?”

Yoo Yeonha asked at the same eye level.

“I’m here to make money.”

“Mmm, I see.”

Yoo Yeonha glanced at Park Soohyuk next to me. It felt like I needed to introduce them, so I did.

“This is my agent.”

“Ah, nice to meet you. I’m SH Agency’s head manager, Park Soohyuk.”

“I’m Yoo Yeonha. I’m still a cadet.”

“Ah, yes.”

I peeked at the two of them. Although I didn’t intend it, their meeting moved forward by three years. I wasn’t sure about the consequences, but it didn’t seem bad. I also glanced at the four men behind Yoo Yeonha like guards. They all carried high class equipment.

“Ah, they’re members of Essence of the Strait.”

Yoo Yeonha introduced them. The members stood around, not knowing how to react, but Yoo Yeonha’s glare immediately made them bow.

“Essence of the Strait...?”

Disbelief emerged on Park Soohyuk’s face. Essence of the Strait was the second ranked guild. Park Soohyuk never imagined meeting them.

Wiing— My smartwatch rang. A message came from Chae Nayun.

[Haa, what would I gain by betting with someone who doesn't know anything about bows? Just screw off.]

She planned to ignore me, so I provoked her.

[What, you're scared?]

[Ha. You wanna die? I was going easy on you, so don't you...]

[Just like you said, I've never even touched a bow. But if it's you... one month. One month is enough to catch up to your level. Of course, that's strictly in archery.]

I crossed my arms after sending the message. Suddenly, Yoo Yeonha asked.

“...Are you perhaps texting Nayun?”

I stared at her in surprise.

“W-What, how did you know?”

Wasn't I the only one who could hack smartwatches? Yoo Yeonha grinned and projected a hologram from her smartwatch.

[Hey, look what this kid is saying. I'm speechless. S.P.E.E.C.H.L.E.S.S. Do I take this bet?]

Chae Nayun told her friends what I said and asked for advice.

“Aha.”

I laughed and briefly spoke, “Tell her to do it.”

“Eh? Have you used a bow before?”

“Nope, not even once.”

I’ve never touched one. Before coming to this world, I’d never even seen one outside of movies or the Olympics.

“But I only need a month to beat her.”

However, this was a contest of pure skill. My Master Sharpshooter gift specialized in long range weapons, while Chae Nayun’s gift was more relevant to swords. Although grade 7 would be a close call, grade 6 would guarantee my victory.

“How can you be so confident? Isn’t your gift related to guns?”

“...”

I silently stared at Yoo Yeonha and pondered how to answer.

“Tsk, fine. I won’t ask. So sensitive...”

Yoo Yeonha misunderstood and clicked her tongue before I could explain. She stared at Park Soohyuk and his HUV before asking.

“Ah, if you’re here to hunt, can I come with you?”

Chapter 47

After the Trouble (3)

Koong. Koong. Koong. The HUV violently shook every time the tires hit a rock. Just how old was it to not even have a steady driving module? Yoo Yeonha felt shocked and confused.

“Sigh.”

Why did I ask to follow them? She regretted it after just five minutes.

“...So why are you here?” Kim Hajin asked from next to her as she balanced herself in her seat.

Yoo Yeonha retorted, “Vacations are useless if you want to grow and improve.”

“Oh.”

Kim Hajin agreed and simply faced forward. He looked average no matter how many times she saw him. If he wore glasses, he would look like an average salaryman.

“Hmm...”

However, she found one or two things suspicious about him. He was full of secrets. Unfathomable was too grand a word to describe him, but he felt mysterious. Suddenly, she felt her smartwatch vibrate. A message came from Chae Nayun.

[Alright, I'll take on his bet. Looks like he needs to be put in place.]

She sounded quite angry. Yoo Yeonha spoke with a snicker.

“Hey.”

“Hm?”

“Nayun says she’ll do it. The bet.”

Kim Hajin’s smartwatch also vibrated. Yoo Yeonha was curious.

“Show me too.”

Kim Hajin displayed the message.

[Sure, let’s fight. I’ll give you a month. I’ll bet everything that I win. What are you going to bet?]

A duel between an archer and a gunner. Yoo Yeonha found it ridiculous, but also intriguing.

“By the way, why are you doing this?”

Why did he keep provoking Chae Nayun?

Kim Hajin spoke as though it was an obvious truth. “Chae Nayun’s real talent isn’t in bows.”

Yoo Yeonha couldn’t understand.

“If she gives up the bow, she can grow much further.”

Yoo Yeonha felt he sounded somewhat bitter. Then she slowly understood. Criticism also meant he cared. He had to carefully pay attention to spot her flaws. Just how long has he watched Chae Nayun to be so sure? Three months? Half a year? A year? Or perhaps even longer? Come to think of it...

Kim Hajin and Chae Nayun were in the same third year class at the Military Agent Academy. They would have been only 11 years old. Could it be that for six years, this guy...

Clunk!

“Ak!”

The HUV violently shook and stopped. Yoo Yeonha hit her head against the front seat.

“W-What’s going on!”

Yoo Yeonha wasn’t as experienced as Park Soohyuk and Kim Hajin. Park Soohyuk turned off the engine and spoke.

“This is the monster point. We’re getting off.”

“Monster point?”

“Ah, yes, it’s a place where many monsters appear...”

“I know what it is, but how do you know this is a monster point?”

“Monsters become more active near the end of April. The weaker ones will be pushed out, and this is a natural escape route. There are a few more places, but they’re all famous and crowded,” Park Soohyuk replied without hesitation as Yoo Yeonha stared at him in surprise. Her gaze fell back onto her smartwatch because of a message.

“Hmm... Well, I’ll be going now.”

“Huh? Didn’t you want to hunt with us?”

“Something came up just now. Plus, I only said I wanted to come with you, not that we would hunt together.”

Yoo Yeonha got out of the car. Essence of the Strait members came running from a distance.

“Then I’ll be off.”

“Yeah, see you later.”

“See you back at Cube.”

Yoo Yeonha turned back after looking again at Kim Hajin's average appearance.

"Ah, by the way..."

She turned around as though she forgot something and reached out to Park Soohyuk.

"Can I get your business card?"

I focused on hunting and training for a week. I went to Wonju every day and hunted 15 monsters per day on average. The combination of aether and the Desert Eagle was undoubtedly overpowered. Even if I didn't aim at any vital point, I could one or two shot any monster under low-intermediate rank, grade 6.

"Hm... It's not going up by much."

Wednesday arrived, and classes would resume in two days. Cadets returned and the archery bet between Chae Nayun and me had already spread.

[Master Sharpshooter] [Low-intermediate rank] [Spirit attribute] [Evolving — Grade 7] [Proficiency EXP 75%]

Master Sharpshooter was only 25% away from grade 6. I shot monsters for an entire week, but it didn't even increase by 10% as the requirements rose exponentially.

"Will I be able to reach grade 6 in a month?"

I had to win the bet, but I felt uneasy at just grade 7.

Drrrr—

The room suddenly rumbled. Was it an earthquake? I quickly looked around, but it felt like I was at the center of it.

“Eh?”

The seed on my desk fiercely shook. I noticed that the blood had disappeared from the gauze I wrapped it in.

“Is it hungry?”

The shaking suddenly stopped when I asked. I was dumbstruck, but took out another gauze soaked with Rachel’s blood. Immediately, the seed happily trembled before burying itself into the gauze.

“Interesting.”

Was Rachel’s blood that delicious?

“Oh right.”

Soon, the traveling club would go on their next trip. I checked my smartwatch for an announcement.

[Traveling Club – There will be a trip this weekend.]

Unfortunately, the academics club ended because of Yun Hyun, and the hunting club was suspended because of Sven. I only had the traveling club left. Everything had happened according to the original story.

During this trip, another incident would occur. The traveling club would get caught up in an assassination.

The traveling club’s leader was kind and gentle, but his naivety made him the target of a French conman. The conman disguised himself as a wealthy businessman and coaxed the club leader into bringing the members to his giant mansion, saying that he would pay for all expenses. The club leader agreed after visiting France and enjoying his time.

However, the wealthy businessman was an infamous conman constantly under threat of assassination by individuals he previously conned. Although he didn’t care because most were powerless, he accidentally provoked a dangerous group called Shadow Step.

— Your life will be taken when Saturday turns to Sunday.

He received an assassination notice from Shadow Step, a notorious group known for targeting criminals.

The conman despaired. He couldn't receive help from the Hero Association as a wanted criminal. He also didn't have enough time to liquidate his assets and hire mercenaries. After pondering, he invited cadets to protect himself over the weekend. However, the event also held another secret.

“Hmm.”

I should be correct since the incident was supposed to happen a week after the combat exams.

Ding dong—

An alert from Violet Banquet popped up on the corner of my laptop screen. I clicked on it and received my first customer as the Truth Agency.

— Here is detailed information on someone I wish to find. He's an evil man who conned my family and ran away. Can you tell me his location?

The stereotypical appearance of a conman with a beer belly, snake-like eyes, and chubby cheeks. This man was Belbet, the assassination target who would orchestrate the traveling club incident.

In a dark, abandoned factory, the Chameleon Troupe gathered for the first time in a while. Ten shadows stretched across the floor. All ten colors besides Black gathered to discuss the open seat, which had been empty for three years.

The shadows sat around a round table and watched a video projected by Droon. Droon's gift could project or materialize anything he experienced with his five senses. It showed a person that he had observed. The ten shadows watched the video, some with curiosity and some with disapproval.

[KWANG—!]

“Oh geez, that surprised me.”

A thunderous gunshot with a brilliant white flash marked the end of the video. The leader of the shadows called for a discussion.

“Raise your hand if you see potential.”

However, the voting didn't immediately begin as a high-pitched female voice quickly cut in.

“By the way, Boss...”

Boss stared at the beautiful Caucasian woman.

“When did we need to meet to analyze some greenhorn?”

Her complaint clashed with a man's gentle voice.

“I think he has potential. Most importantly, I like that he doesn't have parents or significant others.”

“What does that have to do with anything?”

“If you don't have anyone by your side, you start to indulge in other things. We might not be able to give honor, but we can give money.”

The Chameleon Troupe was one of the few groups on the Hero Association's violet list. However, all their members remained anonymous.

The Chameleon Troupe guaranteed the freedom of its members. They could live their lives however they wished. The members only gathered to complete missions.

“So what, you want to recruit him? A kid who can be sent flying with a little nudge?”

“We’re strictly talking about his potential...”

“Quiet.”

Boss crushed the rising debate between the two members.

“From this young man...”

In truth, the Chameleon Troupe functioned like a mercenary group. Of course, their goal was much grander than just money. They always did what was necessary to achieve their goal. Currently, it was to kill the traitor.

“I confirmed the power of anti-magic.”

Boss glanced at Droon as he projected another video. The young man used an ordinary gun to fight an opponent using qi reinforcement. When his bullet shattered the qi reinforcement, the air felt heavier than before.

“...It’s illogical to think the same thing would work against that guy just because he managed to break a qi reinforcement on that level.”

“As I said, Jain, Boss didn’t say we were recruiting him right away. She asked if he had potential. At least in my eyes, he seems to have it.”

Jain glared at the man after his snarky rebuttal.

“Fine, let’s say we bring him in after he grows up. Black is the only color left, so is he getting that seat?”

Black wasn’t a color suitable for a greenhorn. It belonged to the man who betrayed the previous boss. The color black always belonged to the strongest member. This rule remained unchanged for over 20 years.

“Then I’ll take over that color.”

A giant man spoke up. Cheok Jungyeong had stayed silent this entire time.

“Rejected. You’re too stupid.”

“I also reject. I’m stronger.”

“Then what do you bastards want to do?”

“Aren’t there others? Are we just going to ignore Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak?”

“We’re going to vote on them next. This discussion is for who we’ll select as candidates.”

The members who had remained silent began to speak up one by one. Voices overlapped and caused a headache for Boss. She spoke in a subdued voice.

“Show of hands.”

Everyone quieted down.

“We’re voting.”

The troupe members voted 8:2. Jain already voiced her objection, and Cheok Jungyeong didn’t like the young man. The rest of the members voted in favor.

“Hmph.”

Jain snorted in dissatisfaction.

“By the way, Jain, take this. It’s an invitation letter for the VVIP masquerade party in France.”

“Oh, stealing that ring, right? Don’t worry.”

Jain didn’t sulk for long as she took the invitation with a bright face.

Chapter 48

Tit for Tat (1)

“Huuu.”

I took a deep breath outside the classroom. It was Friday, and cadets had returned after all the chaos. I nervously opened the door. Several gazes fell on me as I took my usual seat and heard them whispering about my bet with Chae Nayun. I tried to ignore them while burying my face in a textbook. At least the bullying stopped since I beat Kim Horak.

“Grades for the written exams are out.”

Yi Yeonghan walked in with large scrolls in his arms. He hung them up one by one on the wall. It listed the results for each theory class and a ranking of the total marks. Everyone groaned as they looked over the scrolls and turned towards me.

Rank 1. Kim Hajin

Rank 2. Rachel

My name stood at the top of every exam and the overall rankings. Not just in Veritas, but the entire academy.

“Cough.”

It felt slightly awkward as I stole a glance at Rachel. She sat behind me with her face resting down on her desk. I faintly heard her sigh and murmured in English, “I should have worked harder.”

“I hope everyone knows that we have new classes.”

Yi Yeonghan added.

“Check the announcements if you haven’t. Starting from today, Fridays will have two classes.”

Classes changed after the first semester midterms for freshmen because Cube wanted cadets to experience a wide variety. In addition, magicians would also join the second semester, and cadets could choose their own courses. Typically, they took classes for their roles.

I turned on my smartwatch and saw that today's new class was [Practical Magic and Intermediate Magic Power Control].

Drrrrk— The professor for phenomenon realm analysis walked in. The noisy classroom fell silent.

“Take your seats.”

The professor peeked at the scrolls and grinned.

“I’m sure you’ve all seen the exam results.”

The cadets slightly groaned.

“Now, now, your tests were much easier than the ones I gave to college students. Also, cadet Kim Hajin.”

Suddenly, the professor pointed at me. Everyone else also followed his finger.

“An unconventional outlook and logical judgment, I could sense true wisdom from your answers. Frankly, I can’t believe you’re only 16. You’re good enough to be writing thesis papers for graduation.”

I would have simply been happy if the professor’s praise had ended there. After all, it was the first time someone praised me for doing well on an exam.

“Since today is the first class after exams, I will give a quick lecture using cadet Kim Hajin’s answer sheet and call it a day.”

He caught me completely off guard by displaying my answer sheet on the screen.

“Now, take a look at this. Hajin wrote, If monsters had linguistic abilities...”

The class continued as I covered my face and felt it growing hot.

It was now 3:30 and time for Friday’s second class. Veritas class gathered at the magic library, where the chief magician waited in a lecture room.

“Hello, I am the chief magician from Seoul Magic Tower, Kim Hyojun. I will teach you practical magic and magic power control every Friday from 3:30 to 6. However, today’s class will only be 30 minutes.”

The chief magician introduced himself with a gentle smile. However, I couldn’t help but frown since I knew he was a prick. He led a successful life as the third generation of a magic clan, but wasn’t talented enough to become the chief magician. Although he landed the position thanks to his clan’s lobbying, that was his limit. In the end, he turned to education, but his poor character would be problematic. Eventually, he would even fearlessly touch Chae Nayun while pretending to teach her. Fortunately, he never contracted with a devil.

[Kim Hyojun – Currently considering a contract with a devil.]

But he might soon.

“You may be thinking, Why should I learn magic when I’m not a magician? That’s valid, but I’m sure you know, qi reinforcement and sword qi are an extension of magic.”

Kim Hyojun demonstrated with his magic power. The soft jellylike magic power instantly hardened when he concentrated.

“Now, if you physically reinforce your magic power, that becomes qi reinforcement or sword qi. However, if you refine your magic power with some calculations...”

A pink flame rose from his magic power. Cadets exclaimed in awe.

“It becomes magic.”

Kim Hyojun smiled.

“Even if you can’t wield magic of this level, you will learn to use more practical magic or wield things like qi reinforcement and sword qi more naturally. Since today is the first class, we will only go over our goals.”

Suddenly, a blue sphere the size of a ping-pong ball shot up from his palm.

“This is necessary magic to learn before entering any dungeon. It’s called a light sphere and will guide you in many dark areas. It may look simple, but to wield it skillfully...”

Kim Hyojun gave a complicated explanation. To simplify, we had to compress magic power and air into a spherical shape that lights up.

“Now, before I teach you, try it yourself.”

Cadets began to emit their magic power. I stared blankly at my desk before joining my hands and thinking, Appear, sphere of light. Appear, sphere of light.

Stigma’s magic power didn’t require intense focus or complex calculations. Soon, magic power flowed into my hands and formed a white sphere of light. The cute sphere floated around my palm.

Wiing—

My smartwatch vibrated. Startled, I canceled the light sphere.

“Please turn off your smartwatches during class.”

Kim Hyojun's disgruntled gaze fell on me.

"Sorry."

I slightly bowed and saw a message from Yoo Yeonha.

[Um, we can't do something like that yet. If you show people what you just did, they'll misunderstand.]

"What."

I quickly scanned the room and found Yoo Yeonha sitting diagonally from me. We made eye contact, and she smiled while mouthing silently.

Amazing. You did that after listening to his explanation once?

I glanced around me after her sarcastic remark. Less than half of the cadets could compress their magic power into a sphere, and even those who succeeded couldn't maintain the form for long. No one was even close to making the sphere shine.

"W-Whoa!"

A nameless cadet in the front row suddenly exclaimed. A blue light shone from the sphere in Kim Suho's hand. Other cadets expressed their shock as Kim Hyojun's face stiffened. He suddenly snapped after staring at Kim Suho's light sphere.

"Stop."

Oh right, this was why Kim Hyojun envied Kim Suho. He scowled, but quickly straightened his face before continuing in a kind tone.

"You'll be wasting magic power if you make it like that. Now, pay attention everyone. I'll give a more detailed explanation."

Kim Hyojun began to give Kim Suho a private lesson. It seemed he wanted to test Kim Suho's limits. Yoo Yeonha sent me another message as I watched quietly.

[It must look like child's play since you can easily make a brilliant white light while someone else is praised for only a faint glow.]

“...What is she saying.”

I ignored Yoo Yeonha's strange comment.

I arrived at the traveling club's meeting place the next day at 12:30 P.M. on Saturday. Most had already gathered and seemed excited about the overnight trip.

“Hajin is here too. Alright, let's form our teams before setting off.”

The club leader, Oh Hanhyun, took out a box for drawing lots like before. According to the original story, Kim Suho would pair up with Yoo Yeonha. I didn't care about the rest.

“First, Suho? Please step forward. You'll be drawing first.”

I was still a bit nervous. Hopefully, everything would match the original story. Now, who will Kim Suho pick?

I stepped into Paris for the first time. Thanks to the Seoul-Paris portal, it only took ten seconds to arrive.

“It really is different.”

The scenery resembled the pictures, but also looked different from my old world. State-of-the-art buildings surrounded the Eiffel Tower, and cadets from Paris Hero Academy walked around with swords and spears. For the record, France led the European Union in my novel because of their well-operated hero system.

“Korean cadets, over here!”

Someone called us over as we looked at the Paris scenery. We spotted a limousine in the direction of the voice. The club leader, Oh Hanhyun, walked up to the limousine with a hearty laugh.

“Nice to meet you. You must be Raymond.”

“Yes, nice to meet you.”

“Can we drop off our bags before touring the city?”

Raymond nodded with a smile. We stuffed our bags into the limousine.

“Now, we’ll travel in the pairs we formed.”

I paired with Chae Nayun. I felt good that Kim Suho went with Yoo Yeonha like the original, but I wasn’t too comfortable with Chae Nayun.

Oh Hanhyun left with his girlfriend, who he brought along with his authority as the club leader. They planned on attending the masquerade party later today.

“...”

Chae Nayun stared at Kim Suho with a wistful look before walking up to me.

“Hey, where do you want to go?”

“I’m getting lunch.”

I had already researched several gourmet places since I was excited about my first European trip. After looking through several pamphlets, I even used the Book of Truth to find the best restaurant.

“Lunch? I guess it’s about that time. Where are you going?”

“You’re coming with me?”

Chae Nayun didn’t seem to mind. I was surprised, considering the rumors that she practiced archery with pictures of my face on the targets.

“We drew lots, and what’s done is done. So what, do you want to split up?”

“Oh right.”

Chae Nayun had no sense of direction. She would easily get lost like a five year old in a forest. She could find her way home with her magic power and scent, but foreign places were like mazes to her.

“What’s right?”

“Nothing. Just follow me.”

Chae Nayun crossed her arms as though she doubted my manliness. Then she pouted and curtly spoke, “And how do you know where anything is?”

“I know better than you.”

The Book of Truth showed only two restaurants. A cheap, delicious restaurant and an expensive one worth its cost. I felt okay with either, but the latter should suit Chae Nayun more. I turned on my GPS to the expensive restaurant.

“Follow me.”

“Hmm... Okay, but I’m letting you know, I’m a really picky eater.”

“I know.”

She acted like a tomboy, but because she ate only the highest quality food from a young age, her palate was more refined than most nobles.

“...How do you know that?”

I ignored her and walked to the restaurant as Chae Nayun followed like a cat. After about 15 minutes, we arrived at [Goût Céleste]. I had no clue what it meant, but anyone could see it was fancy.

“Oh, this is the place?”

“Ooh.”

We walked to the entrance until a man in a suit stopped us.

“@!#$!@#$!@#$”

We couldn’t understand because he spoke in French. Chae Nayun tilted her head and asked, “What?”

The man cleared his voice and asked again in Korean.

“Do you have a reservation?”

“Oh, he speaks Korean. Hey, you didn’t make a reservation, right? Don’t you know you need to make reservations for high-end restaurants?”

I silently opened my laptop. I didn’t make a reservation, but I could hack into their reservation list. I paid a cheap price to access the restaurant’s private server using the laptop’s internet function. Then I quickly found the reservation list and added my name around a 1 P.M. slot.

“Hey!”

Chae Nayun shouted. I took my eyes off the laptop and saw her right in front of me. I couldn’t spot a single flaw in her smooth skin.

“Eh? W-What?”

“Reservation. Did you make one?”

Chae Nayun asked again, and I nodded.

“Yeah, I did.”

“...Really?”

“Tell him my name.”

Chae Nayun looked doubtful, but approached the man.

“Kim Hajin. Is his name there?”

The man checked his smartwatch. He found my name and let us through with a smile.

“Yes, Kim Hajin and one companion. Welcome.”

“...Oh wow.”

Chae Nayun looked at me in surprise. Then we walked in together.

“I like the atmosphere.”

I agreed. The interior looked as imposing as the exterior. Calm classical music flowed, while every decoration appeared delicate and elegant. The customers inside wore dresses and suits despite it being lunchtime.

“Follow me.”

We followed the waiter and sat next to a window.

“Welcome to Goût Céleste. Do you need help with the menu?”

“You handle it.”

I let Chae Nayun decide. She skillfully looked over the menu and finished ordering. Silence descended once the waiter left. We awkwardly stared at each other until I looked out the window.

“...What?”

Suddenly, I spotted an unexpected individual.

Chapter 49

Tit for Tat (2)

A familiar face flashed by the window. Although she wore a mask and sunglasses, I saw through her disguise. It was Yun Seung-Ah, the vice-leader of Korea's number one guild. She walked past with a companion. This never occurred in the original story, and I wondered why she was here.

"Wait for me."

"What? Hey, where are you going!?"

I ran out of the restaurant. Thankfully, Yun Seung-Ah didn't walk fast, so I caught and grabbed her shoulder.

"Hey."

"Huak!"

Yun Seung-Ah jumped with an odd scream. She turned and flinched when she saw me. She definitely recognized me.

"...W-Who are you?"

However, she feigned ignorance. Was she here on a mission? I looked at the Caucasian man next to her, but didn't recognize him. Naturally, I turned on my laptop. An alert came up as expected.

[Settings change – An ill relationship has formed between Jain and Yun Seung-Ah through an anonymous informant.]

They had a cat and dog relationship that I knew better than anyone else. Jain held the Chameleon Troupe's yellow seat, and her gift specialized in disguise and stealing. She disguised herself as Yun

Seung-Ah's old classmate and entered Creator's Sacred Grace out of boredom. After several events, the two grew incredibly close. Eventually, Jain became Yun Seung-Ah's only friend, but betrayed her. While fighting djinns for an artifact, she critically wounded Yun Seung-Ah and took the artifact for herself.

I knew Jain would infiltrate the VIP masquerade party to steal a particular ring. The ring wasn't worth much yet. However, its value would skyrocket once its potential was unlocked.

Eventually, the ring would belong to Chae Nayun. When she switched to the sword, her father gifted it to her after buying it from the black market.

"Um, I don't know who you are, but we have to go."

Yun Seung-Ah denied knowing me, and the man next to her separated us. He stood taller than me by a head. However, the man was actually a she. My eyes saw through her disguise too. Jain Valerin. She disguised herself as Yun Seung-Ah's subordinate.

"...Ah."

Yun Seung-Ah stood next to her fated enemy, but didn't even recognize her. I couldn't help but feel sorry.

"I must have mistaken you for someone else."

I bowed apologetically and backed away for now since we would meet at the masquerade.

"That crazy bastard..."

Chae Nayun wondered what illness of his relapsed this time as Kim Hajin ran out, but she didn't overthink it since he always acted strangely. Honestly, she was more concerned about someone else with another girl. She agonized over what to do and held up her smartwatch.

“...Hey Yeonha, where are you?”

She called Yoo Yeonha, who paired with Kim Suho.

— Me? I’m shopping. Why?

Where was she exactly? Chae Nayun feigned indifference and asked.

“What shop?”

— I’m buying some clothes.

“A-Alone?”

— No, with Kim Suho.

Chae Nayun felt uneasy.

“...What are you doing with him?”

— Hm? I’m just making him try on some clothes. He’s got a model’s face, but you know how he dresses. So I’m buying him some clothes.

“What? Why are you buying him clothes!?”

Chae Nayun inadvertently shouted. The other customers looked at her as she awkwardly lowered her head.

— Huh? What, I can’t? It’s for the masquerade party later.

“No, not that you can’t, but you know... it’s expensive. You have to save money when you can. If you buy him things, he’ll get used to it.”

—... Um, sure. So Nayun, where are you?

“I’m at a restaurant.”

— With Kim Hajin?

“Yeah, he brought me here, but not many restaurants suit my taste. I’ll just endure it like Military Agent Academy’s lunch.”

Chae Nayun recalled the painful memories when cadets had no choice but to eat the Military Agent Academy’s food. She would starve if she didn’t, but also felt queasy for an entire day if she did. Chae Nayun lightly sighed.

— Really? What’s the restaurant called?

Chae Nayun spotted the sign, but didn’t know how to read it.

“I don’t know. Hold on.”

The waiter brought their appetizer.

“Excuse me, how do you read that?”

“Yes?”

“The restaurant’s name.”

“Ah, it’s Goût Céleste.”

“Can you say that again here?”

Chae Nayun held up her smartwatch to the surprised waiter as he pronounced the name.

“Goût Céleste.”

“Thank you.”

“Um, have you perhaps not heard about our restaurant?”

“Hm? Ah, no.”

Chae Nayun dismissed the waiter and continued speaking with Yoo

Yeonha.

“Hey, did you hear that?”

— Did I hear that right? Goût Céleste? The Flavor of Heaven?

Chae Nayun didn’t know whether Yoo Yeonha meant the same place, but she pronounced it like the waiter.

“Yeah, I think so. Why? Is this place famous?”

— Kim Hajin brought you there? How?

“Hah?”

Chae Nayun tilted her head at Yoo Yeonha’s odd reaction.

— I tried to make a reservation and failed. Even with VIP membership, you need to make a reservation at least a week in advance.

“Really? Is this place that famous?”

— Sigh...

Yoo Yeonha felt frustrated by the innocent question. Chae Nayun had no idea how famous the restaurant was because she didn’t care about such things.

— That’s De Jubon’s restaurant. You know, the cooking hero.

“Ah?”

Chae Nayun had heard that name before. All sorts of heroes and gifts existed in the world, but De Jubon stood out because he could move people with just his food. They said that djinns and heroes were all equal in front of De Jubon’s food.

— Goût Céleste in Paris is his flagship restaurant, so it should be him cooking and not his apprentices.

“...”

Was this place that amazing? Chae Nayun was speechless.

— Oh right, Nayun, do you remember being in the same class as Kim Hajin during the third year of Military Agent Academy?

“Eh? Was I?”

— You didn’t know?

“No, not at all. How am I supposed to know that?”

She couldn’t recall because she only focused on training.

— I see. Well, since you’re there, enjoy the food. Ah, don’t forget to take pictures of every dish before eating. I want to see them later.

Yoo Yeonha sounded jealous.

“Uh, um, yeah.”

— Okay, I’m hanging up.

Should I be happy or uncomfortable? The call ended before Chae Nayun could make up her mind. She stared at the appetizer in front of her. The simple soup and salad glistened like jewels. Chae Nayun picked up her spoon and sipped the soup. Her eyes widened and her body trembled the moment her tongue touched it.

“...”

She became speechless. So this was why they called De Jubon the world’s greatest cook. The flavor of mana shocked her refined palate. Finally, Kim Hajin returned.

“It’s already here?”

He sat back down and picked up his spoon. Chae Nayun wanted to ask him many questions. First, how did he manage to make a reservation? Yoo Yeonha said even VIP members needed to reserve a week in advance. Even if he was VIP, the trip was only announced four days ago. Oh Hanhyun couldn't have told him beforehand. A thought flashed across her mind. She recalled her conversation with Kim Hajin twenty or so minutes ago.

— Hm... Okay, but I'm letting you know, I'm a really picky eater.

— I know.

Kim Hajin knew I was a picky eater. In other words, he must have planned on taking me here. Even though they randomly paired, he could have manipulated the results with the club leader.

“Hmm...”

Chae Nayun glared at Kim Hajin.

“Hey, where did you go?”

“Hm? Oh, I thought I saw someone I knew, but I was mistaken.”

“You know someone in Paris?”

“Something like that,” Kim Hajin briefly replied.

“How did you make a reservation for this place? I heard it's famous. Did this acquaintance help you?”

Chae Nayun noticed his hands slightly shook.

“Um, yeah. Anyways, aren't you going to eat?”

Kim Hajin quickly changed the subject.

“I will.”

The lunch continued as the two of them ate in silence. The waiter brought the main entrée once they finished the appetizers.

Chae Nayun's suspicion quickly melted away at the transcendental flavors of De Jubon.

"Whew, I'm stuffed."

Chae Nayun and I left the restaurant. As expected of an entire course, delicious food continuously streamed in for over an hour. Of course, I could have stopped, but the food was too tempting. I thanked this world for allowing me to taste this heavenly flavor.

"...Hey."

Chae Nayun suddenly called me as I patted my full belly. She also looked satisfied.

"What."

"Thanks for the food."

"...Don't be. You paid for it."

Chae Nayun insisted on paying since I made the reservation. The bill came up to 700 euros.

"The membership fee must be expensive, so it's the least I can do."

Chae Nayun glanced at me from top to bottom. I didn't know what she meant, but I nodded understandingly.

"Right."

"...So, where are you going now?"

I glanced at my watch and saw it was almost 3:00. Since the masquerade started at 5:00, I needed to scout the venue.

“Do you want to split up now?”

I had to leave Chae Nayun to prepare for the masquerade party.

“Yeah, that’s a good idea. I’ll go first.”

Chae Nayun nodded and headed off in the opposite direction.

“Hello. Yeah, Yeonha, where are you? I’ll meet up with you guys.”

I could hear Chae Nayun’s voice from a distance with my gift.

— What about Kim Hajin?

Yoo Yeonha spoke from the other line.

“We just split up.”

— Huh? Why? We still have some time left.

“It just felt awkward alone with him. I don’t know what to say either. By the way, can I also go to the masquerade party you were talking about?”

Chae Nayun’s words caught my attention. The masquerade party... wasn’t in that direction.

Yun Seung-Ah entered to a nearby café. She took a seat and sighed after ordering two cups of coffee.

“Whew, that surprised me. Why did he pop out of there...?”

Her heart pounded from the earlier encounter.

“Who was that?”

“A cadet. His name is Kim Hajin.”

“...Is he any good?”

Yun Seung-Ah firmly nodded at her subordinate’s question.

“He’s all the talk recently. I think it was last week? Cube released a video of his duel to the guild community. He shattered a qi reinforcement with a single bullet. I’m pretty annoyed since I was the first one to notice him,” Yun Seung-Ah complained.

“Haha... That aside, do you think that woman will show up at the masquerade party?”

“Yeah, she will. I know it.”

Yun Seung-Ah confidently replied as her subordinate frowned.

“...How can you be so sure? Was it the informant?”

“No, that woman just likes parties, especially if there are things to steal.”

“I see...”

The subordinate answered somewhat bitterly. Yun Seung-Ah stared at him and asked, “Why, do you want to know the informant’s name?”

“...No.”

“Honestly, I don’t know either.”

Yun Seung-Ah smiled as she leaned in her chair.

“It’s not just one or two people who hate that woman.”

That's good. The subordinate thinly smiled and asked another question.

“...What will you do if you capture her?”

Yun Seung-Ah's answer was simple.

“What will I do? Nothing. I'll just hand her over to the association. Ah, let's get going. It's 4, and I still have to buy a dress.”

Chapter 50

Tit for Tat (3)

The masquerade party took place at a Paris castle constructed by a wealthy magnate. I positioned myself on a hill overlooking the castle. If possible, I hoped everything would proceed according to the original storyline.

5 P.M.

The sun had yet to set, but the party was already underway. Luxurious cars arrived, and people in flamboyant dresses and masks entered. I checked Kim Suho and Yoo Yeonha's location by hacking their smartwatches.

5:30 P.M.

Two people exited a limousine. Yun Seung-Ah and Jain wore masks resembling a fox and a tiger. They followed the chauffeur into the castle.

Finally, Kim Suho and Yoo Yeonha arrived. The formal wear accentuated their perfect figures, and they stood out even with their faces hidden.

“Hmm.”

I couldn't help but feel that my face was too bare. I should also wear a mask if I needed to interfere and conceal my identity.

Although I didn't prepare a mask, I could just use aether to form one since it could transform into any equipment.

I thought about a design and recalled the movie Black Panther. Although it resembled more of a helmet, I transformed aether into it and put it on. Then it adjusted itself to fit around my head snugly.

6 P.M.

The air became chilly as the sun set. The castle looked even more beautiful under the glow of the setting sun. I carefully observed the interior. I could see and hear everything as if I was inside. This came from the synergy between [Thousand-Mile Eyes] and [Observation and Reading].

— I don't know how to dance.

— So what, you're going to just stand there after coming all this way?

— Well, I guess I'm a quick learner.

Kim Suho followed Yoo Yeonha's lead as they danced to a classical piece. Meanwhile, I discovered a strange movement of magic power on the other side of the castle from a magic portal.

"I knew it wouldn't be so easy."

Only djinns could make artificial portals. They had to be beloved by their contracted devil to have enough magic power for a magic portal. An alert popped up on my laptop.

[Homer's Ring – Mythical grade artifact. It didn't make sense that only a few people would aim for it just because it hadn't fully awakened.]

[Modified setting – The djinn group, Evil Society, will interfere in the story.]

The situation became complicated. I looked for Jain and spotted her infiltrating the underground vault. She had already taken out the security guards.

— Let's see...

Jain's gift made iris scanners, fingerprint scanners, and password locks all useless. She easily opened the vault and stole a blue diamond and a ring. Then she placed them into her magic pouch and returned to the masquerade party.

So far, everything happened according to the original story. The only difference was Evil Society. It would all be over if Jain safely escaped. However...

— Yoren, where are you going?

Yun Seung-Ah appeared out of nowhere and grabbed Jain's arm. Jain momentarily flinched, but quickly pretended to be Yoren.

— I went to the bathroom.

— I have something to discuss with you. Follow me.

Yun Seung-Ah grabbed Jain's wrist. The exit was right in front of her, but Jain obediently followed.

“Um, vice-leader?”

Jain followed her to an empty room on the second floor. The worn room only had a single bed and some dimly lit lanterns. Clearly, the place harbored secret love affairs.

“W-Why here?”

“You know why.”

Acting coquettishly, Yun Seung-Ah pushed him onto the bed. While Yoren stared at her, she closed the door and pulled her hair up in a ponytail. The real Yoren would have been thrilled.

“I, um...”

Yun Seung-Ah mounted Jain in a somewhat lewd position. Then she slowly took off Jain's mask and lowered her face to his.

"Yoren..."

Yun Seung-Ah's breath caressed Jain's face, but Jain felt the slight killing intent.

"You won't trick me a second time."

Yun Seung-Ah shoved her hand under the bedsheet.

Shiing—

A well-sharpened sword glistened in the dim light. Jain quickly pushed Yun Seung-Ah off.

"Vice-leader, what are you—"

Yun Seung-Ah's sword struck before she could finish. Jain used an emergency dagger to block the attack. The weight and size of the weapons vastly differed, but the density of magic power enveloping them was equal.

BOOM!

The surroundings shook from the fierce collision.

"You're making a mistake, vice-leader... Uk!"

Yun Seung-Ah lunged towards Jain with a kick as Jain continued to feign ignorance. She pounced after Jain like a ferocious beast once the kick sent Jain flying. Although Jain bought some time running around, Yun Seung-Ah was more tenacious and nimble.

"Ak!"

Eventually, Yun Seung-Ah stood over Jain and prepared to strike when a whip suddenly flew in and restrained her sword.

“A lover’s quarrel shouldn’t be so noisy.”

Yun Seung-Ah and Jain turned in the direction of the elegant voice. A girl wearing a cat mask had entered before they noticed. It was Yoo Yeonha.

“I am a hero cadet from Cube.”

She went upstairs to find a bathroom, but heard metal clashing. She would have normally ignored it, but she grew tired of Kim Suho’s clumsy dancing and wanted to improve her image as a Korean cadet in a foreign country.

“I’ll make sure there’s no bloodshed if you put your weapon down.”

Yoo Yeonha added strength to her whip as she leisurely spoke. Her whip snatched onto Yun Seung-Ah’s sword, but Yun Seung-Ah ignited her magic power and scorched Yoo Yeonha’s whip into cinders.

“...Oh.”

Yoo Yeonha took a few steps back in shock.

“Uh...”

I, I got too cocky just because I was in France. I should have known that Korea isn't the only country with powerful individuals.

Yoo Yeonha felt her lips dry. She hoped the woman’s sinister sword qi wouldn’t aim for her and quickly bowed at a ninety-degree angle.

“I will be on my way now. Please do continue what you were doing.”

Yoo Yeonha stealthily backed away before making a run for it.

“DIE!”

The fight continued. Yun Seung-Ah’s sword repeatedly struck down. Lightning crackled, and flames ignited each time. The roaring attracted everyone's attention, and security guards rushed to the room.

“Don't just watch! Help! Uwaak!”

Jain tried her best to withstand Yun Seung-Ah's demon-like attacks with her short dagger. However, she felt more cornered as time passed. Finally, Jain became desperate enough to ask the spectators for help. However, the security guards could never dream of interfering in such a fierce battle.

“Uk!”

Finally, Jain's dagger broke in half. As Yun Seung-Ah prepared her final strike, someone stole a security guard's sword.

A single streak of light shot through the air and cut between Jain and Yun Seung-Ah. Kim Suho blocked Yun Seung-Ah's flame sword with a mere security guard's sword.

“Who are you? Back off before I cut you down.”

Kim Suho didn't budge at Yun Seung-Ah's warning. He wanted to become a hero to protect others. Her threat couldn't shake his conviction so easily.

“I refuse.”

“...Don't say I didn't warn you.”

They couldn't recognize each other because of the masks.

“I don't know why you want to kill him, but...”

“Move!”

“Uuk!”

The current Yun Seung-Ah didn't know mercy. She kicked Kim Suho's solar plexus without hesitation as he fell to one knee.

“Ah, hey! You stop right there!”

Thanks to Kim Suho, Jain found an opening and jumped out the window.

“See you later, crazy bitch... Eh?”

However, her attempt failed. From beneath the window, a thick darkness rose and swallowed her. Then it spat her back into the room.

“...”

The furious Yun Seung-Ah, the injured Kim Suho, and Yoo Yeonha all held their breath as the figure of a man emerged from the darkness.

“Damn it.”

Chae Nayun compared her surroundings to the map on her smartwatch. After every few steps, she stopped to check her watch before continuing. Eventually, she saw a familiar sign.

[Goût Céleste]

“What!? This is where I ate lunch!”

She raged after arriving in the same place.

“I can’t believe this.”

She fumed at her smartwatch. The problem lay with the map if a user got lost after referring to it.

“What company made this! Damn it...”

She flipped over her smartwatch and saw the word Daehyun on the back. It was her father's company.

“...”

Chae Nayun called Yoo Yeonha once again.

“Why isn't she picking up!”

* * *

“So this is the item containing ancient wisdom...”

The djinn who appeared from the darkness held up a ring that faintly glowed red from the setting sun. It was the ring Jain had placed in her magic pouch.

“When did you take... Ak!”

Jain muttered despondently after checking her magic pouch. Yun Seung-Ah ran up to her and grabbed her by her hair before pointing her sword at the djinn.

“Put that down.”

“Haha.”

The djinn smiled magnanimously. Yun Seung-Ah grew slightly nervous at its inhuman appearance with reddish-black skin and red eyes. A djinn strayed further from human appearance the more a devil consumed it. From his appearance, Yun Seung-Ah could estimate his strength.

“This item isn't something that suits humans like you.”

A few days ago, Evil Society confirmed the item's location and potential through an informant. Homer's Ring was a cradle of wisdom that amplified all abilities involving magic power. They didn't expect someone else to steal it, but all was well since it ended up in their hands.

“Now then.”

When the djinn was about to put away the ring in satisfaction...

Whish—

A streak of light broke through the window and snatched it away.

“W-What!?”

The djinn screamed and turned to where the ring flew. He caught sight of someone on a faraway hill holding onto a wire-like object. Kim Hajin smiled from behind his beast-like mask.

Chapter 51

Change of Heart (1)

— So this is that ancient artifact...

The Evil Society's djinn had snatched the ring. The chances of Yun Seung-Ah or Kim Suho recovering it were slim. I had no choice, even if I attracted the djinn's attention.

I compressed a portion of aether around my hand and weaved it into a wire. It was only as long as my hand, but would elongate when I threw it.

Still, the wire wouldn't reach the castle. Although Master Sharpshooter included throwing, I didn't have enough strength. Thankfully, I could compensate with stigma's magic power.

I concentrated magic power onto my right arm. I didn't hold back and converted 80% of my magic power into kinetic energy. My strength remained the same, but stigma's magic power amplified the kinetic energy. It didn't increase my physical ability, so I didn't know how powerful my throw would be.

"Huap!"

I threw the wire with a spirited shout. My target was Homer's Ring in the djinn's hand. The short wire instantly elongated and moved like it was alive until it snatched the target. Immediately, I pulled the wire back.

Whoosh—

The wire instantly retracted.

As expected of an ancient artifact, the ring didn't contain a single scratch.

“Nice shot.”

I smiled in satisfaction, but not for long. The wire’s unexpected power swung in an arc and severed a portion of the castle walls. It also swept through the floor and sliced apart the castle’s foundation on its way back.

Part of the castle’s second floor crumbled.

I watched the accident in shock. I hoped no one was hurt, but I didn’t have time to worry. The Evil Society’s djinn spotted me. He couldn’t see through my mask, but I had to retreat as soon as possible. I escaped along the route I had prepared beforehand.

“Oy!”

As I plowed through the tall grass, someone fell from the sky in front of me. A djinn who looked like a Caucasian man blocked my path and exuded killing intent.

“You see this, right?”

He tapped on his waist at a bladeless hilt. It was a magic sword created from state-of-the-art magic engineering. Individuals confident in their magic power often used this weapon. As long as their magic power capacity was large enough, it would display greater power than most low-rank artifacts. It suited djinns who gained exponential magic power from devils.

“If you know what this is, you better hand that over.”

He pulled out his magic sword without hesitation. He looked a bit funny holding just a hilt, but a magic sword’s might was nothing to scoff at.

“Um, why don’t we talk it out? I can just give it to you.”

“Why should I? I can just kill you and take it.”

“But weren’t you talking like you wanted to negotiate just now?”

“Was I?”

The djinn sneered and imbued his magic power into the hilt.

Wiing—

A blade of magic power shot out like a lightsaber, but it only briefly lasted. The blade flickered and disappeared.

“...What?”

Confused, he imbued his magic power again, but nothing changed. The magic sword flickered like an exhausted lightbulb. I realized what was going on.

“Hahaha.”

With a hearty laugh, I transformed Desert Eagle into its shotgun mode.

“W-What’s wrong with this thing!”

Flustered, the djinn aimlessly swung the sword hilt.

“Well, you see, that weapon won’t work today.”

I scraped together what little magic power I had left and converted it into the light attribute. This white magic power flowed into the shotgun shell and would obliterate the djinn.

“Because I’m very lucky.”

“Shut it! Even without a weapon—”

KWANG.

The shotgun shell perfectly struck his head.

Chae Nayun sat on a bench near the traveling club's meeting place. She had given up on the masquerade party. It was already 7 P.M., but she couldn't find Yoo Yeonha or Kim Suho.

“...Tsk.”

She wasn't bothered, but somehow felt anxious. She didn't know why, so she played a game.

[Leveling Up Monster]

It was an RPG that came out a few days ago. It wasn't a VR game, but a mobile one she could conveniently play on her smartwatch. She enjoyed it at first, but her thoughts kept wandering. What were they doing at the masquerade party that they didn't pick up her calls?

“Where are all these police going?”

She also couldn't focus because of the constant sirens. Chae Nayun turned off the game and checked her messenger app. No new messages had arrived.

“Haa.”

I'm upset, but why am I upset? As Chae Nayun sighed in annoyance, someone sat next to her.

“...What's up with you?”

Kim Hajin looked pale, and cold sweat drenched his exhausted face.

“Are you sick?” Chae Nayun asked out of courtesy. Kim Hajin just silently stared at her.

“...What? Answer me.”

“I'm a bit tired.”

“What?”

“Well... I can’t move.”

Kim Hajin smirked. He suddenly closed his eyes and leaned on Chae Nayun.

“Whoa!”

Chae Nayun moved out of the way, afraid of his sweat. Kim Hajin fell on the bench.

“H-Hey! What are you scheming—”

“Ah, Nayun. You’re here.”

Oh Hanhyun arrived with his girlfriend, but his face looked grim.

“Club leader? Why are you so late?”

“You didn’t know? Something happened nearby. Kim Suho and Yoo Yeonha are being questioned.”

“Eh?”

Chae Nayun’s jaws dropped. Just what the hell happened while I was gone?

“Ah, it’s nothing serious. They weren’t injured, and they’ll be released soon since their identities are confirmed.”

Oh Hanhyun glanced at the bench where Kim Hajin lay panting.

“...What happened to him?”

“I don’t know. He arrived just now and suddenly collapsed.”

“Hmm.”

Oh Hanhyun placed his hand on Kim Hajin's forehead. It felt hot.

"Babe, can you take a look at him?"

"...Babe?"

Chae Nayun grimaced. Oh Hanhyun smiled somewhat embarrassed as the girl next to him approached.

"I introduced her before, right? She's my girlfriend, Natasha."

"Ah... Yeah, um, that's a pretty name."

Father's face suddenly appeared. His black hair carried a few strands of grey. It was a face from 8 years ago, or even before that. Every Korean high school senior had to overcome the College Scholastic Ability Test (CSAT). I had bombed the test and must have expected it since I told my parents, who insisted on picking me up, to stay home. Mom and Dad agreed and left. After the exam, I trudged to the school gate and saw him.

— Hajin.

Father looked at me with a warm smile. Riding the same car for 10 years, his face suddenly looked aged. I broke into tears because I felt sorry. Father had never once consoled me before, but he patted my back and said just two words.

— It's okay.

"...Is he okay?"

The voice that overlapped with Father's must have been Chae Nayun. I opened my eyes.

"Ah, he woke up. Eh? He's crying?"

Chae Nayun pointed at me and snickered. I touched my eyes and felt the wetness.

“Did it hurt that much? What, did you catch an illness?”

“...”

Annoyed, I glared at Chae Nayun. Was it because of the dream? I didn't feel too good.

“...Just get back.”

Thankfully, Kim Suho pulled Chae Nayun away. I raised my head and looked out the window. It was already dark.

“Are you okay?”

A Caucasian woman asked as she looked down at me. It was probably Oh Hanhyun's girlfriend.

“Yes, I'm okay...”

“You collapsed from light exhaustion.”

I nodded. It would have been weird if I felt fine. I had instantly used up two streaks of stigma and even raced to the Eiffel Tower like a madman. Not to mention, I took the most roundabout path to avoid attention.

“Where are we?”

“It's your room. You'll be sharing it with Kim Suho.”

The woman sounded gentle and made me instinctively trust her. This was why you couldn't judge a book by its cover.

“That large mansion is supposed to be our lodging?”

“That’s right. It’s already 10, but they said they would prepare dinner if you want.”

Thankfully, I woke up before the incident.

“No, I’m fine.”

I turned down the offer as the woman nodded with a smile.

“Then I’ll be leaving. Come with me, Nayun.”

“Eh? Why me?”

“This is the men’s room.”

She left with Chae Nayun after packing up the thermometer and icepack. I looked around the relatively large room with two beds and plenty of antique furniture. So I would be sharing with Kim Suho...

“Are you feeling better?” Kim Suho asked. I turned towards him and saw his gentle smile.

“Yeah, I’m fine.”

“I’m glad.”

“...”

It felt awkward. I lay in silence on the bed and suddenly recalled what happened just a few hours ago. I wanted to ask Kim Suho what I missed, but I had to be careful since I destroyed the castle.

I picked up my smartwatch on the bedside shelf and checked the news.

[Djinn appears in a Paris castle! Cube cadets coincidentally present...]

The news spread quite fast because it mentioned Cube cadets. I read through the entire report. Thankfully, no one died or was critically injured. The news also reported that the djinns had demolished the castle.

Fantastic. Jain managed to escape since they didn't report anything about her. I felt relieved.

"Hey."

"Hm?"

I projected the report so Kim Suho could see it. I wanted to ask if he knew anything.

"Oh, that?"

He took the bait.

"I can't tell you anything in detail, but nothing major happened. The djinns all ran away before the heroes arrived."

"Mm, that's a relief."

Silence descended once again. Kim Suho must have been bored as he cut an apple and gave it to me. I took it without saying anything.

Crunch, crunch. Tick, tock. The sound of me biting the apple and the clock filled the room. A chilly wind blew across the window. I looked out and felt uncomfortable from the awkward atmosphere. The moon hid behind clouds.

Currently, it was 10:15.

In just 2 hours, the incident would occur.

"Hmm."

Kim Suho had no plans to leave the chair by my bed. I glanced at him uncomfortably. Then I discovered a faint scar on his cheek. Most likely from Yun Seung-Ah's attack.

“Take care of your body more.”

“Huh?” Kim Suho sounded confused. I pointed at the scar on his cheek.

“You’re the main character. You can’t get too hurt.”

Kim Suho was the main character I created myself. However, he fearlessly charged at Yun Seung-Ah and was almost killed. Yun Seung-Ah’s killing intent was genuine. If the djinn had appeared later, Kim Suho might have lost a limb. Of course, I understood why he did what he did. After all, he was the main character who walked the path of righteousness.

However, I doubted whether the righteous main character could overcome this twisted story with only his sense of justice. And whether he could send me home.

“Main character? There’s no such thing.”

Kim Suho shook his head. He must have heard these words before from people who mocked him. I recalled it too.

— Does he think he’s some sort of main character?

Shin Jonghak often said this.

“Really?”

“Of course. If I’m a main character, then you’re one too. No, everyone in this world is a main character.”

What the main character thoughtlessly said touched me. I pondered his words.

“By the way...”

Kim Suho stared at me and hesitated. Considering how nervous he was, this must be what he really wanted to ask.

“Go on.”

“The report you wrote for Chae Nayun, I saw it too. You were a bit harsh.”

For the record, my report on Chae Nayun received an A-. Although my criticisms were valid, telling her to give up the bow was deemed too harsh, so I received an A- instead of an A+.

“I wasn’t harsh. Chae Nayun isn’t a born archer. She needs to give up the bow and choose the sword.”

“Is that why you made that bet with Chae Nayun?”

“Yeah. If I win, I will make her give up the bow. She said she’d do anything.”

Kim Suho’s face stiffened at my determination.

“But it’s the path she chose. I don’t think it’s something someone else should decide for her.”

He was both stern and soft as we stared at each other. His eyes shone brightly with his own will. Although his thoughts differed from mine, that didn’t mean he was wrong.

“Then do you want me to encourage and console her, knowing that she’s headed towards a dead end?”

“No, that’s not what I—”

Without giving him a chance, I continued.

“You can’t succeed with just encouragements. What if you reach a dead end after endlessly toiling away? What if the only thing at the end is greater despair? Will you take responsibility?”

When I finished, Kim Suho sighed. Then he spoke in a low voice as though he was angry.

“How can you be so sure that Chae Nayun isn’t talented with bows, but swords? Are you saying all this because you can take responsibility?”

From Kim Suho’s perspective, what he said was completely justified. Chae Nayun had trained for countless years with the bow, but someone who didn’t even know her told her to give up. However, I was angry because I created Chae Nayun with affection. Her appearance, her personality, and even her tiniest hobbies and trauma. Of course, a few things had changed, but still...

“I’ve been thinking about her for far longer than you. And I’ve been watching over her all this time.”

Even if Kim Suho was this world’s main character, no one else in this entire world knew Chae Nayun better than me.

“So I know far more about her than you.”

“...What?”

A strange light flickered in Kim Suho’s eyes. As we stared at each other in silence...

— Thud

Kim Suho and I heard a faint sound from the other side of the door. I immediately looked through the wall.

Chae Nayun ran away with a flushed face. I didn’t know from when, but she must have eavesdropped on our conversation. A good archer also required stealth. If anything, she learned that well.

Chapter 52

Change of Heart (2)

Chae Nayun slammed the door to her room and jumped on her bed. She simply went to ask them out for a nighttime snack, but heard an interesting conversation and eavesdropped.

— I've been thinking about her for far longer than you. And I've been watching over her all this time. So I know far more about her than you.

It was the first time she had heard something so direct. She usually prevented such situations and few men would ever confidently approach her.

“Is he crazy?”

Kim Hajin's words still lingered in her ears.

Should I wash my ears? Or should I have smacked him? Chae Nayun bounced around on her bed.

Chae Nayun's seemingly drunk act woke Yoo Yeonha.

“Nayun... What are you doing?”

“H-Huh?”

Chae Nayun flinched as Yoo Yeonha glared at her. Why was this girl beating up a poor bedsheet?

“Are you sick or something?”

“I-It’s nothing.”

Chae Nayun couldn’t tell her what she had just heard. She couldn’t imagine telling anyone something that personal.

“Then sleep. I’m tired.”

Yoo Yeonha muttered and plopped back to bed.

“Uh, yeah, good night. I’m sleeping too.”

Chae Nayun buried herself under her blanket.

Right, it doesn’t matter. I only overheard it. Regardless of Kim Hajin’s intentions, I just have to ignore them.

Chae Nayun pulled the blanket over her head.

However, she couldn’t fall asleep. Thinking about her... Watching over her all this time... Fragments of Kim Hajin’s words kept wandering in her head.

Watching over me all this time? Is he a stalker? No, if he was, I would have noticed.

Sharpshooters had extremely keen senses. A stalker who secretly took pictures, followed women late at night, and things like that...

Kyaaaaak—!!

Suddenly, a high-pitched voice rang out in the mansion. Chae Nayun opened her eyes and shot up.

“W-What!? Ah, aaak!”

Yoo Yeonha also woke up and fell as she tripped on her bedsheet. She glared at Chae Nayun with her hands on the floor.

“Chae Nayun! Y-You!”

“No! It wasn’t me this time!”

“Then who was it!?”

“...Outside.”

Chae Nayun turned on the lights, and someone else also turned on the hallway lights outside. They could hear loud footsteps running. Yoo Yeonha began to understand the gravity of the situation.

“Was that a real scream?”

“Yeah. Hurry up. We should go.”

Chae Nayun put on a jacket.

* * *

Kim Suho ran out the moment he heard the scream. I was about to follow when I noticed my Desert Eagle on the shelf. I couldn’t store it away since I didn’t have any magic power left, but someone had taken care of it.

“...”

The handgun struck me with a flash of inspiration.

“With this... No.”

I quickly cast the thought away, but what Kim Suho said lingered in my ears.

— If I’m a main character, then you’re one too.

I tried my best not to alter the original story because I feared unpredictability. However, a certain damned person had already altered the story. This world was full of unpredictability, so worrying about it was foolish.

“I’m sure it’ll work out somehow.”

I picked up my gun after shrugging off the hesitation.

Then I ran down the hallway to the mansion owner’s room. The other 14 members stood by in shock.

“T-This...”

In a dark room larger than six ordinary living rooms, the mansion owner lay in bed with a dagger sticking out of his heart. A maid sobbed in front of the traumatic scene. She had presumably discovered the scene.

“Bedel...”

Kim Suho muttered Belbet’s fake name. I could understand why everyone appeared so shocked. During dinner, Belbet must’ve acted like a kind grandfather to gather sympathy. He must’ve said things like, My son who died also wanted to become a hero.

“Wait. Let, let me confirm his state.”

Oh Hanhyun’s girlfriend, Natasha, approached as a doctor. I scrutinized her movements as she checked his pulse. Then she shook her head.

“...He’s gone.”

She closed Belbet’s eyes and returned to Oh Hanhyun’s side. I found it laughable that she pretended to be sad and leaned against his shoulder.

“W-What happened...”

The head butler ran into the room. He broke into tears, then talked about all the fake good deeds Belbet had done, and reiterated all the threats Belbet had received from evildoers.

I originally planned on letting the story unfold like my novel, but I no longer desired to watch this farce.

Belbet would later scheme to help djinns. I didn't know what else he would do if left alone. If possible, I wanted to get rid of him now.

"S-So they did it! Those bastards..."

"Calm down, head butler."

While the cadets comforted the sobbing maid and butler, I turned the lights on. Immediately, the room lit up.

"Hey, why did you turn the lights on!"

Chae Nayun shouted because of the bloody corpse. I glanced around before slowly walking up to Belbet.

"Excuse me! Don't go near!"

Natasha shouted as I ignored her and examined Belbet like a detective. I lifted his clothes to check his wound and pressed down on the bloody bed.

"You can't tamper with the crime scene before the police arrive."

Natasha could no longer endure it and came over to drag me away. However, I pulled out my gun and aimed at her.

"Don't come close."

"..."

Natasha raised her hands in shock while the butler, who was crying just a moment ago, shouted, "W-What are you doing!?"

It wasn't just the butler. The cadets also shouted the same thing. My head began to hurt. Was it because I woke up from exhaustion? I felt irritated and gritted my teeth. Then I shouted, "SHUT THE FUCK UP!"

Even I was surprised by my volume as silence immediately descended. I sighed and calmly continued.

“This person is trying to trick us. He’s not dead. He’s in a state called suspended animation.”

“D-Don’t be stupid. I’m a doctor. What do you know about—”

“I’m going to explain, so shut up and wait.”

I continued with my gun still pointed at Natasha.

“First, this scar is unnatural. It’s too shallow for someone to have stabbed him from above.”

I just reported what I observed. Of course, I wasn’t an expert in crime scene investigation, so I could have been wrong. However, the process didn’t matter since I knew the truth.

“Next, there’s too much blood. He only suffered one fatal injury to his heart, but the blood covered the entire bed and even dripped to the floor. Almost as if to emphasize he was dead.”

I stole a glance at Natasha. She didn’t seem agitated yet.

“Finally, and most importantly...”

I projected the International Wanted List from my smartwatch. I might have lied about everything else, but this was real. Belbet looked thinner in the photo, but the man lying dead looked very similar. I had shaken up all the cadets now.

“Of course, you can argue that they’re different individuals since the man in the photo is much thinner, but something is definitely up if you consider the other two clues.”

“Head butler, you called the police and ambulance, right?”

However, Natasha remained calm and asked the butler, who quickly responded.

“Y-Yes, I called them.”

“Then we can just ask them instead of making a fuss.”

I couldn't let that happen. Once the bribed police and medical personnel arrived, Belbet would safely escape, so I had to resolve the situation before then.

With a grin, I moved my gun away from Natasha and pointed at Belbet. Only then did Natasha lose her composure.

“W-What are you doing!”

“What do you mean? I'm going to shoot him.”

“The police will be here soon!”

“He's dead anyway, right?”

I put my finger on the trigger.

“T-This scoundrel! Honey, stop him!”

Natasha shook Oh Hanhyun and urged him to step forward. The head butler, Belbet, and Natasha were all in the same boat.

“Um, Hajin...”

Oh Hanhyun carefully spoke up.

“If you move even a single step, I'll shoot. Especially you, Kim Suho. I'm only looking at you.”

“...Got it.”

Kim Suho, who slowly approached, stopped and raised his hands. I also told the other cadets to back off. Then I spoke to Natasha.

“We already called the police! Put the gun down!”

Natasha’s entire body trembled. Her reaction should be enough proof, but I still needed something more decisive.

“If you don’t confess by the time I count to one, I’m going to shoot. Since he’s dead, it doesn’t matter, right?”

“Confess what? He’s already dead!”

I began to count.

“Three.”

I diverted my focus to the cadets in case anyone tried anything stupid.

“Two.”

Contrary to my expectations, Kim Suho remained calm. The usually timid Oh Hanhyun began to operate his magic power, but Yoo Yeonha stopped him.

“Wait.”

Thanks to her, I could finish my countdown.

“One.”

Natasha still didn’t react.

“Then he’ll have to die.”

Click. I pulled the trigger.

“NO!”

It wasn't loaded, but Natasha wasn't aware and quickly pushed me aside. Then she prostrated on top of Belbet as if to protect him.”

“Don't shoot! Don't shoot!”

“...Hmm.”

I calmly put my gun down with enough proof. Natasha was Belbet's daughter. Belbet settled in France and managed to invite Cube cadets because of Natasha.

“Instead of the police, call the Hero Association. Tell them we caught a wanted criminal.”

I loaded my gun and fired. The magic bullet grazed the butler's leg, who ran away.

“Aaak!”

Only silence remained after that short scream. The other cadets stared at me as I walked outside. My heart thumped like crazy.

Belbet and Natasha had devised the assassination to avoid the narrowing investigations of multiple countries. His daughter coincidentally seduced a pushover Cube cadet and bore the plan to fruition.

The so-called operation, Return to Life.

Natasha easily obtained the expensive drug to fake Belbet's death as a Cube doctor. Everything afterward was simple. Belbet took the drug after a fake injury and sprayed the crime scene with blood packs. The emergency medical personnel wouldn't notice, and Belbet had already bribed the local police. Next, Belbet would swap with the corpse of a similar man during the ambulance ride. Afterward, the Cube cadets would testify and persuade everyone. The government workers he bribed would ensure he was officially dead, and the real Belbet would be reborn under a new name.

Kim Suho would only find out in the future.

However, I destroyed the story related to Belbet. The association arrested him while he remained in suspended animation. He would wake up in jail.

[Belbet, the man you requested, has been arrested by the French police and is currently being transported to a local Hero Association branch.]
[Congratulations! This question was answered free of charge because you are our first customer.]

It was currently 9 A.M as I replied to Belbet's victim through the Truth Agency.

"...Are you Sherlock?"

Yoo Yeonha suddenly asked me. I smiled without answering. Honestly, my deductions last night were amateurish at best, but no one questioned what I said because of the unexpected situation.

Luckily, the investigation revealed what I said to be mostly correct.

"The incident with Yun Hyun and now this. You might as well open a detective agency."

"Sharpshooters have good eyes."

"That's true, but how did you recognize him? Do you have the faces of every wanted criminal memorized?"

I flinched. As expected, Yoo Yeonha caught one of the flaws in my actions.

"I apologize. That's a private matter." [1]

That was all I could tell her.

“What’s up with the sudden formality?”

Yoo Yeonha retorted with a thoughtful expression. A family matter? Family matter... She wandered off into her world of imagination. I wasn’t even curious about what she misunderstood.

Speaking of family affairs, I suddenly grew curious about Kim Chundong’s family. All I knew from his official records was that he was from an orphanage. I should probably look into it once I returned.

1. The word, private matter, can also mean family matter. 📖

Vestige (1)

The UN and Hero Association officially recognized Evil Society as the number 1 most wanted djinn group. Although other groups acted more viciously, the entire world knew Evil Society because of their countless crimes across the globe. They also participated in every human-djinn war, from the artifact scramble in China to the Suwon Battle in Korea.

“Say that again.”

Evil Society’s hideout was located in an artificial cave under Russia’s Vladivostok waters. For over 40 years, technological advances transformed it into a state-of-the-art facility.

“My apologies.”

“No, don’t apologize. I said to repeat that, Silasen. You said a cheetah disturbed our plan?”

“No, it was a panther. Um, a man wearing a panther mask.”

Devils had formed Evil Society to steal artifacts. Kim Hakpyo, Evil Society’s artifact retrieval leader, desperately wanted Homer’s Ring. This ring of wisdom amplified all abilities related to magic power, so djinns would greatly benefit.

“You mean a panther that looks like this?”

Kim Hakpyo showed a sketch of the masked man according to Silasen’s description.

“...Yes. He wasn’t ordinary.”

“I know. I heard you lost a subordinate.”

“Yes, we lost Sidius. He seems to have been killed in one blow.”

“...”

Although Sidius had weak defense, even Kim Hakpyo acknowledged his swordsmanship. He was one of the organization’s rising stars, capable of handling low-intermediate rank heroes.

“He wasn’t a djinn?”

Djinns commonly killed each other.

“No, but he didn’t seem to be a hero either.”

“Then he must be a mercenary or hunter. Look into it. Of course, don’t confront him alone.”

Kim Hakpyo vowed to obtain Homer’s Ring when he heard about it from the Collector, and had no intentions of giving up.

“His weapon?”

“Yes?”

“Sidius’ magic sword, it’s expensive. Did you retrieve it?”

“Ah... no.”

Magic swords were man-made, but could display the same power as an artifact. They cost the same as low-rank artifacts at 500 million won.

“I see. That makes sense. Someone who took the ring wouldn’t have missed it.”

Kim Hakpyo accepted the reality that only a fool wouldn’t take 500 million won lying on the ground. His anger then turned to Silasen.

“By the way, why are you announcing that you’re a djinn?”

“...Yes?”

“Your goddamn appearance.”

Kim Hakpyo pointed at Silasen’s black skin and blood-red pupils.

“I’m asking why you’re revealing that you’re a goddamn djinn!”

Kim Hakpyo’s fury shook the cave. Silasen quickly reverted to a human appearance.

“M-My apologies!”

He had honestly forgotten to disguise himself. Djinns looked completely different from humans after their devil transformation. Unfortunately, Evil Society wasn’t so lenient regarding mistakes. Silasen kneeled in a hurry.

“What am I supposed to do with this?”

On Sunday night, I examined the magic sword I picked up. A spoil of war from defeating a djinn, but it was useless. I couldn’t wield magic power like ordinary people and didn’t plan to fight close range. Of course, I could anonymously sell it on Violet Banquet for a decent sum, but I felt uneasy if a djinn bought it, so I stashed it away in my drawer.

“And what do I do with this?”

Homer’s Ring looked shabby, as though it was made from mud because it hadn’t yet awakened. However, it was actually a unique artifact.

[Homer’s Ring] [Artifact] [Unawakened] A ring Homer wore in the past that contains hidden abilities.

It would have been difficult for me to awaken this artifact compared to a djinn. Fortunately, I didn't require the normal method. Instead, I just deleted the un- part of unawakened with my settings intervention.

[49 SP will be used.]

It didn't require too much SP since the normal awakening method was rather simple. You just had to imbue a certain amount of magic power, probably around 1.5 times Chae Nayun's current mana capacity.

Once I saved the setting, the surface of Homer's Ring cracked. A beautiful platinum ring appeared from beneath the dirt husk.

[Homer's Ring] [Artifact] [Awakened] A ring Homer wore in the past. It resonates with nature and will endow its wearer with energy. [Enhanced Intelligence – will increase the wearer's intelligence by 0.001 points every 24 hours up to a maximum of 0.365 points.] [High rank magic power amplification] [Camouflage]

Homer's Ring not only amplified magic power, but also increased the invariable stat intelligence. One only needed to wear it for a year to receive its maximum benefit. The maximum of 0.365 intelligence points roughly equaled 7 IQ points.

"I guess I should hold on to it for at least a year."

Homer's Ring wasn't a binding item. The intelligence I gained from it wouldn't disappear after I gave it away.

It would be inefficient to keep it forever since my source of magic power came from stigma. I couldn't equip the ring to stigma, but I tried rubbing it on my upper arm just in case.

"...What am I doing?"

I slipped it on my finger. Homer's Ring better suited Kim Suho or Chae Nayun. Chae Nayun was the best candidate with the most magic power.

“Now...”

I checked my stats for the first time in a while.

*[Strength 2.56] [Stamina 2.575] [Speed 3.250] [Perception 4.215]
[Vitality 2.665] [Magic power 1.925]*

My stats had reached a wall other than speed and perception. A wall referred to a bottleneck in growth. The first was between 2 and 3, the next was 4 to 5, 6 to 7, etc. Most individuals faced these bottlenecks after every 2 stat points, and cadets' upper limits were usually around 12 to 13.

“My magic power isn't going up at all.”

My magic power would probably stay at that level forever, but that didn't discourage me. After all, my magic power came from stigma. Next, I read some encouraging alerts.

*[You have managed to throw a difficult weapon!] [Beginner's Luck has been applied! Your wire throwing accuracy and power has increased.]
[Your gift, Master Sharpshooter, has increased to grade 6!]*

[Master Sharpshooter] [Intermediate rank] [Spirit attribute] [Evolving — Grade 6] [Proficiency EXP 0%]

— Master Sharpshooter's Training: Skillfully wield all long ranged weapons.

— Thousand-Mile Eyes: See far away and predict a target's movement path. Has increased your speed and perception by 1 point.

— Bullet Time: In combat only, and once every 24 hours, spend up to 80 seconds in Bullet Time.

— Sharpshooter of Reversal: Deal bonus damage against a stronger opponent depending on your luck.

Master Sharpshooter finally evolved from low-intermediate rank to intermediate. It grew faster than expected, but would exponentially slow from here. Grade 6 to grade 5 would probably take the same amount as grade 10 to grade 6.

“I should be able to beat Chae Nayun with this.”

I was about to close the laptop when I suddenly remembered.

“...I almost forgot.”

My family, or to be more precise, Kim Chundong’s family. Kim Chundong’s past would have been one of the first and easiest settings for the co-author to modify. I immediately grew curious.

Although he was an extra in my novel, Kim Chundong would have been considered an elite for attending Cube. Furthermore, genes played an essential role in determining the potential for gifts. Therefore, Kim Chundong’s parents must not have been ordinary.

I entered Violet Banquet. Tak, tak. From the numerous categories, I clicked on [detective agency].

[100% trustworthy information agency, Veteran.]

[Information agency, Echo. Anything you want to know is at our disposal.]

The multiple agencies displayed on banner ads weren’t the best. After all, well-known agencies didn’t need to advertise. The real deal was here.

[Private Broker Yoo Jinhyuk]

Yoo Jinhyuk was the best of the best in this field. He could find anything when it came to individuals. Naturally, his service was extremely expensive with a base price of 50 million won.

“...Oh right.”

I was about to send a request when I recalled that I was broke.

“I don’t have any money.”

I had already invested everything into stocks.

Wiing—!

Something on top of my drawer vibrated. Evandel’s Seed stood up and shook its body that it was hungry.

“I know, I know.”

I took out a bloody gauze and gave it to the seed.

[Monday 1 P.M.]

The eventful weekend passed. We resumed the incomplete exam instead of a regular class today. Cadets gathered in the same exam room as two weeks ago and busily wrote their reports while groups 14 to 25 took the exam.

Family affair...

However, Yoo Yeonha pondered over something completely irrelevant to the exam. Family affair. What Kim Hajin said kept bothering her.

Kim Hajin had immediately recognized Belbet, but it didn’t make sense for him to specifically know Belbet. From her research, she found out that Belbet was a conman who worked exclusively in Europe. He couldn’t have had anything to do with Kim Hajin. It made more sense to conclude that Kim Hajin memorized the face of every internationally wanted criminal.

But why...

Yoo Yeonha came up with a hypothesis after considering Kim Hajin’s strange obsession with wanted criminals. Something horrible had happened in his past, but he didn’t know the culprit. As a result, he memorized the entire International Wanted List. Of course, this was only a hypothesis. But...

Orphan.

With another keyword, the hypothesis became more logical. Kim Hajin didn't have parents. Almost every cadet knew because Shin Jonghak's lackeys often harassed him as a parentless bastard.

So that must mean...

Kim Hajin's parents were dead. No, someone murdered them. Because of this, Kim Hajin memorized the face of every criminal and hid his power to find the culprit. It made sense. Yoo Yeonha added another phrase to her notes.

Sad past.

"Yeonha, what are you writing?"

Chae Nayun suddenly asked. She peeked at Yoo Yeonha's notes with tired eyes as though she had just woken up.

"Family affair? Orphan? Sad past?... Are you adopted?"

"Are you crazy? I'm just curious about something."

"Well, I guess you've always been curious about random stuff. You know, you always dig up things with no benefits. You're kind of a dunce. No, you are a dunce."

"If you're going to sleep, just keep sleeping, Nayun."

Yoo Yeonha spoke as she gritted her teeth. Chae Nayun yawned and leaned back into her chair.

"Yeah, I should."

Yoo Yeonha returned to the boundary of delusion and thought. If Kim

Hajin had such a past, she could use it to her advantage when recruiting him. It was illegal to investigate a cadet's background, but that just meant she couldn't get caught. She became convinced of recruiting Kim Hajin after the latest incident. Kim Hajin was perhaps even more valuable than Kim Suho. At least, that's what Yoo Yeonha thought.

“Hmm...”

Someone that could investigate Kim Hajin's family background. She knew only one person. If he wanted, he could even draw up the family tree of a cockroach. The only question was whether he would help her.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha turned on her smartwatch. She had avoided the number on the bottom of her contacts for the past 5 years.

[Uncle Yoo Jinhyuk]

Yoo Yeonha tightly closed her eyes and sent him a message.

Chapter 54

Vestige (2)

— Ding

“Ah, goddamnit!”

The smartwatch alert obscured his game screen at a crucial moment. Yoo Jinhyuk roared and shot up like a spring.

“What, you lost again?”

His secretary asked apathetically.

“No, but hey! Did you link my smartwatch with the computer?”

“No.”

“You did! I lost because of the alert!”

“It wasn’t me.”

Yoo Jinhyuk grabbed the back of his neck, feeling his blood pressure rising. That loss just cost him 50 million won.

“My life... What?”

His sullen mood disappeared when he saw the messenger’s name. It was his adorable niece, Yoo Yeonha.

“Did the sun rise from the west today? My niece just messaged me!”

If he recalled correctly, the last time they spoke was five years ago. Yoo Jinhyuk quickly checked the content.

[Uncle, I need you to look into someone's family history.]

Yoo Jinhyuk tilted his head.

“Mm? Well, that’s surprising.”

“Is it work?”

His secretary’s eyes lit up.

“No, I told you it’s from my niece.”

“So is it work?”

“...I guess it is. Yaaawn.”

Yoo Jinhyuk slumped onto his couch. Yoo Yeonha sent a follow-up message.

[Cube cadet, Kim Hajin.]

“Kim Hajin... Who’s that?”

“Why are you asking me?”

“Look into him. He’s a Cube cadet.”

“Is he?”

Cube enrolled at most 6000 cadets any given year. Finding someone from such a small pool would be a piece of cake. The secretary’s hands moved like lightning on her keyboard. Soon, a general overview popped up.

“He’s an orphan. He has a 300 million won debt.”

“Oh, so that’s why she said family affair. She must want to know the identity of his parents. Also, he has that much debt?”

“Yes. He also has a brokerage account, but I don’t know how much he has in it.”

“I guess I can do it for free if it’s only that,” Yoo Jinhyuk murmured as he picked his ear.

“Sigh, there goes my paycheck.”

The secretary complained about his lax manner.

“You’re going to get your pay. Honestly, don’t you think you’re taking too much with 20 million won per month?” Yoo Jinhyuk berated his secretary.

“That’s because I’m worth that much.”

“Tsk.”

Then he suddenly shot up.

“Get ready.”

“Are you really going to do it for free?”

“Yeah, I have a favor I want from hyung anyways.”

“Aha.”

The usually uptight secretary went along with Yoo Jinhyuk. He was the best in this field for a reason.

“Would it be 16 or 17 years ago? Let’s start from the day he was born.”

He could experience anyone's past.

Yoo Yeonha pouted at her smartwatch as she returned to the dorm. Three hours had passed since she messaged her uncle, but he didn't reply. Her message was marked read, so he must have ignored her.

"Why isn't he answering?"

"Who's he? Don't, don't tell me, you got a b-boyfriend?"

Chae Nayun shockingly asked from next to her. Yoo Yeonha felt Chae Nayun had become much friendlier these days and didn't know how to feel about it. Chae Nayun used to be aloof and uncaring, so Yoo Yeonha couldn't understand her present behavior.

"I'm going out with Jonghak."

"The whole world knows that's a lie."

"...Sigh. Fine, it's my uncle."

"Uncle?"

Chae Nayun turned to the side and snickered.

"You go ahead. I have to practice archery."

"Archery? Oh right, your bet with Kim Hajin is coming up."

"Yeah, I even rented an archery range. Do you want to come spectate?"

Chae Nayun thought about Kim Hajin over the weekend and concluded that she'd chastise him after winning the bet. If Kim Hajin liked her. The bow suited her best, and the way he expressed his affection was wrong.

"...Spectate?"

Yoo Yeonha pondered in interest. She couldn't see Chae Nayun winning. From her experience, Kim Hajin's confidence was always well-founded.

“Yeah, I invited a bunch of people over.”

“Is Jonghak also going?”

“Yep.”

“...He’s going to bring more people.”

Shin Jonghak would likely bring ten or so cadets. If Kim Hajin won, Chae Nayun would be embarrassing herself in front of a crowd.

“I’ll use this opportunity to put him in his place.”

“...”

Yoo Yeonha stared at Chae Nayun’s confident face. She didn’t want to miss it as she imagined Chae Nayun’s embarrassment and despair.

“I’ll come watch.”

Yoo Yeonha smiled just thinking about it. Then her smartwatch rang.

Yun Seung-Ah: [Let’s grab lunch this weekend. I want to apologize for what happened before.]

She checked her smartwatch, but frowned that it wasn’t Yoo Jinhyuk.

“Who is it now?”

Chae Nayun stopped and asked again.

“Why are you suddenly so curious?”

“I’m just wondering. Who is it? Kim Suho?”

“...Vice-leader Yun Seung-Ah.”

“Eh? Seung-Ah unni? What about her?”

Yun Seung-Ah and Chae Nayun had both been taught by the master rank hero, Yoo Sihyuk. Of course, that was in the distant past when Chae Nayun was only 8 and Yun Seung-Ah was 21.

“She wants to apologize for what happened at the masquerade party.”

“Ah, I should have gone. If only I didn’t get lost...”

“You should have swapped with me. I wanted to go to that restaurant.”

“The place Kim Hajin took me?”

Yoo Yeonha nodded with a bitter smile. Although she loved fast food, the hero’s cooking was something people would kill for.

“Now that I think about it, Kim Hajin must not be so simple if he can make a reservation there.”

“...”

Chae Nayun only just realized. Yoo Yeonha sighed in disappointment.

I went on my way as I overheard their conversation. Hearing my name surprised me, but it wasn’t anything special. Instead, I found Yun Seung-Ah eating with Yoo Yeonha to be more surprising. After all, they would fiercely compete in the future.

Someone approached me from behind. I turned around and saw a familiar face.

“Hello.”

Rachel greeted me with a slight smile.

“Ah, yes, did something happen?”

“Here. Thank you again for before.”

She handed me a small box that could barely fit a car key. I looked back and forth between the box and Rachel before taking it.

“Can I open it now?”

“Yes.”

I opened the box as soon as Rachel nodded. I felt nervous that it might be a real car key, but it was a key to Cube’s armory.

“Ah, armor?”

With this, I should be able to pick up a cloth armor of some sort.

“Yes, defensive equipment is England’s pride.”

She bowed and left to the girls’ dorm. Her actions perfectly matched my description of her. Rachel disliked talking about personal matters. I felt a royal’s grace from just the way she walked.

* * *

I returned to my room after picking up Rachel’s gift from the armory. A stylish coat emerged when I took off the plastic wrap.

“Whoa.”

It felt perfect, not too heavy or light. It wasn’t too long either, as if tailored for my height. Fashionwise, it didn’t stand out and looked discrete. Although it came with a certificate of quality, I checked its functionality with my laptop.

[Royal Black Coat – Jacket] [Partial Artifact] A coat created by the English Royal Court’s master craftsman. Patched with parts of an artifact.

[Pinnacle Temperature Control] [Low-intermediate Defense] [Camouflage] [Form Change: Coat ↔ Jacket]

Defensive pieces of equipment were rarely full-fledged artifacts. Modern people found it difficult to wear complete defensive artifacts, so craftsmen often reproduced them into partial artifacts.

“This is amazing.”

England was renowned for its cloth-type defensive equipment. This item had to be worth several hundred million won. I put it on, and it perfectly fit. I sent Rachel a thank you message.

[Thank you for the coat. I love it.]

She replied immediately.

[No problem. Use it well ^^]

“She’s surprisingly good at texting, huh.”

She was usually expressionless and quiet, but...

[(∼.∼)]

She even sent emoticons.

I began attending Cube in February, and it was now May. That would be almost four months since I came to this world. Both theory classes and combat training felt like a daily routine now.

“The finals are coming up in 4 weeks.”

Kim Soohyuk announced at the end of Friday’s class. The final exams would be the last hurdle for this half of the year.

“Written exams will be the same, but combat exams will be completely different.”

The finals were rigorous and serious, unlike the festival-like midterms.

“Everything you’ve learned until now will be tested in a single exam.”

The final exam wouldn’t be made public until much later, but I already knew.

They would drop cadets on a remote island filled with wild animals and monsters. Cadets needed to survive for a week while amassing as many points as possible. Each monster would be worth one point, and cadets could also defeat other cadets to gain points. In addition, they could freely form teams and even give points to each other.

Cadets would only find out on the day of the exam. Everyone would be dropped off on the remote island without any preparations. They would only be given two days' worth of food.

However, I would thoroughly prepare for that exam and be at a massive advantage since most wouldn’t even have basic camping equipment.

“You don’t have to worry about safety. High-intermediate to high rank heroes will be closely observing you from the shadows.”

Kim Soohyuk dismissed the class after intimidating everyone.

“Now, go back and have fun. I’ll see you on Monday.”

Cadets stood up from their seats. I also packed my stuff.

“Hey, is your practice going well? You didn’t forget, right? Our bet’s next week.”

Chae Nayun appeared out of nowhere when I was about to leave through the back door. She confidently smiled as the surrounding gazes fell on us. They watched our psychological battle with interest.

“No, I didn’t practice at all.”

“...What?”

“I can win without any practice.”

I left the room after giving her a cocky smile.

“Hey! Grr, that guy!”

Only a week remained until our archery battle.

* * *

My interaction with Chae Nayun was pointless as we soon met. The hunting club’s leader rented a mountain cabin and planned an overnight trip today.

“Why am I paired with you again?”

“How should I know?”

We climbed a mountain covered in white as a cold wind blew. The boundary between earth and heaven seemed faint in this snowy world. The hunting club had traveled to Norway for an overnight trip.

It would have been sheer lunacy in my previous world, but traveling between countries was extremely easy for Cube cadets thanks to portals. I was honestly excited and always wanted to visit Norway.

“You worked something out with the club leader again, didn’t you?”

“What?”

“Don’t play dumb. I know you pulled some strings to pair with me.”

“Are you out of your mind?”

A computer program chose today's pairs. Despite that, my luck must've paired us again. After all, Chae Nayun was the prettiest in the club.

"Anyways, you keep doing things behind my back, but keep it moderate."

"Worry about yourself. There are plenty of traps around here because of hunters."

I ignored Chae Nayun's nonsense and pointed below her. Chae Nayun stopped in surprise. A huge bear trap lay beneath her.

"Oh, geez. That surprised me."

A scavenger hunt took place to celebrate the club's reunion. Flags spread around the mountain with gifts written on them from the seniors who currently worked as heroes.

Whiiish—

Suddenly, a fierce wind blew a flurry of snow.

"Aah, my face feels like it's going to explode."

The wind disappeared, but Chae Nayun's face turned red from the cold.

"You cold?"

"A, a little bit. I should have brought a coat too."

"I'm not cold."

For the record, I wore the coat Rachel gifted me. I wasn't cold at all, thanks to its temperature control.

"...Did you buy a new coat?"

“Yeah, it’s amazing.”

“...”

Chae Nayun looked at me, aggrieved. Then we walked in silence. Our footsteps gently sounded as we stepped on the fluffy snow. I quite enjoyed Norway’s scenery of snowy mountains.

“Ah, over there! There’s a flag.”

Chae Nayun pointed at a nearby mountain peak. A single flag waved on the edge of a cliff.

“That must be the first place flag.”

It had to be, considering its dangerous location. Would anyone be crazy enough to climb up there?

“Hey, let’s go up.”

The person in question was right next to me.

“We don’t need to.”

I took out a roll of wire from my pocket. I didn’t make it from aether, but just normal wire I brought for support.

“You’re going to throw it and pull it out? Is that even possible?”

I tied the wire around a dagger without answering. Then I attached stigma’s magic power. Recently, I’ve been thinking about more ways to use stigma.

“Huup!”

I threw the dagger in full force. It flew in a straight line and passed the flag.

“Pft. Nice try.”

The dagger suddenly bent at a strange angle, spinning around the flag and wrapping around it. Then it returned to my hands along with the flag.

Stigma's magic power followed my will. I attached it to the dagger, so I could freely control it. I put away the wire and dagger and held up the flag.

"...N-Not bad."

Chae Nayun tried to sound unimpressed as she snatched the flag out of my hand. Then the flag shrunk to a piece of paper, which I snatched back.

"Ah."

Two lines were written in pretty handwriting.

[First place. The prize is Yun Seung-Ah's contact number. That's me! You know who I am, right? If you need any help, call me any time. I'll help you out once as long as it's something I can help with!]

"Why is Yun Seung-Ah showing up here?"

"Yun Seung-Ah? Address her more formally. Also, this is amazing."

I was extremely disappointed, but Chae Nayun seemed happy.

"You can take it then."

"What? You're giving this to me? Seung-Ah unni is the vice-leader of the number 1 ranked guild!"

"I don't need it."

I handed the paper to her without a care. After all, I already had Yun Seung-Ah's contact. Chae Nayun, who almost happily accepted it, paused with a serious face.

“No, you take it. Why give me what’s yours? I don’t need it.”

“...Uh, yeah, sure.”

Her strange attitude confused me.

Chapter 55

Bet (1)

It was 2 A.M. in Korea, but 7 P.M. in Norway. The two countries operated in different time zones, but their skies appeared equally dark. Night descended on the snowy mountain, and the hunting club concluded their event. Chae Nayun and I obtained the first and fourth place flags. First place rewarded Yun Seung-Ah's one-time coupon, and fourth place rewarded a VR gaming set worth 3 million won. The active hero seniors gave out fantastic gifts as expected. Chae Nayun and I returned to the cabin for the barbecue party. The other members greeted us with smiles.

"Wow, you got first place? I'm jealous!"

The club leader saw the flag in my hand and exclaimed. The other members also looked envious as I bitterly smiled.

"Now, let's eat."

The barbeque started as they placed the meat on the grill. It pleasantly sizzled, but these kids didn't know how to properly grill. I stepped up to volunteer.

"I'll handle the grilling. All of you can rest."

I took pride in grilling since my aunt ran a Korean bbq restaurant. It made me quite confident in my technique.

"...You're different from the rumors, huh."

A male senior said surprisingly as he handed me the tongs. I focused on grilling without talking. Knowing when to flip was the most crucial step, and it was best not to cut anything until the end. Of course, I kept my ears open as I grilled. The seniors gave everyone valuable advice.

“Be careful on your upcoming finals. It’ll be more rigorous than anything before. Don’t trust anyone.”

“Is it that difficult?”

“I’ve seen friendships ruined. Everyone will be on the edge because it affects the rankings. Also, you all know that there’s a separate class for people held back, right?”

“Ah, yes.”

“You have to be especially cautious of them. There are about 200 of them every year. They won’t stop at anything to pass since they’ll be expelled.”

Cadets from the previous year would be the source of trouble. Of the 200 repeaters, close to 20% contracted with djinns or were part of high profile organizations. The co-author might have even increased the numbers.

“Hey, um... Haejin?”

“Ah, Kim Hajin. You’re a great griller! You should eat some too.”

“I’ve been eating while grilling, so I’m full.”

“Really?”

The barbeque party continued for 20 minutes. Everyone saw me favorably after my spectacular grilling.

“The original plan was to hunt at night, but let’s just rest since we’re full.”

The club leader changed his mind.

“Team 1 will use Cabin A. Team 2 will use Cabin B.”

The 18 club members split into two cabins. Chae Nayun and I were assigned Cabin A, which was surprisingly big. The first floor had three rooms and a large living space, while the second floor had six rooms. After unpacking our belongings, we met in the living room and played Mafia.

Chae Nayun was killed in the first town vote every time she became the mafia. The mafia killed her on the first or second night whenever she had important roles like the doctor or cop. She died relatively fast even as an ordinary citizen. It wasn't anyone's fault. She just simply couldn't hide her emotions.

“Ah, I haven't laughed that hard in a while.”

The game ended, and everyone went to sleep. I left the cabin and sat on a bench outside. I couldn't help but laugh as Chae Nayun's face popped up in my head. She might have cried if we pushed her a bit more. I stopped laughing as a notification came in. I turned on my laptop and saw that Truth Agency had received another request.

[There is a conman named Jerome Müller. He acted as my asset manager until he took the money and ran. Here are several pictures of his face, height, and other identifying information. Please tell me his location.]

This was the second request I had ever received. The first customer must have introduced him, judging from the German name. The Book of Truth could easily find this conman since I knew his face and identifying information. I released stigma's magic power and opened the Book of Truth. I spent nearly 80% of my magic power to find his location and slightly staggered after feeling lightheaded.

[It will cost 5,000,000 points.]

I held back from asking for 50 million. Surprisingly, I immediately received a message saying the money had been deposited. I wrote back what the Book of Truth stated, but no reply came. I closed the Book of Truth and put away my laptop. Then I looked into the distance at Norway's untouched nature. I suddenly thought of something in front of this scenic beauty. Cigarette.

“Ah, I stopped smoking...”

I just realized. I used to smoke half a pack daily because of stress, but smoking hadn't crossed my mind since I arrived in this world.

"You used to smoke?"

"Whoa!"

I jolted at the sudden voice.

"W-What! Where are you!?"

"Above you, idiot."

I looked up and saw Chae Nayun peeking from the second-floor window. Since when was she there?

"So you used to smoke? A real delinquent, huh. Do you also have tattoos?"

I flinched at her words and looked at my upper arm. Thankfully, my clothes covered the two streaks of stigma.

"What, you really have them? Let me see."

"I don't."

"Hmm."

Chae Nayun raised her eyebrows as she looked down at me. Then she looked back up into the air. It seemed she didn't see me opening the Book of Truth.

"...By the way, are you confident?"

Chae Nayun asked as she gazed at the horizon.

"Confident? About what?"

“About winning against me.”

I replied arrogantly, “What about you? Are you confident in giving up the bow if you lose?”

“That’s impossible, so it never crossed my mind.”

“Are you going to cry if you lose?”

“Do you want to cry now?”

“You almost cried today because of Mafia.”

“...Screw off.”

I felt like I won our exchange, but then I wondered what I was doing with a kid. Being around them started making me childish. I sat back on the bench and enjoyed the view. I only saw snow and evergreen trees until I looked at the sky full of stars. That was the first time I saw such a beautiful scene. Now I understood why Chae Nayun opened her window. She was looking at them too.

“Oh right, traveling club is canceled this week.”

Chae Nayun mentioned the unsurprising news. The same had occurred in the original story, where Belbet succeeded and Natasha broke up with Oh Hanhyun. However, now she broke up with him because Belbet had failed. Oh Hanhyun should be heartbroken right now.

“By the way, have you seen the news article from France?”

“News article? Is it about me?”

“Yeah, Yeonha showed me. They’re calling you the Korean Sherlock who captured the conman of the century.”

“Oh.”

“I can’t believe a delinquent who smokes and fights with me is Sherlock.”

“Just go to sleep.”

“I was going even if you didn’t tell me!”

Tak. Chae Nayun shut her window. I also got up as my smartwatch rang. Chae Nayun sent me the link to the news article.

[Conman of the Century Captured by Korean Cadet.]

Such an article like this existed. I laughed in embarrassment as I read the translation.

[Authorities arrested Belbet in a large mansion on the outskirts of Paris. Belbet is a conman who scammed thousands of people over the past 20 years... He tried to bury his wrongdoings by faking his death, but a Cube cadet with keen insight saw through his clever methods...]

Tak. Chae Nayun opened her window again and curiously asked.

“Hey, what does a cigarette taste like?”

“...”

“Oh, man.”

Yoo Jinhyuk returned from his journey. For the past 2 days, he saw 24 hours of a person’s past. His limit was two days because he could only hold in his bowel and bladder for that long. He ran to the bathroom as soon as he woke up.

“Did you find anything?” His secretary spoke from outside the bathroom.

“Yeah, a few strange things.”

“What did you see?”

“The day he entered the orphanage. He spent 23 hours and 55 minutes in front of the orphanage door.”

Yoo Jinhyuk could move around a virtual reality of someone’s past. However, moving spent enormous amounts of magic power because of his spirit body. As such, he would always stay as still as possible.

“Some kid dropped a kid off.”

“...Huh? A kid gave birth to a kid?”

“No, the kid was too young to give birth, but I don’t know too much more. That’s where it ended. His past is strangely dense, so I’ll have to maintain my peak condition and try again.”

Pffft, pfft. Unpleasant sounds rang out from the bathroom. The secretary frowned.

“Anyways, this is looking like it’ll take a while. I don’t know if I can do it for free.”

“You have to because another request came in.” The secretary sent a message to his smartwatch. The screen displayed a familiar picture.

“What, it’s Kim Hajin again?”

It was the same picture of Kim Hajin that his niece sent.

“Yes, but look at the buyer’s rank.”

“Rank?... Red, Red Diamond?”

Red Diamond was Violet Banquet’s highest rank. Yoo Jinhyuk also held the same rank. Red Diamond members could see the ranks of other buyers and sellers. Furthermore, they could recognize each other since only a few Red Diamond members existed. Naturally, Yoo Jinhyuk knew the owner of this account.

[Requesting for this individual's background information. You are not allowed to hurt him. We will deposit 100 million points as a security deposit and an additional 500 million points when the job is done. (Contract will be canceled if the target finds out or is hurt)]

The brief request and the exorbitant amount of money they offered hinted at their identity.

“This...”

Spending 600 million won to investigate a person's background... He was certain this was the Chameleon Troupe.

Yoo Jinhyuk stared at the picture of Kim Hajin.

“There might actually be something about him.”

Yoo Jinhyuk smiled at the first exciting request in some time as he sat on the toilet.

A week passed, and the long-awaited day of my archery duel with Chae Nayun finally arrived. I would prove that I could beat her with just a month of practice.

I headed to the archery range as soon as class ended. Chae Nayun and her friends followed. She brought quite an entourage. At least 70 people, including well-known cadets like Kim Suho, Yoo Yeonha, and Shin Jonghak.

After about 15 minutes, we arrived at an archery range built on an artificial mountain.

The archery range looked similar to a shooting range, but the lanes were huge. Chae Nayun warmed up in a lane about 50 meters away.

“We'll be doing the usual. You practiced archery for the past month, right?”

I briefly responded, “No.”

“What?”

“I didn’t. Explain.”

“...”

Chae Nayun frowned.

“See that in the distance? The maximum range is 1km. We’ll start from the 100m mark and increase by 50m every time. Let me show you.”

Chae Nayun held up her bow. After clearing her throat, she shouted, “Shot!”

A target immediately rose from the 100m mark. It wobbled as if to dodge Chae Nayun’s arrow. She fired a wooden arrow when the target reached its maximum height. The arrow cleanly pierced the target with her textbook posture and textbook technique. The spectators cheered. Honestly, my jaws also slightly dropped.

“Why? Is it more difficult than you thought?”

I responded with a slight smile, “No, I just thought it was too easy.”

I held out my hand to Chae Nayun.

“What.”

“Give me your bow and arrow. I don’t have any.”

“...I thought you’d do something like this.”

Chae Nayun growled and looked behind her. Immediately, some guy ran up and handed her a bow and a quiver full of arrows.

“Take it.”

“Thanks.”

I set the quiver down and examined the bow first.

“You ready?”

“Wait.”

This was the first time I touched a bow. I couldn't rent from Cube without paying. Thankfully, this traditional bow would be easier to use. I tried pulling on the string and nocking an arrow.

“Is this how you shoot?”

My gift couldn't do anything about my posture.

“...”

Chae Nayun dumbfoundedly stared at me. I meekly laughed and muttered, “I'm kidding. I'm ready. Let's go. Start.”

I could just copy Chae Nayun's posture. She clicked her tongue and turned towards her target. Then she loudly shouted, “Start!”

Her voice echoed with confidence.

Chapter 56

Bet (2)

“You have three lives. Whoever hits the farthest target wins.”

Our duel followed the general archery competition rules. I had seen heroes compete in archery on TV. Of course, they included additional effects like earthquakes and whatnot.

“Am I going first?” Chae Nayun asked.

“Yeah.”

“Alright. Let’s start at 200 meters since 100 meters is too easy.”

Chae Nayun nocked an arrow and pulled the bowstring. She stared at the 200 meter mark where the target would rise.

“Shot!”

The target sprung up from the right side. Chae Nayun turned her bow 60 degrees to the right and easily hit the target.

Chae Nayun crossed her arms and arrogantly looked over. I clumsily copied her posture by spreading my feet apart and shifting my center of gravity. Then I grabbed the bow and nocked an arrow. Was it voice recognition?

“Shot?”

I muttered, and a target sprung up. Startled, I released the bowstring. Naturally, the arrow missed way off its mark.

“Pfft. Puhaha.”

Chae Nayun laughed as she grabbed her stomach and pointed at me.

“Did you really not practice? Do you want to start over from the 100 meter mark?”

I shook my head.

Although I failed once, I felt how to position myself now. Chae Nayun had a textbook posture, but I didn’t need the same. Textbook postures only applied in perfect conditions. You couldn’t become an expert with just textbook material. It was only the minimum requirement, but my gift made me a natural master.

“I have to go again, right?”

“Yeah, yeah. You only have two lives left.”

I nodded and stood tall. I didn’t need to aim beforehand since the target moved anyways.

“Shot.”

The target sprung up. I predicted its trajectory and fired so that I would narrowly miss. The arrow grazed its target.

“...Is this a joke?”

I put on a show, but Chae Nayun seemed to have lost interest. The spectators also started calling me a big-mouthed fool desperate for attention. Missing twice in a row took it too far.

“I got the hang of it now.”

“Yeah right.”

“I’m going again.”

I quickly muttered.

“Shot.”

I fired the moment the target rose to about 2 meters. My arrow flew through the air and perfectly pierced it.

“Oh...?”

Chae Nayun seemed surprised at how quickly I fired. The spectators also reacted the same. I gestured at Chae Nayun with a leisurely smile.

“You’re up. No pressure.”

“...I guess you did practice.”

The distance increased to 250 meters. Chae Nayun stared ahead as she drew her bowstring.

“Shot!”

The target zigzagged through the air. Chae Nayun fired after a slight pause, and her arrow effortlessly pierced the center.

“You’re up next.”

Our back and forth felt extremely boring. We took turns firing and hitting our targets. However, the spectators didn’t feel the same as they watched in excitement.

We progressed from 300 meters, 350 meters, 400 meters, 450 meters... The distance increased until we reached 500 meters. The target could hardly be seen.

“...”

Chae Nayun’s arms nervously trembled. She would soon self-destruct as her personality didn't suit a sharpshooter. She lacked patience and easily grew angry. She wouldn't do well in a close competition.

"Shot."

Chae Nayun took a deep breath and fired.

"...Ah."

However, her arrow brushed past the target. She missed for the first time, and I could tell that shook her up.

"Shot."

She succeeded on her next attempt with two lives left and sighed in relief.

"Whew..."

Chae Nayun wouldn't be able to surpass 600 meters. I pressured her by shouting as soon as she finished.

"Shot."

I fired immediately, and the arrow perfectly pierced the center. Chae Nayun raised her bow again with a dark expression, but I interrupted her.

"Since we're at the halfway mark, I'll go first."

I held up my bow and nocked another arrow before she could agree.

"Shot."

The target sprung up from the 550 meter mark, but I could see the birdlike doll as if it was only a meter away. My eyes could also predict its path. I fired at the doll's silhouette after calculating for the speed of my arrow. Just like before, my arrow perfectly pierced the target.

“You’re next.”

Chae Nayun, who stared in a daze, suddenly flinched. Her lips dried, and she swallowed hard before silently raising her bow.

“You know it too, right?”

I provoked her before she could fire. Simply put, I trash-talked her to throw her off.

“You suck at using the bow.”

Chae Nayun glared at me. Honestly, hitting a target 550 meters away without magic power was commendable since wooden arrows couldn’t ignore air resistance. However, Chae Nayun wouldn’t settle for just commendable. She wouldn’t accomplish her goal by being decent.

“But why...”

“Shot!”

Chae Nayun cut me off. She gritted her teeth and fired. However, impatient archers never hit their mark. Chae Nayun’s arrow flew past the target.

“But why do you insist on using the bow? I grew curious, so I thought about it.”

“Shut up!”

Chae Nayun shouted in frustration.

“Shot!”

She concentrated as much as she could and fired. Thankfully, she managed to hit the target. I shouted without giving her a chance to rest.

“Shot!”

My target sprung up before the remnants of Chae Nayun's could even hit the ground. I fired and instantly destroyed the target. I didn't feel any pressure, but Chae Nayun's face began to pale. I continued what I was saying.

"Deep inside, you know it too. You're more talented with swords."

Yoo Sihyuk didn't take her as a disciple on a whim. As a master rank hero, he could care less about anyone's background. He only considered talent when choosing his disciples. Chae Nayun was one of the so-called children of Yoo Sihyuk.

"I said shut up!"

Chae Nayun shouted in rage. I raised my bow at the 600 meter mark. Without magic arrows, the maximum range for our light bows could only reach 1.4 kilometers. Although the 600 meter mark didn't even reach half of that, 1.4 kilometers was simply the maximum. Realistically, even professional archers could only hit at half that distance with 50% accuracy. In addition, our targets moved and flew through the air. Chae Nayun could simply not hit a target at this range.

"You're scared. You're scared of fighting with a sword and being drenched in blood."

She was the same in the original story. Her mother's murder traumatized her, and her trauma should have grown even worse in this timeline because of her older brother.

"That's why you justify it to yourself every day that you're just as talented with the bow. That you can still become the greatest hero."

I took a moment to breathe.

"But with a bow, you won't be able to kill a single djinn, much less avenge your older brother."

That was the final blow. Tak. Chae Nayun released her bowstring. Her arrow flew through emptiness and marked her third failure. She lost.

“What did you just say...”

Chae Nayun glared at me, full of rage. I could see blood dripping from her hands as she clenched her bow.

“You should use a sword with that strength.”

I stared into the distance. Then I shouted, “Shot!”

Not once, not twice, but thrice to 600 meters, 650 meters, 700 meters. Three targets rose in quick succession. I rapidly fired and pierced every target. I didn’t stop there. I wanted to know the limit of Master Sharpshooter’s grade 6. Since Chae Nayun lost, I kept shooting by myself to 750 meters, 800 meters... The atmosphere grew heavy as the distance increased, and Chae Nayun’s breathing filled with anger and defeat.

“I’ll stop here at 900 meters.”

I gave up since I felt like the 900 meter mark was my limit. I didn’t want to try and fail at 950.

“Your 550 meters vs. my 900 meters. I win, right?”

I stared at Chae Nayun. Her eyes had watered up before I noticed. Chae Nayun couldn’t win against her anger. Normally, she would have jumped at me when I mentioned her older brother, but she probably didn’t want to make a fuss after losing.

“I got lucky.”

I grinned and extended my hand towards Chae Nayun. Her face distorted, and she refused.

“What do you want.”

Chae Nayun briefly muttered. Unexpectedly, she accepted her loss. I smiled.

“Nothing. I want nothing.”

If I forced her to give up the bow, she would do so in frustration and regret. She would never reach the apex of swordsmanship if she didn't freely choose. I knew she could overcome her fear and trauma. She always grew through frustration, defeat, and anger. That shouldn't have changed.

“I want you to think for yourself. What is your gift and talent?”

I said so as I brushed my hair. I sweated quite a bit from all the focus. Then I remembered that the bow in my hands belonged to her.

“Oh, and I'll take this bow.”

Even the cheapest one cost millions of won. I had to save money when I could. Chae Nayun didn't seem to mind, or she might not have even heard. Her shoulders slightly trembled, and she quietly cried. I turned around and left the eerily silent archery range.

* * *

On the highest floor of Seoul's 5 star hotel...

“Boss, are you really going? You don't have to, you know.”

Jain worriedly asked in front of a fancy table in the penthouse.

“I am.”

Boss nodded.

“I'll examine him myself.”

“Sigh. You're obsessed about something again.”

Boss sounded very adamant. Jain released her magic power without a choice. It covered Boss' face and formed a new one on top. Jain could use her gift on someone else as long as they remained within 10 kilometers. She changed Boss' face and physique to a certain cadet.

"So, do we just wait somewhere under the sea?"

Jain murmured as she studied Boss' expression.

"Jain, are you scared?"

"No, I'm not scared. It's just that... you know, Yun Seung-Ah, that crazy bitch might come."

Yun Seung-Ah and Jain resembled a cat and dog. Jain wasn't confident if Yun Seung-Ah appeared as an exam overseer. She wasn't confident in letting her live.

"I lost that ring because of her. If I see her again, I don't think I can hold back."

Boss stared at Jain before nodding.

"Then just wait somewhere nearby."

"Okay. Ah, and here. It's the details for Boss' disguise. At least glance over it."

Jain gave Boss a thick stack of paper. She could copy her target's outer appearance and their habits, but the latter only applied to herself. Boss looked over the document containing the cadet's information.

"You're good at acting, right Boss?"

"Of course."

"...Okay."

Three weeks remained until the final exam.

Chapter 57

Bet (3)

The spectators applauded when Chae Nayun easily struck the target at 200 meters. Everyone felt she was an amazing archer, including Kim Suho. He looked around at the ten or so student archers that came to watch.

“Chae Nayun’s posture is so good.”

“She’s been doing it for a long time.”

“Yeah, but still, how can it be so perfect?”

They commented while Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, Yoo Yeonha, and Yi Yeonghan naturally listened to their explanations. Then Kim Hajin fired and missed by a mile.

“The hell... His posture is completely off.”

Kim Suho listened as he watched the duel. Kim Hajin fired a second time and missed again.

“Maybe he really didn’t practice.”

“No, he changed his bow’s direction at the last second. He missed on purpose.”

“Huh? Why would he do that?”

“I don’t know.”

Then Kim Hajin fired his third arrow and perfectly hit the target.

“See? He missed his second shot on purpose.”

“Okay, but why?”

“Fuck man, I don’t know!”

Kim Suho continued to watch.

“I’ve never seen him before at the archery range.”

One of the cadets muttered. Two facilities existed for sharpshooters, the shooting range and the archery range. The shooting range required magic power, while the archery range served traditional purposes. Most first year sharpshooters knew each other because they could only use certain ranges.

“Have you seen him?”

“No, I haven’t.”

“Maybe he comes after midnight?”

“No, that’s when I’m here, from midnight to 3, and I’ve never seen him.”

Kim Suho was speechless. Did Kim Hajin really not practice? However, Kim Hajin’s archery seemed too sharp and accurate. His arrows shot after the targets like a starving wild beast.

Soon, the archers began to compare their practice hours to solve this mystery. They stopped talking when the distance reached 400 meters. Kim Hajin had performed beyond their expectations. One of the cadets muttered in a daze.

“My record is 450 meters...”

Kim Hajin easily surpassed the 450 meter mark. The noisy crowd began to quiet down, and sounds of hard swallowing followed.

“Ah, Chae Nayun missed.”

Chae Nayun missed for the first time at 500 meters, but Kim Hajin easily succeeded like before. The same occurred at 550 meters. Kim Suho realized Chae Nayun would lose when she failed the second time. Now, they shot at 600 meters away. Kim Suho saw Kim Hajin saying something, but he couldn't hear. Curious, he focused his magic power on his ears.

— But with a bow, you won't be able to kill a single djinn, much less avenge your older brother.

Kim Suho frowned.

“What is he...”

Perhaps because of what he said, Chae Nayun failed again at the 600 meter mark. She fiercely glared at him, but Kim Hajin ignored her and concentrated on shooting.

“Whoa, what the hell!?”

The other archers exclaimed in shock as Kim Hajin shot down three targets at 600 meters, 650 meters, and 700 meters. Kim Hajin's technique looked like a form of art, but he appeared unsatisfied and continued. Kim Suho watched him with mixed feelings.

Yoo Yeonha also observed Kim Hajin perform as expected. However, she felt he only showed a fraction of his real power and couldn't help but wonder how much he hid.

“...What is he?”

“I don't know.”

“It must be a specialized gift.”

A nameless archer threw out an idea. Yoo Yeonha strained her ears at the words, specialized gift. It referred to a gift that specialized in a particular role. Although it wasn't showy like Kim Suho's or Shin

Jonghak's, specialized gifts stood at the peak of their fields. Furthermore, most of these rare individuals usually had an additional gift.

"Then there's no way Chae Nayun can beat him in pure archery. Not unless she uses magic power."

"Kim Hajin also uses a gun. They said his gift was the greatest gun-related gift."

"Maybe his specialized gift is for bows, and his other gift is for guns."

"Wow, then imagine if they were both for the bow."

"That wouldn't be fair. If that were the case, he would be in the same league as Jin Seyeon."

The archers nodded in agreement. For the record, Jin Seyeon was one of Korea's master rank heroes, the Divine Archer.

Kim Hajin turned around after hitting the 900 meter target. The archers suddenly froze as he faced them.

"..."

Dead silence followed as Kim Hajin walked past the crowd of spectators. Kim Suho made eye contact as Kim Hajin remained expressionless. Soon, Kim Hajin passed him by, and Kim Suho stared at Chae Nayun alone in the huge lane. Then he began to walk towards her.

"Nayun."

Chae Nayun's body jolted. Kim Suho stood an appropriate distance and picked out words to comfort her.

"Um, I heard from the other archers. It seems Kim Hajin has a specialized—"

Chae Nayun interrupted him.

“I’m... I’m not in the mood to talk. And specialized gift or not, that means there’s a difference in talent.”

“Nayun, don’t be so hard on yourself.”

“Just leave.”

Chae Nayun refused to turn around the entire time.

“...Okay.”

Kim Suho helplessly returned when he caught sight of another person smiling at him.

“Haha, you should know your place. Move over.”

Shin Jonghak sneered and walked towards Chae Nayun. However, Yoo Yeonha lightly grabbed Shin Jonghak’s sleeve and held him back.

“Jonghak, I think you should leave her alone for now.”

“No, I’m different.”

He confidently walked up to Chae Nayun despite Yoo Yeonha’s warning.

“Chae Nayun, I think you’re...”

“I SAID LEAVE!”

Chae Nayun’s roar startled Shin Jonghak.

“C-Chae Nayun? I’m not Kim Suho, I’m Shin Jonghak...”

Somewhat dazed, he placed his hand on her shoulder. She immediately smacked it away.

“I SAID LEAVE! SCREW OFF!”

“...Eh? Uh, um... uh, yeah.”

Shin Jonghak staggered back as though he just lost his soul.

“Didn’t I tell you?”

“...”

Chae Nayun ran into the forest as Shin Jonghak returned to Yoo Yeonha with a devastated face. Yoo Yeonha watched her leave with a grin. She felt happy seeing Chae Nayun get stomped.

However, her cold reasoning had already calculated a plan despite her emotions. The most effective way of establishing a connection was to help someone when they were down.

Chae Nayun held a grade 1 priority in Yoo Yeonha’s connection list. Not only was Chae Nayun a chaebol, but her conglomerate family didn’t run any guilds. In other words, Yoo Yeonha could recruit Chae Nayun into her guild in the future.

“Don’t worry. I’ll talk to her.”

Yoo Yeonha ran after Chae Nayun.

She discovered Chae Nayun behind a bush with her face buried between her knees. Her body quivered up and down.

“Nayun?”

She trembled, but didn’t respond. Yoo Yeonha quietly sat next to her, and Chae Nayun waddled to the side in response.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha didn't say anything. She only occasionally signaled to Chae Nayun that she was still there, patiently waiting. She waited for a fairly long time as the wind blew, leaves fell, and the sky grew dark. After about 30 minutes, Chae Nayun raised her head and wiped her tears.

“Yoo Yeonha.”

She called for Yoo Yeonha, who responded with a tender voice.

“Yeah?”

Chae Nayun spoke within the forest's silence.

“Did you guys... not hear him?”

“Hear what?”

“He... mentioned my older brother.”

“...Really? We were too far.”

Yoo Yeonha was genuinely surprised. To Chae Nayun, her older brother was a line no one could cross, the reverse scale of a dragon that shouldn't be touched. Every cadet took special care not to mention him.

“Yeah, that bastard... Haa, that was the second time.”

Chae Nayun couldn't even continue her sentence. She burned from a mixture of embarrassment and rage. She wanted to let it out, chase after him, and beat him. However, she had no strength left after he thoroughly crushed her.

“Mmm...”

Yoo Yeonha scratched her neck at the sight of Chae Nayun. Things got more complicated than she anticipated. Yoo Yeonha disliked Chae Nayun, but she also wanted to make her an ally. However, the same could be said for Kim Hajin, and he even saved her life. Rather than choosing sides, the best she could do was mend their relationship. Of course, she also wondered why Kim Hajin would say that.

“Haa.”

Yoo Yeonha sighed and contemplated what to say. She thought up a good idea exactly three minutes later. Cough. Yoo Yeonha spoke after clearing her throat.

“What?”

“Your older brother is still alive.”

“...Are you crazy?”

Chae Nayun glared at Yoo Yeonha as though she was about to strangle her. However, Yoo Yeonha calmly received her anger and continued.

“Did you know? People feel a sense of kinship with others who share similar wounds.”

The leaves shook. Chae Nayun looked confused as Yoo Yeonha continued.

“But when the depths of those wounds are different, if someone who should feel less pain is crying louder, the person with the deeper wound might find it unsightly.”

Yoo Yeonha recalled the message she received from Yoo Jinhyuk three days ago.

[It’ll take longer to look into him. Just know this, there’s definitely something about Kim Hajin.]

There's definitely something about Kim Hajin. Yoo Yeonha was sure of her hypothesis from this meaningful sentence. Someone had murdered Kim Hajin's parents, and Kim Hajin was searching for that person or group.

"What are you talking about? I..."

"That person, he's an orphan. Probably because of a reason similar to yours."

"...What?"

Chae Nayun's eyes widened. Yoo Yeonha expected such a reaction. Chae Nayun never cared about anyone else's past. It served as a defensive mechanism since if she dug up their past, they could dig up hers.

"Don't you know that others harassed him about it?"

Chae Nayun looked utterly oblivious. She couldn't imagine it in the first place. From her perspective, people who made fun of others without parents didn't exist. Chae Nayun swallowed hard and asked again.

"He endured it?"

"That's the only thing you're curious about?"

Yoo Yeonha frowned as though she was tired.

"Kim Hajin was being harassed because of you. Because you told Jonghak."

"T-That's..."

"Nayun."

Yoo Yeonha collected her breath before continuing.

“You’re not the only one with a painful past.”

Chae Nayun’s face turned blank. She recalled mentioning what he said about her older brother to Shin Jonghak. Then the harassment and nasty rumors about Kim Hajin began. She was the source, yet she didn’t try to stop it. On the contrary, she purposely ignored it and couldn’t deny that. Still, she didn’t expect those delinquents would dig up his past.

“C-Cough.”

Yoo Yeonha held back her laughter at Chae Nayun’s ridiculous face by clearing her throat. This seemed like enough. Investing any more time and emotion didn’t suit her.

“Then I’m leaving. I’m only a third party, after all. You can think it through yourself, Nayun.”

Yoo Yeonha gently stroked her shoulder and left.

“...Uh, yeah.”

Chae Nayun’s voice sounded much weaker than before. Yoo Yeonha felt like she gained points from both of them. Satisfied, she went back with a light heart.

“...”

Chae Nayun remained all alone in the vast, silent forest. She blankly stared into the distance. Chwaaaaa— From the darkness, a calm wind blew and brushed against the leaves. Chae Nayun self-reflected as she watched the leaves shake and fall.

“Haha, you sure got big.”

I looked at Evandel’s seed with a big grin. It acted surprisingly cute in the way it quivered to absorb blood.

I already knew what the seed would look like once it hatched. At first, she would look like a 3 to 4 year old child, but Evandel was an extraordinary witch. She could easily transform into a cat or a dog.

“Should I go with a cat? Or a dog?”

I worried because raising a child at Cube was absolutely not allowed. However, Cube allowed pets and encouraged them as they could help with mental health. Cube even had a pet adoption center.

“When will you hatch?”

I gently rubbed the seed’s belly. It quivered, almost as if it was ticklish.

“Haha, you’re so cute.”

I suddenly remembered Mong, the dog I used to own. He only liked Mom and Dad, but I missed everyone from Earth at this point. Suddenly, an alert popped up on my laptop on the desk.

[You have obtained 253 SP.] [An incredible luck has been applied to your relationship!] [Narrow Escape from Death (2/9) – A special stat, accumulation of luck, has partly unlocked!]

“What’s this?”

I couldn’t understand the alert.

Chapter 58

Change

In Dorm 4's penthouse, Chae Nayun lay in bed on a Sunday. Classes would resume tomorrow.

"Haaa..."

She sighed about tomorrow. Fear overcame her as it should have already spread that Kim Hajin completely overwhelmed her. Some would feel elated, while others would worry. Chae Nayun rather they felt embarrassed for her than worry or sympathize.

However, what bugged her most was Kim Hajin himself.

"Smoking..."

Chae Nayun recalled her conversation with Kim Hajin in Norway. He had murmured that he quit smoking. She thought he just pretended to act cool, but now she somewhat understood. He must've used it to relieve the pain.

Chae Nayun fell flat on her bed. She found ample evidence of Shin Jonghak's lackeys harassing Kim Hajin. They posted on forums and commented on social media. She looked through all of it and could hardly stomach it. Embarrassment, shame, and remorse tangled up inside her into a complicated emotion.

Kim Hajin had changed weapons and positions first. She read that he was initially a swordsman. Even so, he gave up the sword because of his gift.

He had abandoned everything and chose an unorthodox weapon like a gun. Chae Nayun wondered what he must have felt.

She reached below her bed and took out a big suitcase. Then she got up and opened it. Immediately, her treasured memories resurfaced.

The suitcase contained hundreds of pictures. She had buried them deep inside her heart, but she could never forget those moments with her most beloved people. Her mother and older brother happily smiled with her in the pictures. She teared up from simply looking at her younger self, who seemed so happy.

“Huup.”

Chae Nayun held back her tears. Then she picked up the short sword in the suitcase. It only measured about a meter long, but was enchanted with special magic that could increase its length. The maximum height was about 4 meters from what she recalled. Yoo Sihyuk had gifted her this mystical sword eight years ago. She held it in her hands for the first time in a long time. Although it looked like a toy, it was a deadly weapon that felt heavier than the world when she was young.

“What was my limit again? My magic power control wasn’t good when I was 8, but it was around 2 meters?”

Chae Nayun imbued the sword with her magic power. The blade shot up to the ceiling.

“Wow... I grew a lot.”

Chae Nayun stared at the sword for a long time and realized the obvious. She enveloped it with her blue magic power just like her master taught her. Jiing. The sword resonated with her magic power and manifested sword qi.

Chae Nayun rested her forehead against the sword and closed her eyes. She engraved the sensation of the cold metal and the ringing of magic power in her heart.

I had a meeting with Cube's faculty on Sunday because of something called a specialized gift. The rumor that I defeated Chae Nayun and hit the 900 meter mark already spread across Cube. They asked whether it was true, and I nodded after some thought. Then they asked whether I wanted to release the information publicly or keep it secret. I chose the latter. Honestly, it didn't matter since it would be revealed anyway. The only difference was that the latter made me a product. If someone wanted information about me, they would have to purchase it from Cube. Of course, since rumors had already spread, they would only be paying for confirmation.

I left the administration building after the meeting. Hardly anyone roamed around because of final exams in two weeks. Instead, everyone either studied at the library or trained at the fitness center.

I returned to my room and sat on the couch with my laptop. I needed to buy numerous things for the upcoming exam.

[Automatic Tent] [Porkchops] [Chicken Breast] [Frying Pan] [Portable Grill]...

I put every camping equipment I could think of into the shopping cart. It cost me two million won, but I didn't hesitate. Instructors would check our bags before the final exam for personal weapons and defensive equipment. However, they permitted the items I had just bought. If asked, I had more than enough excuses. I could just say I prepared everything in case.

[Your purchase has been completed.]

Park Soohyuk also sent me a message after the confirmation.

[Hajin, we made our website. Take a look. You're on our list of investors.]

[wmw.shagency.com]

"Oh?"

I went to the agency website.

[Cultivation of Trust – SH Agency] [SH Agency Introduction] [List of Investors] [List of Affiliated Hunters]

The design looked decent. Was the list of affiliated hunters just blank? I snickered as I clicked on it.

[Jamie King] [Date of birth: 08/03/1997] A hunter with 5 years of experience.

[Joshua] [Date of birth: 09/01/2005] A hunter with 1 year of experience.

“Oh, there actually are some?”

Surprisingly, he had recruited two other hunters. I clicked on the list of investors, and a particular name pleasantly surprised me. I thought I would be the only one.

[Kim Hajin.] [Yoo Yeonha.]

She acted fast as expected. I closed the laptop with a grin.

[How's the website?]

[It's nice and clean, but I think you should put Yoo Yeonha's name before mine on the list of investors.]

She cared about such things even if she might not act like it.

[Why? I don't care, but shouldn't you come first? You know, both alphabetically and by who came first.]

[No, just do as I say.]

If left unchanged, the number of future investments could decrease.

The next day.

“Huuu.”

I collected my breath outside the classroom. I felt incredibly nervous since the archery duel had about 70 spectators. It would be strange if anyone didn't know what happened after two days.

I felt somewhat apprehensive, but opened the door and entered. Everyone immediately looked at me, and I could hear them murmuring. I ignored whatever they said and sat at my usual spot. Chae Nayun wasn't here yet.

“...?”

I thought she wasn't, but heard her familiar voice. I turned and saw Chae Nayun, slightly different from her usual self. Her long brown hair, which reached her chest, had been cut to her shoulders. She whispered with Yoo Yeonha.

“So how's the short hair? You look good.”

“Hair is hair. I do like that it's less hot. You should also cut your hair.”

“I like mine the way it is. By the way, you didn't cut your hair because of the bet, right?”

“I cut it because it was hot. Plus, you can't always win. Do I look like someone who would dwell on the past?”

She seemed the same other than her short hair. Chae Nayun stretched and turned her head sideways. I quickly buried my face into the desk.

Chae Nayun pretended to stretch and peeked at Kim Hajin. He had just arrived, but was already diligently studying.

“Kuu, I'm tired.”

Chae Nayun faced forward.

“Oh right, did you study?”

Shin Jonghak, who sat behind her, asked. Chae Nayun simply replied.

“I did enough.”

Theory classes only played a minor role in Cube. Combat exams and written exams had a 7:3 ratio on grades. Those who ranked near the top in combat exams usually scored similarly in written exams, although exceptions existed.

“Enough? Then you should be around rank 600 again, hahaha.”

Shin Jonghak made fun of her since she looked fine, but Chae Nayun was just pretending.

“...”

She fiercely glared at him. Shin Jonghak stopped snickering and awkwardly backed off.

“Oh right, here are the phenomenon realm analysis notes you asked about yesterday.”

Kim Suho changed the topic in a hurry.

“Thanks. I’ll quickly copy and return it.”

“Don’t expect too much. Phenomenon realm analysis is difficult for everyone except Kim Ha...”

Kim Suho suddenly realized he had made a mistake.

“You’re right. It’s difficult for everyone except Kim Hajin. It’s fine, geez. You don’t have to be so careful.”

Chae Nayun shook her head and placed Kim Suho’s notebook in front of her. Although Yoo Yeonha studied better than Kim Suho, Chae Nayun couldn’t rely on her. In reality, Yoo Yeonha had two notebooks because she didn't want to lend her real one to Chae Nayun.

Drrrrrk—

The theory professor walked in.

“Now, now, quiet down. You know exams are in two weeks, right? It'll cover everything up to aurora reaction.”

The noisy classroom quieted down. The professor went over the material on the test before beginning the day's class. Chae Nayun opened her notebook and grabbed her pen.

I'll study hard today and show that I'm different from before... but I'm a bit sleepy... this is the professor's fault...

She needed to copy down a ton of material after dozing off.

“Alright, here's your favorite type of calculation problem. I know some of you don't understand why you need to learn this, but once you go out into the real world and enter dungeons, you'll thank me on your knees. So don't slack off now if you don't want to cry tears of blood later.”

The professor finished explaining the theoretical concepts and moved on to example problems. Unfortunately, Chae Nayun couldn't understand any of it.

“For this problem, I would like a helper. Let's see...”

The professor paused and looked over the cadets. Chae Nayun grew nervous that he might call her. The archery duel had already embarrassed her to death. She couldn't handle being embarrassed again.

“Ah. Cadet Kim Hajin. Please come out.”

Thankfully, he didn't pick Chae Nayun. Kim Hajin stood up from his seat and strolled to the podium as everyone looked at him. Then he received a hologram pen from the professor and effortlessly solved the problem. His procedures and calculations appeared flawless. Even his penmanship looked impeccable. Chae Nayun stared at the variables and numbers he wrote. Then she snapped out of her daze and began to copy everything down.

“Good. Very good.”

The professor applauded as Kim Hajin finished. Everyone else busily copied what he wrote.

“Perfect. As expected of rank 1 in the world. You can take a seat now. I’ll explain.”

Rank 1 in the world? Kim Hajin tilted his head in confusion, but returned without further questions.

“Look everyone. This is what we call a perfect, model answer.”

The professor gathered everyone’s attention. This time, Chae Nayun also paid attention with wide eyes.

I went to the shooting range on Monday at 10 P.M. after working out at the fitness center. I cranked up the difficulty to stage 10, where the targets also attacked. Faint shouting came through the walls as I practiced. Huap! Hiyaap! Something like that. Curious, I peeked through the walls.

“...Hmm?”

Chae Nayun brandished a sword against a dummy in the shooting room next to me. It looked strange seeing someone with a sword at the shooting range, but I felt good about it. In the original story, Chae Nayun switched to a sword about a year after she graduated from Cube because of the Genghis Khan artifact scramble in Mongolia. She had encountered the djinn who killed her mother, but couldn’t kill him with her bow.

She would become a monster if she started honing her swordsmanship

now. She'd be second only to Kim Suho by graduation. Feeling pleased with myself, I stretched and ended today's practice. As I left, the door next to me also opened. Chae Nayun walked out as she wiped her sweat. We both froze.

“...”

“...”

Honestly, I felt sorry about what I said to her. Although I had good intentions, I still hit her nerve twice. I spoke first before she could attack me.

“D-Did you finish your archery practice?”

“Huh? Oh, uh, yeah.”

Chae Nayun awkwardly replied.

“W-What, I can't?”

“No, keep up the good work.”

I wanted to end the conversation and leave, but Chae Nayun stopped me.

“Hey.”

“...”

I was a bit scared, but turned around and faced her.

“What.”

“You, um... said you quit smoking.”

“What?”

Her unexpected words caught me off guard. Indeed, I did say that during our Norway trip. Chae Nayun had overheard me muttering to myself.

“I did.”

“...How did you quit?”

It sounded completely irrelevant. Was she trying to offer me a poisoned cigarette?

“You don’t need to know.”

I didn’t have an answer, so I cut her off and left. I could feel her gaze behind me.

Chapter 59

Final Exam (1)

A week before the final written exams. Tiiring— Tiiring— I received two messages on my smartwatch while playing a VR game.

[Hajin, do you have plans to sell a study guide?]

[Hajin, this is Yeonji. Can you lend me your notes? ㅌㅌ I'll pay you back with ranking points when we become heroes ㅌㅌㅌㅌ Pleaaaaaase? ㅌㅌㅌ ㅌ]

Cadets started acting desperate as strangers messaged me. They spoke behind my back, calling me a delinquent, so I didn't intend to help anyone. Who was Yeonji anyway?

“Yeah, no.”

I blocked them, but another message came.

“What now...”

My frown immediately disappeared. It came from Rachel.

[Um, can you perhaps help me with this problem ㅠ.ㅠ? It's a calculation problem, but it's too hard... :'(]

Rachel sent a picture of the problem.

“...”

I quietly worked on it.

Four days before the written exams, Yoo Yeonha worked on a talent report late into the night. She wore round glasses with a spelling checker and increased recovery for her eyes.

[Kim Hajin] [Physical] ★★★★★☆ – ★★★★★☆ [Intelligence]
★★★★★ [Utility] ★★★★★★ [Potential] ★★★★★★ [Gift] ???

Evaluation – Grade 1 — He is hiding his power for some reason, but his strength surpasses the level of cadets. — His gift has yet to be revealed, but is estimated to be at least four stars.

[Kim Suho] [Physical] ★★★★★☆ [Intelligence] ★★★★★☆ [Utility] ★★★★★ [Potential] ★★★★★★ [Gift] ★★★★★★

Evaluation – Grade 1 — His gift, Sword Saint, is more than enough to give him full points. — His elegant swordsmanship is well known among cadets. — Although not as much as Kim Hajin, he has the potential to reach the pinnacle of heroes...

“Auuuu, I’m exhausted.”

Yoo Yeonha set her glasses down. She spent five hours writing this report that quantified the ability of seven cadets, including Kim Hajin and Kim Suho. It provided around 200 pages of data and contained secret information. She sent the top-secret document to Essence of the Strait’s guild leader, Yoo Jinwoong.

Yoo Yeonha prioritized the report over her grades. Of course, good grades weren’t bad, but Yoo Yeonha didn’t aim to become the greatest hero. She knew her limits and understood that a hero was only one individual. No matter how strong, they would never win against society. However, Yoo Yeonha wanted to cultivate a new society in Korea. She entered Cube solely to obtain a hero status and make connections.

“Is he going to continue ignoring me?”

Yoo Yeonha grumbled as she picked up her smartwatch. Yoo Jinhyuk hadn’t replied back.

The Chameleon Troupe's Boss collected her breath in front of an unfamiliar door three days before the written exams on Friday.

— Boss, no one will notice your disguise, so don't worry. Remember, your name is Seo Ijin. Find me in the infirmary if anything happens.

Jain's voice sounded in her ears. Her disguise looked perfect. The cadet named Seo Ijin had a similar build and hair color, so her disguise didn't take much magic power either.

— Go in.

Boss nodded and opened the door. Cadets filled the room because the class would begin soon. She had already memorized everyone's faces. Then she walked to the group that Seo Ijin often hung out with. Suddenly...

"Hey! Seo Ijin!"

Someone struck her head. She didn't suffer any injury, but fell in a daze. She thought about what just happened and stiffly turned. A boy she didn't recognize spoke to her.

"Did you study well?"

He looked down at her. She replied just as she had practiced.

"...Un, I did."

"What were you doing yesterday? You weren't respon—"

She sat at her seat before the boy could say anything else.

"Ijin."

A pair of arms wrapped around her neck. It slightly startled her, but she wasn't as shocked as before. She calmly looked at the girl who clung to her back like a huge cicada. A single fist could also kill the girl, just like a cicada.

Drrrrrk—

The door opened, and Boss saw the reason she infiltrated this class. She stared at Kim Hajin, who walked in while yawning and made eye contact. Immediately, he froze.

...The hell.

I looked at a girl I usually didn't notice. I didn't know her name, but she was in my class. The way she interacted with her friends looked completely normal. However, I could see through her disguise. My gift, Observation and Reading, perfectly unmasked Jain's gift.

That girl wasn't an ordinary cadet, but the Chameleon Troupe's Boss. She probably came here to observe Kim Suho. Still, this never occurred in the original story.

"Hey, why did you stop using social media? Did you find a boyfriend?"

Cadets who didn't know her true identity touched her here and there. The girl she disguised as was a bit of a pushover.

"Hoho, boyfriend? What do you mean? I just slept because I was tired."

Boss awkwardly responded, and I broke out into a cold sweat. I felt like their limbs and bones could break with one wrong move.

"Ah, Ijin, your cheeks are chubbier than usual. Did you eat ramen before sleeping?"

One of the girls pinched Boss' cheeks, and her face immediately stiffened. I opened my mouth almost instinctively.

"Hey. Hey."

They didn't hear me as Boss's cheeks extended. I could see her fists clenching.

“HEY!”

I shouted and went overboard with my volume. The classroom instantly fell silent, and everyone looked at me. I didn't care.

“Can you shut up!? I'm trying to study!”

I yelled as I pointed at my notebook on my desk. If Boss exploded, everyone in this room could die.

“...What, you think you can tell us what to do just because you're smart?”

They grumbled unhappily, but stopped messing with Boss. Afterward, Boss gave me an odd look and buried her face into the desk. The rest spoke behind my back.

I carefully observed Boss disguised as Seo Ijin for the entire week. I didn't just watch her. I even talked to her like a friend, hoping to obtain some SP. She spoke like a generic high school girl trying to sound cute, which didn't suit her, and she even bought me ice cream. I didn't eat it and left it in my refrigerator.

The written exams ended without much trouble. The weekend after felt desolate as cadets who pulled all-nighters focused on returning to their peak physical condition. The weekend went by like a breeze.

“Now, focus!”

Monday finally arrived. The final exam would begin as 1300 first year cadets went to a harbor in Busan, and every class took a different ship.

“We will now inspect your baggage.”

The instructors inspected the cadets as soon as they boarded the ship. Three instructors called for us as I entered a room with one of them and handed him my magic pouch.

“Weight?”

“10kg.”

“What’s inside?”

“Food, tent, frying pan, torch, grill... things like that.”

“I’m opening it.”

Why ask what’s inside if you’re going to open it? I grumbled inwardly as the instructor pulled everything out. He stared in disbelief at the assortment of items.

“Why did you prepare so much?”

“Well, the announcements said that a single exam would last an entire week, so I had a general idea. I prepared accordingly.”

“Clever.”

The instructor grinned, but still carefully checked everything. Then he sent me back. Thankfully, he didn’t find out about Evandel’s seed. I brought it with me since it could hatch at any time. He probably thought it was a slightly big almond or something.

“Hua.”

After the inspection, I sat down on a bench near the ship’s bow. I could see an island coming into view. Countless drones flew around like seagulls.

“I’m feeling nervous.”

This exam would be difficult since I couldn’t use my Desert Eagle.

No, I could use it. I just had to avoid those drones by hacking them.

“Now, I will explain how this exam will work.”

An instructor came out to explain after the inspection.

“In 30 minutes, you will split into groups of 10 and land in different areas of that island. You will stay there for five days and survive on your own. We will, however, provide half a day’s worth of food.”

The food had decreased in half from the original story. The ship grew noisy at the instructor’s shocking announcement.

“The exam is rather simple. The number of points you gain will be your grade. Obtaining points is rather simple. Plenty of wild animals and monsters live on that island. You can hunt the wild animals for food, and you will gain points for hunting the monsters. You can gain 1 to 10 points depending on their rank and grade. You should have all received special smartwatches for this exam. Scan their corpses to see how many points they’re worth.”

The instructor continued explaining. In summary, cadets could steal, sell, and buy points from each other. In addition, they could eliminate other cadets and gain an additional 5 points along with all the points the eliminated cadet had obtained. However, cadets could only fight each other after the first 12 hours.

“In addition, exam overseers will carry name tags on their chests. Although I doubt anyone will succeed, you can steal these nametags for 200 points each.”

No one seemed interested despite the huge amount of points.

“Finally, you see that tower in the middle? If your smartwatch is stolen, you will be eliminated. Head to that tower and wait for the exam to end.”

A heavy tension filled the ship after the instructor’s explanation. No one spoke to each other. Soon, the instructors brought out boats. Cadets would now arrive on the island in groups of ten.

“Chae Nayun, Jin Yooyun, Selen, Haize...”

The starting group would determine our potential teammates or enemies.

“Kim Hajin, Jin Seoha, Yoojoong, Wang Shifu, Blen... Rachel, Tara.”

I got on the boat and exchanged awkward looks with the nine other cadets. Rachel was also in my group. Soon, the boat set off. I gazed at the island in thought. Rachel would face the greatest danger in this exam. Lancaster, who already resented her, had become a bigger threat in this world.

“Here’s your stop.”

The boat arrived before I could carefully plan. I spoke to Rachel the moment we landed.

“Rachel, would you like to team up?”

I didn’t expect her to agree as Rachel shook her head.

“I’m more comfortable alone.”

However, I didn’t back down. I gave her my smartwatch’s live coordinates. The exam smartwatch had three functionalities: scanning monsters, trading points, and location sharing. The latter two functions encouraged teams.

“Just in case you change your mind.”

I spoke as I pointed at my watch. Then Rachel smiled and left. Meanwhile, the remaining cadets murmured to themselves about me being rejected. Since these guys didn’t seem useful, I left and ran into the forest.

I opened my laptop after leaning against a random tree and paid a reasonable amount of SP to hack the drones’ servers. The laptop screen split into 60 smaller screens. I could analyze all of them simultaneously, thanks to my gift.

Most of the important cadets acted alone. Chae Nayun was already lost, Kim Suho fought a monster, and Yoo Yeonha was the only one who formed a team. If I recalled, the girl she teamed up with was ranked 15. She already won over a skilled cadet. However, I wasn't interested in them.

“There.”

I discovered a group of five cadets from the repeating class. I had already looked up the faces of potential threats. Only two of those five were djinns in the original story, but all five could be djinns in this world. However, I still had some time before they would act. After all, cadets couldn't fight each other for the next 12 hours. Before then...

“I guess I should find a camping spot.”

Chapter 60

Final Exam (2)

An hour passed since we arrived on the island. I headed back to my camping spot near a river with a mountain on one side. The ancient sages would have called it back to the mountain, face to the water.

I was full of cheats with my laptop displaying drone footage in my right hand, and the Book of Truth with a map of the island in my pocket.

I ran into a monster before I reached the camping spot.

The clown monkey had many colorful spots. However, its face looked grotesque, and its human size always surprised people when they first saw it.

“Jesus, it looks horrifying.”

Clown monkeys should be low-intermediate rank, grade 9. The one in front of me looked average. I took out my training handgun. It would be troublesome if I didn’t finish it in one blow, so I aimed for its vital point at the tail. Clown monkeys moved fast, but lost their balance without their tails.

I pulled the trigger without hesitation. The magic bullet pierced its tail as it tried to escape and fell. I fired five quick shots into its head, although the fourth had already penetrated its skull.

“That was easy.”

After scanning the clown monkey’s corpse with my smartwatch, I continued on my way. Finally, a river appeared after about 30 minutes of walking. The source came from the northernmost area, which flowed down and split into eight branches. This river seemed like a tributary, but could reliably serve as a water source. Furthermore, a rocky mountain stood behind it with a dense forest above, making it the ideal camping spot.

I took out my tent, which looked like a small disk, and opened it with stigma's magic power. The disk expanded into a large tent.

"Wow."

It felt cozier than I imagined with a bed and a small table inside. I decided to sleep since nothing major would happen yet.

"Yaaawn."

I jumped into bed.

* * *

Nine hours after the start of the exam. The blazing sun had set, and darkness descended on the island.

"Haa..."

Rachel sat on a rocky mountain and collected her breath. She set out by herself after rejecting several offers, but now she felt the need to team up more than anyone else because of food.

"Auu..."

Rachel looked at her food supply with mixed feelings. Only half remained. She ate two hours ago, but she became hungry again after scuffling with a monster. Cadets had to look for edible plants or hunt wild animals. Anyone could guess that wild animals stayed near rivers, but even if she hunted them, she didn't know how to cook. Rachel had no experience with butchery.

She could also trade with other cadets since she had already hunted six monsters. However, points were extremely precious. She needed food as fuel to obtain points, so trading points for food didn't make sense. A faint scent of meat tickled her nose as she seriously pondered.

“...”

She looked down the mountain and saw a faint fire in the dark. It smelled like grilled meat.

Rachel swallowed her saliva. Although she still had half of her food, she had to save as much as possible. She would be at a disadvantage if she appeared desperate during a trade.

Rachel jumped and ran down 300 meters in just three minutes. She reached the ground and followed after the smell. Soon, she found five cadets cooking a giant boar. They noticed her and turned.

“Eh?”

The group contained three male and two female cadets. Rachel silently stared at them.

“What do you want?”

They put up their guard as Rachel estimated their combat potential. However, it was still too early to fight other cadets. Rachel pointed at the boar.

“I’d like to buy some.”

“Ah, haha, you’re working alone.”

A male cadet, who seemed to be the leader, stood up. He approached Rachel and held out his greasy hand. Rachel tried to shake it anyway, but the man pulled back.

“Ah, my hand is dirty.”

He laughed heartily and continued.

“You’re welcome to join us. We’re all cadets here. That’s fine with you all, right?”

He gave the others a meaningful look that Rachel couldn't see. Then he turned back.

"Oh right, you must not know our names, but we know yours."

"..."

Rachel silently nodded. He scratched his neck and spoke.

"Well, Rachel is famous. I'm Joo Yeohoon."

"Argh, where am I?"

Chae Nayun wandered in the woods for 14 hours. During this time, she used a bow and a sword to hunt 9 monsters and likely placed herself near the top of the leaderboard.

"There's no end..."

She plowed through vines and tall grass, but couldn't find any water or food. She never even ran into another cadet. Now she felt exhausted.

A faint light appeared when she almost passed out. It looked like a campfire.

"Oooh!"

Chae Nayun ran towards the light and could smell a spicy fragrance. After escaping the endless field of tall grass...

"Eh?"

She saw Kim Hajin munching on a piece of meat. He stared at her with chopsticks in his hand and a plate full of meat.

"...What?"

He tilted his head and asked. Chae Nayun swallowed hard. Although she preferred high-class meals, she had gone 14 hours with little rest or food. She had already finished her rations and had prepared to eat anything.

Chae Nayun observed Kim Hajin and his surroundings. He had a huge, cozy tent behind him. The source of light wasn't a campfire, but a portable grill. He also had a table, a chair, a frying pan, and packaged meat.

“W-What the heck, where did you get all this?”

“I prepared for the exam.”

“What? How did you know to prepare all this?”

“I brought them just in case. Don't you know I'm number 1 in the world?”

Kim Hajin tapped on his head and spoke.

“I'm pretty damn smart.”

“...Yeah, good for you.”

Chae Nayun sarcastically remarked. She swallowed hard at the meat while Kim Hajin wondered if their encounter occurred out of luck. It did seem like points had just walked into him.

“You hungry?”

“...”

Chae Nayun nodded.

“How much food do you have left?”

“...I lost it while fighting a monster.”

She had eaten it all, but lied.

“R-Really, I’m a bit clumsy.”

“Hmm.”

Kim Hajin crossed his arms and thought while Chae Nayun held her breath.

“How many points do you have?”

Chae Nayun breathed a sigh of relief. She had killed nine monsters and obtained 35 points, but lied again.

“Twenty... five.”

“Then give me half.”

“H-Half?”

That was expensive for a single meal.

“Yep, but in exchange, you’re sleepy, right? I’ll also lend you a sleeping bag. Just say no if you don’t want to.”

“N-No! I mean, yes! I, I want to.”

Chae Nayun turned on her smartwatch. It could recognize other smartwatches within a 3m radius.

[Kim Hajin] —Point trading —Location sharing

She clicked on point trading. Half of 25 was 12.5, but they could only trade whole numbers. So she sent Kim Hajin 12 points and stealthily sat next to him. Kim Hajin gave her some cooked pork chops after receiving the points.

“Are you okay with just this? They’re pork chops.”

“...I'll have to eat to live.”

Chae Nayun heard this was common in dungeons and towers. She ate the pork chop. Was it because she was hungry? It tasted delicious. Then she saw Kim Hajin dipping his into a sauce. She did the same and it tasted even better.

The two of them silently ate for 20 minutes.

“Ah, now I'm full.”

Chae Nayun felt a bit awkward once they finished eating. She wasn't particularly close to Kim Hajin. Their relationship felt uncomfortable.

Just when she thought about running away...

“Here.”

Kim Hajin handed her a bottle of water. She stared in hesitation.

“It's mineral water, not river water.”

Can he read my mind? Cough. Chae Nayun took the water. Gulp, gulp, kyaa. She sighed in satisfaction after consuming half of it in one go.

“By the way, what's that?”

She suddenly spotted a ring on Kim Hajin's index finger.

“...”

Kim Hajin's face stiffened. For a moment, he rubbed it without talking and thought about what to say. Chae Nayun suddenly understood.

“Ah, nevermind, nevermind. I'm not curious at all.”

I might not act like it, but I can take a hint. It must be a family keepsake. Chae Nayun finished her water without waiting for a reply. Meanwhile, Kim Hajin stared at her with the eyes of a dead fish.

“I never said you could drink it all.”

“...Eh?”

* * *

The following morning arrived. Birds chirped, and monsters howled from the forest. I woke up from the noise and got out of bed. I felt a bit stiff, but this was a luxury on the island.

“Auuu.”

I left the tent and basked in the sunlight. However, no sunlight shone.

“Is it a polar night?”

Outside remained dark, probably because of the magicians at the island’s central tower. I saw Chae Nayun still asleep in her sleeping bag on the ground. Last night must have been cold since only her face peeked out. She looked like a caterpillar.

Tong!

Suddenly, the seed on my tent table jumped up. It had already finished its meal and quivered.

“...Why are you so cute?”

I tickled the seed and wrapped it with another bloody gauze. Then I retrieved the tent. I had no intentions of staying in the same place. Chae Nayun still slept in the sleeping bag, but I could just gift it to her.

Now that cadets could fight each other, I planned on going against some dangerous individuals. Of course, I couldn’t kill them. Some didn’t even realize they were djinns. Technically, they weren’t yet. That was the difference between a djinn who contracted another djinn and a djinn who contracted a devil.

In the former's case, their contracted djinn supplied them with magic power. As a result, they could avoid going berserk, and their contracts were less strict. These djinns were often treated as expendable if they failed their mission.

On the other hand, djinns who directly contracted devils like Sven, Yun Hyun, and Lancaster were rarer. Only a cadet named Joo Yeohoon overcame the side-effect of directly contracting a devil on this island.

"I'll have to go higher."

For now, I planned on climbing the world tree located at the island's center. Although it sounded grandiose, it was just a huge tree.

Yoo Yeonha managed to form a group in just 24 hours. She led a small team of five and efficiently amassed points utilizing their strengths.

"Yeonha, I found someone."

A sharpshooter named Rose whispered to Yoo Yeonha and drew her bow without permission. Yoo Yeonha's whip flew in like lightning and snatched it away before she could fire.

"Eh?"

"Don't."

Yoo Yeonha glared at Rose.

"You can't touch that cadet."

"Eh? I-Isn't he rank 934?"

Every cadet wore a nametag with their rank, and rankings wouldn't change until after the final exam. Most would know that cadet even without a nametag. Rank 934 Kim Hajin was known for his gun-related gift among other things.

“No, you can’t win against him.”

However, Yoo Yeonha cut her off. Suddenly, Kim Hajin made his move. As if to save her from explaining, he climbed to the peak of a giant 150 meter tree with impeccable movements. In just a few breaths, he disappeared into the dense leaves. The series of unrealistic maneuvers astonished Rose.

Yoo Yeonha spoke in a stern voice.

“See that? I just saved your life, Rose. To that guy, rank is just a number. You would have lost for sure if you released that bowstring. Not only that, but the rest of us would have also been in trouble.”

“Ah...”

“Many hidden dragons exist in this world. That’s why the Hero Association can’t do anything about hunters of the Vast Expanse. Next time, don’t do anything before I give the order.”

Rose nodded like a child scolded by her teacher.

“Also, keep it a secret about that guy being uncharacteristically strong.”

“Eh? Why?”

Rose couldn’t help but ask. Yoo Yeonha briefly explained.

“Because he might become a part of our family. For the record, I like people with heavy mouths.”

Rose shuddered. Essence of the Strait was the world’s second ranked guild. The rank 68 Rose couldn’t believe the offer.

“Ah, yes! I’ll keep it a secret! Until death!”

“Good.”

After smiling at the obedient Rose, Yoo Yeonha stared at the giant tree Kim Hajin had scaled. It looked so monstrous even the most courageous would hesitate to climb it. Just looking up at it made one’s neck hurt, but Kim Hajin reached the peak in mere minutes.

“...Hmm.”

Should I modify Kim Hajin’s physical ability rating? Yoo Yeonha thought about her report.

Tiiring— A message arrived on her smartwatch.

“Ah, Ijin contacted us. Let’s go back.”

Cadets who shared locations could also message each other. Yoo Yeonha was likely the first to discover this.

Chapter 61

Final Exam (3)

Chae Nayun opened her eyes after Kim Hajin had left. However, she only got up after confirming he was gone. She had woken up a long time ago, but his words had stunned her.

— Why are you so cute?

“...”

Chae Nayun’s cheeks flushed red. Everyone praised her looks since she was young, but she never expected Kim Hajin to say such a thing.

“Auuu...”

She shook her head to remove those thoughts.

“Whatever, I didn’t hear it. He was talking to himself. There must have been a cat or a dog nearby. Definitely.”

Chae Nayun murmured and crawled out of the sleeping bag. It felt as warm and cozy as a bed.

Should I leave it or take it? Chae Nayun thought. Since Kim Hajin left it here after saying... saying how I was cute... he must want me to take it.

She folded up the sleeping bag into a fist-sized ball.

“Was it this small?”

The tiny sleeping bag amazed her. She checked her smartwatch after storing it away. It was 7:20 in the morning, but still dark outside.

“It must be a polar night.”

Chae Nayun stretched and prepared for the day.

* * *

I looked around in every direction from the top of the world tree. My thousand-mile eyes could see everything. Cadets had discovered their preferred methods of survival after a day. Some sold food to obtain points, some hunted monsters, and others concealed themselves while waiting for unsuspecting targets.

“Mmm?”

A rather mischievous idea popped up in my head when I spotted someone. A method to blow my nose without my hand. In other words, I could eliminate the stronger cadets without fighting them.

I snapped off a decently sized branch and sharpened one end. Then I inscribed a coordinate and some words on it. Next, I used stigma’s magic power to throw it at him in the distance. The branch flew like an arrow and struck the ground after brushing past his face.

The imposing cadet stopped and looked at the branch on the ground. I could only see his back, but I could tell how he felt.

He grabbed it and read the words on the side. Then he turned in my direction. I dodged his gaze even though he couldn’t possibly see me. Now, I just had to wait.

An hour went by as I watched the drone footage and suddenly noticed a change.

“What? Already?”

Rachel headed somewhere with Joo Yeohoon in the dark. I expanded my sight and followed them as they arrived at a wooded cliff where two people waited. One stood out in the open while the other hid in a tree. I didn’t know them, but assumed they were djinns. First, I moved a drone over, but its signal suddenly died. Then an alert popped up on my laptop.

[Joo Yeohoon – He has made contact with djinns from the Lancaster family.]

“...”

Rachel also accompanied Joo Yeohoon in the original story, but Lancaster never interfered. His goal had to be Rachel. Surprisingly, they planned on fighting in an open area because cadets had occupied the secluded areas for shelter. Furthermore, no one would interfere because the location belonged to that exam overseer.

Still, they had poorly planned.

“They must be the bottom rung.”

These brainless fools represented the lowest djinns blinded by their desires for Lancaster. They didn’t look all that strong. However, three of them together still posed a threat.

I took out my Desert Eagle and transformed it into a sniper rifle. I could see Rachel walking with Joo Yeohoon in the distance. She probably joined their team temporarily for food. In the original story, Kim Suho had rescued her. I shared my location with her to prevent this, but she stubbornly refused.

“Ah, maybe...”

Suddenly, I expanded my vision and checked for Kim Suho nearby.

“Pft.”

I couldn’t help but laugh despite the serious situation. Did the original story influence them? Kim Suho slowly headed towards Rachel’s location with Chae Nayun, who must’ve ran into him. Now it would be three on three. Kim Suho and Chae Nayun should be more than enough.

“Tsk.”

However, Kim Suho was Kim Suho, and I had my methods. I attached my rifle's gunstock and aimed at the targets. My eyes could see further than any scope.

Joo Yeohoon's team offered Rachel their food for free, but she still paid them some points. However, she felt uneasy because she cared about the combat exam grades as much as written exams. She wanted to collect as many points as possible since she didn't know how much would put her on top.

In the middle of her worries, Joo Yeohoon had asked her to join him for a hunt. They had found a grizzly bear monster worth 10 points.

"I'm a sharpshooter, so I'll support you from the back. I only need 3 points, and you can have the rest."

"No, we should split it evenly."

She didn't ask why it was only the two of them. She believed she wouldn't lose in a one-on-one battle even if Joo Yeohoon betrayed her, and would gain more points with fewer people.

"It was here..."

However, a man stood at the cliff instead of a bear. His long hair covered half of his face, and two gauntlets glowed in his hands. Clawlike daggers protruded from the gauntlets' fingertips.

"Who are you!"

Joo Yeohoon put on his best act. He had prepared an escape route in case things went awry. The long-haired man played along and charged at Joo Yeohoon. The man cut Joo Yeohoon's shoulder in the blink of an eye as he screamed and ran away. The man didn't chase after him.

"Haa..."

Joo Yeohoon ran off and disappeared. What was that? Rachel sighed as she held up her rapier.

“Who are you?”

The man coldly smiled.

“_____”

He said something, but Rachel couldn't understand the language. Then he murmured and suddenly charged.

“Uup!”

Rachel imbued her rapier with magic power. She clashed with the gauntlets as sparks scattered. Although the man had more magic power, Rachel held on thanks to his rough control. The man struck a few more times as Rachel blocked with ease. Gauntlets vs. rapier. The former had greater destructive power, but Rachel overwhelmed him with technique. She would be victorious as long as she maintained a safe distance.

“Haat!”

Rachel spotted an opening and rushed in. She scratched the man's ribs and tried to retreat. However, she couldn't move her feet. Another enemy jumped from a tree and stabbed at her back.

“Kuaaak!”

A scream rang out. Rachel froze, but didn't close her eyes. She was still alive and examined the situation. The assassin from the tree writhed in pain on the ground.

“Eh?”

She wondered if she had subconsciously attacked, but immediately discarded that thought as five streaks of light pierced the assassin's stomach, limbs, lung, and heart. The assassin scattered into dust.

What's happening?

Rachel didn't have time to think as the man with gauntlets charged. He knew it would become virtually impossible to snipe when the target was close to an ally.

Furthermore, Rachel couldn't distance herself from the man. Her feet stuck to his shadow because of a magic called shadow tag.

Although she couldn't move, Rachel still defended and counterattacked. Her movements appeared like a dance in close quarters. The man became frustrated and tried to stomp when an unidentifiable attack flew in again. It dug through the small gap between them and blasted his shoulder. Rachel stabbed at his flank.

A sword flew in before her rapier could reach and struck the man's shoulder.

"Kuak!"

The man retreated and jumped down the cliff.

"Who was that!"

Kim Suho and Chae Nayun ran up to Rachel.

"Rachel? Who was he?" Chae Nayun asked.

Kim Suho ran to the edge of the cliff and checked. "Did he disappear?"

Rachel spoke even though she didn't understand the situation either. "Yes, he's gone."

Kim Suho couldn't see anyone in the dark.

It must have been Chae Nayun who helped me. That attack must have been her secret technique, something like invisible arrows. Rachel tried to comprehend what had happened.

“Thank you. You saved...”

The moonlight reflected off of something in the ground that caught her eye. Rachel picked it up.

A bullet?

“Let’s move first. We don’t know if that person will come back,” Kim Suho seriously muttered.

Tzzz— Tzzz— Rachel examined the bullet at the campfire and thought about Kim Hajin. He saved her before with a shotgun, and today’s mysterious person used a sniper. However, Kim Hajin was the only one who used a gun.

“Hmm.”

She couldn’t understand why. Of course, he was next door during the midterm exam, but he was far away this time.

She had three questions. First, how did he know she was in danger? Second, why didn’t he show himself? Third, why did he help her?

“So you decided to change to a sword?”

Kim Suho spoke to Chae Nayun. Rachel stared at the sword on her waist. Chae Nayun awkwardly scratched her head.

“No, I just didn’t want to rely on only a bow during such a big exam. So, um, it’s a secondary weapon.”

Chae Nayun brought two main weapons. However, since cadets could only borrow one main weapon, she directly purchased a training sword from Cube.

“Oh, rather than that.”

Chae Nayun clapped. She tried to change the subject.

“Rachel, we have a plan. Do you want to come with us?”

Rachel tilted her head.

“It’s like a part-time team. You know, we can do fine even without forming teams. So we’ll each take turns finding food, a place to sleep, and standing guard. Then we’ll go off on our own to hunt and meet back later.”

Rachel thought it was a good idea, but paused and turned on her smartwatch.

[Location Sharing List] — Kim Hajin — Joo Yeohoon

Kim Hajin’s location was still there.

“It sounds like a good idea, but I’ll have to decline.”

Rachel stood up as Kim Suho asked, “Where are you going? Wouldn’t it be dangerous?”

“It’s fine. I’m going to meet up with someone.”

“Then we’ll take you there.”

“No, I can go alone.”

She firmly rejected him. Kim Suho scratched his head and nodded.

“Don’t be so cocky. Do you think every girl in the world loves you?”

Chae Nayun dealt a piercing blow.

Chapter 62

Final Exam (4)

The situation ended with Kim Suho's arrival, but I spent another hour looking around before descending the world tree.

“Argh, what a pain.”

I couldn't help but groan as I landed. Even with parkour, the tree was abnormally big. I shook off the numbness in my hands and legs before checking my points.

[22 Points]

That should be a bit below average. I gained 10 from hunting monsters and 12 from Chae Nayun. The first place cadet scored 130 points in the original story, so I needed another 50 points to pass safely. It should be possible if I busily worked today and tomorrow.

I turned around optimistically.

“...”

My body stiffened with goosebumps.

The Chameleon Troupe's Boss, disguised as Seo Ijin, stood before me. She silently approached and stared with her black eyes.

Why is she here?

Cold sweat ran down my back, and my survival instincts roared. I forced myself to calm down. She should be here to observe, not fight.

“What's the matter?”

Unexpectedly, she took out her sword and pointed it at me.

“...”

She looked at me with steady eyes and a chilling light flashed from her blade. I didn't understand why she would pick a fight with me, but I could never win. She would instantly kill me.

“You know what.”

She spoke in a calm voice. This woman was too powerful to be an enemy, like how insects couldn't call humans their enemies.

However, I found a glimpse of hope in this life-or-death situation.

Cadets didn't fight to kill in this exam. All we had to do was take each other's smartwatch. Even if you subdued someone, you hadn't won yet without their smartwatch. Additionally, you would lose even if you subdued them, but lost your smartwatch.

Currently, the smartwatch around her left wrist appeared loose. Maybe she put it on like that, or it couldn't withstand her magic power, or I was simply lucky. Regardless, I could escape this situation.

From my sleeve, I weaved aether into a thread thinner than a spider's. Then I controlled it out of her sight like a worm avoiding a hawk's eyes. It slowly squirmed towards her left wrist.

I continued staring to buy time. Eventually, the aether thread reached her left wrist and took her smartwatch without her noticing. Then she finally spoke.

“Your weapon, take it out.”

“Weapon?”

She simply nodded when I asked. Meanwhile, the aether thread traveled down her wrist and hovered a centimeter off the ground. She couldn't see below because of our close proximity. I yanked the smartwatch into my hand when it finally neared.

“Whew.”

Did I get lucky? Or was Boss too clumsy? I succeeded and sighed in relief.

I reached into my pocket and pretended to take out my weapon, but instead brought out Boss’ smartwatch.

“...You’re surrendering?”

She looked disappointed when she saw the smartwatch. She hadn’t noticed at all. Perhaps the added layer of skin from Jain’s gift dulled her sensitivity. Not to mention, she hadn’t released any of her seals yet.

“Does this look like it’s mine?”

I asked as leisurely as I could, and Boss immediately frowned. I pointed at her wrist with my eyes. She tilted her head in doubt and checked.

“...Eh?”

Her eyes widened. She spun her wrist around in disbelief.

“You know you’re out the moment I crush this, right?”

I spoke as calmly as I could. Boss seemed so shocked she didn’t even hear me. She stared at her wrist as if she had lost her country.

“This... this can’t be...”

Would that reaction give me about 50SP? I feigned a carefree smile before gently grabbing her wrist and putting her smartwatch back on.

“W-What, what are you?”

She acted even more flustered than when I stole it, but I continued placing it back around her wrist. I smiled and bluffed.

“I’ll let you go this one time, okay?”

“...Let me go?”

Her sword still aimed at my neck, but I could feel it had lost its edge. I ignored her and turned away.

“W-Where are you going?”

Boss tried to hold me back, but I left and focused everything into my legs. My body felt numb just looking at her.

After Kim Hajin left, Boss stared at the smartwatch on her left wrist. She couldn’t understand how Kim Hajin had stolen it. She planned on confirming his ability, but he had shocked her beyond expectations. Even though Jain’s gift took away half of her sensitivity, she never expected such humiliation from a 17 year old cadet.

When did he snatch it? When we first met? When we stared at each other? No, none of the above. Kim Hajin never moved, and his magic power showed no signs of movement either.

Boss looked at her right wrist with a tattoo of a four-leaf clover. Each leaf sealed a portion of her true strength. Boss wondered if she should have released one of them.

“Haaa.”

She asked for help from a witness.

“Jain, did you see?”

—... Hmm? See what?

She frowned at the reply. Jain sounded like she hadn’t paid attention.

— Ah, ah, ah, sorry. I got distracted for a moment, but it’s not my fault! Droon kept bugging me to buy him Legos. So what's up?"

"..."

Boss continued thinking, Kim Hajin stole my watch in that short amount of time? Even though my power is sealed, his dexterity and craftiness are beyond a cadet's.

— Tell me. What happened?

"I'll tell you later."

— No, tell me now, you're making me curious. Argh, it's all because of that brat, Droon. Boss? Boss?

Boss coldly ended their conversation. She became certain of Kim Hajin's potential. Now, she had to confirm Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak's.

Her smartwatch rang.

[Ijin-ssi, where are you? Hurry up. Didn't I tell you to come back by the half hour mark? ——]

"..."

Boss blankly stared at the message.

Yoo Yeonha. Why did this girl keep ordering me around?

* * *

I found a new camping spot after successfully escaping from Boss. It seemed just as good as the previous one. Honestly, I stopped along the way near a river because I didn't have any strength left in my legs. I thanked my luck once again before setting up camp. I sat down and placed my bullets on the table. I had 14 bullets left for the sniper rifle and 20 for the shotgun. Each bullet cost around 7 SP to modify. Although they significantly boosted my strength, I couldn't waste any.

“I should have at least 20 of each type.”

It would be a disaster if I ran out of bullets during a fight. I opened my laptop.

[Current SP – 1214]

I needed about 2000 to create a decent gift, but my goal kept stretching further because of the bullets. Still, that was better than someone dying. I restocked my sniper bullets and took out my portable grill. Using parkour had made me hungry. Today's lunch would be braised chicken, although it still looked like night outside. I could barely see anything without my thousand-mile eyes. I took out a frozen chicken from my magical pouch.

[You can add magic power to increase the chicken's flavor.]

I imbued magic power into the frozen chicken on the frying pan. I didn't know how, but the chicken suddenly became fresh. When I thought, I should be able to eat it now...

Pssss Pssss—

The tall grass rustled nearby. I pulled out my gun and peered through the grass. However, I lowered my weapon and grinned when I saw who it was. Soon, I heard her footsteps as Rachel emerged.

“Rachel?”

I acted surprised. A leaf stuck to her hair, but she didn't notice.

“...”

Rachel silently looked around. Her jaws dropped at the high-tech tent and grill. She reacted no differently than Chae Nayun.

“Ah, I like to prepare thoroughly.”

Rachel snapped out of her daze as I coolly smiled at her. She stared at the chicken on the grill. It smelled delicious.

“Would you like to join me for lunch?”

“...Can, can I?”

“I’ll take 4 points to be fair.”

I opened another foldable chair for her and handed her a plate with half the chicken on it. Rachel must’ve been hungry as she finished the chicken in just 10 minutes. I cleaned up the dishes when she asked.

“Um, what have you been doing until now?”

“Yes?”

I tilted my head. She must have realized I had helped her. Was she feeling me out?

“Well, I just ran around, trying to get points.”

I pretended to not know because it would have been too embarrassing to say, I’m the one who saved you.

“Hmm...”

Rachel looked at me strangely, but didn’t ask any further questions. Instead, she stared at the campfire in thought.

I thought she’d keep asking and planned on confessing when she asked for the third time.

“Oh, did you get hurt?”

I discovered a fairly deep wound near her collarbone. She must’ve received it from the previous fight with djinns.

“Ah, yes. Something happened...”

Evandel's seed suddenly popped out of my pocket.

"Ah?"

The seed bounced towards Rachel and jumped on her collarbone. Rachel shrieked at the unexpected ambush.

"Ah! W-What!?"

"Ah, um, you see..."

I shot up just as surprised.

"Ah, this, what is this!"

Rachel tried to pull the seed off, but it cleverly jumped inside her clothes towards her armpit. I froze as I could no longer do anything.

"You see, it's um... my pet almond... er, not almond, pet seed. Um..."

While I made excuses, Rachel stuffed her hand into her clothes as I quickly turned around. After a fierce struggle, Rachel resolved the situation with a deep sigh. I slowly turned around and saw her tidying her clothes with a flushed face. I dropped my head, not knowing the seed would do such a thing.

"Um, I'm sorry."

Rachel looked back and forth between me and the seed.

"A pet seed?"

"Ah, yes. Yes."

It sounded stupid, but I hoped she would believe me since this world was full of mysterious things. Honestly, I had no better excuse. Rachel sighed again and handed me the seed.

"I think it'll be calmer... if you planted it in the ground."

“R-Right.”

I took the seed and trapped it in a container.

Chapter 63

Final Exam (5)

Rachel offered to team up after the awkward incident with Evandel's seed. She brought up the task sharing that Kim Suho and Chae Nayun also came up with in the original story. I couldn't help but smile.

"You're saying the same thing as Chae Nayun."

"Ah, did Chae Nayun make the same offer?"

"No, it's not that. Anyways, I like the idea."

I didn't see a reason to refuse. After all, it was Rachel. However, she looked like something was on her mind.

"Oh right... um, I somewhat formed a team with someone else."

"Who?"

I already knew since I kept an eye on her.

"Do you know Joo Yeohoon?"

"Don't mind him."

I didn't explain, but I had already taken care of him. To be more precise, I sent an even stronger psycho to deal with him.

"Yes?"

"Don't worry about it. Just team up with me."

I smiled. Even the powerful djinns who contracted with devils couldn't touch a few cadets. Shin Jonghak was most definitely one of them.

After offering Rachel to Lancaster's djinns, Joo Yeohoon hunted some monsters before returning to his base.

However, his cozy base had turned into a complete disaster. The grass hut collapsed, and dead animals littered the ground. He briefly worried that he had come to the wrong place.

"What."

However, another cadet arrogantly sat in the center as if to pronounce that he was the culprit. He fiddled with the smartwatches he had taken like an emperor on his throne.

Joo Yeohoon blankly stared at him.

"You're here."

The cadet spoke first with a deep imposing voice. He placed the smartwatches aside and threw a tree branch at Joo Yeohoon. It shot past Joo Yeohoon's face like an arrow and dug into the tree behind him. Joo Yeohoon swallowed hard. His voice trembled as he spoke the cadet's name.

"Shin Jonghak."

Joo Yeohoon had a bad relationship with Shin Jonghak since Military Agent Academy. Shin Jonghak was one of the reasons why he contracted a devil. However, the current situation made him powerless. He still couldn't win against Shin Jonghak. In addition, some of the strongest cadets stood behind Shin Jonghak. The martial arts star Kim Horak, the wave breaker swordsman Jin Hanjun, archer Oh Jihoon...

"Looks like the trash can talk."

Shin Jonghak sneered as he held up his spear. His expression contorted into a fearsome frown.

“If you got held back, you should’ve stayed in the trashcan where you belong. Why overstep?”

Joo Yeohoon didn’t understand. He glanced at the tree branch Shin Jonghak threw at him. Someone had written the coordinates of his base on the side along with a provocative sentence. Joo Yeohoon clicked his tongue.

“I’m not the one who sent this.”

“I know.”

“What?”

Shin Jonghak had already concluded that someone with a grudge against Joo Yeohoon threw the tree branch to him. However, Shin Jonghak felt displeased that he was being bothered because such trash had provoked someone.

“I don’t care.”

His lackeys slowly approached Joo Yeohoon.

“I just don’t like trash like you. Damn snakes who only flicker their tongues in the shadows.”

Shin Jonghak held up his spear. Joo Yeohoon didn’t stand a chance against all five of them. He turned and ran as Shin Jonghak’s spear flew at him.

The Overseer Tower stood on high ground slightly north of the island’s center. Exam overseers and eliminated cadets rested there. Overseers examined not only the cadets’ abilities, but also their characters. Cadets fought other cadets to simulate fighting djinns, but they could be penalized for stealing points dishonestly.

“Hmm...”

Yun Seung-Ah, who acted as an overseer, looked out of a window from the Overseer Tower.

“Are eight drones not enough? You’re looking out the window too?”

A Latino man named Vieri approached her.

“Who are you thinking about?”

His Korean accent indicated that he had lived in Korea for a long time. Yun Seung-Ah glanced at him and spoke, “Kim Hajin.”

“Mm? Who’s that? Weren’t you a fan of Kim Suho?”

Yun Seung-Ah smiled. She still prioritized him, that was an undeniable fact. She had only watched Kim Suho until now and even revealed herself to him. However, information that everyone knew couldn’t be considered information. For now, she focused on finding hidden talents.

“I received an interesting piece of information.”

“Information? What is it?”

“How can I tell you? It’s top secret.”

Korea was a small country with numerous guilds. To surpass each other, a fierce battle of information and politics always took place. The same applied to individual guilds like Essence of the Strait with divided factions. Yun Seung-Ah took advantage of their internal power struggle and managed to steal some interesting information.

“That makes me more curious. Can’t you just tell me? We’re in the same guild after all.”

“Who can trust your big mouth?”

Two days ago, Yun Seung-Ah obtained a top secret document called Yoo Yeonha's Report that evaluated Kim Hajin even higher than Kim Suho. Of course, she would have treated it as nonsense if it came from an average person. However, it was Yoo Yeonha. She was young, but more clever than a fox and one of the closest to Kim Hajin. Yoo Yeonha might lack experience, but wouldn't have said that without thorough research.

"So? Are you going to go check him out?"

"Mmm... I will later when I have time."

Of course, this information could be fake. However, Yun Seung-Ah had already discovered something strange about Kim Hajin, the magic power of light. She was willing to risk her time.

"So, what are you going to do?"

Vieri asked. Yun Seung-Ah pointed at the nametag on her chest.

[Rank 307 Yun Seung-Ah]

That rank represented her world rank. However, it didn't include her accomplishments from the past year. She predicted it would rise about 50 ranks once the rankings updated in July.

"This is worth 200 points, right?"

"You're going to use that as bait? I doubt anyone will fall for it. They'll just run."

"Really? I guess I'll just hide and watch."

Yun Seung-Ah smirked.

The perpetual darkness made it difficult to distinguish day from night. Rachel had volunteered for night watch and glanced at the huge tent beside her. She couldn't see inside, which meant the person inside couldn't see her too.

She rummaged through her pocket and took out a bullet. It sparkled in the moonlight and she couldn't believe such a tiny object had protected her. She placed it back into her pocket and felt convinced that Kim Hajin had saved her. After all, he was the only cadet who used a gun. She wondered why he denied it and how he knew she was in trouble.

Was it because of the cold wind or the pale moonlight? Rachel recalled a memory from long ago. The image of a man smiling when she still lived in England.

— I will protect you no matter what Princess. Of course, I'm sure many more wish to protect you.

However, the man returned as her most fearsome assassin. Her heart ached every time she thought about Lancaster. He must've been behind today's ambush as well.

“...”

Rachel buried her face between her knees. Should I have died with them back then? Sorrow filled her heart.

I woke up in my tent. No sunlight shone through, and outside remained just as dark as before. Was it going to be like this all five days? I yawned as I exited the tent. Rachel sat modestly by the table. Was it because I was half-asleep? She looked like an elf as I stared at her. Rachel tilted her head at my strange gaze.

“...What's today's menu?”

I snapped back to reality at her question. What was I just thinking about towards a character I created?

“Ah, um, let me wash my face first.”

I trudged to the river to wash my face and dried myself with a towel. I had overprepared for the exam with plenty of food. I decided on beef since we would hunt monsters today. I turned to Rachel for her approval, but found her staring at me. No, to be more exact, she stared at my magic pouch with all the food. She looked famished.

“How’s beef?”

“Great.”

She instantly replied. I took out two marinated sirloin steaks and placed them on a hot pan. As I said before, my aunt used to own a barbecue place. I also lived by myself for four years and worked as a cook in the army. In other words, I was quite experienced. After adding some sliced onions and paprika, I added a special sauce with a delicious fragrance.

“Perfect.”

I plated the steak and handed it to Rachel. She stared at it with sparkling eyes.

“Would you like some rice as well?”

Rachel smiled brightly and nodded. I put some rice on her plate before handing it back to her. She waited for me to eat first with a knife and fork in each hand.

“I’m eating.”

We ate as I sliced my steak. It tasted especially good because of the circumstances. Not only was it juicy, it practically melted in my mouth. I bought the steaks out of curiosity because the packaging said, Grade 1 magic power beef raised in a highly dense mana environment. It was definitely worth the price.

We finished breakfast after 10 minutes. I rinsed my mouth with some water and checked my smartwatch.

“What’s this?”

For some reason, I had 4 more points than yesterday.

“A monster came while I kept watch. I know I said we should separate tasks and take points for ourselves, but I thought I should split it since you were asleep.”

“Ah, thank you.”

I obtained more free points thanks to her.

“Then let’s split up for now. We should hunt.”

I spoke as we stood up.

* * *

The third day of the exam went smoothly. Thanks to my gift's increased grade, I could hunt monsters even without the Desert Eagle. Aether also adhered to the training handgun and strengthened it. Of course, I still avoided monsters above low-intermediate rank, grade 6. However, I could proceed through the forest and comfortably hunt from a distance

“A lake.”

I discovered a dimly lit lake that looked like a gold mine. The alligator monsters should give bonus points as ambush monsters. I could easily lure them out with a bright light that covered the entire lake. I happened to learn how not too long ago. Strictly speaking, I couldn’t say I learned it.

Light Sphere.

The magic Yoo Yeonha said no one else could perform. I created a brilliant sphere of light with stigma’s magic power. The white ball floated up and lit the surroundings. However, I felt a faint movement behind me as I sent it above the lake.

“Who is it!”

I shouted as the presence disappeared. They must've been quite skilled to escape my attention, but they couldn't avoid my eyes. I peered through the tall grass and caught sight of Chae Nayun. She slowly backed off, then stopped. She planned on tailing me again once the situation died down.

Tang. I shot a bullet at the ground in front of her. Chae Nayun's scream echoed throughout the forest.

Chapter 64

Final Exam (6)

Hiik!

Chae Nayun jumped out of the tall grass after screaming. She slowly approached with a sour expression.

“Why were you following me?” I asked with my gun still pointed at her.

“Don’t misunderstand. I wasn’t following you.”

Chae Nayun spoke as she scratched her face.

“Then what?”

“...”

“See, I’m right.”

I placed my finger on the trigger.

“Well, before that, how did you do that just now?”

She asked about the light sphere. My gun must’ve not threatened her enough.

“Tell me why you followed me first.”

Chae Nayun frowned and finally answered, “I wasn’t following you. I was following Seung-Ah unni.”

“Huh?”

I tilted my head. Why did she suddenly mention Yun Seung-Ah?

“Seung-Ah? The same Yun Seung-Ah that I know?”

“Yeah, but you should address her more formally.”

“...”

I turned around and pretended to think as I took out my laptop and checked the drone footage. Four drones flew around the area, and I found Yun Seung-Ah sitting in a tree above us.

“Yun Seung-Ah...”

“Hey, can you stop addressing her so casually?”

I knew she would be here as an overseer. She should’ve observed Kim Suho the first two days, and potential talents on the other days. If things went according to the original story, she should be watching Jayden. Could I be on her list of potential talents?

“Hey, now tell me how you made that light sphere.”

“Yeah, I’m the one who made it. Anyways, let’s hunt these together since you’re here.”

“No! I know you made it. I’m asking how?”

Chae Nayun couldn’t continue as the alligator monsters emerged from the lake. Magic alligators were low-intermediate rank, grade 5-7 monsters. They had blue skin and the ability to shoot magic power from their mouths. However, this attack only posed a threat underwater. Their threat levels decreased by half after surfacing. I pointed at the alligators and made an offer.

“Half-half?”

I would have a hard time killing them with a training handgun because of their tough skin. Originally, I planned on using my Desert

Eagle, but now I couldn't because of Yun Seung-Ah.

"First, tell me how you did— Ah, damn it."

An alligator fired a mana ball at Chae Nayun.

Mmm. I felt satisfied that my luck also helped me with such trivial matters.

* * *

Yun Seung-Ah looked down from a tree.

They almost discovered me.

Kim Hajin had surprised her when he created a light sphere. She would have been found out if it wasn't for Chae Nayun. Of course, most heroes could easily cast light sphere. However, the intensity of the light and the fact that he could already use such magic surprised her. Condensing magic power externally sounded easy, but was actually quite a difficult technique that even Yun Seung-Ah only mastered in the second term of her first year.

I knew that kid wouldn't write a baseless report.

Yun Seung-Ah smiled in satisfaction at Kim Hajin, who had effortlessly created a light sphere on such a scale.

I'll have to add a star above Kim Hajin's name.

I blasted 20 bullets into the alligator's wide-open mouth. Wadadada. I emptied the entire magazine in just a second. The alligator writhed in pain. However, I knew that wouldn't kill it. The finishing attack came as a flash of magic power shot out from a sword and severed the alligator. It helplessly slumped after Chae Nayun slashed it. No alligator could withstand more than a single strike from her. She literally split them in half with one stroke, a truly awe-inspiring power.

“Did you start using a sword?”

“...”

Chae Nayun silently sheathed her sword as I noticed her trembling hands and closed my mouth. The sensation of cutting through flesh must’ve felt unpleasant. I didn’t know what that felt like, which made me even more afraid.

“We’ll scan two each since there’s four. I’ll take this one and that one.”

I scanned the two smaller ones with my smartwatch. Chae Nayun scanned her two alligators, and the hunt ended. Now we no longer had a reason to be together.

“You should leave since we’re done here.”

“You really don’t want to tell me, huh. Is it so hard to explain how you made that light sphere?”

Chae Nayun pouted and grumbled. I answered her with a smile.

“You’ll get hurt if you find out.”

“What?”

Chae Nayun frowned. That was the truth. If I wanted to explain stigma’s magic power, I had to explain that this world was a novel.

“What nonsense is that?”

“Just go. I came here first, so you head that way.”

I pointed and went the opposite direction. Chae Nayun glared at my back before stomping away.

I quickly moved after splitting up from Chae Nayun. With my thousand-mile eyes, I hunted for low-intermediate rank, grade 7-9 monsters. I obtained 15 points from monsters like wolves, deers, and octopuses in just two hours.

“...”

I stopped after feeling a presence from the tall grass behind me. She revealed her presence on purpose after tailing me the entire time, but she must've finished observing now. I patiently waited as she flew from the trees like a butterfly and landed about 50 meters in front of me.

“Hello.”

Yun Seung-Ah spoke with a bright smile.

“This is the first time since you turned me down, right?”

She brought up what happened at our last meeting. I had cold-heartedly rejected her business card.

“Right, but what is it so suddenly?”

“Ah, I’m sorry. It’s a bit sudden, isn’t it?”

Yun Seung-Ah nodded understandingly and continued.

“You see, I’ve been offering cadets a special event and testing their skills.”

“What? Event?”

“Yes.”

Yun Seung-Ah pointed at the nametag on her chest.

“Would you like to try taking it?”

“Yes?”

Someone could easily misunderstand her words from where she pointed. Yun Seung-Ah continued, unaware.

“The event is simple. I’ll stand here and only use my left arm. You win my nametag if you can make me move a single step or land an attack anywhere other than my left arm.”

“Nametag?”

“Yes, I’ll bet my guild on this promise.”

Betting her guild sounded more like a vow than a promise. I rubbed my chin in thought. That nametag was worth 200 points and would undoubtedly place me first. What could I gain from first place? First, I would gain quite the SP from guilds and djinns noticing me. Furthermore, I might encourage Kim Suho, who was supposed to get first place, to try harder. No, no no... I forgot the most important part, which was how to take Yun Seung-Ah’s nametag in the first place.

“I’ll stay here. Make your decision. You can challenge me or turn back.”

Yun Seung-Ah added as though she read my thoughts.

“It’s quite an unexpected event.”

I fired at her without warning, but she instantly struck the bullets down with just her left hand as promised. She treated them like plastic bullets.

“That felt quite prickly, far more powerful than a normal training handgun. Looks like your gift is related to guns.”

Yun Seung-Ah didn’t even coat her hand with magic power. Instead, she struck them down with pure physical ability to confirm their strength. For the record, aether had adhered to the training handgun and enhanced its power.

“Try more.”

I pulled the trigger ten more times as bullets flew at her almost simultaneously towards different parts of her body. However, Yun Seung-Ah struck them all down without moving a single step. She didn't use her magic power either.

"That was fast. I thought they came at me simultaneously."

Yun Seung-Ah muttered leisurely. I might have a chance with such a critical handicap. Perhaps I could try a feint since I also had two daggers.

I took out the two daggers from my waist and attached stigma's magic power around their handles.

"Oh, right. You used a sword before you switched to a gun. Using both at the same time is smart."

Her commentary annoyed me as I threw the daggers. One flew towards her chest, and the other at her face. Then I fired twenty bullets. I wondered how Yun Seung-Ah would deal with it.

Clang!

Yun Seung-Ah struck down the two daggers while blocking the bullets with her left arm. However, the daggers sprung back up and flew towards her heels. She said she would only use her left arm, so she shouldn't be able to reach her heels. To my surprise, she released magic power from her left hand and completely shattered them.

"Wow."

My attack ended in vain, but Yun Seung-Ah looked excited.

"Interesting. You changed the daggers' trajectory with magic power. What technique is that?"

You're like an onion, Hajin! I ignored the last compliment and scratched my neck. This event was impossible unless a lightning bolt or a meteor suddenly struck her. Even my luck couldn't make up for the absurd difference in skills.

I holstered my gun, but Yun Seung-Ah misunderstood as the magic power in her left hand became even sharper.

“What mysterious technique are you showing this time?”

She smiled and held out her hand blade. Yun Seung-Ah was still curious and unsatisfied. I admired her desire to collect talents. However, I turned around after collecting the shattered remains of my daggers. Then I walked back from where I came. Yun Seung-Ah’s surprised voice rang out after I took about five steps.

“Hello?”

I continued walking away as she took a step forward.

“Where are you going?”

Suddenly, I turned around.

“You said you’d only use your left hand.”

“Eh?”

I pointed at her right foot.

“But you just used your right foot.”

“...”

Yun Seung-Ah’s face froze.

“I’m kidding, hahaha.”

I chuckled and turned back. Honestly, I planned on arguing after the joke, but her glare felt too intimidating.

Let’s just go back and eat with Rachel.

“Rachel, stay with me for today.”

I said to Rachel on the fourth day during breakfast.

“...?”

Rachel tilted her head as she ate.

“The exam will end soon.”

An event would occur today. She should have faced it with Kim Suho, but I had to bring her there since she teamed up with me. This event was important because Rachel would obtain a clue towards her enlightenment.

“Everyone will be on edge. It’ll be dangerous alone.”

Today would be the last day to act since the exam ended tomorrow at 9 A.M.

“You have to protect me, Rachel.”

Rachel almost nodded, but suddenly tilted her head again.

“Yes?”

“You didn’t mishear me.”

I grinned and stood up. The butterfly seedling would be extremely dangerous. Thanks to aether, I wouldn’t die if its roots accidentally touched me. However, I would undoubtedly lose an organ or two.

“I need you to protect me.”

Chapter 65

Hatching (1)

The butterfly seedling was an elemental monster that would appear today and cause a mess. It had slowly grown its strength under the world tree's roots. I didn't write an exact reason why, but I would be angry too if over a thousand people suddenly barged into my home.

Kim Suho, Chae Nayun, and Rachel had defeated it together in the original story. It would leave behind an important gift called the butterfly seedling's dust for Rachel and Kim Suho.

"Come here."

I glanced behind me in case Rachel ran away. We only managed to kill four monsters that earned us 6 points each after walking around the world tree. I wouldn't blame her if she ambushed me and took my points.

"..."

Rachel unhappily followed as I tried to find as many monsters as possible. I checked the time.

[1:13 P.M.]

I couldn't remember precisely when the butterfly seedling appeared.
Do I have to keep walking around the world tree?

"I think the monsters are on the outskirts of the island."

Rachel finally spoke. All the cadets hunted near the outskirts too.

"No, I don't think so. "

However, I rejected her suggestion as she pouted. I continued walking until I saw her trying to escape.

“Where are you going?”

“...Just checking if there’s anything nearby.”

She followed me again after a dry excuse. After 30 minutes of wandering around the world tree...

Wooong—

I felt an unusual vibration like an earthquake. I looked towards the epicenter and saw a seedling resembling a butterfly emerge from the world tree’s giant root. Chae Nayun and Kim Suho were also nearby.

“Follow me.”

I guided Rachel with a serious expression.

* * *

Kim Suho walked through the forest with Chae Nayun because she kept getting lost.

“Hey, what do you think about Kim Hajin?”

The forest was still dark. Chae Nayun suddenly asked Kim Suho out of boredom because they couldn’t find any monsters.

“Kim Hajin?”

Kim Suho tilted his head as he stared at Chae Nayun.

“Why? Is he on your mind?”

“No, just that... don’t you think he’s hiding many secrets?”

The light sphere, the archery duel, and what happened in Paris. Chae Nayun thought there was more than meets the eye with Kim Hajin.

“I guess you’re right,” Kim Suho vaguely replied.

“What’s with that reaction?”

“What? You said he’s hiding secrets, and I agreed.”

Kim Suho evasively answered and smiled. He felt fairly certain that Kim Hajin liked Chae Nayun from their conversation in Paris.

“So what’s he hiding?”

— I’ve been thinking about her for far longer than you. And I’ve been watching over her all this time. So I know far more about her than you.

How much did he like her to say something like that? Kim Suho didn’t know because he had no such person.

“Hey, tell me.”

“Why ask me? You should find out for yourself.”

Kim Suho teased Chae Nayun with a smile.

“You...”

Woong—

An unusual vibration rang out. Kim Suho and Chae Nayun stared at each other before running towards the epicenter. They spotted a strange butterfly in an open field under the world tree.

“What’s that?”

It looked like a butterfly with wings. However, its wings were weaved from tree roots, and leaves grew on its face and body. It looked like a craftsman had carved it rather than a living creature.

Kim Suho noticed how the spiritual existence absorbed the world tree’s vitality to form a body. He held up his sword as Chae Nayun pondered whether she should use her sword or bow.

“Is it strong?”

“Looks like it.”

Chae Nayun chose the sword. Finally, the butterfly seedling moved. Kim Suho and Chae Nayun flinched from its chilling eyes.

“...”

Koooong—!

A large tendril tore through the ground. Several roots followed until it reached a dozen in every direction. They wriggled and struck down at Chae Nayun and Kim Suho. The two of them jumped back to dodge the roots.

Koong— Koong— Koong— Koong—

The roots endlessly swung at them.

“Hey! I think we need to cut them off!”

Chae Nayun shouted as Kim Suho nodded in agreement. They swung their sword against the flying roots. Kim Suho’s blade easily severed one, but it was simply too tough for Chae Nayun. Magic power made the giant roots as hard as steel.

As Chae Nayun struggled, a streak of red light shot through the darkness and struck the root. The bullet didn’t physically damage it, but a fire burned it. Chae Nayun swung at the weakened root and easily severed it. Then a wave of crescent moon sword qi flew towards the butterfly seedling, but it barely dodged.

Chae Nayun turned towards the source of the two attacks.

“Eh?”

She saw the strange combination of an average-looking guy with a princess. Kim Hajin and Rachel had come to their assistance.

Koong!

More roots shot up from the ground. Kim Hajin retreated outside of range while Rachel gracefully dodged.

“When did you guys come?”

“Attack the main body!” Kim Hajin shouted from behind a bush.

“What?”

“The main body! Not the roots! Use your bow for today!”

“What are you doing back there?”

A root struck again as Chae Nayun shouted and hurriedly blocked with her sword.

“Hey! Support me like before!”

Rachel sent a wind blade instead of Kim Hajin and pushed the root back. Chae Nayun’s sword surged with magic power as she slashed the root in half.

“Oho.”

Chae Nayun liked the sensation compared to cutting down a living creature. She felt like she could improve. Magic power surged, and her blade extended to 4 meters. She swung the magic longsword with all her strength.

“Argh.”

Chae Nayun went wild with her sword when a bow suited the situation better. I instantly emptied an entire magazine to slow down the butterfly seedling. A part of the butterfly seedling’s wings tore off each time a bullet hit. The butterfly seedling didn’t like it even though my attacks couldn’t detach its wings.

A root appeared from its back and swept the ground. I couldn’t react as it shot towards me. The vicious flying root suddenly stopped. A single sword had blocked it. Rachel appeared in front of me like a hero.

“...”

She silently looked back at me as I immediately retreated to a safe distance and more roots popped up. Although Rachel managed to dodge them, they eventually multiplied and surrounded her. A root struck her stomach and sent her flying. Rachel crashed into a tree some distance away and slumped down. I watched as she coughed up blood, but noted that it wasn’t a fatal blow thanks to her qi reinforcement. Still, she wasn’t in good shape.

Tong!

Evandel’s seed jumped out of my pocket as I wondered whether or not to take out the Desert Eagle. It bounced towards Rachel like a rabbit and stuck to her wounded stomach. Rachel writhed in pain and didn’t notice. I reluctantly let it be.

“That damned butterfly.”

I glared at the butterfly seedling flying in the distance. If I could just break those wings, Kim Suho should be able to handle the rest, but I couldn’t take out my Desert Eagle.

“Huuu.”

I had no other choice. I took a deep breath and imbued stigma’s magic power into the training handgun’s magazine to refine the bullets with the fire attribute. Unfortunately, I could only refine three bullets and wondered if that would be enough. I could worry later as I aimed and pulled the trigger. A bullet struck the butterfly seedling’s wing and exploded.

“Huh?”

I muttered in a daze and rubbed my eyes in case I was seeing things.

“What?”

I wasn’t going crazy. The butterfly seedling lost its wings and fell to the ground. Its wings didn’t tear, but completely burned with a single bullet. My magic power couldn’t possibly have such power. I carefully observed the surroundings.

Sure enough, I spotted a woman in the bushes. Boss, disguised as Seo Ijin, held onto a bead-like object and greedily looked at the butterfly seedling.

“Ah.”

It wasn’t my attack, but hers. She made it look like I shot it down and undoubtedly wanted the butterfly seedling’s dust.

Kim Suho charged at the fallen butterfly seedling and severed it in half.

A golden dust suddenly lit the sky like fireworks. However, this wasn’t the butterfly seedling’s dust. Boss had thrown out a sleeping powder. I covered my nose and mouth as I looked around. Kim Suho could resist status effects to a certain degree, but the beautiful sight dazed him. Chae Nayun also appeared half-drunk.

Meanwhile, Boss made her move. I tried to stop her, but an explosion of light suddenly occurred. My jaws dropped.

Rachel felt drowsy under the golden dust sparkling in the sky. She felt sleepier than ever before. It seemed like an elemental's power, but she closed her eyes since they defeated the monster. She couldn't believe that Kim Hajin blew up the butterfly seedling with a single bullet. She felt safe enough to take a break.

Please let me take at least third place if first place is too much to ask...

Suddenly, she felt an intense light even with her eyes closed. She slightly opened her eyes and saw a golden clump of light on her stomach. It shone brilliantly and formed a human shape. Rachel stared at the light embracing her. It wasn't a light, but a child around 3 years old. For some reason, Rachel felt familiar with the child's face. Soon, she realized why. The child looked like her younger self.

The girl warmly embraced her as the injury on her stomach began to heal. Rachel subconsciously stroked the child's hair, who innocently smiled. Rachel smiled back.

However, her face stiffened when the child spoke. She wanted to ask the child to repeat it, but her eyes slowly closed as a golden dust fell.

The child had called her Mommy.

Chapter 66

Hatching (2)

The seed suddenly hatched and caught me off guard, but I quickly snapped out of it. The dense golden dust blocked everyone's vision. No overseers or drones could capture what happened, and Rachel fell asleep. I could easily handle everything. First, I took Evandel off Rachel.

"Come here."

"Ah, aaang."

Evandel struggled to stay with Rachel, but her eyes widened when she saw me.

"That's right. I'm the one who raised you."

I comforted her in my embrace. She looked like a 3 year old child, but weighed like a feather. Evandel hugged me tightly and muttered.

"Daddy."

"Huh? No, I'm not. Anyways, can you change back to a seed, Evandel?"

"Seed?"

"Yep. Small and circular. You have to hide."

"What about Mommy?"

Evandel spoke as she glanced at Rachel. She surprised me when she called Rachel her Mommy.

“Rachel... um, Mommy is busy. So...”

“Yaaawn. I’m sleepy.”

Evandel slowly closed her eyes. Boss’ golden dust must’ve affected her. I panicked since I wouldn’t be able to hide her if she fell asleep. Thankfully, Evandel listened to my request and transformed into a giant seed that floated into my palm.

“Whew.”

I sighed and looked around the field full of golden dust. Kim Suho, who resisted, finally fell asleep. The few overseers who watched us from nearby also dropped from the trees.

However, I felt fine thanks to aether’s defense function. My breathing grew heavier, but I remained unaffected since aether formed a filter for my nostrils and throat. I approached Boss with a clear mind.

Byproducts of elementals like the butterfly seedling’s dust generally fetched a hefty price. Boss didn’t know its function, but she wanted it. She kneeled in front of the butterfly seedling’s corpse and spotted the clump of glowing blue dust from its gaping wound. Then she carefully picked it up.

“Put it down.”

She paused at the young man’s voice and slowly raised her head towards Kim Hajin.

“Hello.”

“That’s not something you can take.”

Kim Hajin’s face distorted. She stared at him and looked around. The sleeping powder filled the surrounding air, but Kim Hajin remained conscious. No one could endure the golden dust, yet he managed.

“...”

She couldn't understand this strange young man and felt the urge to continue observing him.

Black magic power rose from beneath her and formed a sphere that swallowed them into a sealed space. Kim Hajin showed no signs of unease even though she unexpectedly trapped him. No, his hands slightly trembled and his body shook when she revealed her real face.

“You know me.”

“Li Xiaopeng.”

He bluntly replied.

“...”

Who was Li Xiaopeng? Boss momentarily thought. Then she realized it was one of her fake identities and nodded.

“Right. Then why would I be here?”

“To serve as an overseer, I assume.”

“Hmm.”

Kim Hajin strangely misunderstood, but Boss didn't correct him.

“When did you find out I was Li Xiaopeng?”

“Just now—”

“If you lie, I'll kill... no, I'll hit you.”

Kim Hajin dryly coughed.

“When I took your watch, I closely observed you and realized something was off.”

“How?”

Jain’s gift couldn’t be seen through so easily.

“I have great eyes, you see.”

What Kim Hajin said didn’t make sense. Not only had he seen through Jain’s gift, but also her necklace. It couldn’t be explained with just good eyes. Countless thoughts raced across her mind as she considered every possibility and selected the most logical hypothesis.

The attribute of his magic power is anti-magic?

He would indeed see through Jain’s gift with just his eyes if his physique applied the property of anti-magic to his magic power. Then he would only have to concentrate magic power into his optic nerves.

This wasn’t a matter of his gift, but his physique.

She only speculated and needed to confirm with more observation. She couldn’t risk losing him if he had such a physique.

“...”

Boss silently kneeled and grabbed the clump of dust from the butterfly seedling’s corpse. Kim Hajin swallowed hard, but Boss surprisingly handed it to him.

“I will give this to you, but in exchange...”

She paused. Her silence continued for a while because she didn’t know what to say next.

— Don’t say anything strange, Boss.

Jain’s voice sounded in her ears. She properly observed the situation this time.

— If you don't know what to say, just ask for a way to contact him. Don't rush it, and take it slow.

Jain sounded serious, which was rare. Boss took her advice even though the Chameleon Troupe already knew how to contact him.

“...Give me your number.”

The fourth day passed, and the final exam concluded on the fifth morning. The overseers hadn't expected the butterfly seedling and gave the four cadets who defeated it 20 points each. Cadets turned in their smartwatches before boarding the ship back to Cube. The eliminated cadets already left last night, so only about 700 remained.

The ship sailed through the blue sea as I leaned against the bow's guardrail and admired the beautiful waves. I took out my smartwatch and wondered when the Chameleon Troupe, or Li Xiaopeng, would contact me. I couldn't understand why Boss was interested in me.

“Hey.”

Chae Nayun approached as I contemplated.

“What.”

“How did it end?”

“How did what end?”

“The fight. I don't recall anything after the middle.”

Chae Nayun scratched her cheek as she looked at the sea.

“Kim Suho said your bullet destroyed the monster's wings. He's lying, right?”

“Obviously, how could anyone destroy that monster's wings with a gun?”

I honestly spoke since it wasn't me who destroyed it.

“Right? That's what I thought too.”

Chae Nayun looked relieved for some reason.

“Why did you use a sword instead of a bow?”

“What? You're the one who told me to switch. How can you be so back and forth? Do you have an illness or something?”

“I mean, you have to be flexible. It's dangerous if you use a weapon you haven't practiced with in real combat.”

I would have felt responsible if she had been gravely injured. After all, I made her switch to a sword.

“I'm not so weak that you have to worry.”

Chae Nayun scowled. I nodded without arguing.

“So, how did a sword feel?”

“It wasn't anything spe—”

“You're still scared, right?”

“What? W-What are you talking about? Why would I be scared?”

She wasn't good at hiding her feelings. I stared at her and grinned. Her eyes shook whenever she lied. The unique setting I gave her remained the same in this world.

“You'll get better if you keep at it. You're a born swordsman.”

We finally finished all our exams. Rachel contemplated life while other cadets spent their weekend enjoying their freedom. She thought about her mystical experience on the island. She even called the English Royal Court's Department of Analysis because she couldn't understand it.

— A tree elemental?

“Yes, I saw something in the pollen. No, I felt it. I think it may have been the power of an elemental. What do you think, Raymond?”

Of course, it might've just been a hallucination. However, the memory felt too vivid and distinct. Not only did she remember the child's face and voice, but the child's warmth remained in her heart.

— Mm... that might be possible, but I can't be sure. The power of elementals remains a mystery. We still aren't sure if what Princess saw was an elemental or a fairy.

Rachel nodded, then nervously asked the analyst.

“Do you think an elemental could show the future? Even if it's not the future itself, something like a vision?”

— Ah, something similar has been reported in academia. It caused quite a stir.

Rachel felt her heart drop.

“Really? What was it?”

— Mm, it was a plant elemental as well. Someone said they saw their future after being covered in mushroom spores.

“Huk!”

Rachel let out a short scream. The analyst lightly chuckled.

— Judging by that reaction, Princess must have seen something too.

“Yes, I saw a child.”

—...

Silence descended for a moment. The analyst remained speechless for three entire minutes.

—... Child?

The analyst barely managed a word.

“Yes.”

— Mm... well, it could have been any child.

“She called me Mommy.”

— What?

The analyst let out a short scream as Rachel’s cheeks flushed red from embarrassment.

“And she looked just like me when I was young.”

— Uh...

“Raymond, do you think I saw my future?”

Rachel bashfully smiled and engraved the child’s precious warmth in her heart. She felt like she could smile every time she thought of her. If what she saw was her future, if she would someday have that child... she felt she could finally stop rejecting her life.

Suddenly, she realized the analyst had remained silent.

“Um, Raymond?”

— Ah, sorry. The chances of it being Princess’ future is... very small, but... I just couldn't ima... imagine it. Did you perhaps see the father as well?

The analyst asked with trembling hands. As a loyal servant of the English Royal Court, he could not accept...

"No, I didn't see anyone like that."

Rachel bashfully smiled again.

"But if I saw my future, I'm sure he's somewhere."

"Daddy!"

"..."

A child about a meter shorter than me shouted with her arms open as I embraced her. She was incredibly cute, but I couldn't spoil her as a good parent.

"Evandel, you can't call me Daddy, okay?"

"Why?" Evandel tilted her head and asked.

"Mmm... because people will misunderstand. You should call me Uncle."

"Eeeh? Why?"

"Uh..."

I had no experience raising a child and was thankful we would have next week off.

"Mm... why don't we watch some TV? You know what TV is, right? You saw it before when you were young."

By young, I meant when she was still a seed. I left the TV on when I went out in case the seed got bored.

“Un! I like TV!”

“Good.”

I turned the TV to an animation channel with a penguin in glasses and a green dinosaur.

“Woaaaa...”

Evandel turned her attention to the TV with sparkling eyes and sat alone in front of the kitchen table.

“What do I do with this?”

I stared at the butterfly seedling’s dust glowing on the kitchen table. I managed to obtain it, but wasn’t sure what to do.

[Butterfly Seedling’s Dust] — Will attach to a target with magic power and help awaken their hidden potential.

The two keywords, target and potential, meant the dust could help awaken people and objects.

“Do I have to give it to Kim Suho?”

The butterfly seedling’s dust was supposed to help Rachel gain enlightenment and assist in Kim Suho’s second enlightenment. However, Boss had interfered and neither obtained it.

“Hmm.”

I needed to think more about what to do with this dust. For now, I wrapped it in a cloth and put it in my drawer.

Chapter 67

Guild (1)

Kim Suho headed to Cube's cafeteria after his evening training. Cube had several restaurants and cafes, but cadets could eat for free at the cafeteria. As such, Kim Suho and other non-wealthy cadets frequently ate at this place. Only a few cadets remained because of summer break. Kim Suho ordered a dinner set and headed to a random seat.

"Huh? Why are the both of you here?"

However, he found two unexpected people. Yoo Yeonha and Chae Nayun whispered among themselves when Kim Suho startled them. They awkwardly dodged each other's gazes.

"O-Oh, you're here."

Chae Nayun spoke up.

"What were you two talking about?"

"Nothing."

Kim Suho sat next to Chae Nayun as she sniffed him. "Did you come from the fitness center?"

"What's the point of sitting around, right?"

"You're obsessed. Can't you take a break for a day?" Chae Nayun narrowed her eyes at him.

"Rather than that, why are you here? I thought you didn't like cafeteria food."

Kim Suho couldn't understand why Chae Nayun was here. She always ate every meal at restaurants, so no one would've expected her at the cafeteria.

"Well... I realized during the final exam that my pickiness could be detrimental."

Chae Nayun spoke in a grave tone, but Yoo Yeonha jabbed in.

"You stopped eating after three spoonfuls."

"...I wasn't hungry."

Kim Suho lightly smiled as he picked up his spoon. Yoo Yeonha and Chae Nayun glanced at him, then made eye contact. In truth, they had talked about what one would expect from girls their age. The topic of their conversation was the mysterious Kim Hajin. Suddenly, Yoo Yeonha had a mischievous thought. She tapped Kim Suho's shoulder.

"Kim Suho."

"Hm?"

"Are you close to Kim Hajin?"

Chae Nayun strongly reacted to Yoo Yeonha's question. She frowned and glared at Yoo Yeonha. Meanwhile, Kim Suho answered.

"No, I'm not that close."

"But you're probably the closest one out of all the male cadets."

"Huh?"

Kim Suho tilted his head. Yoo Yeonha smiled as she continued.

"Isn't it weird? Only a few in our class have talked to Kim Hajin. Whether it's a guy or girl, Kim Hajin never approaches them and coldly drives everyone away."

Chae Nayun's face contorted. Yoo Yeonha seemed like she planned on telling Kim Suho everything.

"But Kim Hajin always shows interest towards a certain person. Can you guess who?"

Kim Suho stared at Yoo Yeonha before slightly smiling.

"Of course, I'm not that dense."

"Really?"

"Haa."

Chae Nayun sighed with mixed feelings and massaged her temples. Yoo Yeonha's face filled with enthusiasm.

"Who is it?"

Kim Suho looked at Chae Nayun without answering. They made eye contact, which was enough of an answer.

"Agh."

Chae Nayun clenched her head and leaned against her chair. Then she faced Yoo Yeonha with sparkling eyes.

"Wait, Yoo Yeonha, wasn't Kim Hajin close to you first?"

However, Yoo Yeonha instantly shot her down.

"He approached me because he wanted something."

Kim Hajin had approached her first, but his interest disappeared after receiving the Desert Eagle. Yoo Yeonha wasn't disappointed since she preferred the transparent exchange. Then she asked Chae Nayun again.

"So what are you going to do?"

“Do what?”

Chae Nayun didn't answer because of Kim Suho. She glanced at him and tried to make him jealous.

“Hey, what do you think?”

“About what?” Kim Suho innocently replied.

“Oh yeah, you've been single your entire life.”

“So have you.”

“What? No, I haven't. I'll have you know when I was 7...”

“Oh, you guys are here too?”

Yi Yeonghan appeared out of nowhere and sat next to Yoo Yeonha. She scooted to the side in displeasure.

“Yi Yeonghan, you didn't leave yet?”

“Yeah, and it looks like I came just in time for the interesting part.”

“You should've left.”

“Aren't you being too mean?”

The cafeteria door opened again. Speak of the devil, Kim Hajin walked in. He came from the fitness center like Kim Suho as brushed his wet hair and pulled out a meal ticket. Yi Yeonghan chuckled.

“He's here too. At least he's working hard, right?”

Yi Yeonghan spoke condescendingly, which made Yoo Yeonha irritated since he had no idea.

“You should work hard yourself.”

“Huh? I am! My semester grades are higher than his.”

“Sure, just focus on your grades for the rest of your life.”

Kim Hajin received his food in a to-go box and turned around. He stared at them for a moment before leaving. Yoo Yeonha made a big fuss even though he only looked at them for a split second.

“You see that? He looked at Nayun just now.”

“Okay! I get it! Can you stop talking?”

Chae Nayun yelled, half-embarrassed and half-annoyed. Yi Yeonghan widened his eyes and joined in.

“What? Chae Nayun likes Kim Hajin?”

“What, where did that come from? Screw off, Yi Yeonghan.”

Chae Nayun reacted sensitively since Kim Suho sat next to her. Since Yi Yeonghan was a loudmouth, Yoo Yeonha gave him more fuel.

“No, we think it’s the other way around.”

“Ah, really? Kim Hajin likes Chae Nayun? But didn’t you argue and fight? Oh, is it like what happens in dramas? You know, love sprouting from fighting. Uh, I guess the gap in strength is too far for that, right? Rank 4 and rank 934 are too far apart.”

Yi Yeonghan quickly changed his tune from Chae Nayun’s killing intent.

“Screw off.”

Chae Nayun blurted and glanced at Kim Hajin out of curiosity. Kim Hajin just happened to look at them again, and their eyes met. She quickly averted her gaze and awkwardly scratched her face.

— The gap in strength is too far for that, right? Rank 4 and rank 934 are too far apart.

“What are they talking about?”

I only listened in at the end. I was just glad they didn’t notice I had two people’s worth of food. I no longer cared about what others said behind my back.

I took the to-go boxes and returned to my room. Evandel ran up to me as soon as I opened the door. I quickly shut the door.

“Daddy!”

“Not Daddy, Uncle.”

I placed the to-go boxes on the kitchen table after picking Evandel up.

“I brought food, but let’s test what we practiced before eating.”

“Un!”

I placed Evandel on the couch. Although she didn’t need to eat, she loved the taste of food.

“Okay, first, try this one.”

I projected a picture of an adorable cat from my smartwatch. Evandel transformed into the cat. She looked just like it, except for her blonde hair.

“Oh, great. Next is this bird.”

Evandel immediately transformed into a cute crow-tit. She was a bit big, but within an acceptable range.

“Well done!”

I patted her tiny head. Evandel transformed back and giggled.

“Did I do well?”

“Of course.”

Was it because she inherited Rachel’s blood? She was a good listener. My smartwatch suddenly rang as I showered her with praise.

[Guilds have released their selection of cadets for the Guild Experience Program. Selected cadets will be contacted via their smartwatch.]

The program allowed cadets to spend their break observing heroes at work. However, it didn’t concern me. Korean guilds could select three cadets from the first and second years. Most first year cadets had to be in the top 300 to have a chance. No matter how well I performed on the final exam, it wasn’t enough to put me above rank 300. No one would’ve picked me. My smartwatch rang again as if to prove me wrong.

[Kim Hajin – Essence of the Strait] [Contact us if you would like to turn down this offer.]

“Huh?”

Essence of the Strait chose me? Why?

“Ah.”

Soon, I figured it out. A certain girl had a strange fantasy about me.

“It was Yoo Yeonha.”

She had the authority as the guild leader’s daughter. Wasn’t this abuse of power? I hoped it wouldn’t cause trouble for her as the successor.

* * *

I enjoyed the warm weather in Seoul under the blue sky and sun. I only worried about leaving Evandel at home. I sternly told her not to leave the room, but still felt uneasy. Was this how every father felt?

“You’re here.”

I waited at Gwanghwamun Plaza as Yoo Yeonha arrived. She tilted her head at me.

“Wow, this is unexpected.”

“What is?”

“I thought you’d reject the offer.”

I planned to at first, but suddenly grew curious about heroes. I wanted to know about more things I hadn’t set in this world.

“We’re still waiting for one more person, but it’ll be a while. Should we go first?”

“I don’t care either way.”

“Then let’s go.”

A limousine parked in front of us. It looked long and luxurious like the movies. The driver came out and opened the door.

“Get in.”

I got inside with Yoo Yeonha. The car seats felt extremely comfortable. Just sitting in it made me drowsy.

“Let’s go.”

The driver drove off at Yoo Yeonha’s order. The limousine moved without a tremor, and we soon arrived at Essence of the Strait’s guild building.

As expected, the world’s second ranked guild looked spectacular. Each part of the building had been carefully designed with cutting-edge magic engineering and technology.

“Let’s head inside.”

Yoo Yeonha led me into the building. The lobby alone looked as huge as a concert hall.

“Offices for heroes are on the second floor and up, but there isn’t much to see on the first four floors. The real exciting stuff begins on the fifth floor. The first floor has the lobby you see here, a lounge, a training room, and a sparring room. Ah, there’s a sports field too.”

I was utterly absorbed in looking around the first floor, which Yoo Yeonha claimed didn’t have much. The interior looked sleek with marble flooring. I could see the indoor sports field in the distance with a grass lawn the size of a soccer field.

“First, let’s go meet the hero in charge of the program.”

“Oh, right.”

I came here for the Guild Experience Program. I almost thought Yoo Yeonha was the one in charge from her familiarity with everything. We stood in front of the elevator together.

“Ah, by the way, the person who isn’t here yet isn’t Chae Nayun.”

“Huh? Uh, okay.”

What was she saying out of the blue? I muttered thoughtlessly, but Yoo Yeonha looked at me and snickered. Ding— The elevator arrived, and we hopped onto the third floor. The third floor had a large circular lobby and office doors spaced out along the walls.

“Follow me.”

Yoo Yeonha guided me to an office labeled A-35.

“Honestly, you won’t be doing anything special. You’ll just look around the building today and interact with other guilds starting tomorrow. You might also shadow a hero exterminating monsters.”

Yoo Yeonha opened the door to a spacious office. The owner of the room seemed like a gentle character with all the flower pots under the window sill and documents neatly stacked on the desk.

“Have you heard of Park Sangho?”

“Uh, I think so.”

“Sangho is a very high rank hero.”

Honestly, I knew him better than Yoo Yeonha. Park Sangho acted as Yoo Yeonha’s right arm, but was sly and devious on the inside. He wasn’t a djinn, but would later betray Yoo Yeonha.

“Oh right, I saw that you did well on the final exam.”

“Please, I only had 67 points.”

“If you wanted to stay around the average mark, you should have given away 20 or so points. Now other guilds are starting to pay attention to you.”

“...”

“You don’t like being the center of attention, right? I’m just letting you know.”

I decided to just ignore the strange things she sometimes said.

Guild (2)

“Oh, you’re already here.”

Park Sangho walked in as we looked around the office.

Park Sangho held out his hand with a warm smile. He gave off a good first impression like an older brother next door, but his real self was completely different.

“Hajin, right?”

“Yes.”

I shook his hand.

“I’m sure I don’t need to introduce myself to Yeonha.”

Yoo Yeonha smiled at Park Sangho’s joking words. He hung his jacket on the chair and tapped the stack of documents on his desk.

“I know this is the Guild Experience Program, but we mostly work indoors. That’s why most team leader heroes with A-rank offices have 4 or 5 workers.”

Park Sangho continued in a soft voice.

“Dungeon conquests and monster subjugations require thorough analysis. Our work begins in the office, and we only set out when everything is perfect. However, mmm... let’s head out for now. Honestly, the office is a bit boring.”

Park Sangho led us outside. Yoo Yeonha followed as I stared at the safe in his drawer. It should contain condemning evidence that Park Sangho gathered about Yoo Yeonha's family.

"Hajin?"

"Ah, yes."

I hurried out of the room as Park Sangho called me.

"Oh right, there are also periodic deployment orders. You know how monsters have infested the North Hamgyong Province."

Park Sangho continued to speak as we walked.

"About 3000 heroes take turns every month to exterminate the monsters there so a monster outbreak won't occur. You'll also go there about twice a year once you become a hero."

Park Sangho stopped near the end of the third floor hall. We stood in front of a door labeled Analysis Room.

"I wanted to show you this place since I heard you placed first in theory."

Park Sangho opened the door. The analysis room looked surprisingly ordinary with tables, chairs, and fancy computers lined up.

"There's a separate conference room on the other side. Huge, isn't it?"

Park Sangho proudly added. Many heroes busily worked.

"Oh, Sangho, the kids are here?" A woman glancing at documents looked up at us.

"Yeah. Hajin, Yeonha, this is Yi Jin-Ah. She's a high-intermediate rank hero."

"Hi. You said two of the three were girls, so you must be Kim Hajin."

“Ah, yes.”

“The world sure has changed. Who would’ve thought rank 934 would visit our guild as part of the Guild Experience Program? I wonder who was behind it.”

Yi Jin-Ah expressed her displeasure in a roundabout way. However, she didn’t target me, but Yoo Yeonha. Of course, Yoo Yeonha didn’t look pleased. Yi Jin-Ah belonged to a different faction within Essence of the Strait. The guild’s vice-leader, Jung Hosuk, led this faction. However, she would eventually switch to Yoo Yeonha’s faction and become the guild’s vice-leader.

“Hajin is rank 1 in theory.”

Park Sangho defended me.

“Haha, rank 1 in theory? That’s amazing, so was I! However, cadets don’t learn much, so don’t be too overconfident.”

Yi Jin-Ah took off her glasses as she snickered. Then she tapped on the document in front of her.

“Now then, rank 1 in theory Kim Hajin. Would you like to take a look?”

“Hey, you can’t show the guild’s internal data so easily.”

“It’s not that important.”

Yi Jin-Ah stood up. She seemed slightly taller than me as I stepped back subconsciously.

“Here. It’s a copy, so you can do whatever you want. Don’t feel pressured.”

Yi Jin-Ah handed the document over. I took it and glanced at the equations and mathematical expressions.

“Take a look, but I doubt a kid can understand much.”

She ticked me off calling me a kid. I knew she didn’t mean my appearance, but I wanted to say my height was average.

“...”

I sat nearby and took out a pen from my cross bag. I also took out my laptop and placed it on the desk. My gift, Observation and Reading, activated. The problems estimated what could occur while conquering a dungeon. Wasn’t this job for ordinary office workers?

The calculation procedures and results appeared in front of me. All I had to do was copy it down. I asked Yi Jin-Ah.

“Do you have a piece of paper?”

“Pft, what do you need it for?”

Yi Jin-Ah sneered without giving me any.

“It’ll be difficult, Hajin. That’s not a normal exam problem.”

Park Sangho gave me the paper instead. I felt motivated because of her bitchy attitude.

I lightly clenched my teeth and wrote down the calculations. Yoo Yeonha suddenly spoke as I worked.

“Um, the other cadet just arrived on the first floor.”

Yoo Yeonha left with Park Sangho, but I stayed and continued to write. In academia, it was standard procedure to show every step.

However, Yi Jin-Ah snatched the paper and flipped it over when I almost finished.

“Listen, kid, stop wasting your time and screw off. Can’t you see? The other two already left.”

“...”

She looked scary with a frown. I stood up since the situation felt futile.

“I’ll leave my solution here, so feel free to look it over.”

“Don’t even try to waste my time, tsk.”

Yi Jin-Ah shooed me away and practically kicked me out.

“What a crazy bitch.”

I didn’t finish the last step, so she better not ask about it later!

I went back to the elevator and came down to the first floor. There, I saw the third cadet who just arrived. Chae Nayun shouted in surprise when she saw me.

“W-What!? Hey, why is he here?”

“Who knows?”

Yoo Yeonha playfully smiled. I also said something to her.

“You said Chae Nayun wasn’t coming.”

“Did I?”

Yoo Yeonha’s smartwatch buzzed. Her expression stiffened, so I wondered who it was.

“You two can go ahead. I need to use the restroom.”

She stealthily left.

Private Broker Yoo Jinhyuk. Under a worn neon sign, Yoo Jinhyuk stared in a daze at a document. This thin document contained a summary of an incident that occurred 16 years ago.

“Haha.”

He suddenly chuckled. He had explored Kim Hajin’s past for almost a month, but couldn’t find much because there were too many people tangled up in it. However, his interest increased along with the difficulty and he finally discovered a crucial hint.

[Kwang-Oh Report] [Casualty: 96] [Special note – the death of a woman in her last month of pregnancy.]

The Kwang-Oh Evacuation Shelter Massacre occurred when monsters flooded the Kwang-Oh Fortress and killed 87 ordinary civilians along with the 9 heroes who defended the evacuation shelter. The government and association concluded that djinns had planned it, but Yoo Jinhyuk knew the truth. The Yoo clan had kicked him out because he tried to uncover the truth a long time ago. Simply put, this 16 year old tragedy wasn’t the doing of djinns.

“...”

Yoo Jinhyuk knew the actual perpetrators. Unfortunately, most wouldn’t dare to name such influential figures.

First was Kim Sukho, then President of South Korea. Second was Chae Joochul, President of Daehyun conglomerate. Third was Yoo Taeho, Yoo Yeonha’s grandfather and Yoo Jinhyuk's own father.

Of course, they had only killed a few bugs from their perspective and employed a secret organization to prevent anyone from ever finding out. The three of them probably didn’t even remember this incident.

However, if there was a survivor... if Kim Hajin’s parents were victims of this massacre, and if his mother was the pregnant woman written in the report...

“Huuu.”

Of course, he hadn't verified the theory yet, but Yoo Jinhyuk wondered why his niece wanted to dig up this boy's past? Yoo Jinhyuk sighed and called Yoo Yeonha. She picked up almost instantly.

“Hello?”

— Yes, Uncle.

“You sound prettier now, kid.”

— Nevermind that, what happened to my request?

Yoo Jinhyuk casually glossed over it.

“Oh, that. I haven't been working on it. I've been too busy.”

— W-What? You're joking, right. Uncle?

Yoo Yeonha's angry voice stung his ears. However, Yoo Jinhyuk tried his best to sound lighthearted.

“Hahaha, I mean, why are you trying to find his parents anyway?”

— That's none of your business.

“What about him? Does he want to find them?”

This was an extremely important question. Everything would be fine if he didn't want to find out and just live normally.

— Yes, most likely.

“...And how do you know that?”

— Hm, what's up with all these questions?

“You know information is gold! I can finish faster if I know how he became an orphan.”

He seemed to have persuaded Yoo Yeonha. Soon, she whispered in a serious voice.

— You see, I think his parents were victims of a crime. He has the list of wanted criminals memorized.

Yoo Jinhyuk couldn't help but gasp. “He memorized the entire list?”

— Yes. I think he reached a certain point in his own investigation.

“...Right, you said he was smart.”

— He's rank 1 in theory. I heard he didn't miss a single problem on the midterm and final exams.

If he was that smart, he could've discovered the Kwang-Oh Incident. Thankfully, he took a wrong turn. The perpetrator wasn't some wanted criminal, but true nobles who still held significant influence over the country.

“Hmm...”

Yoo Jinhyuk sighed once again. He had to end this matter for his own safety. It would be bad if he dug too deep and that old codger noticed him. That old man was one of the strongest in Korea who fell just short of the Nine Stars. He was the second generation successor and the true owner of Daehyun, Chae Joochul the Immortal. Yoo Jinhyuk wouldn't be able to handle him.

“Ah, I just got a call. Let's talk later!”

The Yoo clan had grown, but used to serve as the Chae clan's hunting dog. Chae Joochul would abandon his hunting dog without hesitation, so he wouldn't mind the death of that hunting dog's children.

— Wait, Uncle, when will you be done with...

Yoo Jinhyuk hung up before Yoo Yeonha could finish.

“Why were you late, Nayun?”

Park Sangho asked Chae Nayun as they waited for Yoo Yeonha to return.

“Ah, well, I visited Grandfather.”

“Nayun’s grandfather? That must be... his honor Chae Joochul.”

“Yes, I haven’t seen him in a while, so it took some time. Sorry.”

“No, no, it’s only natural. I presume he’s doing fine?”

Park Sangho made a fuss since her grandfather was one of the strongest in the world. Every hero looked up to him.

“Ah, sorry, I’m done now.” Yoo Yeonha came back from the restroom.

Chae Nayun jokingly blurted, “Why does it take you so long to take a dump?”

“I didn’t. Anyways, Sangho, what’s our next schedule?”

Yoo Yeonha sounded somewhat irritated.

Break (1)

We would experience deployment next in the Guild Experience Program. Deployment referred to heroes intercepting monsters that invaded civilian territory. However, such occurrences were rare in Seoul, so we took a portal to Essence of the Strait's Gangwondo branch.

“Park Sangho here. I just arrived in Chuncheon. Let me know first if there's any incident nearby. Ah, I have cadets with me, so anything above intermediate rank, grade 4 will be difficult.”

Park Sangho informed the branch of our arrival and turned to us with a big smile.

“Let's eat while we wait. I know a good restaurant nearby.”

Park Sangho took us to a fancy, traditional Korean restaurant.

“Four people, please.”

The employee led us inside. While we waited for our food, Park Sangho glanced at me and asked.

“Hajin, how tall are you?”

“Me? I'm 174.”

“So not that different from me,” Chae Nayun interjected.

“What? I'm a lot taller than you. You're 166.”

Chae Nayun was exactly 166.3 according to my setting. I needlessly attached a decimal unit because I was 174.3. Most main characters had 0.3 attached to their heights.

“What.”

Chae Nayun reacted strangely to my thoughtless statement. She narrowed her eyes and asked, “How do you know my height?”

I froze at her question and couldn’t explain how I knew without being a stalker. I had blurted it out because she poked at my pride.

“Yeah, but still...”

Drrrk—

The door opened and interrupted our awkward conversation. The server placed several dishes on the table. Korean braised short ribs, grilled fish, steamed egg, octopus sashimi... my jaws dropped at this royal lunch. Everyone else looked completely indifferent.

“Now, let’s eat.”

I picked up my chopsticks at Park Sangho’s words and savored every dish while the other three leisurely talked.

“Do you have a girlfriend, Sangho?”

“I don’t. What’s your ideal type, Nayun?”

“I... like tall guys, so he would have to be at least 185.”

Chae Nayun’s words struck me hard, but I didn’t think it was any different from how guys liked beautiful women. Except for one problem...

“Yeah, my ideal type is someone tall.”

She kept staring at me as she spoke.

“He would have to be at least 15cm taller. Mmm... yeah, 15 cm... 20cm would be too much.”

What did she want me to do about it? Chae Nayun looked away when I frowned. A voice rang out from Park Sangho’s smartwatch in the middle of our meal.

— Deployment order for high-intermediate rank hero, Park Sangho. The coordinate is...

“Let’s go.”

Park Sangho stood up. Yoo Yeonha, Chae Nayun, and I quickly followed after him. We ran out of the restaurant without even paying as Park Sangho kicked off the ground and stormed away. Yoo Yeonha and Chae Nayun similarly chased after him. However, I quickly fell behind even though I ran as fast as I could.

“Is this a wuxia novel? They’re inhuman!”

They practically flew as I realized my lacking stats. It was impossible to catch up to their decades of hard work in just six months.

“Huu... huu...”

I ran without stopping. Thankfully, my thousand-mile eyes kept track of them, so I didn’t get lost. A fight broke out after three minutes. Five limestone golems shot up from the middle of the street. Limestone golems were at least low-intermediate rank, grade 5. They posed a great threat to civilians and smashed the buildings with their huge arms. However, Yoo Yeonha’s whip flew in to restrain them. The golems grew angry as they failed to cut off her whip. Meanwhile, Park Sangho charged in with his spear and thrust at a golem’s core.

“Huk... huaa...”

I continued running to the scene.

After 10 minutes, I finally spotted them with my naked eyes. A short golem around 2 meters tall approached Chae Nayun. She put away her bow and pulled out a sword. Perhaps she thought she could take it on with her sword since it was shorter.

However, limestone golems had a special ability called self-compression. They became sturdier and stronger the smaller they transformed.

Koong—!

Chae Nayun's sword clashed with the golem's fist as dust scattered in the air. She fought normally and aimed for the golem's weak point after parrying its fist to the side. However, the golem intelligently responded by kicking Chae Nayun.

"Uk!"

Chae Nayun covered herself in qi reinforcement, but still flew back and grabbed her stomach. However, the golem gave her no time to rest as it bolted towards her and slammed its fist down. Chae Nayun froze from the fear of close range combat and her lack of experience. Something grabbed her by the waist when the golem's fist almost made contact.

It took me a moment to realize that aether coiled around her waist and pulled her towards me. It must have read my mind, which screamed, I need to help her!

"..."

I found Chae Nayun in my embrace before I could fully comprehend what happened. I silently stared at her. Honestly, I couldn't think. Aether... did the right thing. Chae Nayun would've been critically injured, but... aether did things a bit awkwardly.

— Gulp.

Chae Nayun swallowed hard. I felt like I had to say something.

"Don't go near the enemy if you're going to freeze up."

I wasn't in any position to say that since I chose a gun out of fear of close range combat.

“Just fight from afar. Your sword can grow longer than a spear.”

Chae Nayun's gift was Sea of Magic Power. It increased her innate mana capacity by several tens of times compared to an average hero. Of course, it took a long time to fill up her mana, and she was also limited by how much she could use at once. However, this limit disappeared when she used a sword as a conductor for magic power. That was the true reason why Chae Nayun had to be a swordsman.

“...Let, let me go.”

Chae Nayun pushed me away. She tucked her hair behind her ear and held up her sword once more.

“It just caught me off guard. Take a good look.”

Chae Nayun confidently spoke. Suddenly, I felt someone watching me. Somewhere... above. I looked up and saw a girl looking down at me from the roof of a nearby building.

“...”

Our eyes met and I felt like I knew her. She looked just like how I imagined.

“Huaaaaap—!”

Chae Nayun charged forward with a strange shout. Startled, I turned and the girl had disappeared by the time I looked back. I felt sorry for her since she was the antagonist who was supposed to be the original owner of aether, Tomer.

“Hey! Help me!”

I heard Chae Nayun shouting.

“The heck.”

Chae Nayun severed one of the golem’s arm and leg, but it grabbed her with its other arm as she dangled like a piñata.

“H-He, help! Ah, uwaaat!”

Chae Nayun screamed for help, but the golem flung her away before anyone could react.

“Kuuuuu. I’m so exhausted.”

Meanwhile, Yi Jin-Ah stretched after two hours on her computer in Essence of the Strait’s analysis room. Then a colleague approached her.

“Hard, right? You should just make the office clerks do it.”

Yi Jin-Ah analyzed the dungeon’s mana density based on its formation and monsters. She needed to find where the mana density suddenly changed, as well as the traps. It required an entire week even with a team.

“I just need to estimate one last variable. Plus, I’m smarter than them.”

Heroes were superior to ordinary people in every aspect. Yi Jin-Ah believed it was because of superior genes. She was also highly regarded when it came to analysis.

“You said it was a large scale dungeon, right?”

“And you’re doing that alone? You’re really something.”

The colleague nodded and turned back. Then he spotted a piece of paper on her desk.

“Hey, what’s this?”

Yi Jin-Ah glanced at the paper.

“I don’t know.”

“Isn’t it yours? Ah, but you don’t usually do calculations with a pen.”

“What are you talking about?”

Her colleague curiously scanned the paper. Yi Jin-Ah snatched it out of his hands. It contained several calculations and sentences explaining procedures.

“Oh, he wrote this.”

“Who?”

“Some kid who’s apparently rank 1 in theory. Ha, looks like he managed to write something.”

“You should take a closer look. It looked pretty good.”

“Oh please.”

She snorted as she read the paper to feel a sense of superiority. In her mind, countless cadets thought they were special, but were only mediocre.

However, Yi Jin-Ah’s face stiffened as she continued. The calculations were clean and concise, and every deduction was flawless and persuasive. What caught her attention most was his creativity in approaching the problem.

“The hell.”

She could only utter those two words because the final conclusion was missing. It felt unpleasant, like being interrupted before the song's highlight.

"Where's the rest?"

Yi Jin-Ah flipped over the paper knowing nothing was there.

"Let me see too."

Her colleague reached for the paper.

"Go away."

Tak. Yi Jin-Ah shoved his hand and carefully folded it into her pocket.

"Hey, you said it wasn't yours. I found it, so it's mine."

"Please, I requested him to do it."

"Ah, I'm so exhausted."

I returned to the dorm around 9 P.M. Evandel slept on the couch after watching TV. I picked her up and tucked her in bed with a blanket.

"Hmm."

I thought about showering and sleeping early, but suddenly remembered something important. I headed to the kitchen and took out the butterfly seedling's dust from the drawer. It still glowed with a brilliant, blue light. There was more than I thought, probably enough for three usages.

"It might be okay for me to use some."

I divided it into three clumps. As expected, each clump should be enough for its role. I already knew what to use it on. It would be a waste on me because my laptop could already view my status, and I had no hidden potential. However, I could use it on aether.

I condensed aether into a ball and placed it on the table. Next, I grabbed a clump of the butterfly seedling's dust and sprinkled it on with anticipation. Just like snow, the blue light fell onto the ball and melted into it. Soon, the dust shone in aether's transparent core. Now, I just had to wait until the light fully spread.

Ding—

My smartwatch rang.

[Hey, thanks for today. By the way...]

It came from Chae Nayun. I stared at her message and waited for her to finish. She didn't say anything for ten minutes, so I messaged her back.

[What.]

[What.]

Chae Nayun replied instantly.

[What.]

I also replied instantly.

She said the same thing.

[What.]

“Sigh.”

[Just go to sleep.]

[lol No you.]

The conversation ended just like that. I felt somewhat moved by the string of messages. I managed to come this far after starting as an extra with no connection to the main story. If I had to describe myself now, I was undoubtedly one of the supporting characters. A supporting character that could change at any moment with no defined role.

—Ding

I received another message while feeling sentimental.

[There will be a shareholder meeting for Packhorse Master next Friday.]

“Looks like they’re going to announce their next move.”

It wouldn’t be long until I was swimming in money after Packhorse Master conquered the Suwon Royal Devil’s Nest.

—Ding

I received another message from an unknown number.

“What’s up today? I’m getting flooded with messages.”

I frowned when I read it. It came from a certain rude individual.

[Um, cadet Hajin? This is Yi Jin-Ah, you saw me during the day. Can we talk?]

Would you if you were me? That’s what I wanted to write, but she immediately called me. I didn’t pick up. Then I received another message.

[Ah, right, you’re coming to the guild tomorrow anyways. Let’s talk then.]

No, a day was enough to see how a guild operated. I had other things to do, like looking after Evandel and preparing for the story’s next arc. I pulled out Park Sangho’s business card and messaged him.

[Sangho, I'll be quitting the Guild Experience Program.]

[Huh? Why?]

Park Sangho immediately replied. I was about to say it was for personal reasons, but had a better idea. I could be petty.

[Someone told me to quit because I'm only rank 934. I thought I should allow another cadet the opportunity if I was only going to be berated. Sorry.]

Break (2)

Yoo Yeonha diligently worked on her computer late at night. She analyzed the Guild Experience Program from earlier in the day and uploaded a job post on Violet Banquet. She had worked on this for a long time.

[Information Guild Falling Blossom – Now Hiring] [We are a new information guild looking for elite agents.]

She founded a new information guild. Of course, Essence of the Strait had its own information team, but that wasn't enough. Yoo Yeonha wanted independent shadows who specialized in it. She worked to establish it for the past year, and now she only needed to find members.

"I'll look into it myself rather than wait for that lazy bum."

She suddenly thought about Yoo Jinhyuk and growled.

Meow—

Yoo Yeonha's smartwatch meowed. She had personally set that ringtone and immediately checked the message from Chae Nayun.

[Hey, did you see the footage of our fight with the limestone golems?]

As expected, Chae Nayun asked about something completely random.

[Yeah, why?]

[Well, you see] [Um] [How do I say this] [Today...]

Chae Nayun bombarded her with messages.

Yoo Yeonha sighed. She knew what Chae Nayun wanted to ask.

[Are you talking about Kim Hajin saving you? The drones beautifully recorded it. He practically embraced you.]

[What... Why are you looking at that?]

[Because I have to write a report.]

Nowadays, drones arrived faster than heroes. They would be immediately deployed from the nearest hangar to verify incoming reports. Heroes only moved afterward. As such, drones had recorded the scene of Kim Hajin embracing Chae Nayun in high definition.

[Argh, don't you dare spread it.]

[I won't, hehe. So? Did you like it?]

[As if. Anyways, I'm going to a seminar next Tuesday with Kim Suho. Do you wanna come too?]

Chae Nayun quickly changed the subject. Yoo Yeonha briefly answered.

[No.]

[Shin Jonghak's coming too.]

[Fine, I'll go.]

Suddenly, a lion's roar sounded from her smartwatch. A call came from Park Sangho. Yoo Yeonha casually picked it up.

“Yes, Park Sangho.”

— Um, Yeonha.

Park Sangho spoke in a hurry. Yoo Yeonha frowned as she listened to his explanation.

— Um, it looks like Jin-Ah messaged Hajin. Hajin said he's quitting the Guild Experience Program because of it.

"What? Okay, I'm hanging up for now."

Yoo Yeonha bit her lips and fumed.

That damned woman must've finally gone mad. We should be sweet-talking him to join us, but this is what she does?

Yoo Yeonha felt enraged for the first time in a while. Yi Jin-Ah always criticized her for every little thing, but Yoo Yeonha endured it because Yi Jin-Ah was competent. Yoo Yeonha didn't act hostile since Yi Jin-Ah would eventually work under her. However, what she did today was unforgivable.

"I didn't want to resort to this."

Yoo Yeonha took a deep breath. She prepared her heart to maximize the effectiveness of this method. Just thinking about it made her blush, but she thickened her skin. Huuuuu— Yoo Yeonha took three more breaths and made a call. The receiver picked up almost instantly. She twisted her tongue as much as she could.

"...Um, Daddy. Were you sleeping?"

The next morning, Yi Jin-Ah stood with a straight back in front of vice-leader Jung Chulsoo. She looked upset as she explained what happened.

"Well, no, you see, vice-leader, I did message him after he left, but..."

"So it's true you privately messaged him. How did you even get his number?"

"Well, I have a friend who works in Cube as a vice-instructor."

The vice-leader sighed.

“What a mess.”

“No, vice-leader, I swear I didn’t mean to threaten him.”

Yi Jin-Ah almost exploded from frustration.

“I didn’t explain in detail, so he might’ve misunderstood, but...”

— Um, cadet Hajin? This is Yi Jin-Ah, you saw me during the day. Can we talk? —Ah, right, you’re coming to the guild tomorrow anyways. Let’s talk then.

Yi Jin-Ah thought back to her message. It seemed the cadet misunderstood her intention.

“Then why were you trying to talk to him in private?”

Yi Jin-Ah hesitantly muttered.

“...I wanted to talk about a scholarship.”

“Shut it. The guild leader is going to meet with you in private.”

Yi Jin-Ah’s face distorted at a private meeting with the guild leader. An outsider would think that was a lighter punishment than a demotion or a reduced salary. However, no punishment was more fearsome than Essence of the Strait’s guild leader. Yi Jin-Ah swallowed hard.

“S-Spare me just this once.”

“I’d love to, but I have no choice. It’s an order from the guild leader.”

“No, please...”

Yi Jin-Ah desperately begged. She was only 25. The last thing she wanted was to meet the guild leader, which supposedly made one age by five years.

However, the decision was final. Yi Jin-Ah made a last-ditch effort.

“B-But come on! That kid isn’t up to our standards! He’s rank 934 for god’s sake! Even if he’s rank 1 in theory, he wouldn’t be here without his connection to Yoo Yeonha. A mere cadet shouldn’t be allowed to interfere with a guild’s administration!”

On the surface, everything she said sounded correct. Honestly, even the vice-leader doubted why they selected a rank 934 cadet.

“...Huuu.”

However, Yoo Jinwoong had cleared his doubts yesterday.

“You’ve heard of the mountain tyrant, correct?”

“Of course, do I look like a rookie?”

“Then you should know that we have the mountain tyrant’s vital point in our database.”

“Yes, although you wouldn’t tell me even if I asked.”

They kept data on high rank monsters like the mountain tyrant top-secret. Even within Essence of the Strait, no more than ten people had access to this information. Furthermore, those who knew were bounded by a magic contract.

“Come here.”

The vice-leader gestured with his hand as Yi Jin-Ah stiffly walked up to him. He whispered into her ear and she appeared dumbstruck.

“...Is that true?”

“Yes. Kim Hajin was the one who provided that information.”

“H-How?”

“This isn’t the first time we’ve seen an oddball among Cube cadets. I’m sure he analyzed it himself. It’s not like there aren’t videos of mountain tyrants. Didn’t you say so yourself? He’s rank 1 in theory.”

Yi Jin-Ah shut her mouth. It wouldn’t be impossible for someone so outstanding in problem-solving to find a few monsters’ vital points.

“Listen, this is why I always tell you not to judge people by their ranks. Ranks can’t fully encapsulate a cadet’s abilities.”

“...”

Last hiring season, you told us to reject anyone below rank 100. Yi Jin-Ah pouted, but didn’t dare voice her thoughts.

“Just accept your punishment.”

“Ah...”

A private meeting with the guild leader meant a hellish, week-long training. This meeting didn’t violate the law under the pretense of training. Anyone would be happy to train under an expert like Yoo Jinwoong, so you couldn’t complain about it either. Yi Jin-Ah wouldn’t be against it if she could become stronger. However, she would only serve as a punching bag because of their wide gap in skills.

“...uck.”

“What uck?”

“...Nothing. I’ll be on my way.”

Yi Jin-Ah bowed and turned around.

“I hope to see a new you in a week.”

“...”

“I’m only doing this because I care. You might be afraid now, but it’s better than having it on your record.”

The vice-leader admonished her.

“Also, don’t even think about contacting him again.”

“I won’t.”

“Good. You can leave now.”

“Yeah, yeah.”

The vice-leader spoke one last time as she grabbed the doorknob.

“Ah, make sure you apologize to him before you leave for training.”

[You have obtained 89 SP!] [A lucky bonus has been applied! You have obtained 12 additional SP!]

“What now?”

I nervously looked at my laptop when an alert popped up. I didn’t know what happened, but I always welcomed more SP. However, I didn’t have time to celebrate.

“Huu.”

I sighed and refocused my attention. Currently, I planned on spending around 1500 SP to create a new gift. It wasn’t a gift related to physical abilities or magic power. I realized from my fight with the golems that my physical stats would always fall behind. I would rather invest in equipment than my body.

I wrote the following gift.

[Random Consolidation System] [Low rank] [Spirit attribute] — Scanning: Will scan the designated equipment. — Random Consolidation: Will enhance the scanned equipment by 1-100%. The consolidation will last for 24 hours, after which the boost percentage will be randomized once again. — Growth: You may spend SP to strengthen the gift, Random Consolidation System.

The gift would fully utilize my incredible luck stat. Enhancing a gun would strengthen its accuracy, recoil, rpm, firepower, and stability. Consolidating a vehicle would strengthen its sturdiness, speed, fuel consumption rate, and maneuverability among other things. It might seem completely reliant on luck, but my luck stat surpassed the human threshold. This gift would be extremely efficient.

“Let’s go.”

I felt more nervous than when I enhanced my equipment in games.

“May Lady Luck shine on me...”

Tap. I hit [save]. A message popped up.

[You do not have enough SP. The gift will be modified accordingly.]
[An incredible luck has been applied! A portion of the gift has been restored.]

[Random Consolidation System] [Low rank] [Spirit attribute] — Scanning: Will scan up to five designated equipment at once. — Random Consolidation: Will enhance the scanned equipment by 1-44%. The consolidation will last for 24 hours, after which the boost percentage will be randomized once again. You may cancel an equipment consolidation, and it will return to normal in one hour. — Growth: You may spend SP to strengthen the gift, Random Consolidation System.

I wasn’t too happy, but my luck had already preserved some of its original effects. That meant the original was too strong, and I should be content with this.

“Hmm.”

I had racked my brains to come up with a new gift because of the message on my smartwatch.

[The Traveling Club will be heading to England next Friday.]

The next main story event had arrived. I picked up the magic sword from my drawer.

Rachel enjoyed the summer break in her room at the English Royal Court. She spent the entire day sleeping without studying, training, or facing any dangers.

“Uuun.”

The morning sunlight felt pleasant after 14 hours of sleep. Every day seemed brighter after seeing her future.

Tok tok—

Someone knocked on her door.

“Come in.”

Henry, the old butler of the English Royal Court, walked in. His hair had turned grey, but Rachel still felt more comfortable around him than her father.

“How was your time at Cube?”

“It was fine.”

Rachel replied with a smile. However, Henry knew the fears she suppressed in her heart.

“You don’t need to worry from now on. We made an agreement with Cube and will be sending a trustworthy agent.”

Rachel felt relieved and praised him with a gentle smile.

“Ah, about the cadet that saved Princess...”

He brought up the request she had personally made as soon as the final exam ended. Rachel’s ears perked up.

“The Royal Court will contact him soon.”

“Good.”

Rachel nodded in satisfaction. Of course, the English Royal Court wasn’t worth much compared to Korea. However, it was still competitive and had fairly distinguished heroes. It wasn’t a particularly enticing choice for the top 100 cadets, but Kim Hajin wasn’t in the top 100. He ranked strangely low at 934. However, his true strength was beyond that. Rachel recalled what happened that day. A single bullet blew away the assassin she struggled with.

Kim Hajin hid his true strength for some reason. Rachel felt happy since that meant fewer guilds would approach him. The English Royal Court held a special privilege that allowed them to recruit cadets before graduation. They could make recruitment offers without breaking the law.

“Thank you, Henry.”

“You’re welcome. Please rest Princess.”

The butler left Rachel’s huge room. She didn’t have many fun things to do. The many Welsh Corgis in the garden seemed to hate her. Rachel went back to rolling around on her bed. Suddenly, she rubbed her belly. Her stomach felt flat with well-defined abs, nowhere big enough to carry a life. However, one day... one day... A shy smile bloomed on her face.

Break (3)

My summer break consisted of hellish training. I decided to invest in equipment, but that didn't mean I gave up on my body. I formed a workout routine from posts on Hero Community, and put my perseverance stat to use.

A week quickly went by. My physical growth felt stunted, but aether finished awakening.

[Aether - Awakened] [Mystic – Formless] [Evolving] A corporeal, yet formless weapon. Will adhere to and strengthen its master or a weapon. A mystical elemental's power has awakened a portion of its potential.

Master Selection: Will not adhere to another being once its master is chosen. — Physical Body Reinforcement: Will increase all variable stats by 0.7 points. — Weapon Reinforcement: Will adhere to its master's weapon and strengthen the attack power. Aether itself can form a weapon. (Current weapon-form aether rank – high rank) — Detail Materialization: Aether can manifest various colors and textures (cannot be too complex). — Evolving Weapon: All of the above functions will evolve along with its owner. Other functions may develop depending on the state of aether's awakening.

To summarize, my variable stat boost increased from 0.6 to 0.7, and it awakened a new function called detail materialization.

I liked this new function because aether could only appear as white or blue. Its weapon form was too noticeable, but detail materialization would now fix that.

An ordinary knife, hammer, or gun? It couldn't be too complex, so maybe a gun wouldn't work.

“Would it?”

It didn't hurt to try. I thought about forming a gun as aether squirmed around. Something went wrong and it ended up looking like a croissant.

"So it doesn't work."

Next, I easily formed a knife with aether. It had a 35 cm blade with a black plastic handle. I grabbed it and felt its texture. It felt no different from an ordinary knife. The keyword here was ordinary.

"Evandel, Uncle is heading out for a bit."

"Un."

"I'll bring back yummy food, so don't play with that for too long. If you get sleepy, just sleep."

Evandel molded her magic power around like clay. Her instinct as a witch told her to make ghosts. I felt glad that she played well by herself.

"Un."

"Make cute animals, okay?"

Please don't make humans.

"I know, I know."

Evandel covered her ears and shook her head. She didn't want me bothering her. It felt like she already started resembling Rachel. I stroked her head and left.

Cube felt empty because of summer break. Only a few rooms had their lights on. I enjoyed the scenery and entered a nearby forest. I stopped and held my aether knife in the middle of the forest. Then I quietly murmured.

"Scan."

The number 31 flashed on the blade before disappearing. It didn't look any different, but aether's output should be 31% stronger.

“...”

I stared at a large boulder about 200 meters away.

“Huup!”

I threw the knife at it. The streak of light went through without stopping and split the boulder in half. The knife continued flying until it returned to my hand at a thought.

“Oho.”

Detail materialization enhanced aether's power to a considerable extent.

“Not bad.”

The extraordinary appearance of weapon artifacts always befitted their power. However, the weapon in my hand was different. It looked like an ordinary knife even though it could penetrate a boulder. I didn't know if it could break a qi reinforcement, but an ordinary appearance induced carelessness that could lead to a lethal blow.

The traveling club gathered under the blazing sun at noon. We planned to meet at the Seoul portal station. Chae Nayun, Kim Suho, and Yoo Yeonha had already arrived.

“God, it's so hot. When are they coming?”

Chae Nayun grumbled as she fanned herself with her hand. Yoo Yeonha muttered from next to her.

“Who told you to wear the cadet uniform?”

“...”

Chae Nayun wore her cadet uniform instead of a 3 million jacket with temperature control because she thought Kim Suho would do the same. Instead, Kim Suho wore a white shirt with black slacks. It suited him so well she couldn't even get angry.

“Oh look, here comes another cadet uniform.”

Yoo Yeonha pointed into the distance. Chae Nayun turned and spotted Kim Hajin. He also wore a cadet uniform with a black jacket on top.

“How is he not burning in that thing?”

Kim Hajin felt great contrary to what Chae Nayun thought. He wore the cloth armor from Rachel, which contained temperature control. Kim Hajin walked up to them.

“Hey, Hajin.”

Kim Suho waved at him.

“Yeah.”

Kim Hajin nodded. Chae Nayun smirked as she looked between them. They acted so awkwardly. Suddenly, Oh Hanhyun yelled and clapped.

“Now that Hajin is here, let's go!”

We arrived in London after checking in our passports at the station. The scenery looked crowded, yet beautiful.

“As you all know, we will be going to Clancy Islet today.”

Clancy Islet served as a gathering place for the European upper class. It was well known for gambling, shopping, fine dining, and entertainment like America's Las Vegas.

“Hmm, good, very good.”

Chae Nayun sounded excited as she clenched her fists.

“We have free time, right?”

“Yes, until 7:00 P.M. There’s a big event at Clancy Islet tonight. They happily said yes when I contacted them.”

Like Oh Hanhyun said, a big event would occur tonight. It would draw all sorts of unwanted flies. No, they were too strong to be called flies. Perhaps they should be called beasts.

“Alright, let’s go.”

We walked along the Thames River for about 10 minutes and spotted an island floating in the sky. It looked about 4 square kilometers in size and floated around 700 meters in the air.

Clancy Islet, the floating island, had been created with the English government’s buoyancy stone. This island generated close to 30% of England’s tourism revenue.

“Wow, it’s been so long. I must have been 11 when I last visited.”

Chae Nayun looked nostalgic, but her face quickly darkened. Her older brother must’ve been with her last time.

“It’s my first time here. Are you going to guide us?”

Kim Suho asked. Chae Nayun cheered up and replied, “Of course!”

Everyone continued chattering as I listened half-heartedly.

“Hajin, have you been here before?”

Kim Suho suddenly asked me.

“No.”

“Oh, then the two of us are newbies.”

“I guess we are.”

We arrived at Clancy Islet’s entrance as I chatted with Kim Suho. A portal on the Thames River led to the island and stricter security surrounded it.

“Here’s my cadet ID and an invitation from Jamie Kim.”

“Wait here.”

The guard left to confirm the invitation letters and quickly returned to let us in. Of course, we went through baggage inspection and a body scanner to make sure we didn’t carry any weapons.

“How strict.”

Clancy Islet offered everything in regards to money: casinos, dueling arenas, auction houses, academic seminars, lectures, corporate keynotes, etc. It wasn’t an exaggeration to say Clancy Islet was why England remained the second most powerful country in Europe.

“We can go to the casino, right?”

Chae Nayun asked because she couldn’t wait.

“Yes, Cube cadets are treated like adults here.”

Being a Cube cadet allowed minors to do things they normally couldn’t. Furthermore, the country would take responsibility if a problem arose. Of course, that didn’t mean we could commit crimes.

“Nice!”

Chae Nayun clenched her fists. However, her excitement would disappear in just three hours. She brought 300 million won today, which was half the amount she had saved up from allowances. She should've budgeted 15% for gambling and the rest for shopping, but she would blow it all. Even as the original author, I couldn't fathom whether it was more absurd to have 300 million won in allowances or to lose it all in three hours.

"Huu."

I tried to stay calm, but I also felt nervous. Casinos were like gold mines to me. I didn't plan on going overboard, but I didn't intend on leaving empty-handed either. I planned to make as much as I could before tonight's incident.

"Let's go in."

We walked into the portal.

The scenery changed in the blink of an eye.

A giant fountain, a flamboyant casino hotel, an auction house, a fancy restaurant, and fleeting clouds. It looked like paradise on earth.

"Casino! Who wants to go to the casino!"

Chae Nayun shouted excitedly. Yoo Yeonha and Kim Suho tagged along with no other choice. I also planned on going to the casino, but I didn't follow them.

"Hajin, where are you gonna go? Kim Suho asked me.

"I'm tired, so I'll rest in my hotel room and grab lunch after."

* * *

I headed straight to the casino after I dropped off my bag. My first time at a casino felt more amazing than I imagined.

"Ooh."

The sound of spinning slot machines resounded in a large area without mirrors or clocks. Various languages went back and forth.

What should I do? The slot machine? Or one of the tables? Ah, I have to get some chips first.

First, I headed to the currency exchange with 10 million won in cash.

“Can I see your ID?”

The cashier spoke in fluent Korean with a bright smile. I gave her my cadet ID and she converted my money into chips without batting an eye. I casually asked her.

“How long have you been working here?”

The cashier, or rather Jain disguised as the cashier, replied with a smile.

“Yes.”

I took my chips and left.

* * *

Do I go for a slot machine jackpot? Or do I empty a dealer?

“Ah, so close!”

Chae Nayun’s voice rang out as I contemplated.

“You lost by an inch.”

Chae Nayun sat at a seven-card stud table. The casino had many different poker tables, but only three of the seven-card stud variant. She only knew how to play seven-card stud.

“Man, I almost had it...”

“You were close, haha.”

The man next to her comforted her.

Close my ass. Anyone could spot a pushover like Chae Nayun. All four people at the table with her worked together to scam her. She lost 10 million won from the last pot and stood up.

“I’m leaving.”

“Haha, see ya. I feel bad taking money from a kid. Here, I’ll give you 25% back.”

The leader of the four provoked her. Bert, the scammer, was a tall Caucasian man who rarely lost in my novel.

“What? It’s only pocket change. I can make it back whenever I want.”

Chae Nayun sat back down as her competitive spirit burned. Bert bared his teeth and handed a stack of chips to Chae Nayun.

“Come on, don’t be like that. Here, just take this and go. I’m just being nice, young lady.”

“Screw that, let’s go again.”

Chae Nayun fell into their trap just like that. She won the next two pots and earned 3 million won, then lost 8 million on the third. She earned 2 million on the fourth, then lost 20 million on the fifth and sixth.

“Ah, so close.”

Bert lost on purpose on the eighth. Chae Nayun laughed, not knowing he only pretended.

“Please, I was obviously going to win that one,” Chae Nayun overconfidently replied.

“Maybe?”

Bert was a scammer, but he didn’t cheat. Casino cards were specially made artifacts that no hero could see through (except for me) or tamper with.

Bert only read the faint changes in Chae Nayun’s expressions to read her hands. She didn’t stand a chance since players held more cards in seven-card stud.

“Sigh. I fold.”

The rounds continued until the eleventh. Chae Nayun folded with two pairs. Bert had one pair, and his teammate held a high queen.

“I fold too.”

However, Bert folded to provoke Chae Nayun. Then he asked his teammate with a crafty smile.

“Hey, can I see your hand? I’m curious what you had.”

“Haha, it wasn’t my pot to win.”

Chae Nayun’s face turned red when his teammate revealed a high queen.

“Aw, come on!”

No one could stop Chae Nayun now. She would lose all her money in two hours and hole up in her hotel room crying. Of course, I didn’t care about Chae Nayun’s grievances. However, I was interested in Bert the scammer. I slowly approached their table and tapped on her shoulder.

“Hey, stand up. I’ll play.”

“W-What, when did you get here?”

The scammers’ faces stiffened when I tried to replace Chae Nayun. They quickly acted.

“Ah, I got a phone call. I’ll stop here.”

One member stood up and pretended to pick up a call. Bert spoke with a smile.

“Looks like there’s an open seat.”

“Can I join?”

I sat down, pretending not to know what he was doing. Bert welcomed me with a big smile.

“Of course.”

“Hey, are you sure you have the money? The minimum bet is 100,000 won,” Chae Nayun worriedly asked me.

“I’m fine, just play.”

The game resumed as the dealer dealt us three cards each. Everyone checked their hands and picked one to reveal.

“Hmm?”

However, I left my cards exactly where the dealer placed them. I didn’t bother checking them at all.

“Hey, aren’t you going to look at your hand?”

One of Bert’s team members asked. I smiled and nodded at the bald man with an intimidating face.

“No, I’m not.”

I could see what was on them without flipping them over. Two queens of hearts and a three of spades.

“You know the rules, kid?”

“What, you think I would be here if I didn’t?”

Eeny, meeny, miny, moe. I sang as I flipped over the three of spades. Veins bulged on the man’s temples.

“What’s your problem?”

“What’s yours?”

“What?”

“Hey.”

Bert quickly cut in.

“Haha, can’t you see what he’s wearing? That’s a Cube cadet uniform. Let’s be respectful, yeah?”

Bert looked a bit stiff himself. Even the almighty Bert didn’t expect someone to not look at their hand.

Technique in gambling only went so far. Luck reigned as king.

“Reporting. Six djinns from Evil Society, three heroes from the association, and some random scammer. Oh, and there’s one person from the Vast Expanse. It looks like he’s here to sightsee.”

Jain reported her findings. All sorts of people flocked to this huge event. She only reported what she had confirmed, but more undoubtedly lurked in the shadows.

“Oh right, also Kim Hajin who Boss likes.”

Jain ended her report with Kim Hajin.

— Standby for now. Also, I do not like Kim Hajin.

“Really? I didn’t know.”

Jain ignored the latter part of Boss’ sentence.

“By the way, Kim Hajin saw my face. Do you think he noticed?”

— He needs to concentrate magic power into his eyes to see through your gift. There’s no reason he would use magic power while looking at an ordinary person.

“I guess so. I didn’t feel any magic power either.”

Chapter 72

White Crystal (1)

Seven-card stud had simple rules. The dealer dealt three cards each to the players. Each player chose one of the three cards to reveal while keeping the other two hidden. Then the players would bet as the dealer provided each with a new open card. The betting would cease when the number of cards reached seven, and the player with the best hand would win.

“This bastard really won’t look at his hand. Look at your hand for god’s sake! How can you be so confident?”

“You’ll read my face. I’m not confident in my poker face.”

The bald guy kept pestering me. However, I only glared at Bert. To be exact, I glared at the obsidian bracelet on his left wrist. Bert had obtained it through one of his scams, but he didn’t know it was an artifact. I wanted his bracelet instead of his money.

We played our twelfth round. Chae Nayun remained in the negative as my chips multiplied to 60 million won.

“Tsk.”

Bert looked understandably angry. I would be angry too if a random kid barged in on my scheme and took 50 million won. However, he currently had the best hand. The dealer had already dealt five cards, with two left. Bert would complete a full house with another ace.

“Next hand.”

The dealer dealt the sixth round of cards. Bert picked up an ace of hearts and completed his full house.

The chances of an ace-high full house were 0.144%. That hand would only lose against a four of a kind, a straight flush, or a royal flush. The chances of a four of a kind when someone else already held a full house were lower than winning the lottery. Bert showed no signs with a perfect poker face.

“Hmm.”

My luck still gave me the advantage because an opponent with a full house wouldn't fold. That said, I still hadn't completed my four of a kind. I had the deuce of diamonds, the deuce of hearts, and the deuce of clubs. I needed the deuce of spades. However, I trusted my luck.

“Call”

Bert calmly betted.

“I raise!”

The bald man increased the pot with a terrible hand. He must've received a sign from Bert.

“Call.”

Chae Nayun also carefully called. She played terribly.

I also called just like Bert wanted. The maximum betting limit for this table was 500 million won. I made quite a bit, but paled in comparison to the richer players at the table. I went all-in with that last call.

“Here's the final card.”

Deuce of Spades. I completed my four of a kind.

“Ah, kid, you already went all-in, so you can't bet anymore, huh.”

I ran out of money with one round of betting left.

“Why don’t you bet that ring on your finger instead?” Bert casually asked. He noticed the ring on my finger wasn’t ordinary. As expected, he had good eyesight for a scammer.

“What!” However, Chae Nayun strongly reacted. “Is this guy crazy? Hey, let’s just leave!”

“What, the game isn’t even over yet. Just stay put.”

“Just sit.”

What’s up with her? I grabbed Chae Nayun’s wrist and made her sit.

“Fine, I’ll bet this priceless ring, so you bet that too.”

I pulled off my ring and placed it on the table. Then I pointed at the obsidian bracelet on his wrist. Bert took off his bracelet after thinking for a moment.

“Deal.”

Chae Nayun whispered in my ear with a worried expression. “Hey, are you really okay with that? That’s your family keepsake—”

“I won’t lose, so just stay put. I would’ve folded if I didn’t stand a chance.”

I didn’t even hear what Chae Nayun said.

“Now then.”

The pot size increased to 300 million won, but the real value was much higher with the two artifacts.

“What will the others bet?”

Bert’s teammates immediately folded when I asked.

“...I also fold.”

Chae Nayun also backed out and fell silent. Only Bert and I remained.

“Then shall we show our hands?”

“Sure.”

“I’ll go first.”

Bert revealed his ace-high full house.

“Full house?”

Chae Nayun’s face stiffened. She seemed to care more about this match than I did.

“Haha, sorry, kid.”

Bert grinned and proceeded to sweep the chips like the stereotypical person about to lose.

“Hold on, I haven’t revealed my hand yet.”

“...What?”

I grabbed the loser’s wrist like in the gambling movies and stopped him from taking the chips. Then I slowly revealed my hand. All four cards with the number 2.

“Four of a kind. It’s my win.”

Bert’s expression immediately darkened. Chae Nayun clasped her hands and shouted, “Wow! Four of a kind! H-How!”

She expressed her shock and excitement. I already knew I would win, but it still felt ecstatic.

Bert made a big scene and called me a scammer. However, Chae Nayun subdued him before the security guards could even arrive, and I grabbed all the chips along with his obsidian bracelet.

Magic Seal (1/4) — Shock Absorption & Automatic Recharge: When its wearer takes damage, a certain amount will be converted into magic power and stored in the bracelet. Will slowly recharge magic power when exposed to air.

The wearer couldn't use the stored magic power directly as it only lingered inside the bracelet. That was why Bert didn't realize the true worth of this bracelet until a year later. Of course, that occurred in the original story. He would never find out now that I had obtained it.

The bracelet could simply be used if you engraved another magic seal onto it. This bracelet could store up to four magic seals. For now, I planned to add seals that enhanced my physical attributes.

"What were you going to do if you lost?" Chae Nayun asked from next to me.

"Jump off a bridge."

I meant it as a joke, but she looked serious.

"Don't say that. You have to live your life to the fullest."

Her serious tone surprised me.

"What is it all of a sudden? You want your money back?"

Of the 300 million I won, 100 belonged to Chae Nayun.

"No, you keep it. You won it fair and square. I'll consider it as a lesson to never gamble again.”

Chae Nayun walked away while grumbling. She planned to leave the casino.

“Oh, by the way.”

She faced me and spoke after slightly hesitating.

“You were pretty cool today.”

She turned back and left.

“...I guess I was.”

Of course, I had no plans to leave yet. I stood in the middle of the casino floor and breathed in the heated atmosphere.

Trrrrr—

The sound of a spinning roulette struck my ears. I could hear people screaming at a baccarat table. Slot machines tempted more gamblers with their addictive tunes. Dealers laughed and tables stacked with chips and cards.

In this casino, where luck decided fortune, I reigned as king.

“...”

I clenched my fists and picked a target. The first would be roulette. I walked up with conviction and placed down 100 million won.

“1 to 12.”

The spectators curiously glanced at me.

Chweek—

The roulette spun. Its destination landed on... number 12.

“Oooh!”

Everyone cheered as my money increased to 130 million won. I confidently smiled and tried all sorts of games after that.

Blackjack. Indian Poker. Baccarat. Texas Hold'em. Even Go-Stop.

My money multiplied like a colony of bacteria every time I moved to a new table.

The traveling club met 50 minutes before the event at 6:10 P.M. Everyone waited at the appointed location except for Kim Hajin.

“Ah, Hajin is here.”

Kim Suho pointed into the distance.

“Finally, why is he always la...”

Chae Nayun couldn't finish her sentence. Kim Hajin had changed significantly compared to a few hours ago. His shaggy hair was neatly brushed up, and he now wore a brand-name suit. His luxury dress shoes also made him 6 centimeters taller as he confidently walked up.

“...”

“...”

“Oh, Kim Hajin! What happened?”

Chae Nayun and Yoo Yeonha stood with their jaws dropped as Kim Suho asked. Kim Hajin grinned and his white teeth glistened under the sunlight.

“What, did you get your teeth whitened too?”

Chae Nayun asked dumbstruck.

“Hm? Ah, something like that.”

Kim Hajin had checked whether an antique shop carried any useful items with his laptop. Then he found a 300 year old toothbrush which supposedly increased the charm stat by 0.01 points. It also included teeth whitening.

“Your clothes... did you buy them?”

“Yeah.”

Yoo Yeonha and Chae Nayun scanned him from top to bottom. Kim Hajin confidently crossed his arms and even put on sunglasses.

Suddenly, a soft voice spoke.

“Oh, who’s this?”

The group turned and spotted Kim Junwoo, a hunter of the Vast Expanse.

“Chae Nayun?”

Kim Junwoo looked at her and waved. Chae Nayun’s eyes widened.

“Ah! Why are you here, Oppa!”

Kim Junwoo scratched his head and modestly smiled. Yoo Yeonha approached him with sparkling eyes.

“Could you be... Kim Junwoo from the Vast Expanse?”

“Yup, that’s me. Looks like my name is still worth something, haha.”

Yoo Yeonha shook hands with him. Then Kim Junwoo turned towards Kim Hajin and seemingly recognized him.

“Ah! You’re the kid making bank at the casino! You are Nayun’s friend? Nice to meet you, man. I’m jealous, I only lost money.”

“Making bank?”

Chae Nayun, Yoo Yeonha, and Kim Suho simultaneously tilted their heads.

“Yeah, I think he made around... 2 billion?”

“2 BILLION!?!?”

The three of them all shouted. Even for Yoo Yeonha and Chae Nayun, 2 billion won was worth a lot. Kim Junwoo rubbed his chin and spoke.

“I think so. A bunch of big guys in suits dragged him out after a while.”

“They didn’t drag me out. They gave me a key to the hotel’s best suite and even guided me there to take a break.”

“Oh, is that what happened?”

Kim Junwoo nodded with a smile. Then he glanced at Kim Suho. He chuckled like an old man and whispered into Chae Nayun’s ear.

“Who’s he? Your boyfriend?”

“W-What are you talking about?”

Chae Nayun glanced at Kim Suho, then at Kim Hajin.

“He’s not.”

Kim Junwoo mischievously smiled at her reaction.

“Don’t tell me, you’re hunting two rabbits at the same time?”

“W-What are you talking about!”

“Polyandry should be okay for someone like you, Na— Uk!”

“Stop!”

She elbowed Kim Junwoo’s solar plexus as he held his stomach in exaggeration and surrendered.

Meanwhile, Evil Society’s Bermund hid and watched the rowdy scene. His strength measured around the middle among everyone attending today.

“Kim Junwoo doesn’t seem to know. Yes, I’ll join up soon.”

He turned back after finishing his report.

“...!”

A woman enveloped in darkness appeared. Immediately, Bermund became breathless. Long black hair and deep dark eyes that seemed to devour him. She stared at Bermund before calling someone.

“Jain.”

“Yeah, I’m here.”

Another woman appeared beside her as Bermund felt his death.

A limousine parked in front of the Thames River leading to Clancy Islet. Countless reporters and cameras surrounded the limousine as the door opened. Rachel stepped out in a beautiful silver dress. The cameras busily flickered as the princess and pride of England appeared.

“Do you have any thoughts on tonight’s event?”

“According to rumors, you lost your first place in theory at Cube. Do you have any comments?”

Rachel smiled and continued walking. She wasn’t accustomed to wearing high heels, but proceeded more perfectly than any model. Rachel met with a businessman in front of the portal.

“Thank you very much for personally visiting us today, Princess.”

Zelen, the CEO of the multinational Roton Corporation, greeted her. Today, he would personally reveal how to effectively utilize the [White Crystal] in Clancy Hall. The object contained tens of thousands of concentrated magic power. Roton Corporation had asked the English Royal Court to attend and increase the event’s prestige. Rachel couldn’t refuse since Roton Corporation was their greatest sponsor.

“Have you increased security?” Rachel asked Zelen.

“Haha, of course.”

Events on this scale rarely occurred because djinns or bandits would always interfere. However, Roton did not want to give up the potential stocks and astronomical profits. Of course, they thoroughly prepared and chose Clancy Islet as their venue for that very reason. They also hired numerous mercenaries, and even lobbied the Hero Association to dispatch high rank heroes.

“You can look forward to it, Princess.”

Zelen's eyes scanned over her. Rachel disliked his lustful, snake-like eyes.

“Roton only promises to elevate the guild’s status as the Royal Court’s greatest sponsor.”

Clancy Islet's largest hall filled up thirty minutes before the event. Everyone wore luxurious clothes as part of the upper class. However, I didn't lose out to anyone with my 300 million won suit. It also functioned as cloth armor and a partial artifact that transformed me into an Asian millionaire.

"Mm."

I sat alone in a cool posture and looked around. Yoo Yeonha busily networked while Chae Nayun went to the bathroom.

"You're here too."

Someone's voice sounded from behind. I turned around and saw the Chameleon Troupe's Boss disguised as Li Xiaopeng.

"Oh, you came too, Xiaopeng."

"Right. As a hero in charge of guarding... what bullshit."

However, Boss suddenly cursed. I also heard what Jain whispered in her ear thanks to my gift.

— You finally met your crush, Boss. Congratulations.

"Cough. Cough."

I cleared my throat.

"Ah, s-sorry. My colleague said something strange through my earphone."

Boss made an excuse as she tapped her earphone.

Chapter 73

White Crystal (2)

Around 6:40 P.M in Clancy Hall, Boss sat next to me and snacked on chocolate. Her eyes lit up as she happily ate. I looked at her from the corner of my eyes and thought about how to respond.

They would soon reveal the white crystal. It definitely couldn't fall into the djinns' hands. However, I couldn't prevent them with my strength and didn't want to draw unnecessary attention. Roton Corporation was one of the most corrupt corporations. Although none of their executives were djinns, many were so vile djinns might've been better. The Chameleon Troupe should take the crystal like in the original story.

"Waiter."

Boss called the waiter. What did she want now? I focused on her actions as the waiter politely spoke.

"Yes, madam."

"Do you have any more of that chocolate from before?"

Boss smacked her lips.

"Yes, here you go."

"No, not one. I'll be satisfied with about three."

"Yes?"

Chae Nayun and Kim Suho returned as Boss ate her chocolates. They tilted their heads at me.

“Hajin, who’s that next to you?”

“Who?”

Kim Suho and Chae Nayun didn’t know the Chameleon Troupe’s Boss yet.

“Ah, she’s someone I know. Her name is Li Xiaopeng. She’s a high-intermediate rank hero I met coincidentally.”

I pretended to be friends and placed my hand on Boss’ shoulder.

“Nyam. Ah, mm. I’m Li Xiaopeng.”

“Ah, yes, it’s nice to meet you.”

Chae Nayun awkwardly greeted her as Kim Suho respectfully bowed.

“This is Chae Nayun, and this is Kim Suho.”

“I already know. They’re famous cadets.”

It would be strange for anyone in this business not to know them. Kim Suho and Chae Nayun sat next to us.

“You’re all here too?”

Kim Junwoo walked up to us. He smiled as his gaze fell on Boss. Boss also looked at him as they seemed to gauge each other’s strength.

“This is?”

Kim Junwoo pointed at Boss, but she didn’t answer. Chae Nayun spoke up instead.

“This is senior Li Xiaopeng, a high-intermediate rank hero acquainted with Kim Hajin. By the way, Li Xiaopeng, how do you know Kim Hajin? You’re really pretty, so how did Kim Hajin...”

“You’re right, she’s a beauty. Um, may I ask how old you are?”

Kim Junwoo interrupted Chae Nayun. Boss was surprisingly only 24, seven years older than Kim Suho and younger than my actual age. However, Boss had a complex about her young age.

“No.”

“Mm, yes, well, I’ll take my leave. Bye kids. Call me if anything happens.”

“Okay, see you later oppa. Let’s grab some food after.”

Kim Junwoo quickly withdrew.

“I have to go on guard duty, so...”

Boss also stood up and left. Yoo Yeonha and Oh Hanhyun came over and replaced her.

“By the way, are the other club members not coming anymore?”

“Probably not. They’ll be third years soon. The second semester is the busiest time for them. I’m sure they’re busy preparing.”

I thought about the major djinns that would participate today. First was Neide, who would carry the crystal. Second was Silasen, who also participated in the Paris masquerade party. And finally, the leader of Evil Society’s artifact retrieval team, Kim Hakpyo.

The lights in the hall went out as complete silence descended. The curtain over the stage lifted. Tap, tap. The sound of boots rang out. Roton’s CEO, Zelen, appeared in the middle of the stage.

“It’s an honor to have you here tonight.”

A hero respectfully bowed as Rachel arrived at Clancy Hall’s VIP balcony. Rachel faintly smiled and sat in her seat. Multiple heroes then circled her.

Rachel looked down at the first floor's VIP seats to see if she knew anyone. She couldn't clearly see from the top, but noticed one particular face.

Kim Hajin?

He looked entirely different than when he was at Cube. He wore a full, brand-name luxury suit with the partial artifact jacket she gifted him. Kim Suho, Chae Nayun, and Yoo Yeonha also sat next to him.

“Ladies and gentlemen, I am Zelen, the CEO of Roton Corporation, a leader in innovative technology.”

Rachel's classmates caught her off guard as Zelen appeared on stage.

Zelen recited his opening remarks and pointed to the second floor balcony.

“Before we begin, let me introduce everyone to the English Royal Court's jewel—”

A spotlight fell on Rachel. She couldn't even open her eyes at the brightness, but still stood up and gently smiled at the audience. Applause rang out from the VIP seats. Soon, the spotlight turned off, and Rachel sat back down.

“Now, everyone, what is the power that forms the origin of all things?”

It slightly bothered Rachel that Zelen presented in Korean instead of English. However, they also provided a real-time English translation.

“That's right, it's mana! Somewhere in this world, mana naturally coalesces into treasures. Even among these treasures, white crystals are especially precious and fully deserving of the phrase, humanity's blessing.”

A beautiful crystal appeared on the big screen behind the stage. The white crystal had formed from the natural accumulation and condensation of mana. It was a priceless treasure full of nature's life energy. Just by existing, a white crystal increased the atmospheric mana density.

"Currently, 480 crystals have been discovered. However, we have not found a way to properly utilize it yet."

Zelen paused and smiled.

"Roton Corporation will now present the method of using the white crystal."

A staff pushed a cart onto the stage. Without delay, Zelen lifted the cloth covering the object.

A white crystal floated inside a cubic glass tube. The audience gasped at the crystal's beauty. However, Zelen focused on the cubic glass tube.

"This vacuum cube... ah, don't mistake it for Korea's Cube."

The audience laughed at his dry joke.

"This cube's origin dates back to the Persian Empire. It was originally an earthenware, but as a leader in the partial artifact industry that dismantles and reforges artifacts, we decomposed this earthenware into sand and reformed it into a glass tube."

The audience immediately stirred. However, Zelen's announcement wasn't the only reason why. From above, Rachel could sense irregular movements. Black figures appeared from the pathways on both sides of the VIP seats. Rachel thought they were guards, but their movements looked strange. She spoke to the heroes guarding her.

"I'm fine, so keep your eyes on them."

The heroes left minimum personnel behind as they went downstairs. Suddenly, Rachel noticed that Kim Hajin also stood up. She recalled the past when he always showed up during trouble. Even now...

“Wait just a moment.”

She left Clancy Hall without her guards as they tried to follow her, but she activated her necklace’s magical effect called shade. Her presence disappeared, and any noise she made became silent. Rachel headed downstairs like a shadow. However, Kim Hajin came up.

“Hiik!”

She quickly hid behind a wall. He wore a pair of sunglasses and climbed up the central staircase. His steps looked calm and unhurried. Rachel waited before chasing after him.

Eventually, she reached the rooftop.

However, guests couldn’t just enter Clancy Hall’s rooftop. Only engineers accessed it 3 to 4 times a year for repair and maintenance. As such, the door was firmly locked and wouldn’t open without a key.

Click, click —

Kim Hajin tried to open the door, but it didn’t budge. He tilted his head and took out a hammer. It looked like an ordinary shabby hammer. Weapons couldn’t be brought onto Clancy Islet, so he probably had no choice but to sneak in an old hammer.

“...?”

Kim Hajin prepared to break down the door with the hammer. However, that would be impossible since the iron door was made from mana alloy. A mere hammer couldn’t possibly... Kim Hajin smashed the door with the hammer. KWANG! A thunderous sound erupted.

“...”

Rachel became speechless. The old hammer completely obliterated the iron door as though a truck crashed through. She stared at the opened entrance.

Did he cover the hammer in magic power? No, he hadn't, but if it wasn't magic power, what was it? Only brute strength to break an iron door made from mana alloy?

Rachel crouched and tried to comprehend what just happened.

—Kyaaaak!

However, a scream rang out from below and she snapped out of her daze.

— I have confirmed Roton's internal document. The item in Clancy Hall is the real one.

Kim Hakpyo grinned as he received the report.

"It doesn't matter what these insects do, the result will always be the same."

Kim Hakpyo wasn't sure whether Roton Corporation would bring out the real crystal. However, Zelen had done it with his craze for money.

Of course, it wasn't a bad idea. Clancy Islet was a floating island and they had strictly vetted all the entrants. In addition, artificial portals couldn't be created because the island was made with magic power. However, they couldn't have imagined that Evil Society would use an aerial carrier.

"Begin."

Kim Hakpyo ordered his men. Immediately, a dense black fog welled up beneath his feet. The VIPs thought an event was occurring, but the screams proved otherwise.

Kuak! Uk! Aaak!

The VIPs lost their composure as they heard the screams.

Kyaaak—

The entire hall broke out into pandemonium. Kim Hakpyo smiled as he sat in his seat. He always welcomed confusion and chaos. Now, everything would be taken care of in pitch-black darkness.

Chapter 74

White Crystal (3)

The 22 elite members of Evil Society quickly went to work. They blocked off the pathways to the stage and attacked the security. They didn't distinguish between security or civilians and cut down anyone in their way. The hall turned into hell as Team 1's executive, Neide, led the assault. The association had labeled him as a grade 1 wanted djinn on the violet list.

"Heroes! Over here! Here!"

Zelen called for the heroes in despair. Neide shut his mouth and let his underlings deal with the heroes. He snatched the cube containing the crystal, but a man suddenly walked up to him.

"Where are you going? Let me introduce myself. I'm a high rank hero, Jin Xiangchen."

The man spoke in poor Korean. Neide stared at him, but didn't plan on fighting. With a smirk, Neide's body multiplied into 8 clones.

"What a troublesome ability."

Jin Xiangchen prepared to fight all eight simultaneously, but Neide ran away in different directions.

"Y-You motherfucker."

Xiangchen wondered which direction he should choose? After slightly hesitating, he chased the one running east. Meanwhile, Boss stared at the stage through the darkness. She walked north instead of east when Neide's clones split up.

"Hmm."

A man observing the situation slowly stood up. He walked through the darkness and grabbed the wrist of a djinn who was about to cut down a civilian.

“Kuak!”

The man twisted the djinn’s arm as the weapon dropped. Then he grabbed the djinn’s neck until the djinn bled from all orifices and died. Kim Junwoo tossed the corpse aside and grabbed the djinn’s weapon off the floor. He cut down every djinn he came across as he made his way to Chae Nayun’s party.

“Oppa!”

Chae Nayun and her friends ran up to him. Without a word, Kim Junwoo tossed the djinn’s sword to Kim Suho as he smiled at them.

“Shall we fight together?”

Neide split into eight and escaped like in the original story. I spotted which Neide had the crystal from the rooftop.

To the east, a hero chased after Neide, but that one didn’t have the crystal. To the south, Jain accompanied Neide while disguised as a djinn. However, that Neide didn’t have the crystal either. To the north, Boss should be chasing the one with the crystal like in the original story. I closely observed that direction.

“Stop!”

Twelve djinns intercepted Boss as she unleashed her magic power, a tiny black ball that looked quite ordinary. However, that tiny ball effortlessly sucked all twelve djinns and twisted them into unrecognizable shapes.

Void Sphere.

That destructive ability was only a small display of Boss’ gift. Boss continued chasing after Neide. She would easily steal the crystal from Neide as I looked at him.

“What?”

I shook my head. This Neide didn’t have the crystal either. The Neide in the north didn’t have the crystal?

“How?”

I quickly turned on my laptop. However, no alerts popped up. If it wasn’t because of a settings change, then what happened? I broke out into cold sweat. My head felt numb, and my heart began to beat faster. I scanned the hall, but I couldn’t find the crystal with so many people running around.

“...”

Suddenly, I had an idea. I never tried it before, but I couldn’t waste any more time as I concentrated stigma’s magic power into my eyes. The magic power moved according to my will so it should be possible to strengthen my thousand-mile eyes.

The scope of my vision transformed. Everything entered into view like a satellite looking down. Civilians escaping the hall, heroes fighting djinns, strange monsters summoned by djinns, and... the white crystal. I easily spotted it inside a fast-moving sedan with only one person.

Thwak—

My vision narrowed as my blood vessels burst.

“...!”

I grabbed my eyes and knelt from a pain so intense I couldn’t even scream. However, I didn’t have time to writhe in pain. I took out the Desert Eagle to snipe the sedan, but I couldn’t aim properly. Without a choice, I jumped from the rooftop thanks to parkour.

I looked for something to ride as soon as I landed. Luckily, I spotted a black motorbike nearby. It looked quite expensive. I had ample experience driving a motorcycle since I worked delivery as a part-time job before the army.

“Everybody, stay calm as you evacuate!”

I heard Chae Nayun’s voice. She held onto a stick condensed from magic power. I felt somewhat sorry for her and shouted.

“Hey!”

“Uh, what, Kim Hajin!? Where have you...”

I took out the magic sword from my magical storage and tossed it at her.

“Be careful not to get hurt.”

Then I ran to the bike. All car keys in this world were digital, so I just had to hack into it with my laptop. I sat on the saddle and muttered.

“Scan.”

The result was... 40%. Jackpot. The number 40 flashed on the bike. The Random Consolidation System worked perfectly on vehicles.

“Hey, where are you going!”

Chae Nayun asked as I started the engine without answering. Vroooaaang—! The engine roared like a beast.

“Whoa!”

The bike sped away the moment I stepped on the accelerator. Its sheer speed surprised me beyond my expectations.

I made up for my driving skills with my acute dynamic vision. I stormed through the roads towards the southeast. The bike streaked through like a beam of light as I reached my destination in just three minutes. I spotted the back of the sedan after my supersonic charge. I planned on doing something quite daring as I surrounded the bike in aether and slammed on the accelerator. A piercing wind struck my body, and the air pressure prevented me from breathing. Even so, I didn't let up as the bike rammed into the sedan.

KWANG—!

The motorcycle should've been blown away. However, the collision shot the sedan up instead. It overturned like a tin can and barreled through the air until it slammed into a tree.

"Haa."

I stopped the bike and finally breathed.

"..."

Chae Nayun stared blankly at what just happened. She focused on where the bike zoomed away and became a tiny dot. Honestly, she always dreamed of such a scene. Coolly driving away on a bike at lightspeed...

"Kyaaak!"

A desperate shriek snapped her back to reality.

"What?"

Chae Nayun stared at the magic sword.

Where did he get something so expensive? He said he won 2 billion won, so did he buy it with that money? To give it to me? No, that can't be...

Regardless, it would undoubtedly help her. With a grin, she imbued her magic power into the sword.

Wiing—

A sharp blade shot out from the hilt.

“Huuup.”

Chae Nayun continued imbuing her magic power into the sword. The blade grew longer until it reached 4 meters. It burned clearly without a single blemish and displayed the true power of her gift.

“Someone save me!”

“I’m coming!”

Chae Nayun shouted with the sword in hand.

* * *

I approached the overturned sedan. Magic power flowed out of stigma and formed the Desert Eagle. Drkk— The driver’s door popped open as a djinn crawled out with a suitcase.

“Crazy bastard...”

The djinn cursed as he glared at me.

“You’re dead.”

Where did his confidence come from? An object flashed in the distance. An aerial carrier under stealth flew towards us. The djinn’s face brightened. However, I casually took out my laptop.

“O-Over here! Comrades! Over here!”

The djinn even shot a flare gun to announce his position, but I didn’t bother to stop him. I didn’t need to. Instead, I connected to a [peripheral server] with my laptop. I needed 100 SP to access the A0936-B Carrier. I slightly regretted it, but it would be worth it. Tak. I closed the laptop and the carrier suddenly retreated.

“A-Ah, w-where are you going? Over here, I said! HEY! WHERE ARE YOU FUCKING GOING! I mean, where are you going, sirs? Guys?”

The djinn coughed up blood and went insane. A terrifying wind pressure blew by, and something huge fell from the sky. KOONG! Shockwaves shook the area as a rock crushed the djinn’s head. I stared at who just landed.

“...”

A giant over 2.2 meters gave off an overwhelming presence. A man who could be called the strongest in close range combat – Cheok Jungyeong. However, he had a girl in his hands like a pet.

“L-Let go! Let me go!”

Rachel struggled as much as she could, but Cheok Jungyeong didn’t even flinch.

“Let me go! This is England’s territory, and I am England’s princess...”

Cheok Jungyeong spoke with a grin as I stared at her.

“Oh, this girl? It looked like she was following you, so I brought her.”

Rachel and I made eye contact as she clenched her teeth. I picked up the suitcase. Then Cheok Jungyeong spoke.

“Put that down.”

I briefly replied, “You first.”

“...”

Cheok Jungyeong didn’t respond. He only stared at me with dead eyes. I pointed my gun at the suitcase. Immediately, Cheok Jungyeong’s expression changed.

“Eh? Hey, hey, do you know how much that’s worth?”

I transformed the Desert Eagle into a shotgun without answering.

“Fine, you want to try me? Let’s see who’s faster. Me ripping off this girl’s head, or you drilling a hole through that suitcase.”

I put my finger on the trigger. The confrontation continued until Cheo Jungyeong sighed and gave up.

“Fine, you little bastard.”

Then he threw Rachel at me.

“Kyaa!”

Rachel fell at my feet. I was curious why she was here, but now wasn’t the time. Cheok Jungyeong spoke in a heavy voice, “Now, put that down.”

“...”

I couldn’t handle this crystal in the first place. Ideally, I planned to give it to Rachel and the English Royal Court, but it was impossible with Cheok Jungyeong.

“Fine.”

I threw the suitcase without hesitation. Cheok Jungyeong picked it up. It looked like a small purse in his hands. Wiiing— A fly landed on my nose and distracted me for a second.

Suddenly, a fierce wind blew towards me. All the hair on my body flew backward. I couldn’t even think as I saw the head-sized fist in front of me. Cheok Jungyeong smiled in satisfaction. He had charged towards me in the blink of an eye. Just 3 more centimeters and he would’ve crushed my head.

“Looks like you aren’t so bad.”

Cheok Jungyeong seemed satisfied with my calm response. His heavy steps resounded as he left. My body couldn't move until he completely disappeared and my head felt blank.

Chapter 75

Short Break (1)

A huge forest surrounded the outskirts of Clancy Islet to protect it from crashes. I leaned against a random tree.

Sigh.

My heart began to beat again. I felt my chest and recalled what just happened, but quickly refocused on the present. I should forget for the sake of my sanity. I looked around the dark forest with the overturned sedan in a ditch and my bike lying in the distance. The bike seemed fine because of the 40% consolidation combined with aether. I slowly walked up and raised the bike. If I could, I wanted to take it back with me. Suddenly, I felt someone's gaze.

“...”

Rachel stared at me while sitting down. I forgot about her because of the shock from Cheok Jungyeong.

“Are you okay?”

I asked even though she didn't seem hurt. Rachel nodded in a daze with her mouth half-open. I could see the front of her teeth and couldn't help but laugh.

“Why did you follow me?”

“...”

Rachel closed her mouth and simply stared. I didn't avoid her eyes as bright moonlight lit up the dark forest and Rachel seemed to glow. She looked at me for a long time before pulling something out of her pocket. I tilted my head at the bullet without a casing. What was that?

“Hajin.”

She suddenly called my name. I thought I misheard, but she definitely said my name just now.

“Ah, yes?” I hurriedly replied.

“This belongs to you, right?”

“...”

I stared at the bullet. I couldn’t distinguish it from just its shape, but it looked like a bullet for the Desert Eagle.

“Yes, I think so.”

I reached out to grab the bullet, but Rachel placed it back into her pocket.

“Um, where did you get...”

“I found it during the final exam.”

“Huh?”

I finally understood. She must’ve found it when I helped her by sniping the Lancaster djinns.

“I thought something similar might happen, so I followed you.”

Rachel scratched her cheek as she pulled out a sword from her waist. It wasn’t Cube’s training rapier, but the legendary sword Galatyn that belonged to one of the twelve knights of the Round Table. However, Rachel still wouldn’t have stood a chance against Cheok Jungyeong.

“Ah.”

“By the way, Hajin...” Rachel sounded serious.

“Back then, why did you help me?”

I didn't know how to respond, so I simply stared back. Rachel hadn't finished.

“During the midterm and then the final exam. You were always there, uup!”

A cold wind blew as her hair curled into her mouth. I barely held back my laughter as she tied her hair and cleared her throat.

“Cough. The first time could've been a coincidence, but the final exam... no matter how much I thought, I concluded that you must've been watching me.”

I scratched the back of my neck. Rachel was an important character who always faced dangerous situations. The story would greatly change if she got injured or killed, so I kept an eye on her. However, I couldn't explain that so I made up a simple excuse that could convince her.

“I'm your fan.”

“...?”

Rachel's eyes widened as she tilted her head.

“I'm your fan. I'm even a member of your fan café.”

Rachel's fan café did exist. England's fan café had about 500,000 members, and even the Korean one had about 10,000. I checked it before when I didn't have anything better to do.

Rachel turned silent at the absurd excuse. Whiish— The wind blew and shook the leaves around us. The awkward silence continued for about five minutes until Rachel asked with a quivering voice.

“Does that mean... you like me?”

“...What?”

* * *

Cheok Jungyeong returned with the crystal to the hotel suite where everyone else waited.

Cheok Jungyeong burst into laughter as four members of the Chameleon Troupe stared at him.

“Haha, it’s almost like I’m the main character.”

He pushed his hair back as though embarrassed and set down the suitcase. Jain snatched it up.

“This better be the real thing.”

She swallowed her saliva and slightly opened it. A brilliant white light shone through.

“...It is.”

Jain smiled and closed the suitcase in satisfaction.

“Well done.”

“Haha, it was a piece of cake.”

“Wait, why are you so happy? Don’t tell me you killed him?”

Boss’ eyes coldly flickered.

“No, I didn’t. Ah, I was planning to at first.”

Cheok Jungyeong smiled. At first, he wanted to blow up Kim Hajin’s head. Cheok Jungyeong probably wouldn’t have stopped if Kim Hajin tried to dodge or showed any signs of fear. However, Kim Hajin simply stared at his fist without being flustered. He observed Cheok Jungyeong's movements and showed a warrior's fearlessness. Cheok Jungyeong liked his manliness.

"Are you sure he didn't freeze from fear? Did you check his pants?"

"Jain, you might regret it one day if you underestimate him."

"Tsk."

Jain frowned as Cheok Jungyeong murmured, "Just kidding, just kidding. I purposely charged in a little slower, but he faced me directly and didn't bat an eye."

To demonstrate, Cheok Jungyeong pushed his fist towards Jain. His tiny movement startled her.

"See, strong people and people who will become strong have a different mindset."

Cheok Jungyeong spoke as he proudly beat his chest.

"Courage, boldness, and fearlessness... all of these are impossible without a strong heart. Closing your eyes when your sword clashes is the same thing as having your neck cut—"

"Be quiet." Droon interrupted Cheok Jungyeong's passionate speech.

"Tsk. Brat, don't cut in when an adult is talking."

However, he couldn't do anything to Droon. Although he loved fighting and killing, he never broke one absolute rule.

"Try that in three years and see what happens."

He would never touch or hurt children.

Although they failed to capture Evil Society's executives, England's heroes quickly suppressed the chaos in Clancy Hall without too many casualties.

"Sigh."

Heroes and paramedics busily ran back and forth from broken-down buildings and battered roads. Yoo Yeonha sat on the ground and stared at her dirty hair. She sighed and wondered how much it would take to restore her hair at the beauty salon? Dammit. Yoo Yeonha continued sighing as Chae Nayun walked up to her.

"Hey, did you see that?"

Chae Nayun asked without any explanation. Yoo Yeonha became slightly annoyed, but swallowed her complaints.

"See what?"

Yoo Yeonha had seen many things. First was Kim Junwoo's overwhelming might as he tore apart countless djinns with his bare hands. As expected of a hunter from the Vast Expanse. Next was Kim Suho whose talent also stuck out like a sore thumb. The metal attribute covering his sword could cut through anything. His final sword dance as he slashed through fireballs remained in her mind.

"Kim Hajin. He went off on a bike."

"Ah."

Yoo Yeonha also saw that eye-catching scene. She had to do a doubletake if bikes could go that fast.

"Yeah, I saw him, but where did he go?"

"I don't know, but where do you think he got that bike? I want to buy one too."

Chae Nayun's eyes flickered as she smacked her lips. Kim Hajin hadn't accomplished anything special in today's incident. However, Yoo Yeonha grew suspicious about his driving skills. He seemed too experienced for a mere cadet. Kim Suho hastily walked up to them.

“What’s wrong?”

“The princess is missing. Have either of you seen Rachel?”

“Huh?”

Chae Nayun and Yoo Yeonha looked around the area. The incident had been settled, but the heroes began to stir once again. The word Princess continued to emerge with urgency. Yoo Yeonha felt a chill down her back as she shockingly muttered.

“Their goal was the princess?”

“What? Really?”

“It makes sense since Rachel is England’s most precious treasure. If they kidnapped her...”

A black bike came towards them as it made clunking noises. Yoo Yeonha focused on her deductions as everyone turned towards the bike. Rachel wore a helmet and trembled as she drove the bike.

“If they kidnapped her to take her hostage, England wouldn’t hesitate to hand over the rights to Clancy Islet. Their goal must’ve been the entire country, not just Roton Corporation. Those evil bastards...”

“Hey, stop murmuring to yourself and look over there.”

Chae Nayun nudged Yoo Yeonha’s shoulders.

“What, I’m busy right... now... Eh?”

Yoo Yeonha felt drained as Chae Nayun murmured seriously.

“That’s the bike Kim Hajin ran off on.”

“...!”

Yoo Yeonha’s face turned serious once again. Her head spun as she continued her detective work. Kim Hajin ran off on a bike while the attack in Clancy Hall distracted everyone. However, Rachel returned on the same bike. Did that mean Kim Hajin defeated all those djinns by himself and rescued Rachel? Impossible, not even Kim Hajin could be so fearless.

Rachel and I split up after the awkward incident.

— Does that mean... you like me?

I denied it, but she didn’t seem to believe me. She said she understood, but I felt she misinterpreted.

I returned to my hotel room alone. If I returned with Rachel, I would’ve obtained a lot of SP. However, receiving too much attention could be poisonous. Currently, Evil Society’s djinns filled Clancy Islet. They failed their mission, so no one knew where they would direct their fury. The Chameleon Troupe could withstand them, but my future would turn bleak if they chose to vent on me.

“Anyways, this place is amazing.”

The free hotel suite was beyond my imagination. The casino manager told me to rest and upgraded my room for free after I won 2 billion won. I sat down on the comfy couch and made a video call on my smartwatch. A cute child popped up on the screen.

— Hajin!

“Hey, have you been doing well?”

Evandel was a quick learner. She already learned how to use basic electronic devices, and even called me by my name because I told her not to call me Daddy.

— Un, look at this!

Evandel showed me a cat ghost she made. It looked small and cute.

“Wow, good job. It’s so cute I want to pet it.”

The internet said it was important to praise a child.

— By the way, when are you coming back?

“Tomorrow morning. I’ll be there as soon as I can. Wait just a bit more.”

I wanted to return right away, but the entire island was undergoing a vetting process.

“I’ll bring back something delicious. What do you want to eat?”

— Fried chicken!

“Alright, got it.”

Wiing—

I received a message from Chae Nayun.

[Hey, are you busy? Everyone is going out to eat.]

Chapter 76

Short Break (2)

Rachel returned to the Royal Court under the protection of numerous heroes. Her parents, the Queen of England and her consort, had worried sick that Evil Society abducted her. Rachel clarified that she had left of her own accord. Naturally, she informed them of the giant who took the white crystal. Their worry turned to anger as they scolded her.

Their nagging continued for 30 minutes. They warned her not to do something so reckless ever again, and that she would be transferred to the England Academy if something similar occurred. She returned to her room after their lecture and felt like her ears were bleeding. She buried herself in bed from all the fatigue.

“Haa.”

Many things today caused her to sigh. Zelen had fainted and was taken to the hospital. Roton Corporation’s stocks would surely plummet once the market opened tomorrow.

What happened wouldn’t hurt England since Zelen had vowed under contract not to blame them if anything occurred. However, Roton Corporation served as the Royal Court guild’s biggest sponsor. The Royal Court guild would surely suffer if Roton retracted their support.

“...”

Rachel put aside such concerns and thought about what happened two hours ago. Kim Hajin had used some unknown method to find the djinn who fled with the crystal and then chased after him. He almost succeeded when a mysterious giant intervened. They lost the crystal in the end.

However, Kim Hajin bashfully confessing that he was her fan remained in her mind.

Then other thoughts emerged.

He had left many hints. The biggest was in theory class. Everyone knew Kim Hajin never shared his knowledge and she also heard slanderous rumors about him.

But... he always treated me differently. He answered all my questions and shared his location during the final exam. He expressed his desire to be with me, but I refused. Even then, he watched over me from a distance and helped me when I was in danger.

At first, I couldn't understand, but now everything makes sense. If he didn't act on reason, but feelings, then everything makes sense.

“...!”

A flash of insight struck Rachel. The Royal Court guild needed someone strong in both theory and combat like Kim Hajin. He could raise their prestige.

If I could lead his feelings towards me in that direction... No.

Rachel shook those horrible thoughts away. Manipulating someone's feelings wasn't right. Tak. She even smacked her own head.

I came to the first floor of the casino hotel at 10 P.M. I thought the traveling club members would be waiting, but Chae Nayun was the only one. She tapped on the ground with her feet as she waited.

“Yaawwn...”

Chae Nayun felt drowsy until she noticed me and grinned.

“Why are you staring?”

“...”

I shrugged without answering.

“Where are the others?”

“They went ahead. Why are you always late?”

I ended up late because of the video call with Evandel.

“Sorry, I had something to do.”

“Hmm.”

Chae Nayun took out the magic sword I gave her.

“Anyways, thanks for giving me this. It helped a lot.”

“No problem.”

I didn't need it, but I took it anyway and put it in my pocket. Chae Nayun pointed to the front and exclaimed.

“Let's go. I'll pay for the food.”

She stomped away excitedly as I followed her outside. Beautiful lights lit up the night. Other places operated like usual because today's trouble only occurred at Clancy Hall.

“Hey.”

Chae Nayun suddenly tapped my shoulder as we walked.

“What?”

“Isn't that yours?”

“What... Huh?”

She pointed at the motorbike I drove earlier. I sneaked up to the bike. I wanted it, but it seemed the owner was a hotel guest. Chae Nayun smacked her lips and asked, "Can we ride it there?"

"It's not mine. I borrowed it back then."

"Really?"

We both walked away reluctantly. Tak, tak. I turned on the smartwatch GPS since I couldn't trust Chae Nayun to guide me.

"Hey."

Chae Nayun initiated a conversation as I turned towards her. She smiled coolly under the dim streetlight. Then she suddenly asked, "Don't you think we can be friends?"

I came to a halt. Friends. It never crossed my mind as I blankly stared at her. She played with her hair and pretended to be indifferent. I didn't know why she suggested that. However...

"No."

I coldly cut her down.

"I don't think so."

We could never be friends. I would eventually leave this world, and I would also kill her most precious person. I couldn't become her friend.

"..."

Chae Nayun stood still, seemingly taken off guard. Soon, she sighed with a stiff expression and forcefully smiled.

"S-Screw you. Fine, if you don't wanna be friends, then screw off."

She smacked my shoulder and ran off.

“...”

I rubbed my shoulder.

“That freaking hurt.”

It felt like a hammer struck me.

I went shopping the next day and picked out two more items at another antique shop.

[Horse Saddle] [Antique] A horse saddle used by a nameless cavalryman 500 years ago. You will ride better if you sit on this saddle.

[Horn Flute] [Antique] A flute used by a wandering minstrel of Joseon. Your voice will become clearer for three hours if you blow this horn.

They could serve practical purposes outside of combat. I liked the horse saddle. It would come in handy soon.

“Let’s go.”

We stood in front of Clancy Islet’s portal at noon. We didn’t need to undergo further investigation since they confirmed our statuses. A group of five waited for their turn behind us. I tried my best not to stare at them. Jain’s gift had disguised each Chameleon Troupe member.

We used two portals in total from Clancy Islet to England, then England to Seoul.

“We encountered unexpected trouble yesterday, but we should get used to it as aspiring heroes.”

Oh Hanhyun spoke after we arrived at the Seoul portal station. Everyone nodded with bitter smiles.

“Now, let’s all go home. Well done everybody, both yesterday and today!”

We left after Oh Hanhyun’s encouragement. Then everyone other than me froze at the reporters bustling outside.

— Ah, they’re here!

— They’re back!

Cameras flashed and blinded us.

— Is it true that Princess Rachel was abducted yesterday on Clancy Islet?

— Just what happened?

— There have been reports that cadet Kim Suho performed spectacularly during the incident.

The reporters bombarded us with questions. Videos must’ve already spread to Korea, and Kim Suho’s outstanding performance made headlines.

The other club members stood in a daze, but I knew they weren’t interested in me.

I sneaked away to a restaurant known for its fried chicken. I had to buy food for Evandel.

“Give me two... no, three.”

“Three, got it.”

I returned to the portal station after buying three fried chickens. The interview continued as Yoo Yeonha, who liked the attention, spoke to the reporters with her hair fluttering in the wind. I ignored them and headed towards the portal to Cube.

“Hua.”

Cube’s familiar scenery felt like home. I walked through the central park as I felt the East Sea’s cool air. Soon, Dorm 1 appeared and I reached my room conveniently located on the first floor. I placed my thumb on the fingerprint scanner. Tiririk— The door opened with a tone. I slammed it shut as soon as I entered. Evandel ran up to me with all the animals she created.

“Hajin!”

I hugged Evandel who ran into my embrace. She joyfully rubbed her face against my chest. My heart instantly calmed. I wondered if I would feel like this when I had kids in the future. Evandel looked at me with twinkling eyes and asked.

“Did you buy chicken?”

“Yeah, I bought a lot.”

I held up the plastic bag full of fried chicken.

I thought I had quite a fruitful break with three days left before the second semester. I hunted, trained hard, and added another function to my laptop called smartwatch link. It felt annoying having to open the laptop every time something happened. I only put it off because I didn’t want to spend the SP.

[An incredible luck has been applied. You have escaped from certain death!] [Narrow Escape from Death (3/9) – A special stat, accumulation of luck, has partly unlocked!] [You have obtained 193 SP!]

I made the change with the 193 SP I gained from Cheok Jungyeong. I wondered why I delayed such a convenient function until now.

— Oh, Hajin, what’s up?

I called Park Soohyuk with my upgraded smartwatch.

“Hyung, did you get what I wanted?”

Last week, I asked Park Soohyuk to buy me a motorcycle. I called him to check how it was going.

— Yeah, I looked up the motorcycle with the best specs like you wanted, but it costs 150 million won. I think it was called Augusta?

“Is that including all the additional functionalities you can put on it?”

— No, it gets even more expensive with things like mana coating and engine reinforcement. The final cost will be way more.

“Do it anyway. I won a lot at the casino.”

I won 2 billion won. Plus, it wouldn't be long until Packhorse Master conquered the Suwon Devil's Nest, and I would become rich.

— Okay, I'll put in an order, but where are you going to ride it? Such a high spec motorcycle doesn't suit Korea.

“It's fine.”

I could improve my driving skills with aether and the horse saddle. I could also activate bullet time in an emergency.

— Okay, I'll order it under our company, so come pick it up later.

“Thanks. Oh right, is the company doing well?”

— Haha.

Park Soohyuk replied with a laugh.

— We have 13 hunters with us now. You don't have to worry.

“Ooh, what an improvement.”

— Haha, it's all thanks to you. We're preparing to expand and move to a better place soon.

“Then I'll invest more. As I said, I won a lot at the casino.”

An alert popped up as I excitedly spoke with Park Soohyuk. My face stiffened as I hung up to confirm the content from Violet Banquet. Someone commissioned the Truth Agency for the first time in about a month.

[Please find this person.]

Although the sentence was short, it came with detailed information and a picture of the man. His name was Fernin Jesus.

“Eh?”

I knew this man. Fernin Jesus was Tomer's father, the man she loved and hated more than anyone.

Chapter 77

Attraction (1)

The Hero Association labeled the top djinns as the Nine Evils to unite humanity against them, but the djinns happily accepted it as the highest praise.

“It’ll be a waste of time again.”

This secret base belonged to Wicked, rank 3 of the Nine Evils. It had been constructed from a deep cave in South Hamgyeong Province’s mountain.

[Truth Agency] — We will answer anything.

In this sanctuary, a djinn named Tomer looked at a computer. She had brown Latino skin and a healthy figure. However, no one gave her lewd glances.

Tomer was special among ordinary djinns. She didn’t care about missions and only pursued strength. A few djinns even doubted she was a djinn.

“What wind blew to make that woman stay in the office?”

Another djinn muttered as he peeked at Tomer. It was uncommon to see her working at a desk.

“Someone told her about an information agency on Violet Banquet.”

“Who?”

“Probably Seth. That guy’s crazy about women.”

A field agent walked into the office. The two gossiping djinns quickly buried their faces into their desks. The field agent looked around the office and called her.

“Tomer.”

What now. Tomer slowly stood as she murmured to herself. The field agent heard her complaint, but frowned without a word. Tomer was only 20 years old, but skilled enough to be an elite.

“There’s a mission.”

“A mission?”

“Yes, an observation mission.”

The agent handed Tomer a thick stack of documents. She frowned as she received them.

“Hmm...”

I stared at my laptop and pondered about Tomer. She became a djinn for one reason. To kill her father. She sold her soul for this because her father killed her mother and abandoned her when she was seven. At first glance, he could be considered human garbage, but he also had his reasons. I implemented this setting to bring Tomer to Kim Suho’s side. However, I had stopped serializing before I ever reached that part.

With Wicked’s help, she would eventually find her father without my help. She swore her loyalty to Wicked after achieving her goal. Before I went on hiatus, she became one of Wicked’s executives. For the record, Wicked’s executives were on a much higher level than ordinary executives. Wicked’s executives were only inferior to the Nine Evils themselves. They could be considered the future leaders of djinns.

“Hmm.”

Would I be able to recruit Tomer if I found her father? Probably not, but if I used the plot device I created for Kim Suho...

I brought out the Book of Truth. I didn't know the location of Tomer's father, but I considered all the information she gave me and willed the book to reveal his present state of affairs. Two streaks of stigma instantly disappeared. My left arm felt numb, and an intense headache shook my head. It felt like my vision had turned white.

“Argh.”

I collapsed to the ground, unable to endure the pain. The throbbing lasted for a minute before subsiding. I raised my head and looked at the Book of Truth. With two streaks of stigma, I found out about Fernin Jesus' current status, but I couldn't find his location.

[Fernin Jesus changed his name to Agus Benjamin, and has retired after undergoing plastic surgery.]

I visited Seoul's magic tower the Sunday before school to engrave magic seals on my obsidian bracelet. Materialistic snobs filled the magic tower, so I wore the luxury suit I bought on Clancy Islet.

“Kim Hajin. Welcome.”

A guard checked my name and allowed me entry. Classical music calmly flowed as many others also waited. A magician approached me as I looked around.

“Kim Hajin?”

“Ah, yes.”

“Nice to meet you. I'm Jin Yohan, a 4 star magician. You made a reservation for magic seals, correct?”

A 4 star artificer was the highest ranked magician I could meet. I nodded as Jin Yohan scanned me up and down with a smile.

“Follow me. Let’s head to the office.”

We arrived in his office on the 33rd floor. His secretary brought him a cup of coffee as he sat in his chair. Jin Yohan took a sip and cut to the chase.

“What kind of magic seal are you looking for?”

“Physical ability enhancement, or do you have any physical defense magic?”

“Ah, yes we do.”

Jin Yohan projected a hologram into the air.

“First is this speed boost.”

Most were fairly mediocre such as speed boost, strength enhancement, barrier, blood circulation, etc.

“Do you have any that use more magic power?”

Most artifacts couldn’t use anything above speed boost like haste. However, this obsidian bracelet didn’t have such restrictions. I preferred a powerful, high-cost magic seal even if I could only use it once a week.

“For example, qi reinforcement or momentary awakening.”

“...”

Jin Yohan gave me a strange look before nodding.

“It’s possible, but it will be very expensive.”

I left 30 minutes later after making another reservation. I needed to wait longer until I could obtain the magic seals. At least until Packhorse Master finished conquering the Suwon Devil’s Nest. Summer break ended as other cadets returned from their vacations while I spent my time training and raising a kid.

“That picture you took in Japan came out so good.”

“Ah, I wanted to visit Spain. If only my portal pass didn’t expire.”

Cadets returned to Cube with bright faces after enjoying their break. I found out about what they did through their social media. Most went on vacations abroad, and some posted pictures of themselves training.

[Enduring a hard day, hoping for a better tomorrow.]

Shin Jonghak uploaded a clear set-up shot with his sweaty face leaning on his spear. I had to admit he looked like a model.

I often checked the major characters’ social media like this.

Kim Suho and Yoo Yeonha didn’t post much, and the English Royal Court managed Rachel’s social media. As for Chae Nayun, she hadn’t posted anything since the casino incident.

[Too complicated. #FirstTime #ClancyIslet #Flustered #Annoyed #CubeCadet]

She took a picture of Clancy Islet’s night scene along with a short phrase and string of hashtags. Chae Nayun’s last post seemed like a typical attention-seeking post from a high schooler, but her audience reacted explosively.

3982 likes. Uyeonha [Don’t think too much.] Orange2574 [What? π π Did something happen?] Jonghak2 [Call me] Aeoeao [Unni, why aren’t you posting anything nowadays?]

“She has so many likes.”

Chae Nayun had many followers as expected of a celebrity. I felt ostracized, so I went back to looking at stocks. It shouldn’t be long until Packhorse Master skyrocketed.

Kim Soohyuk walked into the classroom at 8:00 A.M. He loudly knocked on his desk and gathered everyone's attention.

"Today is the start of the second semester. As you all know, big changes will occur. We have updated your rankings and new cadets will also join the class. Maybe some of you went to the welcoming ceremony yesterday."

Magicians who wished to become heroes transferred to Cube from the ten magic academies. Each class received 20 magicians for a total of 200. I already took note of who would play important roles.

"These transfer students will join us starting today. Please enter."

The instructor and cadets began to clap. Then the front door opened and 20 black-robed magicians walked in. At first, I stared without much thought. One, two, three... Suddenly, my eyes widened.

"What."

Someone shouldn't have been there among the twenty magicians. She lightened her skin and dyed her hair darker, but I definitely spotted Tomer. She grew up in Korea since she was 10 and entered Gangwondo Magic Academy. Although she quit after 4 years, her past admission would have verified her identity. She was the perfect candidate to infiltrate besides the few djinns among Cube's executives.

"Everybody take a seat."

The magicians filled in the empty seats.

"Now I will announce the new rankings."

Tomer sat in a middle seat as I checked my smartwatch for any alerts.

[Tomer – Although she plays an important role, her appearance and strength were too sudden. It would be better to establish a connection between her and the other major characters from the beginning.]

"Tsk."

Doing useless things again.

“Rank 1, Kim Suho!”

Kim Soohyuk only announced the top 10 and posted the rest on a wall poster.

*Rank 1 Kim Suho Rank 2 Shin Jonghak Rank 3 Rachel Rank 4 Chae
Nayun Rank 5 Shen Yu'an Rank 6 Yoo Yeonha... Rank 11 Yi Yeonghan...
Rank 17 Kim Horak... Rank 334 Kim Hajin...*

My rank went up by 600. Mmm, such an average rank satisfied me.

The first outdoor class consisted of training with the new transfer students. They called it the dangerous hike.

“There aren’t any dangerous monsters on this mountain, but...”

Kim Soohyuk held up his index finger with a scary expression.

“Many replicas of terrifying djinn traps are hidden throughout. You might end up hospitalized, so stay on your toes.”

Kim Soohyuk divided the 120 cadets into 10 groups of 12. The groups began to climb the mountain from different starting points.

“Alright, everyone, let’s go!”

Chae Nayun belonged to Group 3 with Kim Suho.

“Oh, Chae Nayun.”

“Hey.”

Chae Nayun and Kim Suho led two magicians and eight cadets to the foot of the mountain. Not long afterward, goosebumps appeared on their arms. The wind grew chilly and their surroundings turned dark.

For the record, it was only 10:30 A.M. The environment spooked them enough, but all kinds of traps also sprung up like flames from the ground and tentacle-like tree branches. Even ghosts appeared.

“My heart almost stopped.”

All the cadets fell to the ground when a creepy female ghost appeared. Was Cube trying to give them nightmares to celebrate the new semester? Chae Nayun deeply sighed as she placed a hand on her heart.

“Geez, this is too scary.”

Even Kim Suho murmured in cold sweat. Looking at him, someone else suddenly popped up in Chae Nayun’s mind. A person she constantly thought about who made her feel complicated.

“Hey.”

“Hm? What?”

Kim Suho tilted his head as Chae Nayun looked around. The other cadets weren’t paying attention to them. She nonchalantly brought up something irrelevant.

“Hey, you’re my friend, right?”

“What? Why are you asking that all of a sudden? Are you sick?”

“Just answer me.”

“Well, of course I am.”

Chae Nayun smiled bitterly at his immediate answer. As expected, Kim Suho thought of her as a friend. Perhaps this was the normal reaction. However, Kim Hajin clearly stated that he couldn’t be friends. Unlike Kim Suho, he acted more forward about his intentions.

“What was that?”

A bush on the right suddenly rustled, and a familiar face popped out. Speak of the devil, Kim Hajin’s Group 6 appeared.

Chapter 78

Attraction (2)

Besides Kim Hajin, Group 6 also had rank 41 Simon Delick and rank 20 Yi Jiyeon. They coincidentally met Group 3 and took a break together.

“Illusion barrier?”

Group 6 had an easy time with only a few wild animals until they entered an illusion barrier.

“Yeah, we must’ve been lost for an hour or so, but that guy suddenly told us where to go with a frustrated face.”

Simon Delick pointed to Kim Hajin sitting by a tree. Chae Nayun glanced over and saw him looking at his smartwatch.

“At first, we didn’t know who he was, but then he instantly found the exit.”

Chae Nayun nodded.

“Oh right, did you decide on your team for the upcoming challenge?” Simon Delick changed the topic. The team challenge was a traditional joint training exercise at Cube.

“No.”

Chae Nayun shook her head. The teams had to be fair so top cadets like Chae Nayun, Kim Suho, Yoo Yeonha, and Shin Jonghak couldn’t be together. Most teams consisted of a single-digit rank, a double-digit rank, two triple-digit ranks, and one low rank magician or two double-digit ranks, two triple-digit ranks, and one upper rank magician.

“I’m thinking about asking Kim Hajin.”

Yi Jiyoona suddenly interjected and caught Chae Nayun off guard. Kim Suho laughed and chimed in, “Hajin? He’s a good choice.”

“Kim Suho, you’re close with him?” Yi Jiyoona asked with a smile.

“Uh... yeah.”

He nodded although their relationship felt a bit vague. Yi Jiyoona’s face brightened.

“As expected, Suho has so many connections.”

Chae Nayun felt displeased at how Yi Jiyoona flattered people like a sly fox.

“Why Kim Hajin? He’s surrounded by bad rumors.”

Simon Delick said in a slightly jealous tone. Kim Hajin had a horrible reputation. On the other hand, Yi Jiyoona was quite popular. Many guys liked her pure and innocent image. Her gift also made her one of the best supporters.

“Everyone wants to have you on their team, Jiyoona.”

She could shoot magic arrows that contained exceptionally strong buffs. Most guilds had their eyes on her.

“Kim Hajin is the best candidate among triple-digit cadets. He’s smart and his combat prowess is exceptional. Remember his fight with Kim Horak?”

Yi Jiyoona glanced over at Kim Hajin in the distance. No one knew if he heard Yi Jiyoona as he scratched his cheek. Then Yi Jiyoona turned towards Chae Nayun.

“Nayun, what do you think?”

“Eh?”

Yi Jiyeon and Chae Nayun were stereotypical social media friends that only exchanged likes and comments. Chae Nayun brushed her hair and nonchalantly replied.

“Well, you can team up with him if you want. Why ask me?”

Although she said that, she also felt that Kim Hajin was too good for someone in the 300s. No, he shouldn’t even be at rank 334. Both Yoo Yeonha and Chae Nayun acknowledged this fact.

“Really? Then I should ask him today.”

“Wait.”

Chae Nayun hastily spoke as Yi Jiyeon prepared to leave.

“He’s really picky. So um, he might not say yes.”

“Eh?”

“That’s... um, you might get hurt, Jiyeon. He’s a bit cold.”

“Nayun is right. Haven’t you heard the rumors?”

Simon Delick chimed in. He recited some of the bad rumors about how Kim Hajin goes to Seoul every weekend to visit brothels and nightclubs, how he receives money from gangs and other violent organizations, and even that he has several sugar mommas.

“Do you believe that nonsense?”

“Hey, Delick, have you personally even talked to him?”

Chae Nayun and Kim Suho simultaneously interrupted him. Delick felt so shocked his eyes trembled.

“W-What, am I wrong?”

Chae Nayun glared at him and stood up. Kim Suho clapped his hands to change the atmosphere.

“Alright, let’s get going. Otherwise, we’ll be late.”

Yoo Yeonha prepared for a video call late at night. She completely covered her face and changed her voice as well.

“Cough.”

The information guild she established, Falling Blossom, would meet for the first time today. She cleared her throat to prevent any voice cracks.

— Tiriring.

Soon, the video call began and the three team leaders of Falling Blossom greeted her.

“It’s nice to meet you all.”

— It’s an honor, Master.

Their respectful tone satisfied her. Yoo Yeonha had personally evaluated and recruited each member. She snatched up anyone with potential regardless of their resumes. Yoo Yeonha divided the 21 founding members into three teams.

Members of the first team served as spies. They would gather information on rival guilds. She called members of the second team hawks. They would locate new dungeons or monsters above high-intermediate rank. Finally, she referred to the third team as shadows. They would take care of Yoo Yeonha’s private requests.

“Team 1 should prioritize information on rival guilds like Creator’s Sacred Grace and Desolate Moon. Team 2 should...”

Yoo Yeonha spoke in a formal manner that made it hard to distinguish even her gender. She ended her call with Team 1 and Team 2 after handing out their orders.

Now, only Team 3 remained. Yoo Yeonha had carefully chosen the elite members of Team 3. They would thoroughly work in the shadows from background investigations to tailing, kidnappings, intimidation, and even assassinations if necessary. They served as her secret weapon.

“I command you to thoroughly investigate the following individuals’ backgrounds. However, you are forbidden from hurting them or being discovered.”

Yoo Yeonha gave Team 3 information on five individuals. However, four of them served as decoys. She only wanted to know about one.

[Kim Hajin – 17 years old] — From Seaju Orphanage. — When he was 9, a periodic orphanage inspection discovered him and enrolled him in Military Agent Academy. — Currently ranked 334 as a first year Cube cadet. — Supplied Essence of the Strait with information worth hundreds of millions of won.]

— Understood, Master.

Team 3’s leader left as Yoo Yeonha nodded in satisfaction. Then she jumped into bed.

Beep— Beep—

The alarm woke me up at 6:30 A.M.

“Mmm.”

I noticed something light stuck to my side. Puu, puu. Evandel let out tiny breaths as she slept. I grinned and put a finger over her nostrils. One, two, three seconds... Evandel quivered and shook my hand away.

“Huhu.”

A smile bloomed on my face as I stroked her soft hair for five minutes before getting up.

“You’re awake too?”

The cat that Evandel made sat on the living room couch. It jumped and walked to my feet, but growled when I tried to pet it. This cat wasn’t an illusion or spirit. It was a real cat made from Evandel’s ability that would become strong enough to help me in the future.

I put on my clothes to go bring back breakfast from the cafeteria. Of course, I could conveniently eat outside and head straight to class, but I felt happier eating with Evandel.

I put on slippers and headed out. Someone approached me as I walked to the cafeteria while yawning.

“Where are you going so early?”

Yoo Yeonha wore a comfortable tracksuit for a morning jog. I briefly replied.

“The cafeteria.”

“Hmm.”

Yoo Yeonha walked along with me. “Anyways, I noticed your ranking went up by a lot.”

“Yeah, I think it’ll stay like that for the future.”

“Mm...”

Yoo Yeonha nodded.

“Have you thought about your future?” she asked as the cafeteria came into view.

I wasn't too sure, so I half-heartedly replied, "I still have a lot of time."

"A lot of time? It's only a year and three months. Once we're in our third year, we'll be too busy with hero internships and deployments."

Third years were no different than real heroes. They only attended Cube once or twice a week and spent the rest as apprentice heroes in different guilds. Yoo Yeonha continued.

"How about Essence of the Strait?"

She tried to recruit me. Honestly, they would definitely succeed. Although they currently ranked second, they would reign supreme once Creator's Sacred Grace failed the Tower of Miracle. This wouldn't change even as Kim Suho joined Creator's Sacred Grace and brought it to new heights.

"I was thinking about becoming a hunter of the Vast Expanse."

I was half-serious. The Vast Expanse was a hunter group founded by Kwangwon, someone as powerful as the Nine Stars. They operated like mercenaries, but on a completely different scale. Their main customers consisted of large guilds and corporations. Only multimillionaires could afford to employ them. Hunters of the Vast Expanse could freely act, which suited me.

"Although I'm not sure if I can become one."

"..."

Yoo Yeonha remained silent as I glanced at her. She contemplated with a serious face.

"I'll change your mind."

She said with determination, "I'll bring you what you've been looking for and change your mind?"

"..."

And what's that? I furrowed my brows as Yoo Yeonha snickered and changed the topic.

“Oh right, remember Yi Jin-Ah who bullied you? She got harshly scolded. I even have a video. Do you want to watch it? She’s crying like a baby.”

Yoo Yeonha walked strangely when she felt good. She clasped her hands behind her back and hopped like a little princess. Then she suddenly shot backward. As expected, some cadets showed up in the distance.

“I’ll see you later.”

Yoo Yeonha quickly disappeared.

“Alright, attention!”

Kim Soohyuk loudly made the morning Wednesday announcements.

“You will need to form a team of five.”

I closed my eyes and clenched my teeth. I would have to do rather annoying things for the team challenge like conquering a miniature tower, capturing artifacts against other teams, or going on a team trip. Thankfully, team challenges only lasted until the midterms in six weeks.

“Form your teams according to the requirements and submit your list by the end of next Wednesday. I will place you in teams myself if you don’t have one by then.”

“Huu.”

Outcasts like me would have a sad time. However, I might be the best choice among triple-digit cadets as Yi Jiyeon mentioned.

Tap, tap, tap.

“...?”

I turned around towards the seat behind me. Rachel anxiously tapped on her desk. Both of us had no friends. The others ostracized me while Rachel naturally felt aloof. It might be beneficial to team up since I also had something to give her.

The butterfly seedling's dust.

Originally, Rachel had obtained a hint of her enlightenment through it during the final exam. If I delayed it any longer, her basic specs might remain lower than in the original story.

“Huu.”

I took a deep breath and nervously sent her a message.

[Rachel, would you like to team up?]

However, someone approached her before she could check my message.

“Would you like to team up?”

Tomer, the robed magician, asked Rachel.

Chapter 79

Attraction (3)

Tomer's boldness attracted the entire class. Rachel stared at her puzzled, but Tomer even reached out her hand. I wondered why she approached Rachel. Wicked's djinns operated like mercenaries. Lancaster might be the mastermind behind her mission if she approached Rachel.

"I'll think about it. There's still a lot of time."

Rachel postponed her decision. Then she checked her smartwatch and saw my message. She glanced over and we made eye contact. Sssk. Rachel quickly turned to the window and pretended not to see me. I guess two offers made her happy since she began to smile. I turned towards the front of the class. She replied after about 10 minutes.

[I'll think about it.]

I hoped she would pick me since we already had somewhat of a friendship. I stopped thinking about the team challenge and focused on a more important issue. I stared at Kim Suho's back. Summer break had gone by, so it was almost time. Kim Suho should be preparing for a dungeon. He planned to solo it like a typical protagonist.

It was a small dungeon with weak minions, but a powerful boss called the Swordsman of Destruction. A high-intermediate rank hero would still struggle, but not Kim Suho. Even Evandel could easily answer who would win between a swordsman and a sword saint. Kim Suho's magic power would easily shatter the boss' sword, and only a single tree branch would remain. This branch would become Kim Suho's weapon.

Its divine name was Misteltein, aka the god-slaying branch. Many tales described this legendary weapon as a branch, a sword, or even a spear. I had set its unawakened form as a branch, and it would become a sword as it awakened.

However, Kim Suho wouldn't know at first because of its ordinary appearance. The butterfly seedling's dust caused its first awakening and transformed it into a black branch. I found it funny how this branch would later beat powerful monsters like king ogres and sea kings. I couldn't help but chuckle as I thought back to the Kim Suho in my novel.

I had to join his dungeon conquest. After all, I had the butterfly seedling's dust, but that wasn't the only reason. Frankly, I worried if Kim Suho could beat the dungeon alone. This world wasn't as easy as the one I created. Also, the dungeon might provide me with something useful.

"Now, you may proceed to class."

The morning announcement ended as we left for class.

"Ah, Hajin, where are you going?"

A girl I had never seen before clung to my side.

"What?"

I'm going to class, where else would I be going?

"Well, you see, I was wondering if you had—"

"Hajin!"

Jin Hoseung cut in before the girl could finish. He was on my team last semester.

"I got tickets to the French Artifact Museum. Napoleon's rifle will be on display tomorrow."

I ended up accepting the ticket, but it didn't end there. A bunch of cadets, some I knew and some I didn't, all started bribing me. I accepted their gifts without declining.

I returned to my room after classes and pondered on the couch. Evandel slept on my thigh like a pillow, so I couldn't move.

"How should I handle it?"

I thought about how to appease Tomer. Currently, she hadn't fully assimilated with the djinns. I felt like I could bring her to our side as long as I found her father. However, the Book of Truth couldn't find him for some reason.

I had no choice but to employ other methods. Yoo Jinhyuk was undoubtedly the best, but he cost too much. Yoo Jinhyuk also restricted his range to Korea. It would be a huge waste if Tomer's father wasn't in Korea.

"Oh right."

I suddenly recalled someone. A trustworthy informant who knew Kim Chundong. The chubby boy I first met at the entrance ceremony. What was his name? Kim... right, Kim Hosup. Of course, we hadn't talked to each other since then, so I didn't know his phone number. However, I could easily find out. I opened the Book of Truth and asked for Kim Hosup's number.

"Argh."

Just looking up a single phone number consumed 30% of my magic power. Was the Book of Truth too costly? Or were two streaks of stigma not enough? I immediately called him. Tururu— Tururu— Three little pigs— He had a strange ringtone, but quickly picked up.

— Hello?

Kim Hosup had an unexpectedly deep voice.

"Hey, Hosup. It's Hajin. How have you been?"

— Ah, Hajin. It's been a while!

His tone quickly changed.

— What's up?

“Um... Hosup.”

— Un?

“What have you been up to lately?”

— Me?

The way he dragged out his sentences annoyed me, but Hosup would serve an important role. Although everyone mistreated him because of his appearance and strange personality, Yoo Yeonha would notice his talents in 7 years.

— I'm... doing okay. Why did you call me?

He sounded meek. Tsk, it seemed some seniors at his workplace had bullied him. Unfortunately, I didn't have time to comfort him.

“Nothing much. Just... I'm wondering if you can help me find someone.”

— A person?

“Yeah. I'll send you a supercomputer as payment.”

A good computer would amplify his gift.

— A supercomputer? Aren't you poor?

“I have a lot of money now. I'll send it to you this week. Can you do it?”

— It should be possible if you have his background information.

“Perfect. I’ll send it to you right away.”

I sent him Fernin Jesus’ fake identity and the picture from Tomer.

“Alright, I just sent it. Also, Hosup.”

— Hm?

“If you’re going to quit your job...”

Kim Hosup might not be an altruist or a philanthropist, but he was a good person. He would be more helpful if Yoo Yeonha discovered him earlier.

“There’s a new information guild called Falling Blossom. You should join. They only care about your ability, so they’ll treat you well.”

I told Hosup about the workplace where he would shine in the future.

Kim Suho trained alone in a dark forest at 10 P.M. Shwik— His sword caused the air to undulate. He followed with a spinning slash after a light jab and several small slashes. His movements perfectly flowed as if the sword always protected him. His technique looked flawless and as light as a feather. Kim Suho reflected on his sword technique every night to maintain his knight mindset. Nowadays, he also devoted himself for another reason. That was...

“Are you training?”

Someone startled him as he turned around.

“Kim Hajin?”

Kim Hajin leaned against a tree while watching the sword training. Kim Suho sheathed his weapon.

“Are you also here to train?”

Kim Suho asked him as Kim Hajin approached with a smile and shook his head.

“No, I’m just on a walk. Anyways, it’s still early in the semester, but you sure work hard. If someone saw you, they would think you’re trying to conquer a dungeon alone.”

“...”

Kim Suho’s body slightly shook. Kim Hajin continued to smile as he chattered uncharacteristically.

“No way, am I right?”

“...No.”

Kim Suho denied it with a smile. However, Kim Hajin’s eyes narrowed at him. Kim Suho slightly shrunk back from Kim Hajin’s eyes, which seemed to see through everything.

“You went out last week, right? To Kamak Mountain. I saw you on my way back.”

“...”

Kim Suho stared at Kim Hajin. He had felt the resonance of a sword from Kamak Mountain. At first, he climbed the mountain to feel its life energy. However, a sword qi inside the mountain called to him. This strange call attracted his attention, and he found an unidentified dungeon at the epicenter.

“How did you know?” Kim Suho carefully asked.

“I saw you coincidentally. You know how I go out a lot. Not to brag or anything, but my eyes...”

Kim Hajin tapped his eyes. “If I climb Kumgang Mountain, I can see up to Seoul... no, Uijeonbu.”

Kim Suho continued staring at Kim Hajin. Silence usually made people anxious, but Kim Hajin seemed completely at ease.

“Let me join if you plan on conquering a dungeon. I’m pretty useful outside of Cube.”

“...”

“We’ll split the loot 9:1. If you get a tree branch, I’ll only take a few leaves.”

* * *

A week passed in the blink of an eye as Monday came around. The team submission deadline would be in two days.

“Hmm...”

Chae Nayun looked at her notebook in thought. She had one spot left on her team and needed a cadet outside of the top 100. A team with a lower average rank also received bonus points. Naturally, a cost-effective cadet would be best, which meant... Kim Hajin. She peeked over at his seat.

Kim Hajin’s name often popped up in the classroom group chat for the team challenge. However, Chae Nayun felt confident that he would choose her if she asked.

She hesitated to ask for one reason. She worried that he would misunderstand. She only wanted him for the team challenge without any ulterior motives.

“Hmm...”

“What, are you having trouble forming your team?”

Shin Jonghak asked from behind her. He already made his team with Kim Horak and three others. The other three were way below average with rank 2 and rank 17 on the same team. However, Shin Jonghak would find a way to squeeze out their potential.

“No, I’m just thinking—”

“Let me see.”

Shin Jonghak suddenly reached forward and stole Chae Nayun’s notebook.

“Ah, HEY!”

“Hazuki, Raymond, and... Kim Hajin? Kim Hajiiin?”

He loudly repeated Kim Hajin’s name. Immediately, the class’ attention fell on her. Naturally, Kim Hajin also stared at her. Chae Nayun felt her face growing red like a tomato.

“Eeee, ee...”

“Didn’t you say Kim Hajin—”

“Shut your mouth!”

“Uk!”

Chae Nayun struck Shin Jonghak in the solar plexus. Her sudden attack caught him completely off guard as he slumped into his desk and endured the pain.

“...uuu... uuuu...” Shin Jonghak groaned periodically.

“Don’t steal and look at other people’s stuff. Hey, Kim Suho.”

Chae Nayun quickly changed the subject with Kim Suho next to her.

“Who are you teaming up with?”

“...”

Kim Suho remained silent as he tapped on his notebook with a pen.

“Kim Suho?”

“Huh? Oh.”

He finally turned around when she called again. Chae Nayun peeked at his notebook.

“What, you’re asking Kim Hajin too?”

He had written down Kim Hajin’s name.

“Huh? Oh, I guess so.”

“Everyone’s asking Kim Hajin.”

“A fitting... combination...” Shin Jonghak barely muttered from the pain. “Two... trifling commoners...”

“Shut it. Yoo Yeonha, what about you?”

Yoo Yeonha stared at her smartwatch and raised her head.

“Me? My team’s already decided.”

Yoo Yeonha formed her team with people she could easily manipulate. Although she also coveted Kim Hajin, she felt more comfortable with people she could easily handle.

“Hmm...”

The theory instructor finally walked in. He placed a thick textbook on the podium and took attendance.

“Oh, by the way, there will also be team challenges for theory classes.”

The instructor announced. Chae Nayun immediately made up her mind. Bless Kim Hajin.

“That’s it for today. Make sure to review before the next class.”

Chae Nayun snapped out of her daze as class ended. She quickly chased after Kim Hajin.

“Hey.”

She grabbed his shoulder as Kim Hajin asked what she wanted with just his eyes. She felt a bit nervous.

“Um, about your team...”

Someone walked past her when she almost asked. The blonde hair and delicate fragrance belonged to Rachel.

“Team?” Rachel asked with an innocent expression.

“Huh? Oh, it doesn’t concern you.”

“Hajin decided to team up with me.”

“Eh?”

Chae Nayun’s expression became stiff. She swallowed hard and turned to Kim Hajin. He nodded somewhat regretfully.

“Oh, really? I didn’t think you had anyone to team with, so I thought I’d save you. You know, as a fellow traveling club member. Right... well... good luck.”

Chae Nayun had no idea what came out of her mouth and turned around after smacking his shoulder. She felt dazed as she walked away, but suddenly grew annoyed and turned back around.

Coincidentally, she made eye contact with Rachel who nodded at her. Chae Nayun clenched her teeth. They had opposite personalities, but similar grades except for theory. Chae Nayun considered Rachel her rival second only to Kim Suho. No, nowadays, Rachel had surpassed Kim Suho as her sole rival.

Why her of all people?

Chae Nayun stomped away like an angry bison.

Chapter 80

Teamwork (1)

Rachel paused in the middle of walking. I also stopped since she had a serious expression. She stared at me and spoke.

“I already submitted the team list.”

Team Rachel consisted of the following: Rachel, Jin Hoseung, Yi Bokgyu, Kim Hajin, and Tomer. Rachel ranked the highest with Jin Hoseung and Yi Bokgyu at rank 108 and 173 respectively.

“...So you can't go somewhere else.”

She seemed worried because of Chae Nayun.

“Of course.”

“Ah, they're over there!”

Jin Hoseung, Yi Bokhyu, and Tomer all arrived.

“We're in the same team now. Let's go get some food.”

Jin Hoseung excitedly spoke. Was it because he was on Rachel's team? I glanced at Rachel who nodded.

“So where are we going?”

“Mm... well, what do you want to eat, Rachel?”

“I'm fine with anything.”

Rachel wasn't particularly picky, but she did have a preference.

“Let’s go to Hangyujung, the Korean restaurant.”

“Uh, sure.”

Yi Bokgyu and Jin Hoseung didn’t mind as Rachel coughed in satisfaction. Only Tomer had no reaction.

“Are you okay with that?”

“...Yeah.”

Rachel briefly replied, “Great.”

They had decided.

“Oh right.”

We headed there with a GPS as Jin Hoseung approached me.

“Hajin, about the ticket from before, it’s in two days. Do you want to come with me?”

“To France?”

Rachel’s eyes flickered. France and England had a similar relationship to Korea and Japan. An artifact scramble had occurred between them about 20 years ago.

“No, I’m fine.”

Honestly, Napoleon’s rifle interested me, but I didn’t want to go all the way to France.

“Why? Who knows, maybe Napoleon’s rifle will become yours.”

“Napoleon?” Rachel muttered.

“How? I’m rank 334.”

“Well, it’s better than keeping it in a museum. By the way, did your voice change Hajin?”

“Cough. Did it?”

I had used the flute I bought from Clancy Islet’s antique shop.

[Horn Flute] [Antique] A flute used by a wandering minstrel of Joseon. Your throat will become clearer for three hours if you blow this horn.

I used it for the first time before visiting Kim Suho because a deep voice sounded more reliable. I’ve used it often ever since. I liked my clearer voice, and it felt great to open up my throat in the morning.

“Yeah, is it puberty?”

“...”

Thankfully, I didn’t have to answer his nonsensical question as we arrived at the Korean restaurant. Rachel entered first while smacking her lips.

After nine months, the Chameleon Troupe gathered at their hideout in an abandoned factory in Suwon. Droon finally figured out how to use the white crystal.

“Kid, do I really break it?”

Cheok Jungyeong asked again with an artifact sword in his hand. Droon frowned and urged him.

“Yeah, do it.”

“Tsk, don’t blame me if anything goes wrong.”

Cheok Jungyeong grumbled as he wrapped his fist in a dense magic power. KWANG. His fist clashed with the artifact sword and shattered it like glass.

“Happy?”

Droon picked up a fragment of the shattered sword and placed it on a stone table.

“I’ll initiate it now.”

Woong — The white crystal began to resonate and unleashed magic power that condensed inside the cube. Then it radiated towards the sword fragment. The white magic power clung to the fragment and formed a crystal sword.

“Oooh.”

Cheok Jungyeong applauded while the rest of the Chameleon Troupe members looked shocked.

“Just like that, a tiny sword fragment became a partial artifact. According to my tests, it’s as strong as a low rank artifact. A single artifact can produce about 30 partial artifacts. Taking the crystal’s magic power into account, we’ll be able to make about 600 more.”

“We can sell each partial artifact for around 700-800 million won. Amazing.”

A simple calculation revealed a profit of at least 500 billion won. Each member would earn approximately 20 million won even after the black market and money laundering fees. The risk had been worth it.

“Yeah, but it’ll take at least 5 years to sell it all.”

“That’s fine. Oh, by the way,” Jain suddenly interjected. “Packhorse Master began their conquest of the Suwon Devil’s Nest.”

The members’ eyes flickered.

The Chameleon Troupe treated Packhorse Master like prey that finally appeared.

“Look, if you do this...”

Evandel busily played with clay at 9:00 P.M. when she should’ve been asleep. She spent too much magic power creating spirits, so I gave her some clay.

“Tada.”

Evandel made a penguin with glasses that she often saw on TV.

“Wow, what’s this?”

I looked surprised as Evandel proudly puffed her chest.

“How did you make it? Are you a genius?”

“Hihi, want me to tell you?”

“No, I won’t be able to do it even if you told me.”

My smartwatch suddenly rang as I praised the smiling Evandel. It came from Kim Suho.

[Can you come out to the forest we met last time?]

So you finally decided. I stood up with a smile.

“Evandel, I’m going out for a bit.”

“Un? Where are you going?”

“Uh... to buy some snacks before bed.”

“Snacks? I want cake!”

“Okay.”

“Cake, cake!”

“I’ll buy some, don’t worry.”

I went outside with cake as an excuse. I repeated cake so I wouldn’t forget as I headed to Kim Suho.

Cube’s night felt chilly even during summer because it was an island in the East Sea. I rubbed my shoulders every time the wind blew until I arrived.

Kim Suho stood with a serious expression in the middle of the dark forest. His usual gentleness had disappeared under the heavy atmosphere.

“Yo, Kim Suho, why’d you call me?”

Kim Suho turned around as he heard me. He stared for a long time before sighing.

“Do you remember what you said to me last time?”

“Huh? Oh yeah, what about it?”

“...I recently found a dungeon.”

I smiled since I already knew.

“It must’ve formed recently since it’s small, so I thought about challenging it alone.”

“However, it’s still a dungeon and risky to conquer by yourself.”

I leisurely crossed my arms and interrupted him. Kim Suho calmly nodded.

“Yeah, I’ve been thinking the same.”

Kim Suho suddenly threw down his jacket. “I’ll need to verify your skills if I’m going to trust my back to you,” he murmured as he stared at me.

“Huh?”

The situation turned out a bit differently than I expected.

“I know the dungeon’s exact location, so it’s okay if I determine whether you’ll be a help or a burden, right?”

“Right. Cough.”

My arms began to tremble. Honestly, I wouldn’t be able to defeat him even if Kim Suho became blind and left-handed. Not to mention, he was a swordsman while I was a sharpshooter.

“You’re right, but you haven’t considered one thing.”

“What’s that?”

I racked my brain to avoid fighting. Should I show him the Desert Eagle’s power? He should understand my attack power if I shot a tree trunk.

“It’s not fair for a sharpshooter and a warrior to fight one-on-one in an open field. Plus, the difference in my attack power varies depending on the type of gun.”

“You don’t have to beat me.”

Kim Suho cut me off.

“And the weapon doesn’t matter. I’m not trying to test your weapon’s power.”

“Really?”

“Yes, I’ll stop when I’m satisfied.”

I couldn’t say anything as Kim Suho took out his sword. Not a cadet sword, but a wooden sword for sparring. However, a sword’s quality didn’t matter for Kim Suho. My bullets wouldn’t work the moment his magic power surrounded that sword. Anti-magic also wouldn’t change a thing. Kim Suho’s magic power existed on a higher dimension and could cut even anti-magic.

A good idea popped into my head.

“Oh, but I forgot my gun.”

“What’s that on your waist?”

I looked down and saw the cadet handgun in my belt holster.

“Oh... I brought it... I forgot...”

I took the gun out without any other choice.

“Will it be okay? I won’t be able to control my strength.”

“Also, this isn’t my real weapon. I’m using this since Cube prohibits personal weapon, but...”

I racked my brain to buy time and looked around for something to trigger my luck. I checked the surrounding forest, the dark sky, and the cool wind. Kim Suho’s hair fluttered, and the jacket he threw flapped on the ground. The jacket! I needed my SP and luck for Kim Suho to recognize me.

“Are you ready?” Kim Suho spoke as I stared at the ground.

“Hold on. Someone sent me a message.”

I wasn’t ready yet as I fiddled with my smartwatch. I busily tapped on the holographic keyboard for two minutes.

[Cadet Jacket] A jacket created by Cube. — Trap Transformation: When someone steps on this jacket, a strong and unknown force will push that person off. This effect lasts for 10 minutes and will disappear after one use.

[25 SP will be consumed. Would you like to save?]

I needed less SP than expected for a one-time use that wouldn't deal any damage.

"I'm ready."

I turned off the smartwatch and took a deep breath.

"Then let's start."

"Yeah."

The man who would become the world's strongest stood in front of me. I felt immense pressure as I held my breath. Then Kim Suho charged with unbelievable speed.

However, I could react with bullet time. I clearly saw his wooden sword even though he moved much faster than me. I glanced at the jacket after barely ducking the slash. I only needed four steps.

Whish— Kim Suho's wooden sword swung past my eyes. I fired at his foot as he dodged by lightly jumping. Then he swung his sword while moving backward and grazed my shoulder. A burning pain overwhelmed me, but I managed to take two steps. However, Kim Suho's sword already rose again.

My instincts roared that I couldn't dodge it. How could I avoid a sword that came towards me five times per second?

I used aether with no other options.

Aether shot up from my feet and pushed me aside. Only a single step remained from the jacket. Kim Suho seemed surprised that I avoided his consecutive strikes. However, he chased after me without giving me a chance and aimed for my shoulder. However, before his sword could hit... He stepped on the jacket.

“...!”

Kim Suho's body disappeared from view. The trap sent him flying without a scream. He couldn't properly land because it caught him off guard as he fell and rolled about 50 meters away. My bullet struck first next to his head as he tried to stand.

“In a real fight, that wouldn't have missed.”

His qi reinforcement would've blocked it anyways. I trudged up to soulless Kim Suho, but a smile emerged on his face as I reached out.

Chapter 81

Teamwork (2)

Kim Suho walked to his room under the faint moonlight. He suddenly burst into laughter on the dark road. The previous fight flashed before his eyes. Kim Hajin had easily blown him away when he closed the distance. Even now, he couldn't understand what attacked him. Was it a physical attack or instantaneous magic power? Either way, a mysterious force had struck him, and Kim Hajin dealt a valid blow.

I thought I was the only one hiding my power.

Abnormally high strength attracted unwanted suspicion. As such, Kim Suho only revealed enough to maintain first place for his family.

So someone else thought the same as me.

Kim Suho didn't go easy against Kim Hajin. Still, Kim Hajin had managed to avoid his attacks. Even now, Kim Hajin's movements felt completely mysterious. It appeared mindless and lacking in foundation. He looked slow and full of openings. However, Kim Suho could only graze or miss as Kim Hajin escaped with incomprehensible acrobatics. It seemed like an easy victory, but he couldn't close out the fight and couldn't even gauge Kim Hajin's true strength. Kim Hajin perfectly hid his power.

"Hmm?"

Kim Suho heard a sword cutting through the wind. He could also hear a small shout. The sound came from the park near the dorms. He curiously headed over and spotted Chae Nayun swinging.

"What are you doing?"

"Hyak!"

Chae Nayun threw the sword away in surprise. It flew like a baseball bat and struck a window. Thankfully, the window didn't break, but the cadet inside turned on the lights and woke up.

"Wh, what!"

"Why are you so surprised?"

"..."

Chae Nayun glared at the uninvited guest.

"Were you practicing the sword?" Kim Suho smirked and asked.

"Just stamina training."

Chae Nayun unleashed her magic power and the sword flew back into her hands. She dusted off the dirt and pointed at Kim Suho.

"Where are you coming from?"

"Me? I met with Kim Hajin," Kim Suho honestly answered.

Chae Nayun's eyes widened. "Kim Hajin?"

"Yep."

"What for?"

Chae Nayun asked as she tucked her hair behind her ears, pretending to be unconcerned. Kim Suho had a mischievous thought.

"We talked about you."

"Wha, wha, what. Bu, bullshit."

She reacted rather strongly. Her face flushed to her ears, and she couldn't stop fidgeting. Kim Suho shook his head while laughing.

“I’m joking. We sparred.”

“Sparred? You and Kim Hajin?”

“Yeah.”

“Who won? No, you must have won. But why?”

“You don’t need to know that.”

Chae Nayun frowned. Then she turned around and focused on her sword practice. Whish. Whish. She swung her sword with too much strength. Kim Suho stepped in, unable to bear it.

“You can’t hold a sword like that.”

“What.”

“You won’t be able to properly cut your target if you grip it so tightly.”

Kim Suho pulled out his wooden sword and demonstrated. He held it lightly, yet firm enough to change his grip at any moment. Kim Suho swung and drew a clean arc in the air. The wind touched Chae Nayun’s hair and scattered. Her unenthusiastic attitude immediately changed. She carefully watched and copied Kim Suho.

“Like, like this?”

Her lesson with Kim Suho continued until midnight.

Chae Nayun video called Hazuki when she returned to her room to finalize their team. She made Hazuki vice-leader and selected an average supporter and sharpshooter. Two warriors, one support, one sharpshooter, and one magician. The higher ranked magician from Seoul Magic Academy would help balance the team. Furthermore, Chae Nayun could act as both a warrior and sharpshooter. Her team could undoubtedly be considered one of the best.

— Ah... then is Hajin not joining us?

However, Hazuki murmured regretfully on the video call.

“Uh, well, I can bring him if I wanted, but then I’d feel bad for Rachel’s team. Everyone on that team is only average besides Rachel.”

Chae Nayun loudly replied. Team Rachel wasn’t particularly outstanding. Their team consisted of three warriors and no supporter. The magician named Tomer also seemed below average.

— But...

“Let’s not think about them. I’m going to submit the final team list, okay?”

— Y-Yes.

Chae Nayun hung up and jumped in bed, but she didn’t feel sleepy. Frankly, she felt frustrated and annoyed. She would’ve asked Kim Hajin earlier if she knew this would happen. They would’ve obtained a good score in theory too. Rachel ended up taking him because she kept hesitating.

“Am I going to lose again?”

She still remembered her defeat during the midterm. Her loss then also contributed to her changing weapons. Chae Nayun recalled the bitter memory under her blanket and suddenly shot up. She simply couldn’t sleep. She picked up the helmet next to her bed and played some games to relieve her stress.

[Gladiator of the Century]

This famous virtual reality game frequently aired on public broadcasts because it helped with image training. Heroes and cadets enjoyed it all over the world. The media always featured the rank 1 player of each season.

[Nayunjajangman] [98 wins 17 losses]

Chae Nayun felt extremely proud of her win rate.

“Hm.”

Unranked matches seemed better than ranked matches for relieving stress. Chae Nayun found a suitable opponent nicknamed Extra7. He belonged in the platinum league with 43 wins and 43 losses. It would be an easy victory.

[You have challenged Extra7 to a duel.] [Extra7 has accepted your challenge.]

“This guy is quite bold.”

Chae Nayun grinned as she focused. This game didn’t have any stats or items. Only battle sense and superior control determined victory or defeat.

[Start!]

The duel began. Chae Nayun wanted to take things slow and test the waters. However, the opponent acted unexpectedly. Before she could adapt, her character floated up and consecutive strikes tore her apart. Her vision turned red before she realized what happened.

“Eh, what? A-Ah!”

She seriously tried, but her HP fell too low. She lost after just three minutes. [Defeat] Chae Nayun blankly stared and frowned.

“Argh, this sly piece of crap!”

[Victory]

I won again in a game called [Gladiator of the Century]. It felt quite realistic in terms of graphics and movements, so I've been playing it recently to image train.

“So it works on this too.”

The number 37 flashed on the console helmet. The Random Consolidation System also applied to it.

[Random Consolidation System] [Low rank] [Spirit attribute] — Random Consolidation: Will enhance the scanned equipment by 1-44%. The consolidation will last for 24 hours, after which the boost percentage will be randomized once again.

My enhanced game console became something else. Not only did the console's performance increase, but the speed of my thoughts and feelings also increased by 37%.

“I won seven times in a row.”

Thanks to my new gift, I defeated a veteran seven times in a row. Of course, the unranked matches didn't affect my ranked stats.

[Nayunjajangman requests a rematch.] [Nayunjajangman requests a rematch.] [Nayunjajangman requests a rematch.]

“This kid sure is tenacious. Well too bad for you, I have to sleep now.”

I turned the game off and put away the helmet. I caught Evandel in the corner of my eyes.

“Yummy. So yummy.”

She fell asleep when I got home, but soon woke up when I started to play the game. Now she fully woke up and munched on the cake. She had eaten half of it. Was she allowed to eat that much? I felt a bit concerned, so I confiscated the cake.

“Ah, aan! W-What ish it!”

“Let’s save the rest for later.”

“Why, why!”

“It’s not good for your health.”

Evandel hopped and tried to grab the cake. However, I coldheartedly put it away on the fridge’s topmost shelf. Evandel placed her hands on her waist and frowned. It looked like she was disgruntled at the entire world.

“I want more! I want more!”

She had even learned how to complain. I placed my index finger over my lips.

“Shh. You should only eat a little after meals. Also, you can’t be loud at night.”

“...”

Her tiny hands trembled even though she quieted down. I held her up.

“You can eat the rest of it tomorrow, okay? I’ll buy even more delicious food.”

“Really?”

“Of course. Have I ever not kept a promise?”

She seemed appeased as I stroked her head. Not long afterward, Evandel fell asleep and I tucked her into bed. I noticed that Kim Suho sent me a message two hours ago.

[Second week of August on Friday. Let’s meet then.]

“Whew.”

It seemed like he recognized my skills, all thanks to the modified cadet jacket. Kim Suho didn't seem to suspect anything either. Of course, he had no reason to suspect his own jacket. Moreover, an unknown force had pushed him. Kim Suho would never figure out what happened.

Today's Wednesday class would be the first since teams formed. We would undergo a combat training called dungeon investigation. Normally, heroes would dispatch an advance party first after they discovered a dungeon. The advance party would scout and gather information about the dungeon's interior. In this combat training, cadets would act as the advance party.

"Ah, it's so cold."

"Auuu, aren't you cold, Hajin?"

My team had entered a dungeon covered in ice. The five of us shivered as we walked forward. The road suddenly forked into five branches after about 20 minutes.

"It's here."

Tomer suddenly pointed at the rightmost path. I stared in the direction she pointed. As expected, it contained a trap.

"No, that's the wrong direction."

"What? No, it isn't."

Tomer wanted to lead us into a trap. I didn't think a djinn waited there, but it must be life-threatening.

"In a dungeon investigation, it's common sense to listen to your sharpshooter."

"..."

Tomer stared at Rachel. Too bad for her, Rachel was also on my side.

“Let’s go as Hajin says.”

“Don’t regret it later.”

Tomer acted like a sore loser.

A yeti slept on the path I chose. We advanced with our guard up. Tomer continually tried to lead us, especially Rachel, into a trap. However, I always prevented her.

“I think it’s this way, for real this time. If you see the traces of ice around there...”

“No, it’s not.”

“No, just trust me this once. Rachel, come with me. Wouldn’t it be more efficient to split into two groups?”

“No, we can’t.”

I had to commend her constant efforts, but that didn’t mean I could allow her to do as she pleased. I grabbed Rachel by the wrist and led her. Tomer grew more irritated as time passed.

“Um...”

My thousand-mile eyes pinpointed the shortest path through this maze-like ice dungeon. We didn’t experience any obstructions or difficulties. Finally, we caught a glimpse of the instructor at the exit. Rachel spoke uncomfortably.

“Um... Hajin.”

“Yes?”

“This...”

Rachel glanced at her wrist. I held onto her, thinking Tomer might take her away.

“Oh right, sorry.”

“No, you don’t need to be...”

“Team Rachel!”

The instructor shouted as he spotted us. We ran up to him.

“Your findings?”

“Yes. A yeti, snow beast, white calamity, white drake...”

Rachel recited the results of our investigation. The instructor listened as he compared it to a list. Then he faintly smiled.

“Based on the monsters’ ranks, the dungeon boss is likely to be at least intermediate rank, grade 3.”

Rachel’s face lit up along with the other team members. They happily celebrated our perfect score.

“Dammit.”

Meanwhile, Tomer kicked a rock out of frustration.

Chapter 82

Teamwork (3)

“Sigh.”

Tomer returned to the magicians’ dorm.

[Tomer, why is the mission being delayed? Are there other variables?]

Her boss sent her a grumpy message. Tomer had to injure or weaken Rachel and needed to disrupt her daily activities somehow. She thought she could quickly handle this with the help of spies, but a heckler kept obstructing her.

“Do I have to take care of him first?”

Nowadays, she felt bitter just seeing Kim Hajin. Every time she tried something, he appeared out of nowhere and foiled her plans. Kim Hajin refused to leave Rachel’s side.

“Tsk, doesn’t he know his place?”

Tomer couldn’t understand how a rank 334 could act so straightforwardly. She already investigated his background. He didn’t have any parents, much less a proper backing. Did he believe he could win a beauty’s heart with courage?

“Wait.”

A flash of insight struck Tomer. Kim Hajin felt strongly towards Rachel. However, Rachel seemed uncomfortable with his advances.

He kept making moves one-sidedly. Tomer could easily spread malicious rumors. You could bad-mouth someone behind their back, or you could exaggerate already existing rumors. However, she didn’t need such complicated schemes. She just had to exaggerate what she witnessed. First, she would have to get close to Kim Hajin and Rachel... no, the entire team.

Tomer messaged her boss.

[Is the mission just to separate this girl?]

[That's right. The agent we dispatched will take care of the rest.]

Good, it's time for a change of plans. Tomer laughed maniacally. Suddenly, her smartwatch vibrated. The intense vibration signaled that it came from Violet Banquet. Tomer quickly turned on her smartwatch.

[Truth Agency] [We have accepted Jamie Jamer's request.]

"They're replying now?"

She had forgotten about the Truth Agency because she made the request 2-3 weeks ago. Did they just have too many clients? She would be satisfied as long as she could find that bastard.

"Next week, each team will select a small-scale dungeon and present how to best conquer it."

The professor handed out their team assignments just before Friday's theory class ended. Cadets immediately groaned. However, Jin Hoseung and Yi Bokgyu didn't worry at all. They turned around and happily looked at me.

"We believe in you, Hajin."

The other cadets enviously looked over.

"Have a good weekend."

The professor left as our team stood up.

“There’s a team leader meeting next Wednesday. Don’t forget to come to the auditorium if you’re a team leader.”

The class president, Yi Yeonghan, loudly shouted. I looked at Rachel as she put away her writing utensils. I spoke as we made eye contact.

“Let’s go to the café today and divide the work.”

“Alright.”

Tomer answered instead of Rachel. I turned to the side.

“Let’s go to the café.”

Tomer wore a bright expression.

“What’s up with you?”

“What do you mean? Everyone, Rachel, let’s go. We don’t have time.”

Tomer stepped in and urged the other members. I stared at her in a daze. What was she scheming this time? Did she set a nuclear bomb at the café?

We arrived at the café 10 minutes later. I peered through the roof and floor, but I couldn’t find any traps. Although I remained suspicious, I began to divide our work among the members.

“Hoseung and Bokgyu can look up the data on the dungeon. Jamer^[1] and Rachel can calculate the mana density.”

We discussed our plans for 30 minutes. They would send their results to me, and I would assemble everything into a PowerPoint.

“That sounds good.”

“I agree.”

The team members all looked happy. Rachel suddenly grabbed my sleeve as I prepared to leave.

“Um, Hajin.”

“Yes?”

“Didn’t the English Royal Court contact you?”

“Eh? Um, what contact?”

Rachel slightly frowned.

“Um, the English Royal Court guild...”

“...?”

I tilted my head. Although I didn’t remember anything, I checked my email just in case. I had 1097 unread emails. I searched for royal court and found one email.

“Ah, they emailed me. Sorry, I don’t often check my email.”

“They emailed you?”

I didn’t know why, but Rachel seemed a bit angry as she pouted.

“Try reading it when you go home.”

“I’ll just read it now.”

I clicked on the email. They wrote it in Korean, so I could read it. They offered a 100 million won salary with additional benefits. It wasn’t a particularly good offer for a pre-contract.

“Can I take a look?”

“Sure.”

Rachel peeked at the contents. Her eyes busily moved, then she frowned.

“What kind of a contract is... never mind, don’t read this.”

Rachel stood up, fuming. Then she rushed out of the café with the angriest face I’d ever seen since I entered Cube.

“What, why is she so mad?”

The rest of the members watched her leave in a daze.

* * *

I reserved Sunday nights for recovering my sanity. I focused on playing a game called [Victory].

I won once again.

[How did you do that combo just now?]

The loser, Nayunjajangman, messaged me. We became friends since the last time we played. We often logged on around the same time and played against each other. Thankfully, the Random Consolidation System always gave me numbers like 37, 40, and 39, so I haven’t lost a single game yet.

[You must remain calm.]

[How are you so good? Are you an active hero?]

[No, not at all.]

The enhancement increased my understanding of the most efficient combo to use and even boosted my sense of time and movement within the game. Although my skills varied depending on what I rolled, I always played like an expert.

[By the way, why are your ranked stats 43 wins and 43 losses? Did you lose on purpose?]

[Yes, because I didn't want to become attached to mere numbers.]

I lied without even batting an eye.

[Ah... I see. You're amazing. I can't sleep properly if I lose a ranked match. Do you log on around this time every day?]

[Yes.]

[Can I ask you to teach me around this time?]

I couldn't help but smile. He acted surprisingly polite.

[Gladly. However, I'll be logging off now. I have to go work out.]

[Oh! I was about to go work out too. Jinx!]

I didn't reply and removed my helmet. I carefully opened the door so I wouldn't wake Evandel. Then I headed to the fitness center. I arrived after about five minutes of walking and ran into Chae Nayun as I came out of the changing room.

"What, you're here to work out too?"

"Huh? Yeah."

"Alright, work hard."

Chae Nayun walked past me into the girl's changing room. I headed to the treadmill without much thought. Suddenly, it crossed my mind. Nayunjajangman. Nayun. Chae Nayun.

"Mm... no way, right?"

I found it unlikely since Chae Nayun didn't like jajangmyeon^[2]. She wouldn't use that as her ID. Not to mention, Nayunjajangman spoke like a man.

I set the treadmill speed to 20 km. I couldn't have imagined it in the past, but I didn't find it so difficult now. I ran on the treadmill for the next 30 minutes and was soaked in sweat by the time I finished.

“Huu...”

I took out a sports drink from the fridge. Chae Nayun came out of the gravity room and slowly approached me.

“Hey.”

I silently stared at her. She fidgeted around, trying to buy time.

“What? Say something.”

“You see, my team got the hongcheon mantis dungeon.”

Chae Nayun worried about her team challenge since insect dungeons were some of the trickiest.

“Do, do you know anything about it?”

“How did you choose the most difficult one?”

“I know, right? The annoying magician in my team kept telling me to choose it.”

The magician in her team was Oh Junsik. I had recorded him in my settings book. Although he was skilled, he acted like an ass because his aunt was a 7 star magician. He probably wouldn't bend to Chae Nayun either.

“He thought he could get bonus points with a difficult assignment, but he'll probably ruin the presentation. He'll stutter and make you facepalm yourself.”

“I know, I wanted to overlook it, but now... Sigh, I've never met someone more headstrong than me.”

At least she knew she also acted stubbornly.

“If possible, let someone else present. Unexpectedly, Hazuki is a good choice.”

“I want to, but I doubt that bastard will agree. Cough.”

The atmosphere suddenly turned awkward. We both distanced ourselves as we remembered our relationship. After all, we weren’t friends who could chat so amicably.

“H-Have fun exercising. I’m going back to the gravity room.”

“Uh, yeah, I’ll go lift some weights.”

At dusk on Tuesday, a sharp sword resounded throughout the area.

“Hey, didn’t I improve?”

Chae Nayun, who wielded a sword, asked with a bright face. Kim Suho nodded with a laugh.

“Yeah, you stopped closing your eyes.”

Only a week had passed since Kim Suho began teaching Chae Nayun. She grew at an incredible pace and stopped fearing close range attacks to a certain extent.

“I think playing that game helped me.”

“Game?” Kim Suho tilted his head.

“Yeah, I met someone even better than you. A super expert who only does close range combat.”

“Ah, Gladiator of the Century? But you don’t move your body in that game.”

Gladiator of the Century used brainwaves and iris movements as controls. Of course, you could play with a keyboard and mouse, but that would significantly lower your reaction time.

“Yeah, but an ordinary person could never pull off what he does. He’s my mentor!”

“Oh, he must be an expert then.”

The prideful Chae Nayun had acknowledged her mentor as superior.

“Yeah, he has a great personality too. He matches his win-loss ratio because he doesn’t want to be attached to mere numbers. Isn’t that cool?”

Most people played ranked matches to win, which resulted in boring matches. Each side would test out the waters with small maneuvers, and the outcome would be determined by which side dealt more blows. Like a boxing match, except one side would never be KO’ed. However, Extra7 played differently. He directly charged at you almost recklessly. Each of his movements could potentially be lethal, which helped Chae Nayun overcome her fear of close range combat.

“He must be an active hero if he’s that good, right?”

“No, I asked him, and he said... Eh?”

Kim Hajin suddenly appeared in the distance wearing flip-flops.

“Oh look, Kim Hajin’s here.”

Kim Suho had already told her that Kim Hajin would meet with him and that he could only teach her until Kim Hajin arrived.

“Hm? Oh, you’re right. Then I’ll be going now.”

Kim Suho stood up.

“Yeah, take care.”

“Don’t overwork yourself either, okay?”

Chae Nayun watched them together. It felt like they had gotten close recently, but how?

Now that I think about it, Kim Suho jokingly said they talked about me. Was it because of me?

Kim Suho and Kim Hajin walked away as they chatted. Chae Nayun strained her ears.

— How’s your condition?

Kim Hajin asked.

— Pretty good.

Kim Suho replied.

— Don’t overwork yourself. Friday’s right around the corner.

— Of course.

— Oh, and how’s Chae Nayun?

Chae Nayun’s heart skipped a beat. She couldn’t hear the most important part as they walked farther away.

“...The heck.”

She stared at them with a complex emotion.

1. Jamer is the fake name Tomer is using as a student, but this is the first time the main character is referring to her aloud to others so he's referring to her as Jamer. It's confusing because he always refers to her as Tomer in his head and the author refers to her as Tomer too, but in reality, the other characters only know her by her fake name as Jamer. 🤔

2. Jajangmyeon is Korean black bean noodles. 🤔

Chapter 83

Scout (1)

We came to a rice soup restaurant called Grandma's Flavor. Cube had all sorts of restaurants, but this was the only one open 24/7.

“...”

I became lost in thought as Kim Suho ate a bowl of rice soup. Kim Suho was at least as strong as an intermediate rank hero, but this world still had many undiscovered secrets.

Among these, some would fall into the antagonists' hands. I wouldn't dare seek out items like Lucifer's Feather or the Snaketooth of Beginning, but I might be able to prevent them from falling into the antagonists' hands with Kim Suho's help.

Kim Suho suddenly became much more attractive. He looked like a true main character. The rice soup must've been delicious since he didn't notice the grain of rice on his mouth.

“You have a grain of rice here.”

I wiped it off with a napkin.

“Ah, thanks.”

Kim Suho smiled.

“By the way, are you presenting for your group?”

“Yep.”

“Aren't you nervous? I would be.”

“I’ll eat a serenity pill before, so don’t worry.”

I learned long ago that it was foolish to not use medicine. Although I quit college to write, I attended until sophomore year. I had ample experience with 4-5 group projects. I also planned on investing some SP into the serenity pill to meet my members’ expectations. It should be a breeze if I also add a persuasion effect to the horn flute.

“Anyways, the dungeon is near Suwon, right?” I asked Kim Suho.

“Yeah, we should be careful.”

Suwon was the most dangerous of the three capitals that also included Seoul and Incheon. During Outcall, more than half the region terraformed into a horrifying mountain zone. The public could not enter west of Suwon. Kamak Mountain was at the border of this restricted zone.

The restaurant door opened and someone entirely clad in black walked in. She wore a big hat, a black mask, and a long, full-body coat. This person could easily be mistaken for a criminal.

“Um, I just called.”

The woman in black quietly notified the staff. Then she glanced at us, the only other customers. Suddenly, her shoulders trembled.

“Ah, wait just one moment.”

The staff went into the kitchen. I smirked and turned towards her. She froze like a statue.

“Oh, who’s this?”

Along with hamburgers, rice soup was also one of her favorites.

“Yo, Yoo Yeonha.”

“...”

She pretended not to hear me. She must've wanted that rice soup since she didn't run away. I stood up and approached her.

"Why don't you join us since you're here?"

"Y-Yes? Who, who might you be? I don't know anyone like you."

She desperately tried to change her voice, but it sounded too obvious.

"Eh? Yoo Yeonha? You're Yoo Yeonha?" Kim Suho exclaimed in surprise. Yoo Yeonha began to tear up under her big hat.

"N-No, no, I'm not. I don't know anyone by that name."

"Here you go."

The staff came out and handed her a packaged rice soup. Yoo Yeonha quickly snatched it before running away.

"A-Ah, wait! You need to pay!"

The staff shouted, but Yoo Yeonha had disappeared. Then the staff slowly turned towards me. I took out my card without a choice.

"I'll pay for it."

"Yes, thank you."

For the record, Yoo Yeonha couldn't meet my eyes for the next three days.

* * *

The day of their presentations finally arrived on Friday. Chae Nayun felt terrible. Her team had presented first and it ended disastrously. Like Kim Hajin predicted, Oh Junsik stuttered throughout the entire presentation and ruined it.

"Ah, I felt too nervous. Sorry, I'll do better next time."

Chae Nayun wanted to smack his head, but she held back as the class continued.

“Next team.”

Team Rachel would present next. Kim Hajin sat in front of Chae Nayun and stood up. He wore a pair of round glasses and walked to the podium.

“Hello, I am from Team 3. We will present about the Walsin Dungeon. This dungeon is located at the foot of Gangwondo Snow Mountain, but because Desolate Moon hasn’t released any information...”

Kim Hajin’s presentation proceeded smoothly. His voice sounded soft, and he didn’t seem nervous. He explained their data and calculated the dungeon’s internal structure. He even prepared a cross-sectional map. Chae Nayun stared in a daze as she rested her chin on her hands. His voice sounded slightly different, and his occasional smiles carried a sense of ease. He felt like a real professional. Chae Nayun thought a smart guy was surprisingly cool.

“Wait, I have a question.”

“Yes.”

“How can you estimate the counterflow of magic power with such a small amount of data?” The professor interrupted with a question.

“Ah, about that, if you look at the calculations here...”

Kim Hajin effortlessly explained. Chae Nayun fell into a trance at his intellectual side. The professor backed down with a smile as the presentation concluded.

“That’s it for our team’s presentation.”

Kim Hajin pushed his glasses up and returned to his seat next to Rachel. Chae Nayun stared at them with regret and envy as they high-fived.

I returned to the dorms with Rachel after class. The other members wanted to celebrate, but Rachel and I didn't participate. I had another appointment, and Rachel always refrained.

We walked together and talked about today's team challenges. Chae Nayun's team bombed the presentation and Shin Jonghak presented so intimidatingly.

Rachel handed me a piece of paper when we reached the crossroad between Dorm 1 and Dorm 2.

"What's this?"

"Are you perhaps interested in the English Royal Court guild?"

"Huh?"

Rachel continued speaking before I could properly answer.

"Honestly, I asked the Royal Court guild to contact you, but it seems they made assumptions based on your rank."

I looked at the paper. Indeed, this contract had better conditions than the one in the email. I would've never imagined such treatment back on Earth.

"Please consider it."

Rachel lightly bowed before walking away. I watched her leave quietly.

I headed to the bus stop near Suwon Station after playing with Evandel for about 30 minutes. Kim Suho had already arrived.

“Hey Hajin, your presentation was amazing.”

Kim Suho wore light clothing. He didn't have much money, so I volunteered to take care of food and equipment.

“Everyone praised you.”

“Really? Well more importantly, which way should we go?”

“Follow me.”

Kim Suho took the lead. We hiked deep into Kamak Mountain and carefully proceeded to avoid the powerful monsters.

“It's here.”

Finally, we arrived at a dead end. Kim Suho pointed at the wall in front of us covered in moss and vines.

“So this is why it hasn't been discovered.”

It would be difficult even if you knew. All sorts of vegetation covered the narrow entrance. It only looked like a tiny gap at first glance.

“It won't be easy to escape once we enter. Are you ready?”

“Of course.”

I took out the Desert Eagle.

“This is pretty strong.”

I prepared a light bullet just in case. The Swordsman of Destruction should be a high-intermediate rank monster. The difference between intermediate rank and high-intermediate rank was immense. Even this light bullet, which cost 70 SP, would only distract it for a moment. However, a moment was enough. Kim Suho would take care of the rest.

“Then let’s go.”

Kim Suho and I jumped into the narrow gap. It widened as we walked and eventually became a tunnel. However, inside was completely dark. Instead of a flashlight, I guided Kim Suho by the hand since any light could provoke spirit monsters.

“Tell me about it. Hold on.”

I suddenly stopped and widened my eyes. Another pathway appeared from the other side. If we started from the right that meant the left also had another entrance. Was it like this in the original story? No, I didn’t think so. Two people appeared from the other pathway.

— Where is this?

— A hidden stage I’m guessing?

I didn’t recognize them, but they didn’t look kind considering their face tattoos.

“Wait, be quiet for a second.”

I checked my smartwatch. As expected, an alert had popped up.

[Criticism – The Kamak Mountain Dungeon that Kim Suho conquered is too small considering its reward.] [Solution – The Kamak Mountain Dungeon has become a hidden stage in Suwon Devil’s Nest.]

Suwon Devil’s Nest became connected to the Kamak Mountain Dungeon. Coincidentally, today was August 14th when Packhorse Master would conquer Suwon Devil’s Nest. Those two men should be djinns from Packhorse Master.

“Why?” Kim Suho whispered. I clenched my teeth. Packhorse Master’s djinns were fairly powerful. They disguised as heroes and were at least intermediate rank in power. Even Kim Suho would struggle against them.

“There are other people in here.”

“Damn.”

For now, I closely watched their movements and eavesdropped.

— Let’s go back first. It’ll be better to conquer it together rather than arguing with the rest about what we received.

— Yeah, you’re right.

Thankfully, they left after confirming the hidden stage's location.

“Let’s finish this fast.”

I concentrated magic power into my thousand-mile eyes. My vision expanded as the dungeon’s internal structure entered into view. We would reach the Swordsman of Destruction after proceeding straight and taking two right turns. The Swordsman of Destruction slept inside the boss room.

[Suwon Devil’s Nest]

The medium-scale dungeon was located in the Suwon Mountain Range’s valley. The Chameleon Troupe’s blue seat, an African American man named Khalifa, looked around at the Packhorse Master members. He had infiltrated their guild. Seven of the nine members in the dungeon raid sat on the ground to catch their breath.

“James, Johong, did you find anything?”

The guild master contacted the two scouts with a communication device.

— Yes, we discovered a hidden path. It seems to be a hidden stage.

“Oh, is that so?”

Khalifa quietly listened in.

— We're on our way back so we can conquer it together.

"No, we'll come to you guys. Continue your investigation."

— Yes, understood.

"You hear that? It's time to get up!"

Two men were currently missing. Now was the best time as Khalifa tapped his ears and sent a signal. Then he unleashed his magic power, which formed a door. It was an ability called phase shift that connected one space to another, so long as the locations were close enough. This was part of Khalifa's gift.

"Cullen, what are you doing? Who told you to open a portal?"

Most people mistook it for an artificial portal, but Khalifa didn't bother to correct them.

"Cullen, close the portal."

"..."

Khalifa silently put on a pair of sunglasses.

"CULLEN!"

He even put on earplugs because of the guild master's annoying voice.

"You son of a bitch..."

The guild master walked up to the portal as a black blade shot out.

The blade cleanly severed him in two as the guild master scattered into black dust. Silence descended as the other djinns stared at the portal. They couldn't move or speak. Soon, a woman walked out. She had an average height, but a beautiful appearance. A deep abyss sucked their consciousness when they saw her. One, two, three, four... six djinns collapsed like lifeless dolls.

“We’ll have to keep one for the sake of the stock prices.”

Boss stared at Khalifa and coldly murmured. Khalifa grinned.

“You’re right. Now then, should we head to the hidden stage?”

“You wait here.”

“What?”

Khalifa tilted his head as Boss briefly replied, “The two people inside the hidden stage are candidates.”

“Ah.”

Candidates referred to individuals the Chameleon Troupe had selected with the qualifications of joining them.

“Is it a... test?”

Boss liquified her body without answering. Her body turned into a black liquid that quickly scurried away on the ground.

Scout (2)

Monster filled the path to the boss room. I took care of them with my gun instead of Kim Suho so I could pretend that I helped.

Currently, six ghouls around low-intermediate rank, grade 9 stood in front of me.

I aimed at their swollen right eyes in front of their tiny brains and pulled the trigger. Six bullets shot out and pierced their vital points. A blue light flashed as the ghouls collapsed.

“Oh, as expected...”

Kim Suho exclaimed in awe. I simply operated on the principle of acting strong against the weak. Although I could slaughter an army of weaklings, I wouldn’t stand a chance against a single expert. No, I would run away from someone slightly above me.

“Let’s hurry. We don’t have time.”

We ran through the cave. Monsters appeared around every corner, but I easily took care of them. We arrived at a giant stone wall after about 10 minutes. It seemed like a dead end, but the wall had strange symbols written on it. This ancient language only existed in dungeons. Thanks to modern technology, a smartwatch could translate it. That’s what Kim Suho did in the original story. I took out my smartwatch to scan the symbols.

— This and that always accompany each other. — Observed closely, this and that feel simultaneous. — But from afar, this comes before that. — What is this?

Kim Suho glanced at the riddle on my smartwatch.

“Ah, it must be a riddle. I heard some dungeons had these.”

In the original story, Kim Suho texted Yoo Yeonha for help. She contacted an information guild and received the answer after five minutes. However, we didn't have time. I half-heartedly created this riddle. The answer was simply lightning. This was lightning, and that was thunder. Although lightning and thunder appeared simultaneous, light traveled faster than sound.

“Lightning.”

I muttered, and the stone wall reacted. The symbols glowed blue before disappearing into particles. The wall rumbled and sunk underground.

“What? The answer is lightning?”

“Yeah.”

“How did you figure that out so fast? Wow, you really are a genius.”

Kim Suho looked at me like I was a sage.

“I'll tell you how I found out later. For now, let's clear the dungeon before anyone else arrives.”

I pushed Kim Suho into the boss room.

“...”

Boss stared at Kim Hajin in awe. His decisiveness, drive, and intelligence surprised her. They proceeded through the hidden stage in just 10 minutes. No one else could easily pull that off.

“Truly extraordinary...”

She blurted out subconsciously. She had heard the same words from her master, the Chameleon Troupe's previous boss. She always wondered, What did Master see in me to say that?

She sighed. Today had made it certain. She wanted Kim Hajin, but he had to meet a few conditions before that could happen. She had to know whether he could kill a human being without hesitation.

— Argh, it's a maze. Why is a hidden stage so complicated?

— Quiet.

Boss looked behind her. Two djinns from Packhorse Master wandered around. Kim Hajin wouldn't know they were djinns, so she decided to make use of them.

The Swordsman of Destruction sat on a throne in the middle of the cave. He wore black armor and stared at us as though he had just awakened from his slumber.

However, his eyes suddenly burned blue as he smiled at Kim Suho. He seemed to recognize Kim Suho's strength.

— What an interesting kid.

A chilling voice resounded. Kim Suho froze from nervousness. A monster capable of speaking the human language wasn't ordinary. High-intermediate rank monsters and above usually had intelligence on par with humans. However, only some humanoid monsters could speak.

“...”

Kim Suho silently unsheathed his sword. I somewhat understood what he was thinking. After all, I had written it.

[He emitted extraordinary hostility and spirit. I felt he was at least high-intermediate rank and worried if I could defeat him. Soon, I felt fear. However, when the Swordsman of Destruction pulled out his sword, an unknown sense of confidence surged within me. My gift was Sword Saint. I was someone who would stand at the peak of swordsmanship. I would never lose against another swordsman.]

“There should be no reason for you to lose.”

I emphasized his last thought. Kim Suho stared at me in surprise.

“His real body is his sword.”

“Sword?”

Kim Suho stared at the crimson sword qi that swirled around the black blade.

“The voice just now came from that sword. The body is just a corpse.”

In the original story, Kim Suho figured this out while exchanging blows with the Swordsman of Destruction. However, I couldn’t wait since intruders could arrive at any moment. The Swordsman of Destruction slowly raised his sword.

— Come. It’s been a while since I last obtained a body.

Kim Suho stepped up as I took out my gun.

“You don’t need to attack his body. Just hit the sword. I’ll support you from behind.”

“I trust you.”

Kim Suho unsheathed the high rank sword that he purchased with loans. A Sword Saint’s magic power increased depending on the sword.

The Swordsman of Destruction rushed in and swung down as Kim Suho raised his sword to block.

KWANG!

The two swords clashed as the Swordsman of Destruction pulled back and repeatedly struck as if he wanted to break Kim Suho's sword. However, not even a single scratch appeared. Normally, the Swordsman of Destruction's strength should've destroyed it multiple times. However, a Sword Saint's magic power wouldn't lose to another sword.

I slowly raised my gun. I couldn't use a shotgun since that might injure Kim Suho. A sniper rifle at close range would also lack accuracy. I simply went with the handgun.

Clang. Kwang. Koong. Kwaaaang!

I aimed at the swordsman's shoulder and fired when he clashed with Kim Suho.

Shuuuuu—

The light bullet left a white trail and dug into his rotten body. He stopped moving for a fraction of a second as Kim Suho immediately counterattacked. Kim Suho unleashed his magic power like a tornado. His sword shone golden as he unleashed a powerful technique that shot up like lightning and delivered consecutive strikes that could sever rivers.

The Swordsman of Destruction held up his sword to block. However, a crack appeared on its blade each time their swords clashed. His movements also slowed from the light bullet.

Kim Suho followed my advice and only attacked the sword. The swordsman didn't last long as its body began to crumble.

"Huaaap!"

Kim Suho dealt the final blow. The sword finally shattered and the swordsman's body turned into dust. All that was left was a single branch.

"Eh?"

Kim Suho stared at the branch.

“W-What’s this?”

He looked around the room just in case he missed something. However, he couldn’t find any other weapon or armor. The Swordsman of Destruction’s sword had turned into dust, and its armor also disappeared. The only reward was a single branch.

“This is it?”

Kim Suho slumped to the ground in disappointment. I smirked and walked up to him.

“Hey, this branch is...”

I was about to tell him about Misteltein.

“Who are you?”

A deep voice rang out as I quickly turned around.

“Shoot.”

I bit my lips. The two djinns from before had arrived. One held a greatsword, and the other held a giant double-edged axe. Didn’t they say they were going to go back? How did they come back so quickly?

“Oy, we just asked who you guys are. How did you get in here?”

The axe-wielding baldy scowled, but the sword-wielding Caucasian man stopped him. He spoke more politely.

“Our Packhorse Master guild has an official notice for this dungeon. Who are you guys?”

I kicked the branch to the corner of the cave.

“Ah, is that so? We didn’t know. We came from another pathway in here.”

“Another pathway?”

“Yes.”

“...”

The Caucasian man’s expression stiffened.

“What did you do here?”

“We hunted a monster.”

“And the reward?”

“As you can see... nothing.”

I raised my hands and smiled. Then the baldy next to him whispered. He pointed at Kim Suho on the ground.

“Wait, isn’t that... Kim Suho? You know, the rank 1 cadet at Cube?”

“Hm.”

The Caucasian man messaged his comrades.

“Yes, this is James. Yes, something came up. There are two Cube cadets here. One of them is...”

A clear command rang out before he could finish his sentence.

— Kill them.

“Huaa...”

Rachel finished her 4 hour training session at the fitness center. Her day finally came to an end as she sighed and murmured, "I'm sleepy."

Let's go back, take a shower, and sleep. I should be able to sleep in tomorrow since it's Saturday. Right, I should sleep until 3 P.M. That sounds good.

Suddenly, she overheard two cadets gossiping as she was about to enter the changing room.

— Did you know Kim Hajin likes Rachel?

Rachel's shoulders shook.

— What, really? No way.

— Can't you see how he's been following her around lately? People are saying he's going to confess soon.

— What? Confess? I don't believe it. Someone like him?

Rachel let go of the doorknob and slowly backed away. She felt a bit dizzy. Confess? So suddenly? How did they know this? Then she bumped into someone.

"Ah!"

Rachel quickly turned around as Chae Nayun frowned at her.

"What are you doing?"

"Nothing."

"No, not nothing. You're stepping on my foot."

Only then did Rachel notice.

"Ah, sorry."

“Tsk.”

Chae Nayun clicked her tongue and grabbed the doorknob.

“Ah!”

Rachel flinched. She didn't want more people to overhear their gossip, but Chae Nayun walked in before Rachel could stop her.

“Hello? Rachel?” Yoo Yeonha approached her.

“Yes?”

“Aren't you going in?”

Rachel scratched her cheek. “No, please go ahead.”

“Hmm.”

Yoo Yeonha gave Rachel a weird look before walking into the changing room. Rachel strained her ears once again as the door closed.

— Oh hey! Nayun, Yeonha, have you heard?

— What.

— I hear Kim Hajin is going to...

“T-Those girls!”

She couldn't allow these rumors to spread. Rachel quickly barged in and interrupted them.

“W-What? What about Kim Hajin?”

Chae Nayun didn't even glance at Rachel as she urged the two cadets to speak.

“I-It’s nothing!”

They quickly ran away as Rachel sighed in relief.

“Whew.”

Yoo Yeonha watched Rachel with interest and smiled as she recalled something.

“Oh right, Rachel.”

“Yes?”

“You’re in that person’s team, right?”

Rachel tilted her head.

“That person?”

“She’s talking about Kim Hajin. For some reason, she can’t call Kim Hajin by his name.”

“Yes I can.”

Yoo Yeonha dryly coughed. “Anyways, how is he?”

“Huh? What do you mean by...”

Yoo Yeonha appeared somewhat angry. “Aren’t you looking down on me too much? I know the English Royal Court guild made him an offer. Everyone knows.”

Rachel’s expression stiffened. “That... I don’t know anything about...”

“That can’t be. The English Royal Court guild is only given two chances per year to contact cadets. What fool would spend one on a rank 334 cadet?”

Yoo Yeonha cut Rachel off and continued to speak.

“Unless you witnessed what that rank 334 cadet is hiding.”

Yoo Yeonha coldly glared at Rachel. However, she soon put on a bright smile.

“I’m kidding, but I don’t think you should use the Royal Court guild so easily. It’s a special privilege between two countries, so it might create unnecessary conflict.”

Yoo Yeonha advised her, but it felt more like a warning.

“...”

Rachel sharply glared at Yoo Yeonha, who didn’t back down from her gaze.

“What, what are the both of you talking about?”

Chae Nayun didn’t understand even though she heard everything.

Chapter 85

Scout (3)

— Kill them.

I overheard their conversation and a chill ran down my back.

“Are you sure?”

The Caucasian man asked again. However, the answer remained the same. He calmly nodded and gripped his greatsword. The baldy grinned as he raised his double-edged axe.

“Blame your curiosity.”

Our surroundings suddenly changed as the Caucasian man muttered and darkness engulfed everyone. Kim Suho disappeared and I was left with the bald barbarian in this isolation barrier.

“Haha, big bro always leaves me with the boring work.”

He obviously referred to me, but I couldn't refute him. His leather armor depicted two golden axes on the chest. This symbolized a hero's rank. Two golden weapons meant intermediate rank. Since nothing else accompanied the two golden axes, that meant a grade 9 hero.

“Why is an intermediate rank hero doing something like this?”

I asked even though I already knew. The baldy smiled and collected his magic power. A powerful current surrounded his axe and began to heat up the air. Sweat formed on the tip of my nose and dripped down my back. I couldn't win against this guy. His axe could easily split me in half, but I also couldn't run because of the barrier.

Suddenly, I had a flash of insight. He seemed like the prideful and reckless type who usually looked down on their opponents. A typical cliché character that always appeared in the novels I read and wrote.

“Huuu.”

I sighed and pretended to pick up a rock from the ground. Instead, I molded the rock completely from aether. I spent 95% of aether to form the rock and used the remaining 5% to form a transparent thread that wrapped around my wrist to the rock. Then I muttered.

“Scan.”

The result was 30%. Although that was above the average, I could’ve been luckier.

“What are you going to do with that?”

The baldy looked at the rock as I thought. Should I just throw it at him? Or tick him off a little?

“I just thought this would be enough.”

I chose the latter. Immediately, his veins popped and my lips dried. Is he going to angrily charge? Or will he carefully approach?

“Why are you so confident?”

The baldy stood on guard. He looked for hidden weapons, but he couldn’t sense any magic power from me.

“You little brat.”

I stared at him and fiddled with the aether rock. The baldy stood with his axe and wondered what I would do.

“I’m going to throw this.”

I would gladly attack first. I threw the rock with all my strength. However, he leaned slightly to the side before it could reach his head.

The rock flew by as he smiled. I had expected this. He dodged it since I acted like the rock was special. Now he would let his guard down.

I saved stigma's magic power for this exact moment.

“Huup!”

I poured all of stigma's magic power into the aether thread and yanked it with all my strength. Stigma's magic power shot through the transparent aether thread. The baldy's smile instantly disappeared as he felt the burst of magic power. He quickly prepared a qi reinforcement. However, the rock returned with even greater power and struck his head like lightning. Thwack! The light disappeared from his eyes. Thud. And his muscular body fell to the ground.

“...”

I staggered towards him. He wasn't dead yet since djinns had abnormally high regeneration. I aimed a light bullet at the back of his head. I didn't have enough magic power to switch into a shotgun, but I pulled the trigger without hesitation. KWANG! The light bullet directly struck his head. Psssh... However, his dense skull blocked it from piercing through. The baldy suddenly raised his head.

“GAAH!”

He roared and a huge shockwave struck my stomach even though aether formed a barrier to protect me. It sent me flying into a wall. My vision faded from a mere sound attack and my organs felt like they had ruptured.

“...You son of... a bitch...”

The baldy staggered up as he cursed. His face didn't look human anymore. His skin had turned black and his eyes glowed red. Most importantly, sheep horns grew out of his head, which signified his devil transformation. I closed my eyes and sighed. This would be my end despite my luck. I should've ended things, but I couldn't.

“I wasn't going to use this, but you...”

Suddenly, I heard the sound of something cutting through flesh. I opened my eyes in surprise. A black blade had pierced through the baldy's chest.

"What?"

The baldy stared at the blade piercing through him and collapsed. He turned into dust before his body hit the ground.

"..."

I stared at the Chameleon Troupe's boss in a daze. She coughed and spoke.

"Nice to meet you."

"What?"

Boss calmly looked at me. I somewhat understood why she was here. The Chameleon Troupe had interfered with Packhorse Master's conquest, but I didn't understand why she kept appearing in front of me.

"We're running into each other rather often, huh."

"Of course," Boss answered somewhat sarcastically. "I was watching over you."

"What?"

Boss handed me a business card. It wasn't a guild card belonging to Li Xiaopeng this time.

[Jeronimo Mercenary – Yi Saeyeon.]

It was a mercenary group second only to the Vast Expanse. In reality, it served as a cover for the Chameleon Troupe.

"Jeronimo?"

My eyes widened. I was truly surprised. An important event unfolded before me, but had diverged from the original story.

[She stood before Shin Jonghak. He already knew her as they had met multiple times before.]

“Nice to see you.”

She appeared out of nowhere and greeted him. Shin Jonghak laughed.

“Aren’t you showing up too often?”

“I couldn’t help it.”

She slightly smiled.

“I was watching over you.”

She handed Shin Jonghak a business card that read Jeronimo Mercenary. Shin Jonghak’s eyes glimmered when he saw it.]

“...”

In Dorm 6’s penthouse, three people sat in a circle and silently watched each other. None of them wanted to lose, which led to this situation. It all started when Yoo Yeonha casually asked.

Since we ran into each other, would you like to come for a night snack at my place?

She had said these empty words out of formality. However, Rachel accepted the offer.

The table in front of them only had a single bag of chips.

“Would you like some juice?”

“No thanks.”

Yoo Yeonha could no longer endure the awkward atmosphere, but Rachel refused. Another 10 minutes of silence passed. Chae Nayun grew bored and sprawled on the couch as she scratched her belly half-asleep.

“I’m curious,” Yoo Yeonha spoke to Rachel. “How did you find out?”

Rachel knew what she vaguely referred to. She was asking about Kim Hajin.

“I found out naturally.”

Yoo Yeonha smiled scornfully at Rachel’s nonchalant reply.

“But you don’t know why that person is hiding his power, right?”

“...”

Rachel closed her mouth. She honestly didn’t know. Chae Nayun woke up from her sleep and interjected, “Hey, what are you talking about?”

Yoo Yeonha smiled triumphantly. “Well, that’s not something easily found out.”

Rachel glared at her, annoyed. Yoo Yeonha leisurely stood up and brought some orange juice over. Then Rachel asked, “Does knowing change anything?”

“It changes everything. Isn’t that obvious? Like how Essence of the Strait is bigger than most government guilds.”

“No, what I’m talking about is...”

Rachel wasn’t too concerned about Kim Hajin. However, she didn’t want to lose to Yoo Yeonha.

“Rather than finding out by myself, it’s better to wait for that person to tell me.”

Yoo Yeonha’s face immediately stiffened because she had privately investigated Kim Hajin. He didn’t ask for it, and it didn’t serve any public interest.

“At least, that’s what I think.”

With that, Rachel stood up. “Then I’ll be off. It’s getting late.”

Rachel walked to the door as Yoo Yeonha glared at her.

“Wait, why am I the only one out of the loop? Hey, Yoo Yeonha, are you sure you’re speaking in Korean?” Chae Nayun grumbled in frustration.

“Huu...”

The barrier finally shattered as Kim Suho appeared with a haggard expression. James laid unconscious on the ground while Kim Suho held onto a branch. I knew Kim Suho would win. Of course, Misteltein was still amazing even without awakening. That djinn perfectly suited Kim Suho since he also used a sword.

“You won?”

“So did you.”

We looked at each other and laughed. Then Kim Suho put on a serious face.

“I don’t think this is an ordinary branch.”

“Oh yeah? To me, it looks amazing at first glance.”

“Really? How?”

“Take a seat.”

First, I sat him down. I could hardly stand from the physical and mental exhaustion.

Chapter 86

Words Without Legs (1)

I told Kim Suho the reward couldn't just be a simple branch. It must be special. Then I pretended to think about folktales and legends until I recalled one about a branch.

“The only branch that comes to mind is Misteltein.”

The branch that slew Baldur, the Nordic God of Light. Kim Suho's eyes widened as I continued explaining.

“As you know, a divine weapon needs to awaken before revealing its true form. This branch must be the unawakened Misteltein.”

I stared at the ordinary-looking branch on the ground.

“That's why it looks so simple.”

“Ah, I see. Then we should figure out how to awaken it, right?”

“About that...”

I stared at the unconscious Caucasian man on the ground. Of course, Kim Suho hadn't killed him since he looked human. Djinns who infiltrated human society considered their devil transformation a secret technique. The baldy only used it as a last resort.

“Why don't we get out of here first?” I spoke as I pointed to the Caucasian man. We didn't know when he would wake up.

“Yeah, that sounds good.” I didn't tell Kim Suho they were djinns since the stock prices might tank. After all, I had invested all my money into Packhorse Master.

“Oh right, what happened to the man you fought?” Kim Suho suddenly asked.

“He ran away.”

“Oh, then what should we do about that one? Shouldn’t we report him to the association?”

“No, we don’t have any evidence. Plus, this place was their dungeon’s hidden stage. We might be punished instead since we interfered.”

Of course, I lied to protect my wealth. We walked out of the dungeon while talking about various things. Outside already grew dark, but the moon lit up the mountain as wild animals cried out. I didn’t have enough strength to continue, so I sat on the ground to rest.

“Auuu.”

My entire body ached, especially my upper arm. It throbbed in pain because I used up all of stigma’s magic power at once. I couldn’t even move my left arm anymore as Kim Suho sat next to me. I pointed to the branch in his hand.

“Put that branch down for a minute.”

“Sure.”

I took out the butterfly seedling’s dust with my right arm.

“Take a look.”

I showed him the blue dust that glowed like a treasure.

“What’s this?” Kim Suho asked in surprise.

“This is...”

I stopped in the middle of my sentence. Then I looked into his eyes, which shone with curiosity. This dust was supposed to belong to him, so I would use it to gain his favor.

“What? Keepsake?”

“N-No, it’s not a keepsake. I meant it’s important to me.”

I quickly corrected myself. A family keepsake sounded too overboard.

“Anyway, this mystical dust can act as a catalyst for awakening objects and humans. It came from an elemental. You’ve heard of elementals, right?”

I’m using this precious item on Misteltein, so be grateful. My plan seemed to work as Kim Suho looked serious.

“Something should change if I put this on Misteltein.”

It would undergo its first awakening and transform into a sword that grew alongside Kim Suho as it absorbed more demonic energy.

“I’m going to apply it.”

“Wait.”

Kim Suho grabbed my wrist and looked at me.

“Are you sure?”

“About what?”

“Didn’t you say it was important to you?”

“Ah.” I laughed subconsciously.

“It’s important, so it should be used at times like this. Where else would I use it if not on a divine weapon like Misteltein?”

“But still...”

“Just shut up and take it.”

I shook off his hand. Kim Suho scratched the back of his neck. He seemed half-grateful and half-regretful. I could tell that my gesture deeply touched him. Making a big deal out of it turned out well.

I carefully sprinkled the butterfly seedling’s dust on Misteltein as a blue light flowed through the branch and its surface turned black. It no longer looked like ordinary. A leaf also sprouted from the tip and fell to the ground. Was it like this in the original story too?

“See, I was right.”

“Yeah.”

Kim Suho looked at Misteltein in awe. He could feel the hidden power of this black branch now.

“Then, as promised...”

I gave Misteltein to Kim Suho and picked up the leaf.

“You take the branch, and I’ll take the leaf.”

“Hajin... are you sure? Why don’t we share this weapon? You can use it whenever you want.”

“Please, I’m not a swordsman. I’ll just die if I fight with a sword.”

Kim Suho backed down as I checked my smartwatch.

[Misteltein’s Leaf] — A byproduct of the god-slaying branch after its awakening. A tea brewed with it will increase your health, or you may grind it into a legendary weapon.

I felt more than satisfied as I smacked my knees and stood up.

“Alright, let’s head back now.”

“Yeah.”

Kamak Mountain was too dangerous to stay overnight. Kim Suho took the lead as I followed behind. Then something suddenly tangled my foot.

“...”

Thud. I fell to the ground with a strong sense of déjà vu.

Don’t tell me...

As expected, I had tripped on a root.

I carefully dug it up and swallowed hard. It had several roots attached to a thick body. Although it looked slightly smaller than the last one, I had undoubtedly found ginseng. Jackpot.

I placed it into my bag before chasing after Kim Suho.

We finally arrived at the portal station after 30 minutes of hiking. We barely made it in time at 1:53 A.M. since the portals closed at 2:00 A.M.

“Hajin.”

Kim Suho faced me in front of the portal station. “Let’s split up here.”

“Hm? What about you?”

“I’m going to visit my family since I came all the way here.”

Kim Suho smiled. “And thanks for today.”

The moon shone down on him and revealed his clear eyes. His appearance stirred something inside me. I remembered something I had forgotten. Kim Suho was this world’s main character. Someone who only walked the path of righteousness and never compromised or abandoned his beliefs. An ally of justice with conviction stronger than steel, and a seeker of truth who always treaded the right path. An existence that became extinct in the modern world, but one that I always hoped for. A righteous hero that I could trust.

That was why I named him Suho (守護). [1] He would save and protect this world.

“Yeah.”

I spoke as we separated. “See you later.”

I returned to the dorm. Evandel seemed to have woken up as I entered and trudged into my arms. I carried her to the couch. I felt exhausted, but still had one more thing.

[Jeronimo Mercenary]

I looked it up on the internet.

[The peak of mercenaries, Jeronimo. Mission success rate: 99.7%]

Jeronimo Mercenary consisted of 23 members. The site displayed their profiles along with photos. However, these 23 members were all disguises between 5-6 Chameleon Troupe members. Jain's gift, Camouflage, made it possible.

“...”

I took out the business card.

Boss had scouted me instead of Shin Jonghak. I didn't know why she wanted me to fill the Chameleon Troupe's empty seat.

Then I noticed someone messaged me four hours ago.

[Yo] [Can you help me study?] [I'll buy you food] [Answer me] [You gonna ignore me? ——] [Oi ——]

They all came from Chae Nayun. I thought about her older brother, Chae Jinyoon. My thoughts connected back to the Chameleon Troupe. I might be able to kill Chae Jinyoon with the Chameleon Troupe's help.

Everything had been taken care of with regards to Packhorse Master. Boss and Jain watched a video of Kim Hajin at the Suwon Devil's Nest.

"A simple rock contained that much power? Indeed, he's full of potential. You were right, Boss."

Jain laughed as she finally admitted it. It wasn't easy to create such destructive power with just a rock even though he used magic power. Above all, Jain liked his mercilessness. The enemy would've instantly died if he wasn't a djinn. Kim Hajin had attacked with killing intent without knowing his enemy was a djinn.

"Boss, why aren't you watching until the end? I want to see his devil transformation."

"This is enough. I don't want to see that."

"Why?"

Jain tilted her head. Boss pouted before murmuring.

"It's gross."

The weekend flew by as Monday arrived.

"As you all know, class competitions will begin this Friday. Would anyone like to volunteer for events? Everyone will have to participate in at least one.” Yi Yeonghan announced before the start of class.

“Oh right.”

I recalled the class competitions that would take place before the midterms. Not only would we compete in combat events like duels, timed dungeons, and magic battles, but also entertainment events like gaming, singing, and soccer. It resembled a school festival. Naturally, cadets chattered about which events to choose.

“What are you going to do, Rachel?”

I asked from next to her. She slightly flinched before replying with an awkward smile.

“I’m... planning on doing the quiz event.”

“Oh, the quiz event. Maybe I should do that too.”

“The quiz event is already full.”

Jin Hoseung cut in. I turned towards him, then faced Rachel again. She nodded.

“Y-Yes... it’s already full. Unfortunately...”

“Oh, I see.”

“Now, now, calm down everyone. Soccer and basketball are all taken up.”

I couldn’t help but wonder how these superhumans would play sports.

“We need someone for singing and archery.”

Yi Yeonghan paused and glanced over. I thought he was looking at someone else, but then he grinned. Soon, the other cadets also turned towards me. I coughed and spoke up, “I can handle archery.”

“Perfect.”

Yi Yeonghan wrote my name down. Not just in archery, but also singing.

“Wait, hey! What are you doing? Erase that!”

“Alright, thank you everyone! We’re done!”

Yi Yeonghan hit enter and submitted the participants.

1. His name means “to protect.” 🤔

Chapter 87

Words Without Legs (2)

Tomer naturally fit in among the cadets after class. She had worked hard for the past two weeks and controlled her temper. She gradually grew close with them and everyone saw her favorably now. She even personally invited them to the café.

“Wow, Kim Hajin likes Rachel? Really?”

The female cadets gossiped after ordering their coffee and favorite pastries. Tomer stealthily brought up the subject.

“They’ve been pretty close lately, but aren’t they just on the same team?”

Many male cadets secretly admired Rachel, but no one ever approached her because of her background. Once Rachel graduated from Cube, she would enter the Royal Court guild and become its youngest executive.

“I guess Kim Hajin suits the Royal Court guild since he rose to rank 334.”

The English Royal Court ranked 60 in the world. Cube cadets in the 400-500 ranks would fantasize about joining such a guild. However, no powerful cadet would be blinded enough by love to join the Royal Court guild, and Rachel wouldn’t be satisfied with anyone around the 400-500 ranks.

“No, no, I’m in the same team. Trust me, you would say the same if you saw his eyes. How do I describe it... his eyes turned into hearts!”

Tomer tenaciously incited them.

“Oh yeah, isn’t Kim Hajin singing in the upcoming class competition?”

One of the cadets widened her eyes. “He’s not going to confess, is he?”

“Kyaaak! Just thinking about it gives me goosebumps. I’m going to stab him to death if he does!”

“Eh? Stab him to death?”

Tomer seriously thought these cadets sounded like djinns.

“Singing?”

I sighed and murmured in my room. I often went to karaoke back on Earth, so I knew how to sing. However, that didn’t mean I was good. I wasn’t bad either, just average.

“Argh, why do I have to sing?”

I could use the horn flute to sound better than average. However, volunteers from the other classes would undoubtedly be good. Furthermore, I’d never sung in front of a crowd before.

“Should I eat another serenity pill?”

“Singing? I can sing the Pororo song!”

Evandel shouted as she worked on making a nightingale. I replied with a grin.

“Really? Let me hear it later.”

“Un! But why singing?”

“Ah, well... I got done in by a villain, so I have to sing now.”

“A villain!”

Evandel’s eyes widened as she twisted the nightingale’s neck. She reacted strongly because of her superhero cartoons.

“Villain! Villain!”

“Ah, no, I misspoke. Let go of that nightingale. It’s going to die.”

“Huh? Ahh!”

She looked at the nightingale that had already begun to melt.

“Sniff sniff...”

Evandel began to tear up after working on the nightingale for so long. I took her into my arms.

“Don’t worry. You’ll learn not to make the same mistake next time.”

I consoled her and turned on my laptop.

“Let’s see...”

It’s been a while, but I planned to hack Tomer’s smartwatch. Last night, she approached me at the convenience store to say hello, but she wore a personal smartwatch instead of the cadet one. Others might not have noticed, but I did.

[80 SP will be used. Would you like to continue?]

“Really?”

It took quite an amount because of the security. I held back my tears and confirmed.

[Tomer, you’ll have to pick up an item during Wednesday’s class. It’ll be helpful for your mission. I’ll tell you about the details tomorrow.]

An unknown person had messaged her today. I read through her other messages and confirmed that her target was indeed Rachel. Another message arrived.

[Wednesday's class will be a mock artifact scramble. The item will be left at an administrative center in the B-3 zone on the lowest floor. The administrative center will be empty from 11:00 to noon, so take it then.]

Lowest floor. B-3 zone. I repeated the location as I received a message on my smartwatch.

A picture of a problem along with a few lines of text. I thought it came from Rachel.

[Can you please teach me how to solve this problem?]

However, Chae Nayun had sent it.

* * *

The library only contained the sounds of pencils scratching paper and pages turning.

“...”

Chae Nayun stared at a reference book in this atmosphere. She tried to study, but failed and twirled her hair.

[It is important to calculate the density of a dungeon's magic power. This is one of the most important skills for a hero because a dungeon's magic power density can suddenly change depending on what happens inside. Take a look at the following formula... Example 1) Suppose that a magic power explosion occurs in a small dungeon with six cobalt kobold goblins...]

“Why do I have to learn this?”

Chae Nayun murmured as she leaned back. She couldn't even solve the first example. She could memorize stuff, but couldn't calculate anything for phenomenon realm analysis.

“...”

She glanced to the side in despair. Rachel sat with an empty seat between them. Honestly, Chae Nayun sat here on purpose to peek at Rachel.

From the side, Rachel appeared sullen. She rested her chin on her palms and seemed worried.

I guess she has her own troubles.

Rachel suddenly turned on her smartwatch. Then she hesitated before shaking her head and turning it off.

“What’s up with her?”

Chae Nayun turned back to her reference book.

[Example 1) Suppose that a magic power explosion happens in...]

She stared at the words, but nothing came to mind. Then she held up her smartwatch to take a picture of the page.

Next, she looked through her contact list for someone who could help her... Kim Hajin.

[Help me with this.]

She typed a message, then erased it. It didn’t sound respectful enough.

[Can you help me with this? I’ll buy you food]

“No, this one doesn’t feel right either.”

[You’re a genius if you can solve this! ㄹ ㄹ ㄹ]

“This sounds a bit stupid...”

After much thought, she asked as courteously as possible.

[Can you please teach me how to solve this problem?]

Then she put down her smartwatch and waited: 1 minute, three minutes, five minutes... Time passed by. Is he not going to reply? Her smartwatch finally rang when Chae Nayun already packed her book away.

“Ooh!”

She quickly checked the content. Kim Hajin sent a very kind and detailed solution.

“Heehee.”

Chae Nayun smiled and took her reference book back out. She also received another message from Yi Yeonghan for everyone in Veritas class.

[On Wednesday, we will have a mock artifact scramble. Be prepared everyone!]

“Today’s combat training will be a mock artifact scramble!”

It occurred according to Tomer’s message and Yi Yeonghan’s announcement. The training would take place from 9 A.M. to 2 P.M. as we competed for artifacts. All 125 cadets of Veritas class gathered at the underground plaza’s first floor.

“Heroes experience artifact scrambles at least once a year.”

Real artifact scrambles always occurred outside of government jurisdiction because artifacts found inside a country belonged to that government by law. In this world, numerous countries had collapsed during Outcall, and many of their territories remained ownerless to this day. Monsters overran most of Africa, and djinns dominated central Asia. In these regions, artifacts belonged to whoever found them.

“It will be a massive site with a brawl concept. You will not know the enemy’s command structure, nor will you have a way to contact your allies. You will also not know the artifacts’ locations!”

Mock artifact scrambles often used the brawl format. Artifact scrambles also occurred between guilds, especially 20-30 years ago when laws regarding them weren’t in place yet. However, artifact scrambles mostly occurred against djinns nowadays.

“We will divide you into Team White or Team Black. Team White will defend while Team Black will attack. Remember that the concept is brawl! In addition, you may shout surrender at any time.”

Until the 90s, humans held an advantage due to their efficient command structure and organizations. However, a single djinn named Bermut disrupted this with his gift, which randomly distributed everyone in an area. This destroyed human formations and gave djinns an advantage in one-on-one battles due to their devil transformations.

“Now, we will take away your vision.”

My vision suddenly turned dark as a few cadets shrieked.

“It’s an instructor’s magic. Stay calm. You don’t need to resist.”

A high-intermediate rank hero could easily blind 125 people. Of course, that didn’t apply to me. I could clearly see when I opened my eyes again.

“We will now guide you to your designated locations.”

Artifact excavation sites contained multiple floors and even a residential area. Most artifacts took at least 2 to 3 weeks to excavate from deep underground. That didn’t mean they looked like caverns or tunnels. Excavation sites looked more like futuristic bunkers thanks to technicians with extraordinary gifts.

“Hey, hey, don’t step on my foot.”

“Ah! Somebody hit me.”

The cadets went underground with 15 placed on the first floor and 25 on the second floor. Chae Nayun continued to the third floor with Rachel on a nearby balcony next to the third floor’s residential area. They would inevitably fight. As for me, I continued to a small room on the fourth floor. Unfortunately, I couldn’t find Shin Jonghak and Kim Suho.

“Eh?”

Yoo Yeonha was in the room next to mine. We would cross paths to reach the hall. In addition, I was in Team Black and she was in Team White. A loud voice rang out from the speaker above.

— NPCs will hold onto or move the artifacts. Team White must protect the artifacts while Team Black attempts to steal them. We will now begin the countdown.

The doors all closed as the countdown began: 5, 4, 3, 2, 1. The blinding magic disappeared as soon as the countdown finished. I checked the training handgun’s magazine. I needed to get to the B-3 zone on the lowest floor.

— I heard a sound next door...

Yoo Yeonha’s voice rang out. I turned towards her direction. Tak, tak. Yoo Yeonha intentionally walked forward with loud footsteps. Then she knocked on the door of my room.

— I know you’re in there. Are you in Team Black or Team White? For the record, I’m in Team White.

I remained silent. Yoo Yeonha happily hummed as she grabbed the doorknob.

— No answer? I’ll assume you’re in Team Black. How unfortunate, you must’ve been looking forward to class today. Consider yourself unlucky...

Ssss—

Yoo Yeonha opened the door with a bright face. Then her eyes met mine.

“...!”

She turned stiff except for her trembling lips. We would have to fight, but she looked afraid.

Gulp. Yoo Yeonha swallowed hard. Her hands faintly shook, and I could see the sweat on her forehead. My neck felt itchy, so I moved to scratch it. However, she overreacted to this simple movement.

“Stay, stay away!”

“What?”

I tilted my head. You came to me!

Chapter 88

Words Without Legs (3)

Yoo Yeonha couldn't decide whether to fight or run. She confidently entered the room, but didn't expect to meet such a powerful enemy.

“...”

Kim Hajin stood still, unaware of her worries. His relaxed demeanor made Yoo Yeonha even more nervous. She couldn't meet his gaze. This was the first time she ever felt like this. Suddenly, Kim Hajin raised his hand. In reality, he only tried to scratch his neck.

“Stay, stay away!”

However, Yoo Yeonha shouted without knowing this. Kim Hajin stared at her and dropped his hand. He already held his gun. Not the Desert Eagle, but the training handgun that had still destroyed Kim Horak's qi reinforcement.

“...”

Kim Hajin raised his gun as Yoo Yeonha felt the sweat flowing down her face. First, she calmly examined her surroundings. It would be difficult to escape his gun because of the narrow, straight hallway behind her. She only had two choices: to fight or lose.

Yoo Yeonha looked at the whip in her hand. Then she suddenly thought of something.

Perhaps this is my chance to confirm his skills. My estimate only comes from observation. I should be able to glimpse his real power if we fight.

However, she also had a more cowardly thought.

I'll likely be the first one eliminated if we fight. I don't want that, but struggling for my life doesn't suit me either. It's not because I hate the pain.

Yoo Yeonha weighed her options and sighed. She opened her eyes with determination and glared at Kim Hajin. Then she swung her whip. It moved like an extension of her limb and grabbed the gun.

Shweeek!

She snatched it away and stared at the gun as it fell into her hand.

“I, I did it! Ha, haha!”

I never thought I'd succeed! Ahahaha!

Yoo Yeonha proudly laughed. Maybe this person isn't so amazing after all!

“Even if it's you, without a weapon...”

The gun instantly flew back into Kim Hajin's hand.

“Ah, aah! W-Where are you going!”

Yoo Yeonha tried to grab the gun in midair, but Kim Hajin retrieved it with the aether wire he secretly shot out. The aether wire appeared invisible unless someone imbued their eyes with magic power. Yoo Yeonha guessed that Kim Hajin's magic power had caused this phenomenon.

“...”

The smile on her face quickly disappeared. She grew even more nervous than before and could only endure whatever came next since she made the first move. Yoo Yeonha swallowed hard.

“Haa.”

Kim Hajin sighed and aimed as Yoo Yeonha shuddered. Her mind blanked in front of the steel muzzle.

How should I dodge? Will it hurt? Maybe I can dodge it?

All sorts of thoughts flashed in her head, but Kim Hajin didn't fire. He smirked and holstered his gun.

What?

Then he walked up and tapped her shoulder as she stood in a daze.

"It's still early, so let's take it easy."

Kim Hajin left after murmuring incomprehensible words. Yoo Yeonha watched him in confusion.

"Argh, it still hurts."

My right wrist felt sore. Yoo Yeonha's whip only lightly grazed me, but it tore my skin and turned it red. My bones would've broke if she directly hit me. As I thought, Yoo Yeonha was quite strong.

"Sigh, what a relief."

I safely bluffed my way past Yoo Yeonha and entered the fourth floor lobby. It looked huge, but sounded too quiet. I couldn't hear any voices or notice any presence. What's going on? Did everyone leave? I turned on my smartwatch.

All cadets in the mock artifact scramble wore life-detection devices. They accurately measured every cadet's HP and eliminated those who received critical damage. My smartwatch connected to my laptop, so I could check everyone's coordinates. Ten cadets remained on this floor, including me and Yoo Yeonha. Six of these ten already formed teams.

"Tomer..."

I checked Tomer's coordinates and found her in a bathroom on the seventh floor. She planned on killing time there and showed no signs of movement. I also grew curious about the other cadets. A fight broke out on the third floor above me, but Chae Nayun and Rachel had yet to meet.

The fifth floor lobby contained a match that anyone would want to see. Shin Jonghak faced off against Kim Suho as the two cadets represented their respective teams.

— I knew this day would come, Kim Suho.

Shin Jonghak muttered in a serious tone.

—...

Kim Suho remained silent.

— Come. I'll show you the difference between us.

Kim Suho pulled out his sword and attacked first. He charged in and swung as Shin Jonghak stepped back to block. Sparks flashed as they utilized the strengths and weaknesses of their weapons.

Someone suddenly shot past me towards the stairs. Stomp, stomp, stomp— I glanced up and spotted Yoo Yeonha running away faster than anyone I'd ever seen.

“Oh right.”

I snapped back to reality thanks to Yoo Yeonha. I didn't have the time to leisurely watch this marvelous match. I headed to the emergency stairs instead of the central lobby staircase to avoid any enemies.

“I, I surrender!”

A male cadet shouted in front of Chae Nayun's sword. He became blind again the moment he surrendered and would be transported to the elimination lounge.

“Whew, that was easy.”

Chae Nayun proudly murmured as she wiped her sweat. She already had three kills.

“It’s only been three months since I switched to a sword, but I’m already this strong. I must be talented.”

Chae Nayun surged with confidence as someone shouted.

“Nayun!”

Chae Nayun turned and spotted Yi Jiyeon wearing a white uniform.

“Whew, thank god.”

Yi Jiyeon clung to Chae Nayun and sighed in relief.

“Did you hide this entire time?”

A supporter like Yi Jiyeon couldn’t fight alone. An attack-focused supporter like Yoo Yeonha could shine depending on the situation, but Yi Jiyeon served as a pure supporter.

“No, I managed to defeat someone with my debuffs.”

“Oh, that’s good. Anyways, it’s nice to see you.”

Chae Nayun welcomed her since Yi Jiyeon could strengthen warriors. She provided various physical buffs that turned them even more superhuman.

“Ahh, I thought I would die.”

Yi Jiyeon finally calmed down and suddenly recalled something.

“Oh yeah, Rachel’s on this floor.”

“Rachel?” Chae Nayun’s eyes widened.

“Yeah, she surprised me! I barely managed to escape since I ran the moment I saw her.”

Stomp, stomp, stomp— Someone came up from the stairs.

“Wait.”

They nervously looked at the staircase. Yi Jiyeon held up her bow as Chae Nayun pointed her sword. However, Yoo Yeonha showed up and belonged to the same team. She sighed in relief when she saw them. Chae Nayun tilted her head.

“Yoo Yeonha, why are you sweating so much?”

“Huh? Uh, it’s nothing.”

Yoo Yeonha looked haggard and unlike her usual self.

“Who’s downstairs?” Chae Nayun asked.

“Kim Hajin,” Yoo Yeonha softly replied.

“Kim Hajin?” Yi Jiyeon and Chae Nayun both exclaimed.

“Un.”

“Oh, then he must be eliminated,” Yi Jiyeon innocently said. Yoo Yeonha shook her head with a bitter smile.

“No, he didn’t get eliminated.”

However, I almost did. Yoo Yeonha couldn’t continue out of embarrassment.

“Really?”

Chae Nayun scratched her cheek and pretending not to care. Then she casually asked.

“So, uh, what’s he doing?”

“I don’t know,” Yoo Yeonha half-heartedly replied, but then Yi Jiyeon smiled.

“Maybe he’s looking for Rachel?”

Chae Nayun tilted her head at the remark. “Eh? Why Rachel?”

“Because Kim Hajin likes Rachel.”

“Huh?”

Both Chae Nayun and Yoo Yeonha looked confused.

“What are you talking about?”

“Eh? The both of you didn’t know?”

“K-Know what? What about Kim Hajin?” Chae Nayun stuttered as she asked.

“You don’t know? I thought everyone heard the rumors by now.”

“Then it’s just a stupid, groundless rumor.”

Yoo Yeonha firmly spoke. She could care less right now when the mock artifact scramble held a great weight over their grades.

“Anyways, did any of you find the artifacts?”

“Ah, yeah, I found one from an NPC on my way here.”

Yi Jiyeon took out a small box from her pocket. Yoo Yeonha's face lit up.

"I'm glad. Let's take this to the first floor."

"Yeah."

"And Yi Jiyeon, you're mistaken. That rumor probably spread because Kim Hajin and Rachel are on the same team."

Yoo Yeonha felt the need to correct her.

Arrows suddenly rained down while Chae Nayun murmured to herself. Yoo Yeonha swung her whip to defend against them.

"Who is it!" Chae Nayun shouted. The ambush irritated her even though Yoo Yeonha had blocked all the arrows. The three of them turned towards the balcony and spotted Rachel with other cadets from Team Black.

"Rachel! How dare you ambush us like cowards!"

Chae Nayun roared as Rachel calmly unsheathed her rapier.

"I'm going in."

The members from Team Black all moved as Rachel spoke.

Chapter 89

Fake and Real (1)

Two archers shot from the balcony while four warriors charged forward. Rachel also attacked as the core of this ambush. She entrusted Yi Jiyeon and Yoo Yeonha to the other three warriors and dealt with Chae Nayun herself. Rachel felt confident since Chae Nayun had only recently switched to the sword.

“Dammit.”

Chae Nayun clenched her teeth as they exchanged blows. She could feel the difference in skill and experience. Rachel swung twice every time she swung once. Furthermore, she couldn’t parry similar attacks that Rachel easily parried. Chae Nayun and Rachel fought one-on-one since everyone else focused on Yi Jiyeon and Yoo Yeonha.

Clang! Clang! Chae Nayun felt like every clash tore apart her hands. As expected, Rachel’s thin rapier carried immense strength. Chae Nayun could only block.

“Dammit!”

However, Chae Nayun didn’t want to lose. Not against Rachel at the very least. Her magic power erupted from her unyielding desire to win. It formed a giant sword that soared into the air.

“...!”

Rachel flinched at the giant sword’s imposing appearance. Chae Nayun swung with all her strength. However, her large movement left an opening. Rachel simply dodged to the side as Chae Nayun’s sword hit the ground. However, something unexpected happened. KOONG! The floor collapsed and Rachel suddenly fell through. Thud. She landed on the fourth floor and stared at the hole above her. Did the floor collapse that easily?

“Where did you go?”

Chae Nayun roared from above. Rachel quickly stood up since her teammates couldn't handle Yoo Yeonha and Chae Nayun without her.

However, someone else appeared in front of her. Kim Suho wore a white uniform and held up his sword. He had defeated Shin Jonghak on the fifth floor and climbed to the fourth floor. Rachel bit her lips. Kim Suho charged the moment he confirmed she belonged to Team Black. Rachel's rapier clashed with his sword. Power on a completely different level pressed down on her.

I stopped in front of the sixth floor bathroom.

“Is there an artifact around here?”

I pretended to look for artifacts to trick the administrators as I double-checked Tomer's message.

[The item will be left at an administrative center in the B-3 zone on the lowest floor. The administrative center will be empty from 11:00 to noon, so take it then.]

The lowest floor meant floor 7, and the B-3 zone referred to room 3 of sector B.

“Artifact, are you here?”

I checked the time as I entered the bathroom. I still had about 15 minutes since it was 10:45 A.M.

“Eh? What's this?”

I found a holographic man in a toilet stall with something in his arms. The NPC flinched as he saw me. I also raised my gun in surprise.

“I actually found an artifact here?”

I grabbed the artifact from NPC who ran away and placed it in my pocket. Then I looked just below me where Tomer waited in the seventh floor bathroom.

“Hm.”

I had to eliminate Tomer if I wanted the item, but how? I looked around and found a vent connecting this bathroom to the seventh floor bathroom.

“Perhaps?”

I could use stigma’s magic power in more ways than imagined.

Become a magical smoke that can put Tomer asleep.

I instantly consumed 1.5 streaks of stigma as a grey smoke rose from my upper arm. Surprisingly, it moved according to my will.

“With this...”

I sent the smoke through the vent and observed with the thousand-mile eyes as it danced in front of Tomer’s nose. She frowned and tried to wave it away, but inevitably inhaled it. Tomer coughed and soon her eyes drooped. She yawned and checked her watch. I can’t fall asleep. She mumbled and tried to stand, but fell asleep on the toilet.

“Whew.”

Now I could safely head to the administrative center. I arrived on the seventh floor at 11 A.M. and headed to the B-3 zone. A decorative flower bed hid the secret pathway to the administrative center.

“No one’s here.”

It contained about twenty monitors like a security room. I approached the large desk in the center with a black box on top.

[Awl of Weakening] [High rank – Enchant] [Poison attribute] An awl that weakens the pricked target. Enchanted with the high-rank magic, weakening.

The black box contained a special awl.

“Wow, what’s this?”

Its high rank enchantment surprised me and could easily fetch 1.5 billion won.

“Cough.”

I looked around the room.

“From now on this is mine.”

I slipped the awl into my pocket and left after deleting the CCTV footage by hacking into the server. Then I went back up to the sixth floor.

“Hm?”

I found Rachel not too far away.

“What happened to her?”

She looked exhausted with a tattered uniform as I ran up to her.

“Rachel.” I called her.

“...!”

She jumped from the slightest noise. Her shoulders trembled as she turned towards me.

“I’m on the same team.”

“Ah, whew.”

Rachel sighed in relief. I approached with a smile.

“Did something happen? You don’t look well.”

“I tried to ambush the enemy, but failed,” Rachel briefly replied.

“Oh.”

“Then I met Kim Suho and lost,” Rachel continued speaking in a weak voice.

“Oh.”

She sullenly dropped her head.

“I barely escaped from Kim Suho, but Chae Nayun and Yoo Yeonha found me afterward. Some magicians also attacked me after I escaped from them.”

Rachel recounted what happened with downcast eyes. Then she suddenly asked, “How many cadets did you eliminate?”

“None.”

Cadets earned points based on the number of artifacts acquired and how many cadets they eliminated. Both of us would rank near the bottom at this rate. I would be fine since I found an artifact and didn’t mind scoring near the bottom. However, Rachel wanted first place and it would be difficult if she didn’t score well on this artifact scramble.

She stared at the floor with devastated eyes. Then kicked a poor rock across the room. I rummaged through my pocket.

“We still have time. It’s not over yet.”

Rachel slowly raised her head as I took out the artifact from my pocket.

“Here. You can have this.”

Rachel's eyes immediately widened.

“Please take it upstairs since you’re faster than me.”

“No, this is yours—”

“Just take it.” I cut her off since I felt like helping her out.

“Do you see the emergency staircase on the right?”

I examined it with my thousand-mile eyes. A few cadets blocked the way, but they belonged to our team.

“It should be fairly empty.”

I smiled and told her where to go.

“Over there!”

Someone shouted as Chae Nayun and Yoo Yeonha arrived with other members from Team White. Six of them instantly surrounded us like in a movie.

“Kim Hajin.”

Chae Nayun pointed her sword at me. Then she discovered the artifact in Rachel’s hands.

“Ah, she’s holding an artifact! Who did you steal that from?”

“Quick, run away. I’ll delay them as long as possible.”

Rachel hesitated, then murmured as I urged her.

“Yes, thank you.”

She ran as an archer shot at her. Hmph. As if I’d let that happen. I predicted the arrow’s trajectory and struck it down with a bullet. The archer stared at me in shock.

“Junyoung and I will chase after Rachel.”

Two cadets from Team White wanted to ignore me. However...

“No.”

Yoo Yeonha stopped them.

“Stay on your toes. He’s a tough opponent.”

She tightened the grip on her whip. I looked around the room to determine if I could run away with parkour.

“What, you want to fight six of us alone? Are you crazy?” Chae Nayun asked. I shrugged without answering. For now, I would just buy time.

“Why should we be afraid of just one guy with a gun! I’m going in!”

A warrior with an axe suddenly charged. I fired several times to delay him as Yoo Yeonha’s whip and an arrow flew towards me.

I activated bullet time. Immediately, my sense of time slowed. I could clearly see and predict the whip and arrow’s trajectory. I fired at the arrow and dodged the whip. However, something unexpected happened. My bullet changed the arrow’s course and turned it into the warrior’s chest. His HP must’ve been low since it eliminated him on the spot.

“Ah, fuck! Watch where you’re shoot—”

The axe-wielding warrior turned blind and muffled before he could finish. Uuuup, uuuup! He pitifully struggled, but the arrow that struck his chest counted as a critical blow. It happened purely by luck.

“He changed the arrow’s trajectory.”

Yoo Yeonha thought I had intended it.

Rachel safely joined the other members of Team Black.

“Rachel stole an artifact!”

The six members cheered, but Rachel felt complicated because of Kim Hajin.

“...”

She stared at the artifact in her hand. Kim Hajin had given it to her with a smile, and she could still feel his warmth.

“Haa,” she sighed.

I shouldn't have accepted it.

She wasn't deaf. She heard the rumors going around, but told herself it was only gossip. However, she had to admit after today that Kim Hajin's feelings felt real. She should've noticed since he always stayed near her after they became teammates.

The rumor that Kim Hajin would confess came to mind. However, she shook off such thoughts. She couldn't have feelings for someone else. She had long given that up for her country, her parents, and the Royal Court guild.

Perhaps she was just making excuses. She recalled that her parents once told her true love meant throwing everything away to be with that person. However, Rachel had never felt such emotions. She didn't want to give up her goals.

“Ah, right!”

She became frantic since she left Kim Hajin with six people.

“Let's go! We need to save someone!”

“Eh? Where are we going?”

“Follow me!”

Rachel ran to the sixth floor with the other members of Team Black.

Chapter 90

Fake and Real (2)

Rachel returned to the sixth floor with the other members of Team Black. They asked for the situation, but Rachel ran without explaining.

“What.”

They spotted three cadets from Team White on the ground when they arrived. Someone had tied their hands and feet together as they wriggled like caterpillars.

“Um, what’s this?”

The bizarre scene confused Team Black. Rachel’s mind also turned blank until she realized what happened. She thought even Kim Hajin couldn’t handle six cadets, but he proved her wrong.

“Um, Rachel?”

“Ah, it looks like someone took care of the situation.”

Rachel replied somewhat in awe. A spearman walked in from the other side of the lobby.

“Ah, it’s Shin Jonghak! Jonghak!”

Yi Kyungrak, one of Shin Jonghak’s lackeys, ran up to him. Shin Jonghak smiled. He lost to Kim Suho, but avoided critical damage and escaped to the sixth floor.

“Nice to see you.”

Shin Jonghak greeted the other team members. Rachel slightly bowed as Shin Jonghak nodded.

“Jonghak, do you know what happened here?”

Yi Kyungrak pointed to the cadets on the ground. Shin Jonghak calmly replied, “I do. I eliminated two of them.”

Rachel frowned. She thought he was trying to steal Kim Hajin’s achievement. In reality, Shin Jonghak spotted Yoo Yeonha and Chae Nayun fighting with some nimble guy and used that opportunity to ambush two cadets.

“Cough. Then from now... I’ll take command.”

Shin Jonghak spoke as he glanced at Rachel. She looked at the other members. They seemed more comfortable with Shin Jonghak as the leader. However, Rachel didn’t want to be with someone who stole someone else’s achievement.

“Then I’ll take my leave here.”

“Ah, you should come with us.”

Yi Kyungrak tried to dissuade her, but Rachel made up her mind. She walked east towards the emergency staircase as Shin Jonghak and the other members headed to the central staircase.

The mock artifact scramble continued at a quick pace. Shin Jonghak gathered the surviving members of Team Black and managed to steal two more artifacts. Rachel also contributed with her guerilla tactics. Team White successfully protected most of the artifacts despite Rachel chasing after them. Kim Suho displayed outstanding leadership as they safely transported five artifacts to the designated locations. Finally, Team White came out victorious thanks to Kim Suho and Chae Nayun. Rachel and Shin Jonghak also received satisfactory grades.

For the record, Kim Hajin miraculously survived Chae Nayun and Yoo Yeonha. Then he spent the rest of his time hiding in the fourth floor bathroom.

“Yaaawn.”

Tomer woke up in the seventh floor bathroom and blankly stared at the ceiling.

“Oh right, the mission.”

She suddenly recalled and checked her smartwatch.

“Huh?”

She fell into a daze when she saw that the time was 3:02 P.M. She thought it broke and rummaged through her pockets for the cadet smartwatch.

Mock Artifact Scramble Results: [Final survivors – Team Black: 12 / Team White: 11] [Artifacts – Team Black: 3 / Team White: 5] [Team White MVP – Kim Suho, Chae Nayun] [Team Black MVP – Shin Jonghak, Rachel] Team White Wins

“What?”

Tomer slapped her cheeks to wake herself up. However, the smartwatch remained the same. She slapped herself even harder, but nothing changed.

“No way, no way, no way...”

She ran out of the bathroom. The class had ended and all the lights had turned off.

“Ah...”

Tomer collapsed to the floor devastated.

* * *

All the cadets sat on a grass field after the combat training. Some frowned as they consumed potions while most talked about the artifact scramble.

“Is Jamer not out yet?” Kim Soohyuk called out Tomer’s fake name.

“Tsk.”

Chae Nayun sat alone and picked on the poor grass. She felt unhappy about many things. They had won, but she didn’t finish her fight with Rachel. They also couldn’t defeat Kim Hajin in a six versus one scenario even though Shin Jonghak interfered. Most importantly, what Yi Jiyeon said bothered her.

“Hmm.”

Yoo Yeonha approached her with a grin.

“Are you bothered?”

“What do I have to be bothered by?” Chae Nayun bluntly retorted as Yoo Yeonha nodded.

“Oh really? I just thought what Yi Jiyeon said might’ve bothered you.”

“W-What, are you crazy? Why would I be bothered by that? I don’t even remember what she said.”

“But still...”

Yoo Yeonha stared at Kim Hajin. He sat with his team and Rachel under a big tree. Yoo Yeonha spoke straightforwardly, “He might get taken away at this rate.”

“Wh, what? Taken away? Can you stop spouting bullshit? He never belonged to me in the first place.”

Her actions contradicted her words as she clenched her fists. Yoo Yeonha looked at her before continuing.

“Well, I don’t believe in those rumors either, but he might be searching for someone else since you keep pushing him away.”

Chae Nayun slowly looked towards Kim Hajin. She saw Rachel next to him and frowned before looking away.

“He isn’t my type to begin with if his feelings change so easily.”

“Pft.”

Yoo Yeonha couldn’t help but laugh at her excuse. Chae Nayun wanted to rebuttal, but Yoo Yeonha continued, “Nayun.”

“What now?”

“Who is it between Kim Suho and Kim Hajin?”

“You—! It’s not like that!”

Chae Nayun shouted with a red face. The nearby cadets looked over, but Yoo Yeonha couldn’t stop laughing.

“Then is it Jonghak?”

“Are you crazy?”

She reacted much colder. Yoo Yeonha felt somewhat relieved since it couldn’t be Shin Jonghak.

“I’m jealous,” Yoo Yeonha blurted out feeling a bit bitter.

“About what?”

“I have no one, but you get to choose from three.”

“Ueek.”

Chae Nayun shook her head and didn’t bother to answer. Then Shin Jonghak confidently swaggered towards them. He felt through the roof after racking up nine eliminations and stealing two artifacts.

“Yo, Chae Nayun.”

“Oh, Shin Jonghak. Your team lost. How do you feel?”

Chae Nayun snickered as she made fun of him. However, Shin Jonghak felt satisfied as his team’s MVP.

“It couldn’t be helped since Team White had you.”

“Hm, I guess you’re right.”

Tomer finally walked out of the excavation site. Chae Nayun glanced over as Kim Soohyuk approached Tomer with a scary expression.

“Jamer, why did you come out so late?”

“...”

“I checked your smartwatch GPS. It looks like you stayed in the seventh floor bathroom the entire time.”

Tomer looked completely lost and couldn’t even reply.

I returned to my room after the scramble. My body ached all over. Perhaps I should’ve eliminated myself, but I stayed until the end because I never wrote about it in detail.

“Hajin. Hajin. Hajin.”

My fatigue melted away as Evandel ran up with a bright smile. I held her up and looked around at a nightingale, a crow-tit, a dog, and a cat. Evandel had made all sorts of animals.

“You didn’t forget to keep them inside the room, right?”

“Un!”

Evandel replied as she checked my hands and pockets. However, I didn't bring anything back. Next, she peeked over my shoulder and even checked my back. I didn't have any food there either as she looked at me confused.

“Hajin, you didn't bring anything?”

“Ah, sorry. I am tired, so I forgot.”

“...”

Evandel closed her mouth. Her sparkling eyes filled with disappointment as she began to tear up. I stopped her from crying with just one sentence.

“But I ordered chicken and pizza. It'll arrive soon.”

Her expression immediately brightened.

“Aha! I see. I see.”

Of course, I lied. I would have to order them while I pretended to use the bathroom.

“I need to use the bathroom.”

I set her down and went to order a chicken and pizza set on the toilet. Then I checked the most recent news.

“Oh!” I exclaimed at the trending front page.

[New guild Packhorse Master conquers Suwon Devil's Nest!]

It had been a while, so I worried that something might've gone wrong. However, I felt relieved now. I quickly entered the guild stock market.

As expected, my 1.5 billion won had turned into 10.3 billion.

“Bravo.”

I felt happy, but also slightly worried. Should I sell this now or later? The stock price should multiply by ten, but it currently only jumped by seven. Perhaps I should check again tomorrow. Of course, I could still receive 10.3 billion won if I sold it now and comfortably live the rest of my life. However, the money would disappear once I returned to my world.

“...”

Suddenly, a strange feeling filled my heart. I couldn't quite describe the mixture of bitterness with a heart-wrenching emptiness.

“Ah, rather than that...”

I slapped my cheeks and shook away such thoughts. I needed to worry about something else.

“Singing, singing... Yi Yeonghan, you son of a bitch.”

No enemies would infiltrate Cube until the end of the next midterms, so I only had to worry about singing. Yi Yeonghan, you fuck.

“Ah!”

I suddenly remembered about arts and accessed my laptop.

[Art (1/3)]

I could create up to three arts. Currently, I only had parkour, but I would have to be crazy to fill one of these precious slots with singing unless I could delete it later. I tried deleting parkour just in case.

[Parkour will be deleted and 200 SP will be refunded. You will not maintain the level you achieved.]

“Oh geez.”

I immediately canceled. Thankfully, they could be deleted, and even a portion of SP returned. I might consider singing. I projected the hologram keyboard and tried creating an art.

[Master Singer] — Will allow you to masterfully sing.

“It’s only singing. How expensive can it be?”

I tried hitting save.

[Master Singer] [Practical] — Will allow you to masterfully sing and clearly convey your emotions.

[500 SP will be used. Would you like to save?]

It cost more than I thought. This art made someone sing at an artistic level.

“I don’t need to sing that well.”

I didn’t intend on shocking the crowd with high notes and becoming a singer. I only wanted to avoid a one-time embarrassment. It would be enough to sound like a good ballad singer.

“Is it possible?”

I tried to change the content.

— Will allow you to sing beautifully.

[150 SP will be used. Would you like to save?]

I could accept that even though it wasn’t cheap either. The crowd would contain at least 4000 spectators. Singing in front of such a large crowd would probably net me around 60-70 SP.

“Yi Yeonghan, you son of a bitch.”

I cursed the source of this evil once again, then hit save.

“Ah, aaah, aaaaaah. Oho oho, oho oho.”

I made different noises as I pressed my neck.

“Hyohyohyo, yohyohyohyo, yohyohyo. Yodelei, yodelei.”

I couldn’t notice any differences. Tok, tok. Evandel knocked on the bathroom door.

— Hajin, someone knocked on the door. Hehe, I think the chicken is here.”

Evandel began to drool already.

“Uh, yeah, I got it.”

I ran out to receive the chicken and pizza. When I came back, Evandel modestly sat in front of the kitchen table with plastic gloves. I placed the chicken and pizza on the table before opening them up.

“Make sure to chew.”

“Un!”

Then I went back to practicing. Ah, Aaah, aaaaaah. Woong—
Suddenly, my smartwatch rang.

[Hajin, you have to sing, right? Don’t you need to practice?]

Jin Hoseung messaged our team’s group chat.

[Wanna go karaoke? What do you think, Rachel?]

Yi Bokgyu sent a suggestion. I secretly looked forward to Rachel’s reply. I felt confident now thanks to my new art and the hornflute.

[I have to study. I want to go, but... I don’t have the time π.π]

Rachel seemed unavailable.

“Damn.”

Then I had no reason to go either. Why would I go karaoke with a bunch of guys? I said I couldn’t make it too and took off my smartwatch.

Jain stared at a monitor in Jeronimo Mercenary’s office located in Seoul. She wore the face of the world’s rank 58 mercenary, Yohan Zestiops.

“This will do.”

She searched for a suitable apprentice mercenary mission. The mission had to involve killing someone, an evildoer who deserved death. She contacted Boss after finding a mission that met all the criteria.

“Yeah, Boss. I found one.”

— What is it?

“An Italian Mafia. He’s apparently a djinn. No, he’s like a djinn.”

— Not bad.

“Ah, but are you sure he accepted the offer?”

Jain wasn’t sure whether Kim Hajin had decided to join Jeronimo Mercenary.

— I received a positive reply.

“Really? What did he say?”

— Mm... hold on.

Boss went silent as she searched through her messages.

— He said, I'll contact you soon when I have time. I think this sounds very positive.

Jain felt a slight headache the moment she heard Boss' words.

"Boss, you... when did you receive that message?"

— The day I gave him our business card.

"That was two weeks ago."

— Yeah, so he should be contacting me any moment now. Make sure you have that mission ready.

Boss said what she wanted and hung up as Jain sighed. Was it because Boss never experienced a normal life? Or was she like this naturally? She acted too dense.

"Tsk. I have no choice, but to do as I'm told."

Jain placed the mafia assassination in the confirmed folder.

Chapter 91

Fake and Real (3)

“Hmm.”

I stood in front of Dorm 2’s entrance on Thursday after class. I would’ve never expected to visit the girls’ dorm. I had no choice since class competitions began tomorrow, and everyone would be busy with midterms in two weeks.

I walked into Dorm 2 after taking a deep breath. Then I ran into someone unexpected. She wore comfortable clothes on her way to the library. I greeted her.

“Rachel!”

She stopped and swallowed hard when she saw me. I approached her since she didn’t move.

“Are you going to the library?”

“Y-Yes... what are you doing here?”

“Ah, I have something to do.”

I replied with a smile. Then I carefully examined her. She looked a bit different during exams. Her hair seemed more disheveled. She always pushed herself to compete with me.

“Oh right, you haven’t been asking me any questions lately.”

“I thought I should try solving them by myself first. Also, you’re probably busy studying too.”

“You can always ask if you have any trouble. I’m fine with it.”

Rachel silently nodded. I wanted to accompany her to the library, but I didn't have time.

"Then you should get going. I'll see you tomorrow."

"Yes."

Rachel seemed to be in a hurry to the library. Did she want to study that much? I headed further to the pavilion near room 201. I walked up to her as she lightly waved.

"You're here."

Yoo Yeonha spoke with a smile. As always, she wore casual black clothes. Her white skin suited the black blouse and skirt.

"Yeah."

"Why did you call me?"

Yoo Yeonha stared with interest. I came to her because of the ginseng I recently found with Kim Suho. I thought about how to use the five year old ginseng since I had more than enough money now. It would be best to produce medicine. However, I didn't have the connections or equipment. I tried using stigma's magic power, but two streaks were nowhere near enough.

"You made a pharmaceutical firm, right?"

"..."

Yoo Yeonha flinched at my straightforward question, but anyone could've found out. Most in Cube already knew she operated a business.

"It's been about two months. My close acquaintances all know. What about it?"

Yoo Yeonha's pharmaceutical firm would definitely succeed. Hosup did a quick background check for me and found that they weren't performing so well. She lacked materials even though she had the necessary researchers and equipment. Yoo Yeonha struggled to find a proper ginseng digger because most already had exclusive contracts with bigger pharmaceutical companies. These companies wouldn't flinch at Essence of the Strait's name.

However, Yoo Yeonha would never give up. Eventually, her firm became one of the top three pharmaceutical companies. It only took ten years thanks to all the connections she had built.

"Here."

I threw her the ginseng. Yoo Yeonha received it with a confused look. Her jaws dropped once she identified it. I hoped to become one of her connections.

"T-This..."

"It's a five year old ginseng. Use it for research. You can pay me back later with high-quality medicine."

If I remembered correctly, the person in charge of Yoo Yeonha's pharmaceutical firm had a gift called Researcher. With this gift, he never forgot a technique. I wouldn't wait long until I received high-intermediate rank medicine. Yoo Yeonha looked back and forth between me and the ginseng before putting it away.

"Where did you get this? Ginsengs don't often appear on the market."

She suddenly flinched since she realized she had referred to Violet Banquet, the black market. She began to sweat as I smirked.

"It's possible, right?"

"Ah, yes, of course. I'll pay you back with interest. It'll take a while though."

"That's fine."

I gave her a thumbs up. Yoo Yeonha stared at me before mischievously smiling.

“By the way, have you prepared for the singing competition?”

“Yeah, I picked a song and even went to a rehearsal this morning.”

“This morning?”

“Yeah, that’s why I wasn’t in class for the morning announcements.”

Cube had even hired professional musicians for the class competitions. They all had gifts related to music and arranged the song I chose in under an hour.

“Huhu. Can I look forward to it?”

Yoo Yeonha laughed at the thought of me singing, but I confidently replied, “Yeah, look forward to it. It’ll go beyond your expectations.”

Suddenly, her smartwatch vibrated. She glanced at the call and looked at me.

“I’ll take my leave now.”

“Yes, thank you. I’ll return today’s favor two... no, threefold in the future.”

Yoo Yeonha picked up the call on her earphones as I turned to leave. However, I grew curious and strained my ears.

— Yes, I’m at Daehyun hospital. Nurses are saying that Chae Jinyoon’s finger just moved. I stopped by to check if it was true.

My feet suddenly stopped when I overheard the news. I quickly turned around to face Yoo Yeonha.

“Really?”

— Yes, but...

“Ah, hold on a minute.”

Yoo Yeonha put the call on hold and glanced at me. I asked without being tactful at all.

“What is it for?”

“Uh, well, just networking.”

“I see.”

“Um... what’s up with that face?”

I turned around without answering. I felt a stinging pain in my head as I walked away in a daze. Chae Jinyoon’s finger moved. Of course, the nurses might’ve made a mistake or it could’ve just been a simple convulsion. Regardless, the news made my heart beat faster.

“...”

I came across a bench and sat down. I needed to know when the seed would germinate. I immediately opened the Book of Truth.

When will the devil seed in Chae Jinyoon germinate?

The Book of Truth didn’t answer, which meant stigma’s magic power wasn’t enough. I broadened the scope of the question and asked again.

Give me an approximate estimate of how much the devil seed in Chae Jinyoon has developed.

This time, it consumed all two streaks of stigma. Then 89% appeared on the book’s page. I had roughly half a year left assuming the seed took five years. I didn’t have much time before winter ended and spring began.

I held up my smartwatch. When will you contact me? Boss had messaged me.

— Cube's first year class competitions will now begin!

The first day started with a soccer tournament. Everyone from Veritas class went to cheer for our eleven classmates. Most cadets rejoiced that we didn't have our usual phenomenon realm analysis class.

"Wow."

I watched the match for twenty minutes and felt glad I didn't participate. Cadets couldn't use magic power, but their physical abilities transcended humans. These monsters could run 100 meters in 3 seconds and didn't play soccer normally. The ball flew back and forth along with the players. I watched it like a movie. Then Rachel suddenly poked my shoulder from the side.

"Hm?"

She looked at me and mumbled, "Um..."

"Yes?"

"Today's singing..."

"What about it?"

"What song..."

"What song am I singing?"

Rachel nodded. She seemed a bit worried and also scared. Was she that worried I would fail? How kind. I replied with a smile.

"Have you heard of a song called 'If'?"

"Hm?"

It didn't seem like she knew. I couldn't blame her since it came out in 2008. Real singers also existed in this world perhaps because I mentioned them in my novel. I chose a song from a female artist because I empathized with the lyrics, especially the line, I'm afraid to meet because of the future goodbye.

"You probably haven't heard of it. It came out in 2008."

"2008?"

"I think so."

I had to lower the key, but the Cube musicians made all the necessary arrangements. They even praised me as a great singer.

"Whoaa!"

The crowd cheered as Kim Suho made a goal. Now that I think about it, I had created the class competitions to make Kim Suho shine.

"..."

I spotted Chae Nayun in the front row happily cheering. A part of me felt uneasy. Did she hear the news? Did she know her older brother would wake up in half a year? Chae Nayun turned around and met my eyes. I gave her a weak smile and turned away.

The 90 minute soccer match came to an end as our class won. Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak scored three goals and two goals respectively. The opponent didn't score a single one thanks to Yi Yeonghan's miraculous saves and Kim Horak's defense.

The outdoor competitions continued until 5 P.M. Afterwards, cadets moved to the indoor auditorium to watch today's final event, the singing competition. The auditorium had a maximum capacity of 4000 people. The second and third year cadets also came to watch.

"Oh right, class competitions are only for first years."

Chae Nayun looked around and wondered why so many upperclassmen showed up.

“Yeah, our second year seniors can’t participate even if they wanted to, so they’re spectating instead,” Yoo Yeonha briefly replied.

“Is Kim Hajin really going to represent our class?”

Chae Nayun couldn’t find him since participants stayed in the waiting rooms. She couldn’t help but worry since Kim Hajin didn’t look like the type who could sing. He looked like a stereotypical tone-deaf person. Wouldn’t he just embarrass our class?

“He looked confident. He told me to look forward to it, so I am.”

Yoo Yeonha snickered and turned towards the stage. The emcee appeared and started the singing competition at exactly 6 o’clock. A female American cadet named Neilee from World class took the stage.

— I chose a song called “Promise.”

Neilee sang an R&B song.

“Oh, I know this song.”

Chae Nayun grew excited because she liked the song. Neilee met Chae Nayun’s expectations and turned up the atmosphere with her explosive voice.

“She’s gotta be the first place winner.”

“Yeah, she’s great,” Kim Suho replied from next to Chae Nayun. He had approached her before she noticed.

“Kim Suho? When did you get here?”

“Just now. When is Hajin coming up?”

“I don’t know.”

A Chinese cadet named Jin Harim from Cultivation class went next. He sang a song called “Sad Day,” filled with high notes. Every cadet afterward also sang songs filled with high notes and a powerful climax. The competition continued and eventually reached the ninth stage.

“Auu, my ears.”

Chae Nayun and many in the audience grew tired of hearing the same songs. Tak, tak. Then Kim Hajin walked up to the stage dressed nicely in his black jacket and jeans. He seemed taller than usual as though he wore shoe inserts.

“Ooh, look at Hajin.”

Kim Suho smiled brightly like a fan as Kim Hajin appeared. Chae Nayun seemed dumbstruck at Kim Suho’s reaction.

— Please introduce yourself.

The audience busily talked perhaps because the eighth contender sang too good. However...

— I’m Kim Hajin from Veritas class.

A single sentence silenced the crowd. His voice sounded surprisingly pleasant.

— I prepared a song called “If.”

— “If?”

— Yes. I don’t think many people have heard of it since it came out in 2008.

The audience began to stir.

“What?”

“2008? Is it trot?”

“Is he an attention whore?”

Most first year cadets were born in 2008. They considered music from almost two decades ago old-fashioned. However, Kim Hajin remained unbothered.

— Then I'll start.

The lights turned off except for a single spotlight on Kim Hajin. The piano accompaniment began as Kim Hajin's breath melted along with it.

— If I were to go...

The first line rang out and ended the audience's complaints. His soft vocals continued to embrace the auditorium. It grew quieter as the song progressed and only his voice could be heard.

— Because I'm such a fool, I can only watch you from afar...

Kim Hajin recited the lyrics with his eyes closed as if he was savoring them. He didn't sing a single high note or use any fancy technique. However, his beautiful voice captivated the audience. It felt heavy, delicate, sweet, and temperate. Everyone held their breath as they savored the moment.

“His voice.”

Chae Nayun murmured in a daze. Goosebumps appeared on her arms as she stared at Kim Hajin. His voice seemed to flutter in front of her. It shone so brilliantly that she felt she could touch it if she reached out just a bit.

— Because I'm afraid of the pain and sadness that comes after.

The cold falsetto of the final line perfectly melded into the atmosphere. The audience felt dazed even after the song ended as though they had just woken up from a dream. Soon, they applauded.

However, Chae Nayun remained frozen as the lyrics lingered in her ears.

“Thank you.”

Kim Hajin bashfully smiled as he bowed. He spotted Rachel in the audience with teary eyes.

This song is pretty sad.

Kim Hajin lightly smiled, but his smile disappeared when he saw Chae Nayun behind Rachel. He turned around uncomfortably.

Soon, he received an alert on his smartwatch.

[You have obtained 98 SP!] [A lucky bonus has occurred! You have obtained an additional 15% SP!]

Worry (1)

The singing competition ended and the results quickly came out. Kim Hajin didn't win first or even second place. He placed fourth. His choice of music and voice sounded great, but the judges still graded contestants based on high notes. However, everyone undoubtedly talked about his performance. Cadets had already uploaded it onto social media.

"Ah, it feels like I went to a concert."

"Right? Who was your favorite?"

"Kim Hajin, Neilee, and Harim. Kim Hajin caught me off guard. I heard he goes out a lot. Maybe learned how to sing at karaoke."

Rachel remained in the audience and eavesdropped on the other cadets' conversations. She needed some time to organize all her thoughts.

Kim Hajin showed a good performance today. He didn't confess to her like many people said he would. She had trouble sleeping lately because she had nightmares about it. She felt glad that it was over now.

However, the song that Kim Hajin chose kept bothering her. His voice felt sincere, and the lyrics said he wanted to grow closer, but feared rejection.

Perhaps he realized I kept avoiding him. Now that I think about it, I've been avoiding him too obviously these days. Did he notice?

Rachel felt sorry and sighed.

“What are you doing here?”

“...?”

A voice interrupted her thoughts. Rachel slowly turned and saw Chae Nayun.

“Aren’t you leaving?” Chae Nayun pointed to the exit.

Rachel finally noticed her surroundings. Everyone had already left.

“Ah.”

Rachel began walking towards the exit. Chae Nayun followed her with a strange look. It was already 10 and dark outside. Rachel looked worried as Chae Nayun glanced at her from the side. Then Chae Nayun joined up with her friends.

“Chae Nayun, where are you going next? Yaawn.”

“Back to my room.”

She briefly replied and looked around.

“By the way, where did he go?”

“Who?”

“Kim Hajin.”

“That person went that way. To the church,” Yoo Yeonha answered.

“Church?”

Cube also provided religious facilities to support cadets from various backgrounds. Most religious cadets were Protestant, and some devout cadets even wanted to become priests.

“Why the church?”

“I don’t know. Does it bother you?”

“Oh please,” Chae Nayun replied indifferently as she glanced at Rachel walking towards the dorm in the opposite direction of the church.

“Well, I’m going to bed if you aren’t doing anything else. Yaawn.”

Shin Jonghak had participated in three competitions today: soccer, the dungeon speedrun, and duels. Chae Nayun waved her hand as if to say, I don’t need you.

“Yes, please go to sleep.”

“Hm.”

Yoo Yeonha watched Chae Nayun’s odd behavior.

“Nayun, what are you going to do?”

“Nothing. I’ll just go back and play some games before sleeping.”

“Mmm... you’re not going to the church, right?”

“W-Why would I go there? I’m not religious.”

Chae Nayun grumbled uncomfortably.

I sat on a worship chair as the wood creaked beneath me and stared at the cross in front of me. The moon shone through the stained glass as I looked at the colorful art and thought about this holy place for confession. I reflected in this huge chapel and waited for an unknown holiness to embrace me.

“...Well... there’s nothing special.”

I scratched the back of my neck. I didn’t have any grand reason to come here. Main characters often visited a church when they felt anguished. Then they would suddenly be enlightened.

“Yaawn”

It seemed that only occurred in movies. Or maybe I was just an extra and not the main character. The silence made me sleepy as I checked my smartwatch again.

[You might have to kill someone.] [But you will receive a hefty reward.] [You won’t have to worry about your identity. As Jeronimo Mercenary’s apprentice, we guarantee it will remain a secret. We can also extend this guarantee when you become an official mercenary.]

Boss responded when I asked, How much is the pay? I only asked to play along since she only knew how to appease people with money.

“Mercenary...”

Anyone could become a mercenary by law. They could even hold the position while working another job. Many heroes worked as part-time mercenaries for money. Around 50 to 100 Cube graduates, and probably half the dropouts, became mercenaries.

The Chameleon Troupe participated in huge events like artifact scrambles and the Tower of Dimension. I wouldn’t have to worry about straying from the main storyline if I joined them. Most importantly, I would be able to kill Chae Jinyoon without difficulty. The security around him should’ve grown lax after 5 years.

“Huu.”

However, the thought of killing someone weighed on my conscience. The Chameleon Troupe would continue to kill many people. The only difference between them and Evil Society was that they didn’t kill needlessly.

Could I commit such crimes? I felt uncertain. This world was no longer just a novel.

The door creaked open as I pondered with my eyes closed. I slowly opened my eyes as the footsteps came closer and someone sat next to me.

“Are you Christian?”

The voice echoed inside the church. I glanced to the side and grinned.

“No. What about you?”

“Hmm...”

Kim Suho looked at the cross as he responded, “No, me neither.”

Despite what he said, his eyes carried a hint of nostalgia.

“Then what’s up with that look?”

“Oh, I didn’t notice.”

“You looked like a devout believer. I would’ve believed you if you wanted to become the Pope.”

“Pft, it’s not like that. I just remembered something from the past.”

The past. Indeed, Kim Suho’s past was quite special. I smiled.

“You used to go to church?”

“No, but something like that.”

“Catholic?”

Kim Suho shook his head.

“Buddhism?”

He smiled without answering, which meant no.

“Mormonism? Zoroastrianism? Hinduism? Islam? Greek Orthodox? Confucianism? Taoism?”

“Hahaha, no, none of them. I was never a faithful believer.”

I nonchalantly threw out a sentence after listening to him.

“Then what, is it a religion from another world?”

“...”

For a moment, Kim Suho’s eyes widened. I threw a tiny stone into his heart, but pretended to be oblivious.

“Please.”

Kim Suho laughed and shook his head. He suddenly turned serious.

“But Hajin...”

His voice filled with longing.

“Do you think other worlds exist? You know, like Lord of the Rings.”

Tolkien died in 1973 around the time Outcall occurred. His work stood firmly in this world as a timeless masterpiece. I looked at the cross in front without meeting Kim Suho’s eyes.

“Outcall occurred 50 years ago. Throughout human history, no monsters had ever appeared in this world.”

I faced Kim Suho.

“Rather than saying monsters suddenly appeared on Earth, it would make more sense that they crossed over from other worlds.”

“...”

Kim Suho remained silent. I wondered what he thought. Honestly, we had similar circumstances. However, he came to this world at a young age and obtained another family. Unlike me, he wasn't alone and probably only missed his original family every once in a while.

Kim Suho slowly spoke, “Then do you...”

“That's part of the Otherworld Theory presented by Dr. Jerus.”

I shrugged and cut him off. Kim Suho laughed.

“Ah, is that one of the theories explaining Outcall?”

“Yeah. It's criticized for being groundless, but I find it convincing. Outcall happened out of nowhere. It's stupid to try and explain something illogical with logic.”

“I guess so.”

We became silent, but it didn't feel uncomfortable. Then I grew curious.

“Oh right, are you using Misteltein well?”

“Of course. I've been hunting monsters like you suggested. I feel it's growing stronger.”

“Haha. Then let's find better equipment together in the future. By the way, you don't have an agent, right? I'll introduce you to one.”

Kim Suho had to grow stronger even faster than in the original story. It didn't have to be me. Even if I died, Kim Suho could continue and complete the main story.

Kim Suho interrupted my thoughts.

“An agent, huh. By the way, what could be better than Misteltein?”

“Who knows? The world is full of artifacts.”

I stood up since I had spent enough time worrying here.

“I’ll leave first.”

“Oh, okay. I’m going to stay a little longer.”

“See you later.”

I left Kim Suho at the church.

“Huu...”

[Victory]

I breathed a sigh of relief. I would’ve lost if Random Consolidation System had been just 3% lower.

— Wow, you’re amazing, hyung. I went all out this time too.

Jajangman messaged me.

— I almost lost. You’re growing stronger by the day. I might not win anymore after a couple of months.

I couldn’t sleep, so I put on my helmet to play a match or two. Jajangman happened to be up, so we ended up playing seven matches.

— True, I’ve been getting stronger lately.

Jajangman and I grew close enough to call each other brothers because I could act my original age (26) online.

— Why are you up so late?

I changed the topic. It was 3 A.M. on Saturday now. I had already beat him seven times and grew sleepy.

— Oh, well, something happened today and I can't fall asleep.

— What happened?

— It's nothing much.

Oh? It sounded like a relationship problem. Well, Jajangman was still a teenager. Half of his life should be about friends and the other half about girls. I felt slightly jealous. After all, I had to worry about killing someone or figuring out a way back home.

— Tell me. I'm 8 years older than you, so I have more experience.

— Well, it's just that, um...

— Yeah?

— It's like... you don't want it, but you don't want someone else to have it either.

Aha, I get it. This son of a bitch, he's the popular type!

— So you're the one on the receiving end?

— Cough, well, I can't say I'm too experienced.

Why does he sound like a dick today? I smirked and replied.

— What happened so suddenly?

— Nothing, it's just been on my mind recently.

— On your mind?

— Yes. A little.

— Well, you've gotta have a reason, right?

I started to grow interested.

— Yes, so um... that person sang in a talent show today. I think the song was meant for me.

— Whoa...

A girl appealing to a guy with a song? She must be quite assertive. Or maybe Jajangman was that handsome.

— Then can't you just accept her feelings?

— No, I don't think that's right.

— Why not? What if someone steals her away? You might regret it later.

I spoke from experience. As a 26 year old, I knew girls who had crushes on me, but rejected them because I wasn't interested. I always felt sour when I saw them dating other guys later. I even remembered thinking, That girl used to like me.

— Wow, you're saying the same thing as my friend, but I don't think I'll regret it.

— Of course, you don't feel that way right now, but you will later. Didn't you say she was on your mind?

— Just a little bit. No, a tiny bit.

I could feel he was the prideful type who didn't like losing. He was still too young. You had to lose once in a while to learn from your regrets.

— Doesn't the fact that you're staying up contradict what you're saying?

— Yes? Uh... no... right?

— Trust me. I've been through the same thing. From today, you'll suddenly only see her good points. It'll be too late once she gets a boyfriend.

I waited for his reply for 1 minute, 3 minutes, 5 minutes...

“Did he fall asleep?”

Damn, I wondered what he would do.

I checked the time. It was already 3:40 and time for me to sleep. I took off the helmet and lay in bed.

Worry (2)

Saturday's class competition began with archery as a large crowd gathered at the range. Many people wanted to watch because they considered archery an extreme sport in this world. Archers didn't just shoot targets in the distance that ordinary people couldn't even see. Instead, they included all sorts of magic effects and summoned monsters that hindered the archers. These effects made it more thrilling for audiences. Naturally, a professional archer received great wealth and honor.

"Mm."

I sat in the waiting room and watched the match outside. The rules sounded simple. Two archers stood in a 75 meter-wide lane with only one life to score the farthest distance. However, they didn't use a tournament format since each match cost a surprising amount of money. Archers would only participate in one match, but their scores would determine the first to twelfth place rankings.

— The match between Acceptance class and Cultivation class has ended. Currently, Eustass Haim holds the first place record at 320 meters.

The fifth match finally ended. However, the first place record only remained at 320 meters for several reasons.

"The last match will take place between Veritas class and Virtue class. Archers, please come out."

A staff called for me and a French cadet named Baire Moren. I knew Moren since he was one of the top sharpshooters in Cube and would later join Creator's Sacred Grace. He constantly opposed Kim Suho, but they would work together in the end. He surpassed Chae Nayun in terms of pure archery skill. I glanced at Moren and checked my gift's proficiency.

[Master Sharpshooter] [Intermediate rank] [Spirit attribute] [Evolving — Grade 6] [Proficiency EXP 27%]

Its growth stagnated at grade 6 and hadn't progressed much. I slightly worried, but felt confident enough.

"Yes, the representatives are now appearing. Cadet Kim Hajin and cadet Moren, please head to the field."

I left the waiting room with a bow on my back.

The sunlight shone with no shade at noon. Chae Nayun sat with a bag of popcorn and a can of Coke.

"Why are there so many magicians?"

Chae Nayun murmured as she looked around the archery range. She spent most of her morning loitering around until Kim Hajin's competition. The robed magicians surprised her.

"They're probably here to see the 8 star magician today."

Yoo Yeonha pointed at the VIP observatory.

"Oh, magician Ah Hae-In?"

Ah Hae-In was a French 8 star magician who became a naturalized Korean citizen at the age of 11. Only 300 magicians at the 8 star level existed in the world, and she was quite young and beautiful. Every magician admired her like an idol although her personality was a bit strange.

"I heard she was visiting. No wonder I felt the earthquake from so far away."

Competitive archery commonly featured earthquakes. Chae Nayun also looked forward to the summoned monsters and traps. She couldn't wait to see Kim Hajin suffer.

— Next is Veritas class' Kim Hajin v.s. Virtue class' Baire Moren.

"Oh, it's our class now."

Chae Nayun looked at the archery range with popcorn in her hand as Kim Hajin and Baire Moren came out side by side. They shook hands before heading towards their respective lanes.

"Hmm..."

Yoo Yeonha observed Kim Hajin's movements with a hand on her chin. Kim Hajin walked up to the archery plate full of confidence.

"Looks like we have nothing to worry about."

Cadets took a lot of pride in the class competitions. Veritas class felt bitter every time they lost because everyone expected them to win. It felt like an international competition between nations instead of classes.

"By the way, what's he mumbling?"

Chae Nayun frowned as Yoo Yeonha looked at the two competitors. Indeed, Baire Moren had said something to Kim Hajin.

"Trash talk, I guess? Baire Moren is known for being sly and ill-tempered."

"Oh really?"

Yoo Yeonha rarely gave false information, so Chae Nayun fully believed her.

It does seem like he's provoking Kim Hajin. I see, Moren is a piece of shit.

Ah Hae-In sat in the VIP observatory adorned with all sorts of decoration and food.

“Grand Duchess Ah Hae-In, is that child your nephew?”

A 5 star magician who volunteered as her attendant carefully asked.

“Unofficially, yes. Officially, I’m the founder of the Ah clan, so I have no relatives.”

Ah Hae-In grinned as she looked down at the archery range. She came to see her nephew who grew up well. He stood out next to some average-looking guy. The 5 star magician admired Ah Hae-In and spoke in a trembling voice.

“Is it?”

Ah Hae-In placed her hand on an orb.

“I just need to continue what I did before, right?”

“Yes, you can start with a light earthquake.”

“I can do whatever I want after 350 meters, right? Since no one has managed past that yet.”

“Yes, but the obstacles have to be the same for both lanes.”

Ah Hae-In laughed at the 5 star magician’s admonishment. Then she shot back at him.

“Would I be able to do that? Don’t you know how much I cherish my nephew?”

“Ah...ahaha... Well, it’s not a test, but a small festival for cadets. Do as you wish, Grand Duchess. Cadets will feel honored by just your presence.”

The subordinate magician showed excessive loyalty since 8 star magicians could be considered nobles among nobles. Only 87 of them existed in Korea. A single archery event as a bribe wouldn’t cause any problems. It would be a huge boon if the Grand Duchess became a guest lecturer.

“If you say so.”

Ah Hae-In smiled in satisfaction.

“Damn.”

The first place cadet only reached 320 meters for a reason. I passed 250 meters just now, but my legs already felt sore because of the earthquakes.

“Wow, you’re pretty good. I guess it’s true you have a specialized gift.”

Moren relaxingly spoke from next to me. Naturally, I grew suspicious of the competition. The magic effects and obstacles looked completely different in my lane compared to his lane.

“Tsk, you sure are relaxed.”

“Are you sure you don’t just lack training?”

“Sigh.”

He provoked me with an irritating smile. I stared at the observatory with the magician in charge of the magic effects and spotted a western woman. Her red hair perfectly suited her fair skin as eight golden stars shone on her black cape. Another magician flattered her from the side.

“Hm...”

I only knew one such person with those features. The 8 star magician named Ah Hae-In. I tried recalling if she knew Moren and stealthily turned on my smartwatch. Aha!

“Hey, your aunt is over there. Are you gonna go say hi after?”

“Huh? What do you mean?”

Moren tried to act oblivious, but the corner of his mouth slightly curled up. That son of a bitch definitely knew.

“Your aunt keeps harassing me.”

“What do you mean? Are you making excuses since you’re going to miss? Just hurry up and shoot, please.”

“Tsk.”

I raised my bow at the 300 meter mark as an earthquake shook beneath me. Suddenly, hail also hammered down from the sky.

The hail blocked my vision and struck my hands and shoulders. It felt cold and painful, but my desire to win grew stronger. I focused all my senses on the bow and target. TANG! The arrow shot forward and hit its mark.

“Huu.”

“Wow, congrats.”

Moren went next. However, only soft and small hail fell on him. He hit his mark without difficulty.

“...”

The favoritism continued to escalate. I forcefully smiled and pushed forward to 350 meters.

— Both sides have surpassed the first place record! The target will move 50% faster and the participants will switch turns! Baire Moren will now go first!

Moren looked nervous as he raised his bow. Huge vines suddenly shot up from the ground as I wondered about the next obstacle.

“Whoa! What’s this?”

Moren shouted in surprise. The 10 meter vines swallowed the entire lane. A few swirled around Moren and slammed the ground next to him. KWANG! However, Moren remained poised since all archers cultivated patience and calm. The vines wouldn’t attack unless he stepped off the archery plate. Not to mention, they acted almost kindly towards him as they swayed back and forth like reeds to cool him off.

“Ah!”

Moren still failed. He couldn’t hit the target that suddenly moved 50% faster under the constant earthquake and hail. He had reached his limit.

— Ah! Moren regrettably misses!

Honestly, I also felt worried as I raised my bow. As expected, the damned vines grew even fiercer. They freely swayed during Moren’s turn, but now they violently whipped about.

“...”

I stopped thinking. Anyone could see the favoritism, but I could just tear through it. I also had an incredible backer called Lady Luck.

I nocked an arrow and pulled the bowstring. The vines angrily lashed out like a girl dumped by her lover. I could feel the rage behind them. I should get serious now too.

I activated bullet time and the world instantly slowed. The target shot up from 350 meters away. I couldn't hit that target no matter how I thought about it. The angle simply made it impossible. The target flew through the air as the monster vines completely blocked the path. Time was running out. The target would disappear at any moment.

I tightened my grip and bit my lips. Would I be able to precisely shoot an arrow through those vines without magic power? I thought about giving up, but a thought suddenly flashed in my mind.

“Scan.”

I murmured. The numbers 40 and 41 flashed on my bow and arrow. Everything about the two objects strengthened including the bowstring's elasticity and the arrow's flexibility. I widened my eyes and peered through the vines to the target. I accurately traced the trajectory and leaned my arrow slightly to the right. Then I released the bowstring.

Shwiiik—!

The arrow flew forward and bent in a strange manner. It flew right and dodged all the obstacles before curling left and flying straight like a bullet towards the target.

— Veritas class' Kim Hajin! He succeeds on the 350 meter mark!

“The hell, how did that arrow bend?”

Moren uttered in complete shock at my arrow.

“Did you use magic power?”

“You think your aunt wouldn't have noticed if I did?”

“Then what...”

I chucked my bow in front of me. I wanted to make things clear after winning through such blatant favoritism.

“This is the difference between us.”

I turned around and checked my smartwatch. I felt something just now. I had to have received a gift.

“I knew it.”

Several alerts popped up on the smartwatch.

[You performed a curving arrow. Master Sharpshooter's proficiency has increased by 15%.] [Low rank gift, Curve Shot, has been added to Master Sharpshooter.]

Curve Shot — Long ranged attacks may curve according to the shooter's will. (The extent of the curve will change depending on the gift's grade and the weapon.)

“...”

The corner of my mouth twitched. My gift's greatest strength was its scope. The proficiency earned from a gun also applied to a bow. Likewise, a gift obtained from a bow could also be used with a gun. Now I could also shoot curving bullets.

Chapter 94

Initiation (1)

Ordinary people might've missed what happened because of the angle. Giant vines had covered the sky and Kim Hajin's arrow looked like a needle. However, every cadet saw what happened. Kim Hajin's arrow clearly curved. Magic arrows commonly curved, but Kim Hajin hadn't used any magic power. They could hardly believe what they just witnessed. His arrow felt more like a well-trained raptor cutting through the tiny gap to chomp down its prey.

"Whooa!"

Chae Nayun squeezed her bag as popcorn rained down on the person in front of her.

"Ah, fuck, what is it!"

"Fucking hell, who did... Oh, it's Nayun."

"Ah, sorry. You guys can eat that."

"Huh? Oh... Uh, sure."

The cadets in front of her began to munch on the popcorn. Chae Nayun stared at them before turning towards Yoo Yeonha.

"Hey, you saw that, right?"

Yoo Yeonha grinned at Chae Nayun's awestruck voice. "Looks like he didn't want to go easy this time."

"Huh? What are you talking about?"

Yoo Yeonha continued staring at the archery range. Chae Nayun followed her gaze towards Kim Hajin who threw down his bow. He seemed somewhat angry.

“It looks like the harsh favoritism annoyed him.”

“Yeah, he has quite a temper surprisingly. The tampering seemed too obvious ever since the halfway mark. Is the magician discriminating against him because of his looks?”

“Hu, huhum.”

Yoo Yeonha could barely hold back her laughter. She didn’t think Kim Hajin looked that ugly, but he was uglier than Moren.

“It’s not because of his looks. Grand Duchess Ah Hae-In must’ve intervened since Moren is her nephew.”

The Magic Tower Association had bestowed Ah Hae-In with the title, One Man Army. She was the greatest expert in summoning magic. A master rank magician who could summon seven high rank monsters with their own intelligence.

“Didn’t Grand Duchess Ah Hae-In become a naturalized Korean citizen a long time ago? How can she have relatives?”

“Her older sister still has French citizenship. Moren is her older sister’s son.”

Grand Duchess Ah Hae-In held an S rank grade in Yoo Yeonha’s talent book. Naturally, Yoo Yeonha knew all about her family background.

“How do you know all this?” Chae Nayun curiously asked since Yoo Yeonha seemed to know everything.

“You should take some time to study too.”

“I’m too lazy.”

Chae Nayun briefly replied before staring back at Kim Hajin. The judge asked him if he wanted to continue, but Kim Hajin shook his head. Then he turned towards the crowd and suddenly made eye contact with Chae Nayun. He quickly averted his gaze, but Chae Nayun still felt an odd feeling.

“...”

She carefully placed her hand over her heart and felt it beating differently. Chae Nayun couldn't help but recall what her mentor told her. She would begin to only see his good points.

“No way, I'm not crazy.”

Chae Nayun laughed it off as the host shouted.

— Veritas class' Kim Hajin achieves the first place record at 350 meters!

Clap, clap, clap—

The competition ended with applause from the crowd. Chae Nayun saw Kim Suho heading to the waiting room and asked Yoo Yeonha, “Hey, wanna go to the waiting room?”

“No.” Yoo Yeonha stretched and stood up. “I'm busy. I have to work.”

The analysis of Kim Hajin's ginseng would arrive in the afternoon, and Falling Blossom would also meet. She hoped to learn more about Kim Hajin's past to repay her gratitude.

“How do you have so much work as a cadet?”

“I know, right?”

Yoo Yeonha headed back to the dorm.

“...”

Waiting room, dorm, waiting room, dorm. Chae Nayun hesitated before walking back to the dorm with a sigh.

“Uh...”

The archery competition finally ended. The 5 star magician became speechless. Kim Hajin won despite the excessive favoritism towards Baire Moren. How was he supposed to react? He couldn't punish that cadet for defeating the Grand Duchess' nephew.

“Pft.”

Contrary to his expectations, Ah Hae-In only smiled.

“Why do you look so afraid? It's only natural my nephew lost against someone like him.”

Only then did the 5 star magician begin to relax.

“Ha, haha... is, is that so?”

“Of course. Anyways, I'm jealous. So that's a specialized gift.”

She dreamed of becoming a hero when she was young. However, her body wouldn't develop despite her efforts. Her gift and physique specialized in magic, and she became a magician instead.

“Tell my nephew I want to see him for lunch.”

“Yes, understood.”

Ah Hae-In stood up as the 5 star magician bowed. She barely reached 164 cm thanks to the heels hidden by her cape, but her real height was only 151 cm (a rumor stated that she was even shorter, and had tiptoed during her official physical measurements). Furthermore, her small face didn't contain a single wrinkle, and her eyes sparkled like a child's.

The 5 star magician secretly doubted Ah Hae-In was 30 years old. Who would think she was the One Man Army at first glance? Weren't most Caucasians tall? Why was the Grand Duchess so short? Even the 5 star magician's fourth grade son seemed taller.

Ah Hae-In suddenly turned around. Her sharp eyes pierced the magician.

"What were you thinking just now?"

"Y-Yes? Ah, n-nothing. I just thought the golden stars on your cape looked beautiful..."

"Tsk."

Ah Hae-In clicked her tongue as the magician felt a mysterious chill. Ah Hae-In's magic power subconsciously seeped out and cooled the temperature.

"Don't stare at me when I'm standing. I don't like it."

Ah Hae-In left after admonishing the magician who stood in a daze.

"Uh..."

He flattered her all day and even allowed her to tamper with the final match, but all his efforts had gone to waste.

Rachel opened her eyes at 3 A.M. on Sunday when most should've been asleep. Her eyes hurt from shutting them too tightly to try and fall asleep.

She sighed and raised her body. The penthouse room entered into view. It looked huge, but empty. She had no talents for decorating, so she left the room as she received it. It only contained the standard furniture: a couch, a bed, and a TV.

“Sigh.”

Lately, she suffered from insomnia. Of course, she couldn't sleep well ever since that incident, but it grew more severe lately. Anxiousness and apprehension coiled around her every time she lay down to sleep. Embarrassing moments from the past few days rose in her mind, especially the mock artifact scramble. She never expected to lose so helplessly against Kim Suho. Furthermore, she also considered her fight against Chae Nayun a loss since Chae Nayun only recently switched to a sword. Rachel might've lost her rising star title if not for Kim Hajin.

She turned on her smartwatch. She only had 37 contacts and lived most of her life without any friends. Then she entered her only group chat with 153 unread messages.

[Kim Hajin, you were amazing today, you little bastard. How did you make that arrow curve?]

[I know right? The singing competition and now archery. Hajin hard-carried the two events he participated in.]

[Oh right. Jamer, are you here??]

[What.]

[Why aren't you talking?]

[I'm sick. Don't talk to me.]

[Oh look, there's an official video of Hajin's performance. It already has 10000 likes!]

The talkative Jin Hoseung sent a link in the group chat.

What is it?

Rachel grew curious and pressed on the link. A hologram video suddenly popped up over a social media page. The title read:

[Cube's rising star cadet. Live performance – If]

“Ah.”

It's the song Kim Hajin sang. Rachel's finger moved to stop the video, but then she paused. The lyrics felt slightly overbearing, but the song sounded good enough for another listen.

“Cough.”

Rachel resumed the video as Kim Hajin's sweet voice rang out after a calm piano melody.

The music filled the space in her huge room. Rachel went under her blanket and closed her eyes as she listened to the calming music.

He sounded much better live. Should I buy a Bluetooth radio tomorrow? Bluetooth... blue tooth... that reminds me of Rome... et tu, Brute...

Rachel's random thoughts drifted away as she fell asleep.

The class competitions finally ended on Sunday after the dungeon speedrun. Veritas class naturally won with all the top cadets, but that didn't mean they won overwhelmingly. The other classes won the majority of non-combat events like gaming, drawing, dancing, and cooking. The difference between first and second place was only about 30 points. In any case, they held a big celebration sponsored by Shin Jonghak.

“Yummy, yummy.”

Of course, I didn't participate and spent time with Evandel instead. She munched on a chicken wing next to me as I examined a document.

Apprentice Mercenary Mission [Difficulty: D] [Reward: 300,000,000 Korean won or an item of equivalent value] [Goal: Assassinate Siemens, the advisor to the chief of Colaion Mafia's Southern Torino Branch.

[Siemens is a notorious mafioso known for committing murder, rape, blackmail, and human trafficking. Some say he is a djinn.]

Jeronimo Mercenary had sent me this document.

“Colaion.”

The Colaion Family would later play a role in the middle of the main story.

“An apprentice mercenary is supposed to do this?”

I slightly regretted accepting the offer after looking over the document. I told myself I would write my own story, but wasn’t the difficulty too high?

The mafia in this world was dozens of times more dangerous. Especially in Italy, the mafia grew much more powerful after Outcall since monsters had lessened the government’s crackdown on them. The advisor to a Mafia branch’s chief had to be as strong as a low rank, grade 1 hero.

“A djinn...”

I would feel less guilty if he was a djinn. Furthermore, assassination would likely become my specialty since I could attack from 2 km away with the Desert Eagle’s sniper mode. However, I would have to fire within 1 km or my attack power would drastically decrease. In any case, I had no plans to immediately accept this mission. The world outside of Cube was like the wild. You could never be fully prepared.

“Let’s see.”

[Physique (0/3)]

For now, I planned on creating a physique.

Chapter 95

Initiation (2)

A physique was an innate physiological trait similar to gifts. It wouldn't be wrong to call them the body's gift. All kinds of physiques existed like regeneration, increased mana absorption, or superior organ functions. However, I planned to create a more complex physique.

[Magic Dysfunction Physique] Magic Dysfunction — This physique prevents the body from emitting magic power and traps mana inside the body.

A body that can't use magic power. It seemed like an undesirable physique. However, I couldn't naturally use magic power anyways, so I wouldn't suffer any losses. Stigma's magic power functioned separately from mine. Adding this huge restriction to my physique would cheapen the cost of an equally powerful effect.

Energy Conversion — The mana stored in your body will not disappear. Instead, it will be converted into energy that may double your physical stats when full. The energy will be depleted with every movement when used.

My physical stats would increase up to two times if I just ate and slept well. However, the stored energy would decrease with physical activity, so I would grow weaker as the fight dragged on. Still, my doubled stats could prevent me from dying.

I thought of this physique to protect myself from ambushes. I could only rely on my luck to a certain extent. After all, my stats were just too pitiful.

*[Strength 2.570] [Stamina 2.580] [Speed 3.265] [Perception 4.220]
[Vitality 2.670] [Magic power 1.930]*

Nothing had increased over 0.2 points since a month ago. At this rate,

I would only be in the 4-5 range in 10 years. I wouldn't survive the main story with a low rank hero's stats. This physique could help bridge the gap. Without hesitation, I clicked on...

"Wait..."

I changed my physique just to see how much a better one would cost.

[Mana Affinity Physique] [You do not have enough SP.]

"Can't you tell me how much I need?"

A reply quickly came.

[Approximately 5500 SP is required.]

"Fine, fine."

I changed it back to the magic dysfunction physique and hit save.

[500 SP will be consumed. Would you like to save?]

It required much less SP because of the huge restriction. I had about 350 SP left. My singing performance spread throughout social media and occasionally raised my SP. I hit enter.

"Huh?"

A golden light suddenly erupted from the screen and several messages popped up.

[Your special stat, accumulation of luck, has activated!] [Golden characters rain down into words!]

A new low rank physique appeared.

Blessing in Disguise — A tiny portion of your stored energy may permanently increase your stats. (The probability is determined by your invariable luck stat.)

“The heck.”

This seemed like a weaker version of the Getting Stronger Everyday gift I thought of long ago. I didn't complain since I received it for free. Even a 0.001 increase per day would be a net gain.

“Nice!”

I hugged Evandel in joy as she munched on a chicken leg next to me.

“Ak, what is it?”

Evandel continued eating in my arms. Nom, nom, nom, nom. She sped up thinking I would steal her food.

* * *

Cube suddenly became desolate after class competitions because of the exams in two weeks. Cadets went back and forth between the fitness center and the library. They looked even more dreary during class. Naturally, they felt less energetic during team challenges.

“Huu.”

The days went by and Thursday arrived. I stood in front of Cube's portal station after class. I wanted to visit Seoul before the next main story. A voice rang out from my right hand as I checked my wallet and cadet ID.

“Hajin, Hajin.”

“You're not allowed to talk.”

“It feels stuffy.”

“...”

Evandel had thrown a tantrum, so I had no choice but to bring her along in a pet cage.

“I want to get out of here.”

She had transformed into a short-haired Pomeranian with long golden hair. She looked much cuter and more high-class than a regular dog.

“I’ll take you out once we arrive, so wait until then.”

“...”

Evandel whimpered instead of talking. I nervously coughed as I approached the portal worker.

“Oh? A star is here.”

I tilted my head at her words.

“Yes?”

“Haha, I was just listening to your performance.”

The portal worker laughed and showed me her watch.

[Kim Hajin (Singing Competition vers.) – If.mp3]

“It’s extracted from the video. Many people downloaded it, you know.”

“Oh... really?”

“Yes. You sounded great.”

The portal worker smiled as she wrote my name down.

“Take care. Though, I don’t know where you’re going with your pet.”

[Athenian Citizen's Obsidian Bracelet] [Magic Artifact] A bracelet with magic seals once used by an ancient Athenian noble.

I went to the Seoul magic tower to retrieve the obsidian bracelet. They engraved a new magic seal on it called magic power reinforcement that functioned similarly to qi reinforcement.

— You will only be able to use it once, so save it for when it's absolutely necessary.

The artificer didn't realize the bracelet featured an automatic recharge function. Still, his honesty impressed me. I made a mental note to recommend him to Yoo Yeonha's future magic tower.

Next, I went to SH Agency's office to pick up something from Park Soohyuk. The size of their new office surprised me.

"We already have 11 employees and 5 hunters with exclusive contracts. Ah, this office is thanks to Lady Yoo's investment."

Park Soohyuk spoke proudly about Yoo Yeonha.

"That's great. You didn't forget what I invested, right?"

"Of course not. I'll return it tenfold."

"Oho."

I looked around the office in awe. The interior design looked sleek, and they even had a café. The surrounding environment also matched.

"Let's head downstairs. What you ordered is in the parking lot."

Park Soohyuk smiled as he led me downstairs to the bike.

"Oh, is that it?"

A shiny motorcycle took up two parking spaces.

“By the way, where did you get this puppy? She’s adorable.”

Park Soohyuk smiled like a dad at Evandel in his arms. She returned a bright smile and leaned into his chest. Little did he know, Evandel looked even cuter in her human form.

“Uh... try a pet adoption center.”

I replied half-heartedly and examined the bike.

[Agusta Vigilante] [Masterpiece] [High rank Mana Frame] — Weight Reduction: Will reduce the vehicle’s weight and increase its speed. — Reinforcement: Will prevent strong impacts. — Mana Booster: Will use mana for instantaneous acceleration.

It was considered a masterpiece despite being a manufactured product. The price felt worth it, but its size would be cumbersome.

“Ah, Hajin, I have to go now. My employees are looking for me.”

“Oh, okay, I’ll see you later, hyung.”

“See you.”

Luckily, Park Soohyuk had to leave. He set Evandel down and quickly ran off. I looked around the parking lot and spotted several security cameras.

“Tsk.”

I picked Evandel up and got on Agusta. Then I slowly drove to a nearby alley to add a new setting to the motorcycle.

Portability — It may transform into a suitcase using stigma’s magic power.

[100 SP will be consumed.]

I only needed 100 SP since it required stigma's magic power. I desperately needed a vehicle for the next main story, and also for future work. I hit save without hesitation.

"Let's see..."

I tried imbuing stigma's magic power into the bike. It creaked, then dismantled into a suitcase as I picked it up. It felt heavy, at least 20 kg, but it shouldn't be a burden with my current strength.

"This is great."

I held the suitcase and muttered in satisfaction. Evandel stood on her hind legs and asked.

"Hajin, Hajin, where are we going next?"

"Let's go eat. How's steak?"

"Steak?"

Oh right, she's never eaten steak before.

"It's really yummy."

"Yummy?"

"Yeah, but first... transform back into a human. I think it's okay now."

* * *

For the first time in a while, Yoo Yeonha walked down the street of Seoul Cheongdam-dong intersection with her mother, Jin Yeojung.

"Take a good look. All of this will become yours one day."

"Don't worry. I've already thought about how to use it."

This neatly arranged intersection belonged to Jin Yeojung, one of Korea's top real estate chaebols and an extraordinary businesswoman who transformed her farmer father's money into billions of won. Not only did she own Essence of the Strait's guild building, but she also owned the buildings of all their businesses like Essential Armory and Essential Insurance. Yoo Jinwoong the Berserker acted like a child in front of his wife for a reason.

"Yes, I believe you Yeonha. You're not a kid like your father."

"Dad isn't that bad. He's gotten better lately..."

Yoo Yeonha paused in the middle of her sentence and sniffed the air. She smelled a delicious scent and glanced at her mother before slowly looking around the intersection. In a nearby alley, a food stand sold spicy rice cakes, sausages, and tempura.

Ah, I know that place. A TV show featured it for being delicious. I want to try it. I want to try it...

"Yeonha?"

Jin Yeojung's cold voice rang out. Yoo Yeonha turned back to her mother in surprise. Her mother frowned at the food stand.

"Yeonha, don't tell me you haven't quit yet."

"Yes? Ah, sssp, of course. I'm not a child... ssp. I already graduated from that a long time ago."

Yoo Yeonha nonchalantly shook her head.

"Then why are you drooling?"

"Yes? Ah, my mouth has been dry lately."

Yoo Yeonha quickly averted her gaze elsewhere. Then her eyes suddenly widened.

“Eh?”

She saw someone familiar.

“What are you talking about. We have many things to do today like inspecting the area and meeting the occupants. You’ll inherit this place, so you need to know what’s going on.”

“Mother, there’s something I need to—”

“Quiet. Follow me.”

Jin Yeojung snatched Yoo Yeonha’s wrist.

“Ah, Mom... Aaah...”

Yoo Yeonha couldn’t resist as her mother dragged her away.

Chapter 96

Initiation (3)

Evandel and I arrived at a famous steakhouse jam-packed with people.

“May I help you with your order.”

“Ah, yes, can we get eight of the most expensive steaks.”

“Yes?”

The waiter tilted his head. Evandel and I could easily finish eight dishes. Three for me and five for Evandel.

“Eight?”

“Yes, and all medium rare please.”

“Uh, yes.”

After ordering, the other customers looked at us strangely. Evandel’s appearance naturally drew attention even though many foreigners lived in Seoul. I didn’t take off my sunglasses, so they would think she was the child of a Western noble that I served.

“This is the garlic steak.”

Our first order came out as Evandel’s eyes sparkled. I cut the steak into bite-sized chunks before giving it to her. Evandel’s hands trembled in excitement as she stabbed with her fork and brought a piece to her mouth.

“...!”

She quivered in ecstasy. Afterward, her hand busily moved from piece to piece. I stared at her and waited for the right moment.

“Evandel, do you think you could stay home alone for the weekend?”

She suddenly stopped chewing and silently looked at me. I felt uneasy that she actually stopped eating. She’s not going to cry, right?

“In exchange!”

I spoke before my suspicion could come true.

“I’ll buy you lots of toys today.”

“Lots?”

“Yes, lots.”

I would buy anything and everything to keep her company. Evandel nodded with a half-sulking face. She stopped eating and almost set her fork down when...

“Next is the tomahawk steak.”

The waiter brought a gigantic piece of meat as big as Evandel’s head.

“Uwhoa! What’s this!!”

Evandel quickly regained her energy.

* * *

We went to the New World Shopping Mall after our meal. I planned to take her to the toys, but she fixed her attention elsewhere. She stared at a white cat in the pet store and wouldn’t respond when I called her.

“...”

Evandel exchanged looks with the cat. Admittedly, the white kitten looked adorable. I quickly calculated the size of my dorm room. Two rooms with 60 square meters in total. It could fit a child and a cat. I've always wanted a pet anyways.

"Hajin, Hajin."

Evandel pulled on my sleeve after staring at the cat for a long time.

"I want to play with Hayang." [1]

Evandel pointed to the cat she had already named.

"Hayang? You mean that cat?"

"Un!"

Evandel replied with a bright smile. I glanced at the cat. Meow— It raised its tail when our eyes met. I couldn't help but smile. I got on my knees and looked into Evandel's eyes.

"If we raise Hayang, what are you going to do about your ghost friends?"

"Ghost friends?"

"Yeah. They might fight."

Evandel had made ten or so animals. She fell into thought before speaking.

"I'll make sure they don't fight."

"You promise?"

I raised my pinky and Evandel clumsily raised hers to promise me. I rubbed her squishy cheeks and stood up. Then I went into the pet store and asked the employee.

“Hello, how much is that cat?”

The next day, I opened the door and looked back before leaving.

“Hayang, you... why did you bite this! Do you want me to scold you!”

Evandel tried to train our new cat with a stern expression. I wondered if you could train a cat, but it did cost 6 million won. The cat should understand a few human words at least. It wouldn't be strange if it could talk.

“Evandel, I'll be back soon. Have fun with Hayang, okay?”

“We're not having fun.”

Evandel corrected me with a glare.

“Uh, right, don't scold it too much. I'm leaving.”

“Un.”

Evandel didn't pay much attention and only focused on Hayang. I felt much better now that Hayang would keep her company.

I went to Cube's portal station.

“To Seoul.”

“Yes, cadet Kim Hajin, confirmed.”

After arriving in Seoul, I took the portal connecting Seoul to Torino. I presented the worker with a fake passport provided by Jeronimo Mercenary since international portals required further identification. As expected, it worked flawlessly. I arrived in Italy in just 30 minutes.

“Interesting.”

Southern Torino looked completely unfamiliar. Italy was a rather special country because of the mafia.

Its government only acted anti-mafia on the surface. In my setting, Italy's mafia didn't just simply consist of organized crime syndicates. They cooperated with the government if a monster outbreak occurred, and a few large families operated publicly as guilds. They operated within the law with a few exceptions every now and then.

The mafia formed its headquarters in Torino and Milano, far away from the central government. Important characters included the Colaion family and the Fermun siblings. The Colaion family was the largest in Milano and Torino, and they had groomed two elite soldiers known as the Fermun brother and sister.

I had to kill a member of Italy's biggest mafia family. This mission could have come from the Colaion family itself. After all, my target used his position to sully the family's reputation.

"Little apprentice, over here."

Someone called me as I stealthily moved to the hotel. I turned towards the deep yet lethargic voice and spotted Boss.

"Eh?"

She raised her hand like a child waiting for the traffic light.

"Ah, I'm so tired."

Chae Nayun collapsed on the floor of Cube's martial arts training room. Kim Suho had just sparred with her and didn't know where to look. Her training uniform stuck to her skin and highlighted too much of her breasts. However, Chae Nayun didn't notice and glanced sideways at Yoo Yeonha sitting nearby with a serious face.

"Yoo Yeonha, what are you doing? I even went out of my way to find a sparring partner for you."

“...”

Yoo Yeonha averted her gaze and briefly replied, “I’m just thinking about something.”

Yoo Yeonha thought back to last night when she spotted Kim Hajin with a child. Who was she? His daughter? No, a 17 year old couldn’t have such a grown-up daughter. Then was she his niece? No, an orphan couldn’t possibly have a niece. Then could it be that he’s a... lolicon? No way, Kim Hajin wasn’t such a person.

“Ehhh? It doesn’t look simple. Is it Shin Jonghak again?”

Yoo Yeonha flinched when Chae Nayun mentioned Shin Jonghak.

“W-What about Jonghak?”

“Uh, nothing, I just wondered if you got rejected.”

Yoo Yeonha clenched her teeth and felt anger suddenly rising from her heart. She already felt annoyed since Shin Jonghak rejected her offer to study together. Yoo Yeonha blurted out, “Oh right, Nayun. Kim Hajin says he doesn’t like you anymore.”

“What? What are you talking about? Are you crazy?”

“Oh, is that true?”

Even Kim Suho showed interest. Yoo Yeonha shrugged.

“Of course. He says he likes Rachel more now. You’ve heard the rumors, right? I would like Rachel more too if I were him.”

“W-Wha, what? Are you crazy?”

Chae Nayun shot up. However, Yoo Yeonha continued with a bright smile.

“I’m just saying. It’s not like it matters, right? You said you didn’t like him.”

“...”

Chae Nayun became speechless and didn't know how to respond. After all, she had said that.

“Tsk.”

Chae Nayun glared at Yoo Yeonha and sat far away from her. Yoo Yeonha didn't look at her either. An awkward atmosphere came over them.

“Hey, don't be like this you two. You got along fine until just now. Yoo Yeonha, do you want to spar? I'll help since you came to train too, right? You too, Chae Nayun. Ah, where did Yi Yeonghan go?”

Kim Suho helplessly muttered between the two of them.

I took out my bike in a deserted alley of Torino. The bike popped out of nowhere and surprised Boss as she curiously rubbed her face.

“Did you come to help?”

“No, I won't be helping you.”

Then she got on my bike. I stood next to her and tilted my head.

“What are you doing?”

“Come, little apprentice. I want to go for a ride.”

“...”

I got on in front of her and grabbed the handles. Woong— The engine softly hummed as I drove onto the road.

“Little apprentice, let’s go around Torino just once. We still have a lot of time,” Boss whispered.

“Sure.”

[Horse Saddle] [Antique] A horse saddle used by a nameless cavalryman 500 years ago. You will drive better if you sit on this saddle.

The saddle I bought in Clancy Islet made the ride much more comfortable. I glanced back and saw Boss’ hair fluttering in the wind.

“Tonight at 9, there will be a fellowship party at Torino’s Leolen Mansion.”

Boss spoke as I drove.

“Your target is the party’s host. If you arrive around 8:30, he should be preparing at the mansion’s garden. It’ll be a golden opportunity to attack.”

I carefully listened to Boss’ advice.

“Next to the mansion is a forest with an abandoned church. The steeple should be perfect to snipe from high ground.”

I turned on the bike’s navigation system and searched for the abandoned church near Leolen Mansion. Then I set it as my destination and turned the handles. It didn’t take long. The road had disappeared, but I drove through the forest without a problem.

I parked near the church inside the forest. Moss and vines had covered it, but the steeple should present a clear view of the mansion. I got off and checked the time.

[8:10 P.M.]

Boss suddenly asked, “Little apprentice, may I watch you work?”

My answer was obvious.

“I’d feel uncomfortable.”

“Then I won’t.”

Boss grumbled and got off the bike. She was about to leave when she spotted my ring and bracelet. She stared at the two items.

“Oh right.”

I recalled that Boss liked pretty items regardless of their function. I remembered writing that she loved sparkly items to death.

“...”

Boss raised her head and made eye contact. She looked somewhat envious. I silently stared back as she smacked her lips.

“What are those accessories? They look nice.”

“I’m okay with the bracelet, but that ring... do you want to—”

“It’s not for sale.”

I sternly replied as Boss narrowed her eyes and leered at me.

“I never said I’d buy it. I have many items prettier than that ring in my vault. For example, Persian King Darius’...”

“I’m jealous.”

I cut her off and jumped to the top of the church’s steeple. My movements looked smooth and nimble now that I had gotten used to parkour. I looked down from the steeple and saw Boss unhappily glaring at me.

“You can leave now.”

“I was planning to.”

She left as I checked the time again.

[8:30 P.M.]

I peered at the mansion about a kilometer away with the thousand-mile eyes. Most heroes could cover this distance in about 30-40 seconds. I predicted that I had about a minute before they figured out my location after the assassination. I would only have one minute to escape.

“Huu.”

I took a deep breath and took out the Desert Eagle. Then I fused it with stigma’s magic power and aether as it transformed into a vicious anti-material sniper rifle.

“Scan.”

I activated Random Consolidation System three times. First on the Desert Eagle, aether, and then my bullet. The numbers 25, 31, and 22 flashed respectively.

“Today’s luck isn’t that good, huh.”

I had also prepared a modified bullet to erase any evidence by adding a property that vaporized the bullet after penetration. A single bullet combined stigma’s magic power should finish the job.

[8:35 P.M.]

I covered my face with a mask and looked over the mansion. Waiters, champagne, food, and music filled the garden. My target also stood among them.

“...”

I held my breath and raised my gun. The Caucasian man had well-defined facial features with a handsome beard. He shouted at a group of waiters.

— Andiamo! È una mossa veloce, bug!

I didn't understand, but I had to kill him before the party began. I focused on his figure and placed my finger on the trigger.

1. Hayang means white in Korean. 🤞

Chapter 97

Initiation (4)

The two Fermun siblings, Paolo Bettina Fermun and Vanessa Jeriel Fermun, looked out the window of the Leolen Mansion's hallway. They saw Siemens yelling at the waiters below.

"I hope it goes well."

Vanessa Fermun had requested for Jeronimo Mercenary to assassinate Siemens. She didn't want a cockroach like him tarnishing her godfather's honor.

"I'm sure it will. They're Jeronimo after all."

"No, I think we didn't provide enough compensation. What if they do things half-heartedly?"

The assassination of an Italian mafia member would be trivial for the infamous Jeronimo Mercenary. However, Venessa Fermun didn't offer that great of a reward. They had considered taking matters into their own hands, but changed their minds when they realized the risks. Murdering a member of their family would be considered the most heinous crime. Siemens had also gained the branch chief's trust.

"What does Uncle Ezio see in that man?"

Venessa muttered with her teeth clenched. Then she made eye contact with Siemens as he looked at her with a lustful smile. His snake-like eyes grossed her out.

"Tsk. I hope Jeronimo shows no mercy."

Vanessa inwardly prayed.

“May he burn to ashes.”

I didn't pull the trigger because I spotted a faint blue light surrounding the garden. It should be a mana barrier that blocked outside attacks. It would've been strange if they didn't have any security for a mafia party.

The barrier didn't look particularly strong. They probably lowered the intensity to save mana since the party hadn't started yet. The anti-magic attribute should easily penetrate that mana barrier.

“Haa...”

I poured almost all of stigma's remaining magic power into the bullet to add an anti-magic property. Then I took a deep breath.

I couldn't go back once I pulled the trigger. I would be killing someone who might be a djinn or a human.

However, I had resolved to remain in this world for at least the next ten years. I would need to kill many more, so I had to become bolder. Today's experience would serve as the starting point.

I clenched my teeth and aimed at the target. Was he a human or a djinn? I hoped he was a djinn, but was there a difference? Were djinns more deserving of death? Was I killing a character in my novel, or was he a living, breathing human?

All sorts of thoughts emerged in my head. I closed my eyes and opened them again. A correct answer to this problem didn't exist. I couldn't waste any more time questioning my morals or the state of reality.

I placed my finger on the trigger and slowly pulled until it clicked. I only heard the sound of leaves rustling in the wind as the bullet shot through the air.

There was a tiny delay between the moment I fired and the bullet's impact. However, the target wouldn't be able to escape. The bullet crushed the mana barrier and shot through the standing target with his eyes still open.

Boss watched the scene from afar. Kim Hajin's bullet had shattered the mana barrier and pierced the target's head. The mana barrier fell like snow on the corpse. A white bullet, blue fragments, and crimson blood. The harmony drew a beautiful picture as Boss closed her eyes. Hot crimson blood. The target wasn't a djinn after all. Bodyguards quickly rushed to the scene. They guessed the sniper's position from the target's posture and began their chase.

Boss opened the notebook that displayed Kim Hajin's location in real time. He had already reached the city streets and got off his bike. Boss ran to where he stopped.

One minute had been enough. Kim Hajin sat on the terrace of a coffee shop with a pair of sunglasses and a suitcase to one side.

“...”

Boss felt a bit proud. Was that the attitude of someone who just killed a man? However, she soon realized she was wrong. His hands shook, and his forehead dripped with cold sweat. Boss slowly approached him.

“Little apprentice.”

His shoulders flinched when she called him. Boss sat in front of him and stared, but the sunglasses hid his eyes.

“You did well.”

“Did I?”

“Yes.”

Kim Hajin stared at her for a long time before speaking in a shaky voice.

“That’s... good.”

Boss didn’t have anything to say as a staff brought over a cup of Americano coffee. Kim Hajin picked it up with trembling hands.

“Aak! Fuck, that’s hot!”

“...”

He stuck out his tongue and carefully blew on the surface before taking another sip. He looked fine from the outside, but his mental state seemed all over the place. Boss looked at him compassionately.

“Cough. Ah, damn it. I ordered an iced coffee too...”

Kim Hajin coughed in embarrassment. Boss nodded and asked.

“How was it?”

“People say there’s a first for everything. That was it.”

“Right, it’s not easy to make money.”

Boss held the coffee cup Kim Hajin had set down. Then she unleashed her magic power and immediately cooled it.

“Little apprentice, money is the only thing you can trust, especially for people like us.”

“Us?”

Kim Hajin tilted his head in confusion.

“We don’t have a family. We grew up without ever having a family.”

“...”

Kim Hajin thought about Boss' words. Then he nodded and grinned.

“Well, I guess so.”

Boss liked his answer. She liked him the more she got to know him. His bullet easily broke the mana barrier and killed the target. The mana barrier had undoubtedly broken due to the power of anti-magic.

My eyes weren't wrong. Kim Hajin will certainly become the silver bullet to kill that man. Boss joyfully thought.

“Oh right, can you give me an item as the reward?”

Kim Hajin suddenly spoke.

“Item?”

“Yes, item.”

Kim Hajin knew Boss had many precious items. Choosing an item worth 300 million won might net him a rarer and more expensive product since Boss didn't know much about their market values. Simply put, he would take advantage of Boss with his incredible luck.

Boss, unaware of Kim Hajin's thoughts, nodded after a bit of consideration.

“Understood. I will prepare your reward myself.”

“Great. Then I'll leave now since I'm finished. Have a nice day, Li Xiaopeng.”

I wouldn't have bought that cat if I knew it would end so quickly. Kim Hajin muttered something incomprehensible as Boss grabbed his sleeve.

“Wait.”

“Yes?”

“From now, don’t call me Li Xiaopeng.”

Boss looked at Kim Hajin.

“Call me Boss instead.”

“...”

A cool breeze blew past as her hair fluttered in the wind. Kim Hajin stared into her eyes and swallowed hard.

“I don’t want to.”

“Good... Huh?”

Boss, full of confidence, suddenly felt shocked. “What do you mean?”

“Well, I haven’t decided yet.”

“What?”

Boss frowned. However, Kim Hajin spoke even more daringly.

“It’s up to me to decide where I belong. It’s still too early, so... hahaha.”

* * *

I returned to Cube late at night. I felt drowsy, but the sensation of the trigger and the image of fresh blood remained on my mind. I felt somewhat dirty and mindlessly walked along the dark road.

“Huu.”

Before I noticed, I had already arrived in front of my room. As I opened the door, I saw Evandel and Hayang sleeping on the couch in each other's embrace.

I walked up and stroked her hair.

“...?”

Evandel narrowly opened her eyes. She smiled sweetly with a drowsy expression. I held her in my arms as she rubbed her cheek on my shoulder.

“Did you bring yummy food?”

“Ah.”

I forgot. I should've brought some Italian food.

“Uun?”

“Tomorrow. We can eat it tomorrow. It's late, so you should sleep.”

I tucked her into bed and went to sleep on the living room couch.

“You're up too?”

Hayang sat up and yawned. I smiled and lay down as Hayang hopped onto my stomach and curled into a ball.

“Hayang is surprisingly cute.”

I stroked Hayang's back and slowly fell asleep.

Cube's second semester midterms finally began. However, it felt more bleak and desolate than the first because reporters and family members couldn't visit this time. Some rumors stated that Cube wanted to entirely get rid of the midterms.

I didn't mind that things went differently than in the original story. I had glimpsed over the second semester in my novel, so I didn't know what would happen anyways.

— Today's test was way too hard.

— Yeah, what's up with the hell-mode difficulty? Shouldn't we sue the professor?

Many cadets complained after the first written exam. However, I looked forward to written exams since classes ended earlier.

“Hey, Kim Hajin.”

Chae Nayun ran past me and blocked my path. I tilted my head at her. She didn't know what to say after her grand appearance and fiddled with her fingers.

“...Are you headed to the library?”

“No, I'm going back to my room.”

Her eyes narrowed.

“What, you're not going to study?”

“Nope.”

I bluntly replied and continued walking as Chae Nayun followed me.

“Then um, do you have any study guides or something?”

“No.”

Chae Nayun's shoulders flinched. She blocked my path once again and stared into my eyes. She looked a bit pitiful.

“Can you help me out? I bombed today's exam too.”

“Now? It’s the middle of exam week.”

“I can stay up and cram. Apparently just memorizing the key points will boost your score by 10.”

“I think you’re better off asking Yoo Yeonha.”

“But I... had a fight with Yoo Yeonha.”

I received a message on my smartwatch from Kim Hosup.

[Hajin! I found who Agus Benjamin is!]

My eyes widened. Agus Benjamin’s real name was Fernin Jesus. I had finally located Tomer’s father.

[Where is he?]

I quickly replied.

[Nowhere. He already passed away.]

“Huh?”

[What do you mean? Can you explain in detail?]

[He lived in a Korean retirement center until 4 years ago when he passed away. Who would have thought? What a twist, what a twist.]

“...”

I finally understood why the Book of Truth couldn’t locate Fernin Jesus. He had already died.

[Got it. Thanks.]

[By the way, I decided to quit my job. I put in my resume at the place you recommended.]

[That's a good idea. For now, can you tell me the location of that retirement center?]

I checked today's date, September 7. The next main story would come up soon. It would be a great burden off my back if I could deal with Tomer before then.

"Come on, I'll buy you something delici—"

I ignored Chae Nayun and ran to the portal station.

Chapter 98

Past

“Wow.”

Vanessa and Paolo watched the CCTV footage of the assassination inside the Colaion family’s Leolen Mansion.

“Perfection as expected.”

Jeronimo’s workmanship was flawless. The assassin instantly killed Siemens and disappeared without a trace. He had effortlessly escaped Torino, which was deep inside the Colaion family’s sphere of influence.

“But what killed him?”

Paolo asked as Vanessa rested her chin on one hand and replayed the tape. The CCTV’s low quality footage couldn’t capture exactly what happened.

“I’m not sure.”

“I... think it was a bullet.”

“No way.”

Guns remained indispensable, but most considered them well-assembled toys compared to artifacts. However, the firearm market did equally match the artifact market since artifacts could only be traded between guilds and individuals. Alternatively, people also used auction houses and special markets like Violet Banquet.

However, anyone could purchase and use guns. High class masterpiece guns could even kill low-intermediate rank monsters. In other words, more people bought firearms than artifacts.

“No one in Jeronimo Mercenary uses a gun.”

Only ordinary people used guns for self-defense against weak monsters. The powerful didn’t need guns.

“It looks like a bullet no matter how I look at it.”

“How would a magic bullet pierce through the barrier? Anyways...”

Vanessa’s expression stiffened.

“You better keep quiet. Don’t open your mouth no matter what. We know nothing, got it?”

They had to carry this secret to the grave. Godfather Colaion cared the most about his family’s safety. Siemens’ death would surely enrage him. Godfather Colaion would openly punish anyone who harmed the family.

“Of course, I know.”

Paolo nodded as if to ask why she would even mention something so obvious.

“...”

However, Vanessa still worried. Someone like him always slipped up in the movies. Vanessa even took out a magic contract because she couldn’t trust her brother’s words.

[Sunshine Haven]

The retirement center resided on the outskirts of Seoul. However, its name and appearance seemed more like a comfortable rest spot than a retirement center. I walked up to the entrance and knocked on the door.

Soon, a middle-aged woman appeared and smiled at me. I was about to introduce myself when she spoke.

“Wow, it’s been a while, Hajin!”

“Huh?”

She caught me off guard. A short silence descended before I regained my composure. Kim Hajin, or rather Kim Chundong must’ve visited in the past. This place was only 10 minutes from Chundong’s original house.

“Ah... yes, nice to meet you. It’s been a while.”

Thankfully, I must’ve not been too out of character since the caregiver reacted normally.

“You must be busy with hero training lately. What brings you here? Ah, come in.”

The caregiver invited me inside.

“...”

I took a look around. The place seemed bigger than it looked. Six people spoke to each other as they played Go and Shogi. Then they noticed me and heartily laughed.

“It’s been almost a year! How has it been?” the caregiver suddenly asked.

“Ah, you see...”

I hesitated and didn’t know how to bring up the topic.

“Yeah?”

“Um, it’s about Agus.”

“Agus... Oh, that South American man?”

I nodded. It seemed Chundong had some sort of a relationship with him. I wasn’t too surprised since the co-author could freely make up Chundong’s past. He must’ve complicated things once again, but the situation didn’t seem too bad. The co-author probably didn’t expect me to come here so soon.

“Yes, I wondered if he left anything behind.”

“Let me think... I don’t think he specifically asked us to take care of it, but there was something.”

“A letter?”

“Huh? Oh, yes, a letter. How did you know?”

My eyes widened. Thankfully, the plot device I left remained unchanged.

“Where might that letter be?”

“It’s in the memorial along with his ashes. Why?”

“Ah, well...”

I thought about how to respond. I didn’t know anything about Chundong’s personality, but I could guess from the caregiver’s soft gaze and the other retirees’ smiles.

“I made a promise with him.”

“Oh, did you? Right, you did like listening to their stories. I think his ashes are inside the Seoho Memorial.”

“Ah, thank you.”

I bowed and exchanged a few pleasantries before arriving at the memorial.

[Seoho Memorial]

“Hm.”

This was my first time visiting a memorial. I had experienced many new things in this world. I scratched my neck and entered. The memorial contained thousands of urns, but my thousand-mile eyes quickly located the name, Agus Benjamin. A drawer contained his urn along with the letter.

“Letter...”

I walked up to the drawer. However, I withdrew my hand before opening it. I already knew what the letter said. It shouldn't be me, but his daughter who opens it.

What if the contents had changed? I worried and took it out just in case. I couldn't read the language, but I translated it with my smartwatch and confirmed that the contents hadn't changed.

I felt relief and returned it. Then I entered Violet Banquet as the Truth Agency to respond.

[We have located Fernin Jesus.] [The price for the information will be 300 million won.] [Please complete the payment if you'd like to know.]

While Kim Hajin read Agus Benjamin's letter, Yoo Yeonha received a report from Falling Blossom's Team 3 in her penthouse.

“Volunteer work?”

Team 3 had reverse-traced Kim Hajin's past and Yoo Yeonha discovered a new piece of information.

— Yes, he often volunteered at orphanages, retirement centers, and nursing homes ever since he turned 11 to when he entered Cube.

“Volunteer work...”

Yoo Yeonha pondered about his life as an orphan who realized his talents and entered the Military Agent Academy. It sounded like a rags-to-riches story. She would’ve thrown her shabby past into the trash, but Kim Hajin continued volunteering to not forget. Yoo Yeonha recalled someone like him, not in real life, but a movie.

“Hm.”

She finally understood a few things. Everyone knew Kim Hajin often left Cube. This led to bad rumors about him, but the truth couldn’t have been further.

“Amazing.”

Yoo Yeonha exclaimed in awe. He didn’t forget where he came from and never used his strength for fame. His way of life remained faithful to his beliefs and principles. Yoo Yeonha couldn’t help but admire that even if it differed from her values.

“Is there anything else? Like about his birth.”

— We’re looking into it as much as we can, but we’re at a complete standstill. We can’t find any other traces of his past.

“Dig deeper.”

She felt somewhat disappointed, but let it slide.

“Any other news?”

— An incident broke out in Torino at the Colaion family’s mansion.

“Colaion?”

Yoo Yeonha raised her eyebrows. She had planned on forming a partnership with the Colaion family to smuggle artifacts. The Italian mafia had many black artifacts that hadn't been reported to the central government. They couldn't export the artifacts they dug up, so the government and numerous guilds could buy them for cheap. Yoo Yeonha wanted those artifacts.

“What incident?”

— One of their executives was assassinated. They think the assassin came from Korea, so they're asking us to find the culprit.

“A search.”

Yoo Yeonha pondered. Finding a mere assassin shouldn't be too difficult with Team 3's entire force.

“What do you think? Can you do it?”

— It's not impossible.

“Oh? And why is that?”

— We just hired a rather useful recruit.

Yoo Yeonha frowned. She didn't trust people that she didn't handpick.

“Is that so?”

— Yes, I'll send you his profile now.

Yoo Yeonha opened the profile with a judgmental look.

[Kim Hosup] — 17 years old, 168 cm, 78kg — Military Agent Academy graduate — Gift: [Super High-Speed Network] Can connect his brain to a computer to search and track information. Search speed will increase with higher computer specs and internet speed.

I left my room late at night on Tuesday.

“Ah! Kim Hajin! Over here!”

Chae Nayun shouted and waved as she ran up to me with a smile.

“Ah, is this it? The study guide?”

“Yeah, so stop texting me.”

I gave her the study guide she had been pestering me for. I didn’t make it. I just copied what I found from hacking Yoo Yeonha’s database. She had a habit of saving everything she wrote.

“Ah, thank you so much. I’ll pay you back for sure.”

“You don’t need to. Just study hard.”

I stared at Chae Nayun. Lately, she looked more and more pitiful. I just felt like helping her. I didn’t even know what was right anymore.

I couldn’t look at her when I thought about what I would eventually do. I just had to leave no traces like how I assassinated that mafioso. However, I kept...

“Okay! Thanks sooo much! I’ll go study immediately!”

Chae Nayun smacked my arm and ran off while hugging the notebook.

“That hurt.”

I rubbed my arm. Why did she always hit me so hard?

* * *

Time flew by and Cube felt empty as ever from the written exams. Friday came around before I noticed.

“Hey.”

After the final written exam, Chae Nayun appeared with a bright face. She practically lived in the library for the past couple of days. It seemed everything went well.

“Thanks. I survived because of you.”

“Really?”

“Yeah, I must’ve gotten at least five problems I would’ve otherwise missed. That’s a big difference, right?”

“I guess.”

Next week would be the combat exams. Naturally, I grew nervous. I wanted to increase my rank to about 200, but what came after was more important. The incident that would occur after the combat exams.

“Oh right, do you want to go there after the combat exam? It’ll be on me.”

“Where?”

“Han Jung Gak. It’s a famous Korean restaurant on Ganghwa Island. You’ve heard of it, right? It’s just as famous as the restaurant you took me to in Paris. Kim Suho and you...”

Han Jung Gak was the highest class restaurant in my setting. I wanted to taste the food. It would undoubtedly be the best. However...

“I’m not going.”

“What? Why?”

“I don’t have time. You can go with Kim Suho.”

“What? Are you jealous?”

Jealous? I couldn't just gloss over that. Naturally, I frowned and snapped back.

"Are you crazy?"

"Uh, fine, if you don't want to, then don't. I just wanted to pay you back for treating me in Paris..."

"I'm not going."

I cut her off and headed back inside.

"Ah, wait! The two of us can't go alone even if we wanted to! My dad will get mad if he finds out!"

Chae Nayun kept talking nonsense until the end.

The weekend flew by and Monday came around. Combat exams had finally begun.

First was a team challenge similar to the previous semester's duels, but between two teams.

"Team Rachel will be on offense and Team Yohei will be on defense!"

Our opponents were led by Miyamoto Yohei, a top-class warrior from Cultivation class. Apparently, Yohei descended from the famous Miyamoto Musashi. For the record, I didn't create that setting.

"Ready!"

Many spectators watched the battle. Of course, the audience couldn't compare to the previous midterms, but a crowd still came to watch Rachel v.s. Yohei.

"Get into formation."

Rachel spoke as we formed up. Our two warriors, Rachel and Jin Hoseung, stood in the front while the supporter, Yi Bokgyu, stood between me and Tomer to protect us.

I raised the training handgun and spoke to Yi Bokgyu.

“You don’t need to protect me. Focus on protecting Jamer.”

“What? Why?”

“I’m going to take their magician’s head.”

I would display my strength now since I operated based on the principle of acting strong against the weak and weak against the strong. I would prey on the magician hiding in the back with my newly acquired curve shot.

“Wait, shouldn’t you...”

The judge interrupted Yi Bokgyu with a shout.

“BEGIN!”

Chapter 99

Ghost (1)

The team duel arena looked completely different from the one-on-one arena. Instead of the Colosseum, it took place in a rectangular arena 130 meters wide and 250 meters long. The arena transformed into a mountainous area with rocks and shrubs as soon as the judge signaled the start. Obstacles separated the two teams, but that worked to my advantage.

“Jin Hoseung and I will charge forward. Everyone else can support us from behind.”

Rachel spoke as I jumped into a nearby tree.

“Um, Hajin?”

Rachel’s confused voice rang out from below. I smiled and gestured.

“Go ahead. I’ll support everyone from above.”

I claimed the high ground like a normal sharpshooter. Rachel nodded and entrusted me with my job. Then she and Jin Hoseung charged forward. I followed them from tree to tree.

“...!”

An arrow cut through the air towards me. I bent my waist and narrowly dodged it.

“Wow.”

My body felt light and I could easily continue dodging. My new physique had increased my speed stat to around 6.3 and I felt like a ninja.

I turned in the arrow's direction. The opposing archer shot a second magic arrow, but I struck it down with a bullet. The bullet disintegrated the moment it collided, but still managed to alter the arrow's path. The archer frowned and didn't want to continue fighting.

"Daeyun! Take care of their sharpshooter!"

He shouted at a teammate behind him as he aimed for Rachel and Jin Hoseung. I glanced at the battlefield and felt like background music began to play.

"The heck."

Yohei looked like he came straight out of a comic. He stood in the middle of the battlefield with his eyes closed and a tiny branch in his mouth. He seemed comfortable even as Rachel and Jin Hoseung charged at him. His katana remained in its sheath.

"Ronin, be free and wild like the wind."

He blurted incomprehensible words and opened his eyes as Rachel and Jin Hoseung stepped into range. When Rachel's rapier and Jin Hoseung's saber almost cut him down... his katana flashed with a cold light. It soared and parried the two attacks like lightning. His sword seemed lighter than the wind, yet fiercer than a storm.

I watched the three warriors clashing in a daze. Yohei evenly matched two cadets thanks to all the buffs and extra magic power from his teammate.

I finally understood their formation. Yohei stood in the front while their sharpshooter remained in the middle. Their supporter and a warrior both guarded the magician in the back.

The so-called four-protect-one formation. Their strategy threw everything onto Yohei. Their sharpshooter supported both the front and back while the magician cast buffs on Yohei.

The strategy efficiently focused on defense as long as the magician didn't die or someone like me didn't interfere.

I detoured and looped around to the magician. It seemed I lacked in stealth as the muscular warrior with a buzz cut noticed me. He threw his axe like a boomerang as it chopped down all the greenery around me before returning to his hand. He frowned when he saw my gun.

“Why is a sharpshooter here alone?”

I fired a barrage of bullets without answering. The warrior calmly stabbed his axe into the ground. It grew bigger as he imbued his magic power into it. The supporter next to the magician also raised his shield and defended against the bullets.

Meanwhile, I looked for blind spots in their defense. Their magician hid behind the supporter, but I felt like I could reach him from above. During combat training, cadets wore special protectors that absorbed damage to their vital points. By design, a hit to their neck protector would instantly eliminate them.

Their warrior and supporter exchanged glances that seemed to say, You protect the magician, I'll get that sharpshooter. The warrior charged at me with his axe. I didn't particularly mind since I could easily use parkour in this obstacle-filled environment. The slow warrior couldn't catch me as I hopped from tree to tree and kept my eyes on the magician. Their supporter must've felt my gaze as he performed something quite unique.

“Conjunction.”

His kite shield multiplied and surrounded them. However, gaps still existed. By design, the shields couldn't form a perfect cover. I aimed for the tiny gaps.

“Huaaap!”

The warrior swung his giant axe and crushed the tree I stood on. I jumped and turned in the air. Pssh— The tree scattered into pieces as I flipped upside down 10 meters in the air. Then I activated bullet time and everything immediately slowed. I spotted a tiny gap between two kite shields. I turned my gun slightly to the right and fired since I could easily control the speed and trajectory of my bullets.

Whish—

The bullet oddly curved in the air. I could clearly see its movement. It should've flown straight, but suddenly dropped. Then it went through the tiny gap between two shields like a homing missile.

“Aak!”

The magician screamed. He didn't pay attention since he trusted the shields. He wouldn't have instantly died if he had kept a single barrier around him. However, the magician wanted to conserve his magic power.

— Team Yohei, magician Yoo Soohwan has been eliminated.

My bullet struck his neck protector.

“Agh, this sly bastard!”

The warrior and supporter charged at me.

“Come on, sly?”

I climbed up a tree and constantly fired at them like a monkey throwing down banana peels.

“Get down! Get down here!”

I hopped to another tree and continued provoking him every time the warrior threw his axe. Meanwhile, the frontline battle also came to a close as Rachel and Jin Hoseung began to push Yohei back without the magician's support. The opposing team's sharpshooter busily dodged Tomer's magic attacks. This battle was practically over while their two other members chased after me.

I messaged Yoo Yeonha 10 minutes after the duel from the waiting room and asked about Yohei.

[He has the wind attribute, the rarest among water, wind, earth, and fire. His gift allows him to display wind-like movements with his magic power.] [He can send out several sword strikes and fluidly dodge his opponents' attacks. His gift is called Covenant of Wind.] [In summary, his gift and physical abilities are both excellent, but he lacks magic power and doesn't do well in drawn-out fights.] [He formed his team to make up for his weaknesses. The magician Yoo Soohwan has a magic called target chain that transmits spells and magic power to a connected target from long range.] [The fight would've been more difficult if he survived until the end. Yohei's battle sense is second only to Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak.]

Yoo Yeonha sent over a thorough report. Cadets often kept their gifts a secret, but she even found out about that. Asking her turned out to be a good idea.

The waiting room's door opened as Rachel walked in with the same expression she always wore.

"Good work, everyone."

Her face didn't show it, but she sounded happy. Anyone could see that Rachel felt ecstatic.

"Especially..."

Rachel looked at me and smiled.

"We won thanks to Hajin eliminating their magician."

"I shouldn't be praised since I went off on my own."

"We would've called you a troll if you failed, but you're a hero since you succeeded. I thought you were Guan Yu ^[1] when you suddenly said you would take their magician's head."

Yi Bokgyu smiled as Rachel continued looking at me. Then she warmly nodded.

"Yes, well done."

“By the way, where’s Jamer?”

Jin Hoseung asked as he looked around.

“Jamer?”

“Oh right, she did well too,” Yi Bokgyu added.

“Jamer... Ah.”

I kept getting confused because her real name was Tomer. Anyways, I wondered why Tomer hadn’t responded to the message that I found Fernin Jesus? Violet Banquet had a trustworthy system. I asked for 300 million won, but she shouldn’t worry about being scammed. Did she not have the money?

“Let me go find her.”

I left the waiting room and walked down the hallway in search of Tomer. She wasn’t in the bathroom or any another waiting rooms. Soon, I found her hiding in an alley near a vending machine as she called someone. I eavesdropped while walking towards her.

— Um, if you could loan me some money...

As expected, Tomer didn’t have the money.

— Is that all you have to say? How long are you going to drag out what should’ve only taken two weeks?

The caller sounded irritated.

— Sorry.

— Prepare for your punishment if you can’t close it out by the end of the week. Oh right, didn’t you also lose the item the team leader sent you?

— Ah, about that... I’m really sorry, but I’m pressed on money, so...

— Are you out of your mind? You sold it because you needed money!

— No, no, I didn't sell it. I just lost it...

— Yeah, I'm so proud of you.

Tomer hung up the call feeling dejected.

"Haa."

She deeply sighed and turned around.

"Hiik!"

I stood right in front of her.

She immediately froze. However, nothing from the call indicated her identity as a djinn. She seemed to realize that and felt relieved. I asked as I put some coins into the vending machine.

"What happened? You're short on money?"

"..."

Tomer silently walked past me.

"Want me to lend you some?"

She turned and looked at me. Now I had her attention.

"You don't know how much I need."

"Well, you're a magician. I can loan you as much as you want if you're willing to write a promissory note."

Magicians could rake in a lot of money. Clunk, clunk— A bottle of Sprite rolled down from the vending machine.

“I might not look like it, but I’m quite rich.”

I left the arena feeling exhausted. Our team’s second duel would take place at 3 P.M.

“Cheer up, only two duels left!” I tried to encourage myself when a familiar voice rang out.

“Hey, Kim Hajin!”

I turned around as Chae Nayun walked towards me.

“Kim Suho wanted me to tell you that he liked your match.”

“Kim Suho did?”

“Yeah, he went straight into his match. By the way, how did you do that?”

“Do what?”

“Your bullet curved. What trick is that?” Chae Nayun curiously asked.

“My gift,” I simply replied.

“What a boring explanation. Yawnn.”

Chae Nayun locked her fingers behind her neck.

“Ah, I want to fight too. My matches don’t start until the afternoon.”

“I see.”

I ignored her and went on my way when I spotted someone else in front of me. Shin Jonghak and Yoo Yeonha stood about ten steps away. He looked at me with disdain and emotionless eyes. It felt like being in a haunted house. He always looked handsome, but scary.

“...”

Shin Jonghak looked back and forth between me and Chae Nayun. She frowned and shot back at him.

“What do you want?”

“Haha.”

Shin Jonghak laughed since he liked this side of Chae Nayun. Yoo Yeonha didn't seem to understand why as she stood next to him. He sauntered toward us as if to switch places with me. I just walked past him.

“Are you leaving?”

Yoo Yeonha asked. Her eyes still focused on Shin Jonghak.

“Yeah. What about you? Are you going to your match?”

“Yes, it's at 11 A.M.”

“I see.”

I suddenly remembered something.

“Oh right, hey.”

“Yes?”

Yoo Yeonha finally turned to face me. I briefly spoke.

“Bullets. 5.56 mm.”

“You want me to get you some?”

“Yeah, a lot.”

“It’s possible, but what do you need assault rifle bullets for?”

“I think I’ll need them in the future.”

“Hmm, hold on.” Yoo Yeonha turned on her smartwatch.

“How many?”

“About... six hundred?”

“Six... what?”

“Six hundred.”

“You know that high rank 5.56 mm magic bullets cost at least 200,000 won per bullet, right?”

“So it’ll be 120 million in total. Is that too much?”

I looked at her disappointed. Yoo Yeonha suddenly smiled like a queen.

“Pft. I can do something like that with my eyes closed. Don’t try to needlessly scratch my pride. Do you also need a weapon to go with it?”

“No, I only need the bullets.”

I almost patted her shoulder, but stopped halfway. Cough. I placed my hands in my pockets since Yoo Yeonha hated people touching her.

“I’m leaving now.”

“Yes... Ah, wait.”

Yoo Yeonha grabbed me.

“It’s about that ginseng.”

“What about it?”

“We’ll be able to produce medicine with it in two weeks. So I was wondering...”

“Are you asking if I have any more?”

“Yes. It looks like it’ll take a while for us to find proper traders.”

I rubbed my chin in thought. Ginseng. Honestly, I felt like I could obtain one by hiking a few times.

“I can’t say for sure, but I’ll trade it for your company’s shares if I find any. Deal?”

“That’s fine.”

I could hear Shin Jonghak while we talked.

— Chae Nayun, why are you hanging out with someone like him?

— What? What are you spouting?

— You didn’t forget about what happened before, right? You said he was weird and told me to squash him.

— Eh? Ah, no, um... I misunderstood at the time...

Someone like him. I found it quite unpleasant to hear, but that’s just how Shin Jonghak acted. He took pride in his bloodline and status. Honestly, he should be proud. His bloodline couldn’t compare to royalty, but Shin Jonghak’s ancestor served the king as a prime minister. His grandfather, Shin Myungchul, also saved the nation after Outcall like a true noble.

“Just ignore him. Jonghak doesn’t know much about you,” Yoo Yeonha said as she studied my face.

“I don’t mind.”

I walked past them to the lounge area.

* * *

All my team duels ended by 7 P.M. as I returned home exhausted.

“Hajin! Hajin!”

Evandel scurried up to me with a sullen face as I opened the door.

“Hajin! Hayang scratched me!”

She put out her right arm with teary eyes. I looked at the very light scratch. Haa. I swallowed my sigh and recalled one of the rules of childcare: never look bothered by your child.

“How?”

“I don’t know. Hayang is a meanie! Hayang, you meanie!”

Evandel shouted at Hayang. I looked over at Hayang yawning on the couch and acting self-important.

“She scratched you even though you didn’t do anything?”

“Un! I didn’t do anything wrong...”

Would a cat scratch someone for no reason? I looked around the room and found cat treats sprawled around the floor. The treat was called Churu, and even humans found it delicious. I told Evandel to give Hayang only one per day. Even if Evandel liked eating...

“Evandel, you didn’t touch Hayang’s treat, right?”

“...”

Evandel flinched.

“You did?”

“N-No... I just wanted to know how yummy it was because Hayang liked it so much. I only wanted a taste...”

Evandel made excuses as I watched her slightly dumbstruck. Suddenly, my smartwatch rang. A message came from Rachel.

[Hajin! Happy birthday ^—^!] [This is my gift. Great job on the duels today.] [Let's go karaoke after the exams ~.~]

“Birthday?”

I tilted my head. Then I recalled that today was September 8th. Indeed, it was my birthday. I turned on my smartwatch and wondered how Rachel knew. I quickly found out when I spotted the party hat on my messenger profile.

1. A famous general from the Three Kingdoms era known as the God of War. 🙌

Chapter 100

Ghost (2)

Chae Nayun lazed around at 9 P.M. Cadets became more active on social media after finishing one exam.

[Uyeonha] [It was difficult, but I'm glad it turned out great. Good work everyone. #Cube #Exam #OurTeam]

Yoo Yeonha's team finished with three wins and celebrated at a café. She uploaded a group picture of them eating together. Chae Nayun felt jealous because of her gloomy team.

"Uuun."

Chae Nayun and Yoo Yeonha hadn't spoken since their last fight. She wanted to make up since she started it. Ding.

[♡] [NYChae and 4593 others liked this post.]

Chae Nayun subtly apologized by liking her post. Then she scrolled down and saw Shin Jonghak's.

[jonghak2] [3 wins 0 losses #Cube #ShinJonghak #Jonghak #Exam #Hero #OverwhelmingVictory]

Shin Jonghak also posted a group photo, but it carried a different atmosphere from Yoo Yeonha's. He looked like a ruler surrounded by his lackeys.

"I wonder when this guy will be cured of his eighth grade syndrome."

Chae Nayun snickered and continued scrolling.

"Huh?"

She found a rather interesting photo from Kim Suho, who had over 20,000 followers.

[With Master Sharpshooter Hajin, Cube's sole gunner]

"Is this guy... kind or evil?"

The photo seemed to have been taken after the archery competition, but the difference between their faces...

[leonidas357: it's nice to see you smiling.] [Yunseung A: I also monitored this year's class competitions ^^ Hajin and Suho both did amazing.]

"Haha, what is unni doing here?"

Yun Seung-Ah clearly had ulterior motives. Chae Nayun left the app after making fun of her and switched to her messenger.

"Huh?"

She thoughtlessly scrolled when she discovered a party hat emoticon next to Kim Hajin's profile.

"Today is his birthday?"

Chae Nayun murmured. She was going to continue scrolling, but then she entered a gift shop. She wondered what to give him, but nothing caught her attention.

"I guess a cake will do... no, maybe I should give him something in real life rather than online... no, why would I? I'm not crazy... just a text message is enough."

Chae Nayun quickly sent a message.

[Kim Hajin, it's your birthday today?]

He didn't reply even after 5 minutes. Chae Nayun added another line.

[Happy birthday lol Why aren't you responding?]

[Thanks]

He responded almost immediately this time.

“Why’s he so cold?”

Chae Nayun pouted and put down her smartwatch.

* * *

Midterm exams finally ended on Thursday. I took a total of four exams. Two of them in teams and the others individually. I didn’t do so well by myself, but I obtained enough points from the team exams to enter the top 200. I should receive a bigger room next year.

Now wasn’t the time to worry about academics.

“Will this be enough?”

I purchased a pinnacle grade magic bag that looked like a normal duffel bag. However, it could carry up to 200 kilograms and cost 40 million won. I stuffed it full of all sorts of items: an icebox, tent, cooking wares, ramen, pork chops, etc...

Woong—

My smartwatch rang.

[Cube will be on break next week.] [Cadets will receive a 70% discount on foreign travels when using cadet cards.]

Classes would be canceled next week due to an external investigation. The djinns would lay low, but investigators wouldn’t find anything.

[The Jinsung Foundation will sponsor a field trip next Thursday. First years will be allowed to join on a first-come, first-serve basis.]

During this field trip, the main cast would encounter a wicked ghost called the ghost of the past.

This ghost would transport them to the year 1970, soon after Outcall. Of course, it wasn't the real past. However, this would be a necessary event for them. Not only Kim Suho, but also Shin Jonghak and Yoo Yeonha...

“Aaaaang!”

Evandel's shout interrupted my thoughts. She stared at Hayang in shock. I followed her gaze and spotted the boneless chicken in Hayang's mouth.

“Hayang... Hayang you... put that down now!”

Evandel tried to run, but Hayang quickly bit the chicken. She immediately stopped at the sight.

“Ah! O-Okay! Okay, Hayang. Let's calm down. Calm down...”

Huu, huu. She acted like it was a hostage situation and raised her hands.

“Right, calm down... that's not something a cat can eat...”

Chomp. Hayang chewed on the chicken and ignored Evandel. I glanced at Evandel's empty plate. It seemed like Hayang ate the last piece of chicken.

“Iiiiiing! H-Hayang, you...!”

Evandel chased after Hayang. However, Hayang was too quick. She ran into my arms and sobbed.

“Hajin! Hajin! Hayang ate my chicken...”

“Don't worry. She won't die.”

Hayang wasn't a normal cat. She had a noble bloodline with a grade 4 mana affinity. Animals with higher mana affinity could recover faster, live longer, and had higher intelligence. Some people also called them mystical animals.

"No, not that! She stole my food!"

"Oh, that's the problem?"

* * *

I left the dorm and walked to the park after calming down Evandel. I had a few appointments this evening.

"Over here."

Yoo Yeonha waved from a remote area of the park. She wore sunglasses even though it was dusk. I could see the suitcase next to her. Yoo Yeonha spoke as she handed it to me.

"Here are the bullets. Each magazine carries 45 bullets. There are 900 bullets in here."

"Great, thanks!"

"Ah, wait, there's something else."

Yoo Yeonha handed me some sort of protector.

"What's this?" I tilted my head as she grinned.

"A wrist protector. Your birthday was on Monday, right? It's quite expensive, so use it well. I planned to give it to you on Monday, but everyone was busy with the exams."

"Ah, um, thank you."

I took the wrist protector and put it on.

“Oh, it’s great.”

It stuck to my skin and felt high quality. Yoo Yeonha looked at me satisfied and turned back.

“Then I’ll be leaving now.”

“Yeah, thanks again.”

I waved as she left. Next was karaoke. Cube had an entertainment district for mental health. It featured karaoke, a LAN café, a bowling alley, a pool hall, and other arcade facilities. Most cadets gathered here after exams. My teammates waited for me as I arrived.

“Yo! Kim Hajin.”

Jin Hoseung waved. Everyone wore casual clothes except for me. Rachel’s outfit looked especially eye-catching. Her pink sweater and blue jeans perfectly suited her.

“The main character always shows up late, eh?”

“Ah, sorry, I had an appointment before this.”

I felt confident since I still had my singing gift.

“Now that Hajin is here... let, let’s go.” Rachel reluctantly pointed to the karaoke bar.

“Yeah, let’s go.”

Jin Hoseung took the lead. Cadets filled the different rooms and loudly sang.

“...”

Rachel peeked through the windows and observed them. She looked a bit mystified by the scene. Jin Hoseung went to the counter and showed his cadet card.

“For six people.”

“Thank you. You may use room 17.”

Rachel marched forward as she murmured, room 17, room 17. It wasn't far off as Rachel went in first. The door to room 16 suddenly opened when I was about to enter too.

“Eh?”

A person came out of room 16 and looked at me in surprise. I reacted the same.

“Kim Hajin? You're also here?”

“Yeah... you too?”

“I'm here with my friends. What about...”

Chae Nayun peeked through the half-opened door of room 17 and saw Rachel. She nodded with a somewhat disapproving look.

“Well, have fun...”

“Ah, wait, Chae Nayun. You're going to Jinsung Foundation's field trip, right?”

“Huh? Um, yeah, I am. Why? Are you also going?”

“I have nothing better to do, so I applied.”

Someone pulled on my sleeve as I talked with Chae Nayun. It wasn't Rachel, but Tomer.

“What?”

“...”

Tomer spoke with her eyes.

“Ah, okay. I’m going in now.”

“Yeah, bye.”

Chae Nayun shooed me away as I spoke shortly with Tomer before we entered room 17. Jin Hoseung searched for a song with the remote while Rachel oddly held two tambourines in each hand.

“Alright, I’ll sing first as we discussed in the group chat. Rachel will go next, right?”

Rachel’s shoulders shook. Trrr. The tambourines in her hands also shook as Jin Hoseung’s song began.

“Horse, let’s run.”

His shoulders moved up and down as he sang an exciting rock song. However, he stopped after the first verse. Jin Hoseung mischievously smiled as he handed Rachel the remote. She nervously pondered for a while before selecting a song. The accompaniment rang out as we held our breaths in anticipation.

“Th, this- bru-shing wi-nd”

“...”

Her voice sounded pretty, but that was it. She ignored the beat and melody and sang like reading a book. Pft. I heard someone’s mocking laughter from outside. Chae Nayun laughed as she held her belly.

“Huu... I’ll also stop after the first verse.”

Thankfully, she only sang the first verse. Rachel wiped the sweat off her forehead and handed me the remote with a satisfied expression. Did she think she sang well?

“Here.”

“Ah... yes.”

I took the remote and entered a song. After I placed it down, Rachel stealthily took the remote again. She seemed confident and planned on going again.

Rachel sang a total of six songs that day, which caused quite some pain for our entire team.

Next Thursday finally arrived. The field trip organized by the Jinsung Foundation would serve as the main story’s turning point. The participants remained the same as the original story except for me.

“What good weather.”

The clear autumn sun shone down. I barely arrived at the Seoul portal station on time.

“Ah, Kim Hajin’s here.”

Five individuals pointed at me as I ran up to them.

“You’re two minutes late.”

Shin Jonghak spoke as he pointed at his watch. I also checked the time. He was right. It was currently 6:02 A.M. I clasped my hands and sincerely apologized.

“Sorry.”

“...”

Shin Jonghak waved it off. I spotted the limousine waiting for us. The six of us went inside the spacious and luxurious interior. It had a high ceiling like the ones in the movies and the seats stretched from one end to the other. I sat in a random spot.

“Hajin, do you want some?”

Kim Suho sat next to me and offered me some gummy.

“No, I’m fine.”

“Then give it to me.”

Chae Nayun snatched a gummy. She nibbled on the gummy bear and asked Shin Jonghak.

“Hey, what are we doing there?”

“Lots of things. Wind Mountain is the Jinsung group’s property, so we’ll meditate at the peak and spar a bit.”

Wind Mountain resided on the outskirts of Seoul 800 meters above sea level. It was dense in mana and had been created after a magic power explosion 50 years ago.

“Ooh, that sounds fun.”

I didn’t know about fun, but I knew it would be quite a spectacle. I looked around the limousine at Kim Suho, Chae Nayun, Yoo Yeonha, Shin Jonghak, and Yi Yeonghan. They all looked out the window like they expected a picnic.

However, they greatly suffered from a lack of drinking water and food in the original story. They would thank me later.

“Cough.”

I crossed my legs. The duffel bag behind me couldn’t feel more reliable.

“What are you doing?”

Yoo Yeonha asked with a quizzical look. I grinned and crossed my arms as she frowned.

[Seoul Outskirts, Wind Mountain Entrance]

The black limousine stopped at the foot of the mountain as the driver got out first to open the door for everyone.

“Huaa.”

Chae Nayun breathed in the mountain air as she stretched.

“Doesn’t it feel like we’re going on a picnic?”

She struck Kim Hajin’s shoulder as he yawned next to her.

“Yeah.”

Kim Hajin reacted dryly. He seemed somewhat arrogant as he looked at the mountain.

“Pft, did you catch Shin Jonghak’s illness?”

“Huh? No, no way.”

He quickly returned to his usual self after Chae Nayun’s remark. Shin Jonghak’s secretary finished talking to him and stood in front of the cadets.

“There’s a cabin prepared in the mountain. The master that Jinsung Foundation invited will be arriving tonight.”

“Ooh. A master? Who?”

Shin Jonghak grinned at Chae Nayun’s question.

“You’ll be surprised when you meet him. Let’s climb the mountain for now. We have to reach the peak by 3.”

The hike began without much thought. The six cadets climbed in the following order: Yi Yeonghan, Yoo Yeonha, Shin Jonghak, Chae Nayun, Kim Suho, and Kim Hajin.

Rustle, rustle. Leaves covered the ground beneath them. The steep mountain posed no problems as they laughed and talked.

“Ah, the air feels great. It’s nice to be in an area with high mana concentration. It feels like magic power is pumping into my lungs.”

“Cough, well you know, Chae Nayun, if you’re with me, you can enjoy places like this whenever you want...”

“Oh! A dragonfly!”

They hiked for around 90 minutes and should’ve reached the summit by now, but seemed nowhere close.

“The mountain’s pretty tall, or did we take a wrong turn somewhere?”

“I don’t know. Let’s keep going.”

Something felt off, but they continued walking. The joyous atmosphere slowly disappeared as they continued climbing for another 30 minutes. A strange sensation coiled around them.

“Hey, doesn’t it feel a bit eerie?”

Chae Nayun muttered, unable to endure any longer. Yoo Yeonha also slowed down and joined them. Goosebumps appeared on her arms. Yoo Yeonha asked in a quivering voice.

“Jo... Jonghak, does it normally take this long?”

“I don’t know, but I don’t think we took the wrong path.”

Shin Jonghak looked around. Chwaaa— A cold wind blew against the leaves. Yoo Yeonha trembled at the sound. Strange. Something felt strange. Then Kim Suho explained what they all felt in a low voice.

“We’ve been walking on flat ground for the past 30 minutes.”

Everyone immediately stopped and held their breaths. The uncomfortable feeling spread throughout their bodies. They realized that he was right. They were climbing a mountain, but had been walking on flat ground. Furthermore, no one noticed until Kim Suho mentioned it.

“Don’t worry, Wind Mountain is rich in mana, so a spell might’ve naturally—”

“Wait.”

Kim Suho interrupted Shin Jonghak. He quickly looked around in fear.

“Hajin, where’s Hajin?”

“Huh?”

The rest of the group also looked back and forth. However, they couldn’t find Kim Hajin.

“What... he... he disappeared,” Yoo Yeonha muttered with a pale face.

“Hey! Stop messing with us and come out!” Chae Nayun shouted, but her voice didn’t even echo. A heavy silence descended.

“...”

One of the six had disappeared. The remaining five stood blankly without moving.

Chapter 101

Ghost (3)

The five cadets froze for a long time and occasionally looked around. The mountain suddenly became flat and Kim Hajin disappeared. Another strange phenomenon occurred. The scenery rapidly changed as if time had reversed. The sun in the middle of the sky fell and disappeared. Darkness covered them as they panicked. The five cadets nervously came together.

“Hiik.”

Yoo Yeonha began to tear up. She couldn’t even look at a horror movie poster, much less endure this frightening phenomenon.

“Let’s... stay calm.”

Kim Suho snapped out first as Shin Jonghak also stepped up so he wouldn’t lose.

“Calm down. That Kim Hajon must’ve gotten lost since he’s a bit dull. Or maybe he sneaked away to claim something for himself. After all, we’re on Wind Mountain.”

“It’s Kim Hajin, not Kim Hajon.”

The Jinsung group privately owned Wind Mountain. No one could enter without permission, which meant plenty of precious herbs grew about. Shin Jonghak theorized that Kim Hajin came across one and sneaked away to steal it.

“What? Then how do you explain this? Not only did the mountain become flat, but the sun also disappeared from the sky!”

Chae Nayun pointed to the darkness around them and the thick, overgrown weeds at least 80 centimeters tall.

“That’s...”

Shin Jonghak became speechless. Psss— They heard an animal moving through the grass. Yoo Yeonha shrunk like a frightened rabbit as Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak pointed their weapons in that direction. Ssss— Ssss— Something approached them while rustling through the leaves. Gulp. They nervously waited for three minutes.

“I thought it was a mountain beast. Who would’ve thought it was a bunch of kids?”

A man in his mid-forties appeared. He wore dark blue pants and a baggy dress shirt. He looked like a typical salaryman from the 70s and 80s.

“What are you kids doing here?”

He spoke with somewhat of an old accent. The cadets silently examined him. The man also scrutinized them, especially the female cadets.

“Eh? Why aren’t you talking?”

Shin Jonghak stepped up when the middle-aged man urged them.

“Oy, you. Where is—”

Kim Suho quickly interrupted Shin Jonghak’s ill-mannered speech.

“Um, sir, where are we?”

“Huh?” The man stared incredulously at Kim Suho, then suddenly smirked. “What do you mean? We’re in Gwangmyeong. This is a danger zone. We don’t know when magic power will explode again.”

“Magic power explosion?” Kim Suho murmured. The term sounded familiar.

[A phenomenon where unstable mana exploded. The world's unstable mana frequently exploded for three years after Outcall.]

He recalled from a textbook.

“That’s right. You’ll die if you stay here, so follow me.”

“...”

The man mentioned an extinct phenomenon like it still happened. Kim Suho fell into thought. Magic power explosion. A mountain that turned into flat ground. The man’s old-fashioned clothes...

“Let’s follow him for now.”

They should follow this man to better understand the situation. All five cadets thought the same and nodded somewhat reluctantly. Shin Jonghak then spoke to the man.

“Lead the way.”

“Eh?” Kim Suho quickly corrected him and pushed him to the side. “Ahaha, this is our first time here, so we’ll have to ask you to guide us.”

“What, Kim Suho, you’re gonna provoke me in this situation?”

“Shut up...”

“Just stay quiet and follow along.”

They followed the middle-aged man through the tall grass and heard occasional howls. Eventually, they reached what seemed like a city.

“This is...”

The cadets suddenly halted and blankly stared at the collapsed buildings and barricades of scrap cars and iron bars. Smoke and flames rose from the city.

“Yo, Myungjong. Have you been doing a good job?”

“Of course. Um... who are they?”

“Haha.”

The middle-aged man greeted a young man guarding the entrance who glanced at them with a smile. The middle-aged man turned to the cadets and spoke.

“What’s up? Come in.”

“Um, first, where is this?” Kim Suho asked.

The middle-aged man grinned at Kim Suho’s serious tone.

They had driven by in a limousine earlier in the day. However, the Gwangmyeong City Hall they passed wasn’t dilapidated like this. Kim Suho began to understand the situation.

The man’s clothes. Magic power explosion.

“Can you tell me today’s date?”

“Date?”

Kim Suho asked in a stiff voice. The man rubbed his chin and shook his head.

“Don’t know. Who has the time to count nowadays? I guess it’s about 72 now.”

The cadets fell into a daze once again. Ding— Their heads rang.

“As in... 1972?”

“Well, it sure isn’t 1872.”

The young man guarding the entrance walked up. Then several men appeared from on top of the barricades. Their eyes coldly flickered as they looked down at the cadets.

“Come in. It’s dangerous outside.”

The young man grabbed Chae Nayun’s wrist.

“Hey, let her go.”

Kim Suho pushed him away and pulled out the branch he brought just in case.

“A branch?”

“Hey kiddo, put that down. We’re not bad people.”

“...”

Kim Suho tried to unleash his magic power to intimidate them. Right, he tried. Unfortunately, he couldn’t muster any magic power.

“Hey, Kim Suho. I can’t use my magic power!”

Chae Nayun experienced the same thing and sounded flustered. Meanwhile, the men on top of the barricades jumped down. At least twenty surrounded them. They imbued magic power into their iron bars.

“These pieces of trash dare to...”

A neon light flashed in the distance as Shin Jonghak began to curse them. Everyone’s attention fell on the light. A man in a helmet rode on a high-tech bike.

“A-Ah! That son of a bitch is back! Run inside guys!”

The middle-aged man urged his friends.

“Hurry! He’s a man-eating monster! Stop dilly-dallying! Alert Asura...
aak!”

A white flash erupted and something instantly penetrated the man’s shoulder. It didn’t end there. Several streaks of light shot forward and lit up the darkness. Yoo Yeonha easily identified the attack.

“Bullets?”

“Uuk—”

The barrage of bullets dissolved the encirclement as Kim Suho and the others quickly retreated. They stopped and turned to the man on the bike once they reached far enough. The mysterious man raised his hands and slowly took off his helmet. Soon, they saw his face.

“Huh?”

The man neatly tied up his long hair and had a scruffy beard that covered his chin. His facial hair made him look like someone from a Western movie, but they all recognized him. Kim Suho murmured in a daze.

“Kim Hajin?”

I thought I would be sent back to the past with them just because we walked in the same place at the same time. I was too naive.

About forty days ago, or what should’ve been a few minutes for Kim Suho and the others, I fell into the past while climbing Wind Mountain. The other five experienced a more natural progression since they arrived together.

I panicked at first. However, I realized the situation wasn’t that bad. As expected, the djinns ruling over this place felt stronger than in the original story. Being sent back before the others gave me more time to prepare.

I got busy from the first day. First, I looked for a place to stay. A djinn ruled over Gwangmyeong City Hall, so I had to pick another place close enough to observe them. Next, I observed the djinn's movements and attacked his subordinates to hinder their growth. I ate alone, attacked alone, and ran alone for 40 days. Today, I finally reunited with them.

"Then this really is..."

Kim Suho quietly listened to my story as we returned to my base.

"That's right. We're in Gwangmyeong of 1972. Outcall happened only 15 months ago, so this place is still hell."

They turned as stiff as a rock. Even Shin Jonghak had a grave look.

"Then how long have you been here?" Yoo Yeonha asked.

"I don't know."

My hair and beard grew a lot after 40 days because of the high mana concentration. Energy conversion also made my facial hair grow faster.

"Maybe a year?" I said that as a joke. However, a heavy silence descended. The moonlight lit up the darkness as the only source of light. The others stared at me with incomprehensible faces. I felt satisfied and laughed as I corrected myself.

"I'm kidding. I've only been here for about five weeks."

"..."

However, they remained silent.

"R-Really. It wasn't that bad of an experience."

It felt like a necessary experience. For two months, I fought people, not monsters. The atmosphere became awkward, but Shin Jonghak asked without much care.

“So did you find out what caused this phenomenon?”

“Yeah, more or less.”

“Really?” Yoo Yeonha’s eyes widened.

“I’ll explain later. For now, let’s get to the base.”

We arrived at my base. I chose an abandoned building buried in a nearby forest. It served as a good temporary shelter with only one entrance.

“Not even my horse would live here.”

“Hajin, you spent a year here? With nothing around?”

Shin Jonghak shook his head in disapproval as Kim Suho asked with a look of pity.

“It hasn’t been a year. Please believe me!”

I emphasized once again. I never would’ve made that joke if I knew they would pity me like this.

“But there’s... nothing.”

“Yeah, I’m surprised you lived here for so long. You have my respect.”

Yoo Yeonha and Chae Nayun grimaced. I couldn’t blame them. This was probably their first time seeing such a dilapidated home with only rocks and cockroaches. However, that was only for now.

“Just wait. There’s a lot more to see.”

I took out the duffel bag on my motorbike and pulled out two magic tents. I imbued a bit of stigma's magic power into them... tada! They instantly expanded.

“Whoa! What's this?”

Two proper homes popped up. Chae Nayun's eyes lit up as she approached the tents.

“Oh, before I explain what's going on, aren't you guys hungry?”

Everyone other than Shin Jonghak looked at me with sparkling eyes. I took out a grill, an icebox, and several pieces of cooking equipment.

“Oh, but we'll need to butcher it first.”

I already ate most of the food I brought other than some spam and ten bags of ramen I saved for an emergency. As a result, we would have to hunt wild animals and butcher them.

“Butcher?”

“Yeah.”

I opened the icebox with a pig's torso split in half. I caught this one two days ago and butchered it myself. For the record, I vomited twice during the entire process.

“We have to butcher this.”

I looked at Kim Suho. He grinned and raised his hand.

“I'll do it. I'm good at stuff like this.”

“Yi Yeonghan, you help him too.”

“Okay.”

“Butchering, it suits you. Kim Suho the Butcher, that can be your title.”

Shin Jonghak taunted Kim Suho from the side. I handed him four empty water buckets.

“You, go get water. There’s a stream to the right.”

“What?”

Shin Jonghak frowned. I had never seen him so angry. He seemed to be saying something like, How dare you order me around! However, I already knew the magic words to control him.

“Hey, Chae Nayun. Go with him.”

“Hm? Me?” Chae Nayun scurried out of the tent.

“Hm.”

Shin Jonghak silently took the canteens. Then he coughed a few times and handed two buckets to Chae Nayun.

“Let’s go.”

“Are we going to get water?”

“Yeah.”

“Great. I was getting thirsty.”

Chae Nayun and Shin Jonghak walked to the stream.

“Hmph, why is it Chae Nayun?”

Yoo Yeonha grumbled as she watched them leave. She turned away and sulked when I glanced at her. I murmured to myself.

“Let’s make some ramen when they come back with water.”

“Ramen?”

Yoo Yeonha’s grumpy face instantly disappeared. I took out a few bags of ramen from the duffel bag.

“Yeah. Why? You don’t like them? You’re not going to pretend to be a chaebol, right?”

Yoo Yeonha smacked her lips and shook her head. “No, ssp. I guess there’s, ssp, no choice. It’s better than starving to death, ssp.”

She must’ve been hungry as she loudly swallowed her saliva.

Chapter 102

Ghost (4)

Yoo Yeonha asked for a broom while Chae Nayun and Shin Jonghak fetched the water and Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan butchered the pig. I gave her the one that came with my camping set and she began to sweep. Thanks to her, the shelter became a decent camping ground.

“Not bad.”

Yoo Yeonha looked around and smiled. Meanwhile, I took out a burner and grill. Then I sat on a camping chair.

“Huaam. Oh right, um, I’ve been meaning to ask. Why can’t we use magic power? It took 30 minutes to clean this place when it should’ve only taken 3.”

Yoo Yeonha spoke as she stretched.

“You can’t use the magic power that you brought from the present. Usable magic power accumulates inside you after two days, but you’ll have to wait at least a week to use it.”

The same occurred in the original story. The post-Outcall mana felt vastly different from the stable mana in the present. The former felt denser, but also more difficult to wield. Everyone would suffer for at least a week until they acclimated. However, this would become a valuable experience for the future.

“Ah, so that’s why.”

Kim Suho overheard and spoke up. He sat next to me with Yi Yeonghan.

“Are you done?”

“Yo, we’re back.”

Chae Nayun and Shin Jonghak appeared at the entrance and placed the buckets on the ground. Yoo Yeonha glanced around and coughed.

“Then should we eat now?”

Yoo Yeonha sounded happy since she could eat ramen. I lit the grill and filled the pot with water. Then I placed it on the burner. Today’s menu would be pork belly and ramen. First, I put the pork belly on the hot grill. Tssss— The meat pleasantly sizzled. I also placed several bags of ramen into the water as it boiled.

“Hehe.”

Yoo Yeonha happily looked back and forth between the pork belly and ramen. We sat around the food 4 minutes later. Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan enjoyed it, but the other three grew up in luxury. Shin Jonghak and Chae Nayun only stared even though they felt hungry. Yoo Yeonha held back because of them.

“Your mana will replenish faster if you eat. Animals here have higher mana content.”

Shin Jonghak finally picked up his chopstick. Yoo Yeonha sighed and finally filled her bowl with ramen. She carefully slurped a few strands of noodles. I also filled my bowl with ramen and ate it with the pork belly.

“Hm?”

Yoo Yeonha watched me and also picked up a slice of pork belly into her bowl. Then she ate it together like I did. Nom, nom. Her small mouth busily moved as her head drooped. She clenched her fists and trembled. Was it that delicious? She sure made it seem so.

“Ah, I’m going to feel queasy...”

Chae Nayun slowly challenged a slice of pork belly. The greasy piece of meat entered her mouth.

“Eh? It tastes delicious.”

She murmured in surprise after chewing. I explained with a smile.

“It’s a pig that grew up eating mana.”

“What?”

“This pig lived in an area with higher mana concentration than Baekdu Mountain.”

Animals that grew up in mana-rich areas tasted more delicious than ordinary livestock. Most of these areas in the present were privately owned and such animals were considered precious. This pig would be high class even for Chae Nayun’s taste.

“Wow? That’s amazing!”

Chae Nayun began to move her chopsticks. Yoo Yeonha felt threatened and quickened her pace. We ate for the next thirty minutes without talking. Then Chae Nayun pointed at me with her chopsticks as we finished eating.

“By the way, that looks surprisingly good on you.”

“Hm? What does?”

“That hair and beard. You look like someone from a historical drama. You know, like one of those cool warriors.”

Kim Suho also chimed in from next to me.

“She’s right. Hajin, your beard grows like a Westerner.”

“Like a Western model?”

“No, not a model.”

A Western model... I proudly shrugged without speaking. It may not look like it, but I spent some time styling my facial hair. Yoo Yeonha muttered in a small voice.

“Yeah, I guess you look better the more you cover your face.”

“What? Care to repeat that?”

“W-Where’s the water?”

She had spoken subconsciously and avoided my gaze.

“By the way, are you bathing properly? You look dirty.”

“I do. At least once every two days at a nearby stream.”

“What! Hey, is the water we just drank...”

“But still...” Chae Nayun sounded displeased.

“Beard...”

Meanwhile, Shin Jonghak rubbed his chin next to Chae Nayun. I felt like I would see Shin Jonghak with a beard after a week or so. Anyways, we played around enough. I clapped my hands.

“Gather up. I’ll explain the current situation.”

A ghost had caused this time travel, but it would normally never be strong enough to send humans to the past. Time travel was a mystical phenomenon that no one had ever observed. It could be considered a miracle. However, this ghost had reproduced a fraction of this miracle.

“It used a tower remnant.”

I took out a purple crystal from my pocket. Then I asked Shin Jonghak.

“The Tower of Time was inside Wind Mountain, correct?”

“Yeah. My grandfather conquered it more than 20 years ago.”

Only a tower’s reward could perform such a miracle. When someone conquered a tower, it condensed into a grand lump of magic power. These so-called tower crystals functioned differently depending on the tower. The buoyancy stone that kept Clancy Islet afloat was also a tower crystal, as well as the ocean stone and information stone.

“When the Tower of Time condensed into a tower crystal, some of its magic power remained. Over a long period, it formed this remnant.”

I showed them a fingernail-sized purple crystal.

“So the ghost borrowed this crystal’s power and pulled us into a recorded world.”

According to my settings, this recorded world functioned similarly to a parallel world, but slightly different. Yoo Yeonha vaguely understood, but Kim Suho seemed confused.

“A recorded world?”

“Yeah. It’s a form of magical space that reproduces the past. It’s not that different from the real world since it operates within the same laws of physics. However, it can’t affect the real world in any way.”

“Oh...”

I continued explaining about the enemy we had to defeat.

“The ghost also pulled in a djinn by the name of Asura. By the way, he’s not the real Asura, so don’t worry too much. He’s using mana crystals to grow stronger.”

Mana crystals naturally formed when mana condensed into a solid.

“Um, I have a question.”

Yoo Yeonha raised her hand.

“How can he grow stronger with mana crystals? It wasn’t until the 2000’s that scientists figured out how to use them.”

“By eating them.”

“Eh?”

Most people would instantly die upon consuming mana crystals. They would suffer huge internal injuries even if they survived. However, this djinn was different.

“It looks like he gained a special power when he merged with the ghost. He can swallow and digest mana crystals without consequence.”

“Then...”

Their expressions turned serious. Asura had become stronger than in the original story, but not to a great extent. I couldn’t say the same about other antagonists, but I perfectly countered this self-proclaimed Asura.

“So this Asura is our only enemy?”

Shin Jonghak asked as I shook my head.

“No, there’s more. Before that, I need to explain how we can return to the present.”

I placed the purple crystal on my palm.

“As I said before, this tower remnant is holding this world together. Asura has placed these crystals around the world. Without them, he can’t materialize the past.”

“So we have to steal them?”

“Right.”

I opened a map that I made.

“One exists in Gwangmyeong City Hall, another in a water tower to the northeast, one in an armory to the west, and a steel tower to the south...”

We needed to steal six crystals. Then we had to gather and crush them at the same time. The past would crumble, and we would return to the present. Of course, Asura would use Gwangmyeong City Hall’s 5000 residents to stop us.

“Asura has a subordinate guarding each location other than Gwangmyeong City Hall.”

Honestly, I couldn’t beat Asura’s five subordinates, but I could beat their leader. It was a matter of suitability.

“So it’s clear what we need to do.”

Kim Suho spoke as I nodded and yawned. I felt tired since it was 1 A.M.

“It’s late. Let’s rest for five hours. It’ll help you replenish your mana. First, let’s decide on night watch.”

I opened my eyes at dawn and felt the cold morning wind. I had developed a short sleep cycle after staying here for 40 days. During my almost 6 weeks alone, I divided my sleep into one hour time frames since I didn’t know when enemies would attack. I even spent an entire day in a tree when they patrolled the area.

“Hmm.”

The morning air felt refreshing. I stretched outside the tent and saw Chae Nayun on watch when I went to the entrance of the abandoned building. The twilight's blue hue shone down on her. She felt my presence and slightly turned towards me.

“You're up?”

She smiled.

“Yeah. I see you're on night watch.”

“Piece of cake.”

“Is it?”

I tied up my shoulder-length hair as Chae Nayun curiously looked at me.

“Hey, isn't it uncomfortable with long hair? Yours is almost as long as mine.”

“It is, but I can't cut it or I might get cursed by a magician.”

“They even have a curse magician?”

“Yeah. He walks around with a voodoo doll.”

I trudged up to Chae Nayun. Then I shoed her off my bike.

“Tsk.”

Chae Nayun clicked her tongue and moved over to a chair. She sat and looked forward at the sunrise over the horizon. The sky still shone with stars and lush vegetation filled the earth. I grew curious about what she thought looking at this scene from the past.

“What are you thinking about?”

“Huh? Mm... I wondered why the ghost couldn’t have sent me to the year 2000 instead of 1972.”

“...”

Her mother would still be alive. I silently looked at the forest. Suddenly, she said something I couldn’t understand.

“Well, I’m sure you thought about it too.”

“...?”

I turned to her as she quietly spoke.

“Sorry, I shouldn’t complain in front of you. Just ignore it.”

I recalled my parents after hearing her words. However, I stopped thinking about it since it felt too painful. Chae Nayun peeked at me and cheerfully spoke.

“Oh, by the way, my mom was born in 1972.”

“So she had you when she was fairly old.”

“That’s just how it was back then. She was super busy. I’m sure she didn’t have the time for a child when she was younger.”

Chae Nayun muttered as she stared at my bike. Then she repeated what she said before.

“My mom was born in 1972 in Sungmo Hospital.”

That was only thirty minutes away on the motorbike. If this was the real world, that is.

“We can’t go to central Seoul. This world is restricted to only this area.”

“Oh, I see.”

Chae Nayun hid her disappointment with a smile.

“How unfortunate.”

Chapter 103

Ghost (5)

The party focused on training for a week. They worked out and sparred to exhaust their magic power. Yoo Yeonha led the training like in the original story.

“Huup!”

A crescent sword strike flew through the air. Clang! The sharp, metallic sound of swords clashing rang out. Chae Nayun felt like her hands would burst, but she didn’t lose focus. Kim Suho immediately followed with a cross slash.

“Uk!”

Then he stabbed forward like water. Chae Nayun couldn’t properly defend and flew back.

“Auu... I lost.”

She raised her hand from the ground and surrendered. Yoo Yeonha jotted something down in her notebook.

“Kim Suho 12, Chae Nayun 0.”

“Do you need to keep track?”

Chae Nayun grumbled and stood up. She dusted off the dirt from her body as Shin Jonghak checked her out. The weather had turned rather hot and Chae Nayun had cut her long jeans into shorts. Yoo Yeonha shouted at him.

“Shin Jonghak 4, Kim Suho 8!”

“What? No, it’s 4 wins, 4 losses, and 4 draws.”

“I’m the referee. Kim Suho won those by my decision.”

Woong—

The sound of a bike engine drew near. Kim Suho muttered after drinking some water.

“Looks like Hajin is back.”

“Yeah, ssp, looks like our chef is back.”

Kim Hajin took care of their food ever since they arrived in the past. Yoo Yeonha detested herself for drooling whenever she heard his bike since he always brought back something delicious. She began to react subconsciously.

“Hey, Kim Hajin! What did you bring back today?”

Chae Nayun shouted as the bike appeared in front of the entrance with an icebox.

Kim Hajin parked next to the wall and took off his helmet. Everyone had gotten used to his long hair and beard. Chae Nayun scurried up to him like a puppy waiting for her owner. Then she brought back the icebox.

“Cough.”

Yoo Yeonha and Shin Jonghak also followed Chae Nayun. The icebox contained pork, chicken, drinks, and even snacks.

“Is this Coke?”

“C-Coke?”

Yoo Yeonha’s eyes filled with greed when she spotted the brown liquid inside a glass bottle.

“Korea had Coke in the ’70s?”

Shin Jonghak murmured as he rubbed his new beard. He raised his chin to emphasize it when Chae Nayun glanced at him. She stared for a moment and blurted out.

“Why does your beard look like a goat’s?”

Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan handled the cooking. My magic bag contained all sorts of spices and seasonings. They braised some delicious spicy chicken and pork belly.

In the 1970s, even ordinary stream water contained more spirit energy and mana than Baekdu Mountain’s so-called heavenly water. The food tasted even more delicious when cooked with the water. Everyone’s magic power capacity would increase by 10% from eating and living here for six months. Of course, they would also have to train to accumulate that effect.

“Ah, I almost don’t want to go back. How am I supposed to eat food from back home again?”

Chae Nayun muttered as she stared at the empty pot.

“Rather than that, you should get up and spar.”

“My body hurts every time I use magic power. I’m not kidding. It feels like someone is squeezing my heart.”

“That’s because magic power clumps in your heart. You can alleviate that by using it.”

I ignored her complaints as she grumbled.

“Then why aren’t you sparring?”

“Because I don’t need to.”

“Oh yeah?”

I didn't need to spar. The alerts on my smartwatch proved it.

[Your magic dysfunction physique permanently absorbs the accumulated magic! Your strength increases by 0.0002 points.] [Your magic dysfunction physique permanently...]

I gained 0.25 stat points over the past 50 days from this place's high mana concentration. I didn't have to put in any effort. Only an hour would pass in the real world even if we stayed for a year. However, that didn't mean we could stay forever. The party stayed for about four weeks in the original story. The past would slowly erode after that.

“Alright everyone, listen up.”

I clapped and drew their attention.

“We're going to start poking at them in four days. After all, we can't stay here forever. I've come up with a plan.”

I only slightly changed the plan in the original story. We would start at their weakest point and steal two of the crystals.

“Northeast water tower's Kim Mingyo and south steel tower's Joo Parang. We'll split into two groups and ambush them at night.”

Four days passed and the night we would attack arrived.

We split into two teams with Shin Jonghak and me in one and the other four together. Of course, Shin Jonghak opposed it, but I insisted. I felt more comfortable teaming up with him.

“We'll go first. If you can't clear the mission in two hours, just escape and return to base.”

I got on my bike as Shin Jonghak awkwardly hopped on behind me. He tried to find something to hold, but accidentally touched my butt. Immediately, he shuddered.

“Shit, what am I supposed to hold on to?”

“Next to you.”

“...”

Shin Jonghak spotted two protruding handles on the sides.

“I want to ride it too...”

Chae Nayun watched in envy as I stepped on the accelerator. My bike could go from 0 to 100 in less than a second even on a mountain path. We reached our destination in a flash.

I parked in a nearby forest and transformed the bike into its suitcase form. Shin Jonghak suddenly asked as we snuck to the target.

“Oy, is there a reason we had to team up?”

“Well...”

Kim Suho wouldn’t kill even if the people in this world weren’t real.

“So?”

“Sh. Look.”

We could see the water tower in the distance. Only about twenty individuals guarded it. Furthermore, people from the past couldn’t efficiently use mana. The only person I couldn’t beat was Kim Mingyo. However, he was only as strong as a low-intermediate rank hero, so Shin Jonghak would be enough.

“Kim Mingyo should be inside the water tower. I’ll deal with the small fries outside, so you go get him. I’ll support you from the back.”

“I don’t need your support.”

Shin Jonghak took out his spear. Whish— He needlessly spun it and caused a cloud of dirt to rise.

“Ptui. Hey, you’re getting dirt in my mouth.”

“Shut it.”

“I saw it entering yours too.”

“...Cut the crap.”

He licked his teeth and spat on the ground. Then a deep voice came from below the mountain.

“Who is it?”

We both turned and saw a young man with a well-built body. He seemed like a lackey on patrol from the way he shone a flashlight at us.

“This place is Asura’s land. Outsiders aren’t allowed, so turn back.”

Shin Jonghak stepped up with a sneer. “And if I refuse?”

“Ha, then you’ll be beaten.”

The young man pulled out some nunchucks as his magic power flickered around. Whoosh— whoosh— whoosh— He started swinging.

“Can you see the movement of the wind?”

Top, bottom, left, right. The nunchucks swung from all sides and created a fierce gale. I took a step back as the young man burst into laughter.

“Ahahaha! Scared?”

Click. I transformed the Desert Eagle into a shotgun and pulled the trigger.

“This is... huaak—!”

I blasted him away like an insect.

“...What a funny guy.”

“You wait here, Shin Jonghak.”

I prepared 100 handgun, shotgun, and sniper bullets along with 900 5.56mm bullets for this event.

“Who are you to tell me what to do?”

“It’ll be easier for two captains to fight once the lackeys disappear, right?”

“...I guess you’re right.”

I climbed a nearby tree and transformed the Desert Eagle into a sniper. First, I targeted the ones patrolling or dozing off. My bullets silently flew and killed them. I didn’t hesitate or feel guilty. This place was only a reproduction of the past. These people weren’t real, but phantoms that would soon disappear. I clenched my teeth and pulled the trigger. A body silently fell as I aimed for another without watching the last one die.

“Haa.”

I was drenched in cold sweat by the time I killed five. Even killing fake people took a toll as I closed my eyes for a brief rest.

* * *

Kim Suho’s team infiltrated the south steel tower.

“Hmm...”

Yoo Yeonha pondered as she looked up at the steel tower. A purple crystal shone at the peak. However, a magic cylinder encased it and made it impossible to snatch with her whip.

“What’s our plan?” Yi Yeonghan asked.

Yoo Yeonha scanned the enemy forces below. About forty around the same level as Cube cadets. It would be difficult with just the four of them. Heroes could take on ten individuals one full rank below them. For example, an intermediate rank, grade 1 hero could suppress ten low-intermediate rank, grade 1 heroes simultaneously. However, Yoo Yeonha didn’t think the four of them could do that except for Kim Suho. Yoo Yeonha looked at him and spoke.

“Kim Suho, you need to draw their attention as much as possible. Most of them will chase after you, but they’ll keep a small amount to defend. The three of us will suppress the rest. We’ll slowly decrease their numbers.”

“What? Isn’t that too dangerous?”

Chae Nayun hesitated, but Kim Suho agreed.

“No, I think it’s for the best.”

He lightly smiled. “Then I’ll get going.”

He condensed magic power around his legs and exploded forward. A sonic boom scattered behind him as he shot to the battlefield like a bullet and struck a guard down with his branch.

“Uuk!”

The man collapsed with a scream as everyone focused on Kim Suho.

“E-Enemy ambush!”

Most of the guards ran towards Kim Suho while Yoo Yeonha, Chae Nayun, and Yi Yeonghan rushed at the ones left behind.

“W-What!?”

“Aak!”

Yi Yeonghan headlocked them with his monstrous strength, Chae Nayun smacked them with the magic power surrounding her sword, and Yoo Yeonha suppressed them with her whip.

“Uu, uuu...”

A man with a sword fainted after Yoo Yeonha choked him with her whip.

“Hmph.”

Yoo Yeonha poked the man on the ground with her foot. She leisurely turned back after he didn’t react. Suddenly, a sharp sword shot towards her. She quickly ducked, but the blade severed a few strands of her hair.

“Y-You!”

Yoo Yeonha swung her whip and strangled the attacker.

“Do you have any idea how much effort I put into growing it!”

Her whip strangled him tightly as the man’s face turned purple. She stared at her hair on the ground and grew angry once again when she realized how much she lost.

“Uk, uuk...”

However, she showed mercy and stopped before the man died. Kim Hajin said they weren’t real, but killing them would leave a bad aftertaste.

“Hey, Yi Yeonghan! You handle the steel tower! Yeonha and I will go help Kim Suho!”

Chae Nayun shouted.

“Okay!”

Yi Yeonghan continued ahead as Yoo Yeonha looked over at Kim Suho. Only 5 out of the 30 still stood. He didn’t seem to be at a disadvantage.

“Uwuk, hey! Help me, not Kim Suho! Joo Parang is here!”

Yi Yeonghan desperately shouted from the steel tower.

Two hours later, both teams retrieved the purple crystals without any problems like in the original story. We roasted a whole pig in celebration. I didn’t have much of an appetite, but Chae Nayun and Kim Suho voraciously ate. I watched them finish before speaking.

“Good job today. The north and southeast areas will now become inactive.”

We just had to take it slow like today.

“Kek.”

Yoo Yeonha suddenly grabbed her neck as if she choked and smacked her chest before gulping down some water. Her face turned pale.

“What’s wrong, Yeonha?” Chae Nayun worriedly asked.

“Nothing. I just can’t... digest well.”

I frowned. “There’s no way you can’t digest your food.”

“W-What do you mean? It’s not like I’m a pig. I can get sick too.”

No, that couldn't be the problem since the meat was so tender. I narrowed my eyes and scanned her for injuries, but she seemed fine. Then I noticed her hair. It looked asymmetrical like someone had cut it.

"What's that?"

"Yes?"

Yoo Yeonha tilted her head as I pointed at her hair.

"Your hair. What happened?"

"Oh, this? Someone cut it during the last battle..."

"Damn it."

Kim Suho's team would've only suppressed them. The survivors would take back any traces of their attackers. For example, someone's hair.

"Argh, why does my chest feel so heavy?"

Yoo Yeonha kept thumping her chest. Someone had cursed her. Even a single strand of hair could kill depending on the curse magician's ability. Gwangmyeong City Hall did have a voodoo magician who used the curse of weakening. Things just got complicated.

"Why are you looking at me like that? I'm not that sick." Yoo Yeonha frowned.

"Look how worried he is. Maybe he likes you." Chae Nayun chimed in with a grin.

"Then I'll have to decline. Sorry."

"Listen you two..."

Areas with high mana would amplify the power of curses. They snickered to themselves without knowing.

I was partially at fault for not warning them. I sighed and slowly opened my mouth.

Chapter 104

Ghost (6)

I explained what would happen if the curse magician had obtained Yoo Yeonha's hair. I didn't exaggerate or downplay anything. A curse of weakening could only be removed by killing the magician. The curse wouldn't directly kill her, but an environment like this without any medical facilities could lead to the worst. The atmosphere turned grave after I finished.

"Oh right, you mentioned it before, but I forgot... dammit."

Chae Nayun blamed herself and clenched her fists. I couldn't blame her since I only briefly mentioned it a week ago when she probably felt tired on night watch.

I held most of the responsibility since I didn't properly warn them about all the dangers. They wouldn't have forgotten if I had told them.

We all fell silent for a moment. Then the person of concern broke our anxiety with a cheerful voice.

"Why do you all look so serious?"

Yoo Yeonha continued with a bright expression. "We're not sure if it's a curse yet. Plus, I have some anti-magic power. I can beat something like a curse easily... ah."

Shin Jonghak's hand fell on her head.

"Tell me if it hurts."

Her cheeks faintly turned red. Was this a bad boy's charm? She nodded energetically.

“Un, but I don’t think it’s going to hurt much.”

“Don’t lie, tsk.”

Shin Jonghak stood up with his spear and spoke in an angry voice, “They should be busy organizing themselves after the ambush. Let’s barge in and crush them before the sun comes up.”

It was currently 3 in the morning with some time left before sunrise. We couldn’t waste any time if Yoo Yeonha had been cursed. Everyone stood up and began to check their equipment.

“L-Let me go too. I’m still okay.”

“You stay put.”

Shin Jonghak stopped her. We left Yoo Yeonha behind and set out to ambush them again.

The battle only took an hour this time. The enraged Shin Jonghak swept through the north tower and retrieved the purple crystal. His physique, intermittent explosive disorder, had been triggered. This strange physique amplified his physical stats up to 130% depending on his anger.

Asura sat on a throne in Gwangmyeong City Hall as he received a report about the three stolen crystals. He became enraged until Yi Yohan, the curse magician, calmed him down. Yi Yohan had received a lock of one of the attacker’s hair.

“M-My apologies, Boss!”

“It’s fine. Don’t overreact.”

Asura had already sent out scouts to confirm the attackers’ numbers and base. They looked like young and friendly kids. Such children wouldn’t just watch one of their friends die. Asura pitied them and considered them weak for caring about such useless emotions like loyalty, love, and friendship.

“Bring the remaining crystals back here.”

“Yes? Ah, understood!”

They still had three crystals. He would gather all of them together and wait for the attackers to come save their friend.

“Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak...”

Asura recognized two of them as Cube’s greatest rising stars. He already warned his subordinates about them.

“My future looks bright.”

He felt confident in becoming one of Destruction’s executives if he could obtain their heads.

Yoo Yeonha began to grow thin and weak after one day. We noticed too late that Asura had retrieved all his remaining crystals. Yoo Yeonha’s pupils withered up by day 2. She could barely stand anymore on day 3.

We went out to observe Gwangmyeong City Hall in frustration, but couldn’t spot any movements. They didn’t attack or even patrol. They just holed up in their base.

Time passed as we fruitlessly observed Gwangmyeong City Hall. Yoo Yeonha’s condition deteriorated until she could only lay in bed. She suffered from high temperatures, chills, and nausea. Everyone had the same thought looking at her. She would die at this rate.

“Yeonha, can you eat this?”

“...”

Yi Yeonghan and Chae Nayun made some porridge, but she could hardly eat. She only ate a spoonful before lying back down. Even stigma's magic power couldn't undo the curse since it wasn't a spell that used magic power, but a gift.

"No movements today either. It looks like they'll just stay cooped up in the city hall."

Kim Suho came back from patrol and sounded frustrated. Asura acted differently from the original story. He retrieved all the crystals and simply waited since he knew one of us was dying. He knew we had to go to him.

"We have no choice. We'll have to do what those trash want!" Shin Jonghak grew impatient and shouted.

"Wait, wait, you want the four of us to fight 5000 people?" Yi Yeonghan voiced his concern.

"The past becomes unstable when all the crystals gather in one place. It's the same for the people of the past, so only 100 to 200 should be there. We only have to look out for ten, including Asura."

I explained the situation to everyone.

People of the past would become weaker if the crystals weren't spread out. We could defeat them.

However, we couldn't just leave Yoo Yeonha alone. One of us had to stay before we killed the magician. Wait a minute. I looked at the purple crystals inside my leather pocket. Wouldn't Asura come to me if I was alone?

"Sounds good to me. Let's go 5 v.s. 200. I feel like I can kill them all."

Chae Nayun aggressively spoke as Yi Yeonghan anxiously bit his fingernails.

"W-What if he sends one of his lackeys to kidnap Yoo Yeonha?"

“I’ll protect her.” I raised my hand.

“I’ll protect her and the crystals. I can just escape with her on the bike in the worst-case scenario.”

I felt confident that I could defeat Asura if he came alone. I also felt confident in escaping on my bike if he brought others.

“Okay.” Kim Suho thought it over with his eyes closed and agreed. “It looks like this is our only option.”

“Damn it. Fine, but don’t say I didn’t warn you if anything goes wrong.”

Yi Yeonghan grumbled and stretched. Shin Jonghak also released his fierce magic power.

“Just you wait, Asura. I’ll tear you apart tonight.”

He prophesized Asura’s death like the main character of a movie.

Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, Chae Nayun, and Yi Yeonghan walked along a path under the full moon. The surroundings had turned rather bleak after Asura retrieved all the crystals. The grass lacked color and the trees had withered. They finally spotted Gwangmyeong City Hall. It looked like a fortress now, but no one guarded the barricades. They resolutely walked into the trap after cladding themselves in qi reinforcement.

A man suddenly appeared on the roof of a broken bus. He had a well-built body and carried a long steel pipe. The party could guess he was Yoo Dongsuk from his height and bandit-like appearance. Kim Hajin had mentioned him as one of Asura’s subordinates.

“Ahem, this place is off-limits to kids.”

Several men with weapons appeared. Shin Jonghak calmly asked, “You’re Yoo Dongsuk?”

“Haha, a kid shouldn’t talk to adults like that.”

Shin Jonghak smirked and pointed his spear at Yoo Dongsuk.

“Lackeys can screw off. Where’s Asura?”

“Asura isn’t here.”

“I won’t ask a second time.”

Shin Jonghak ignited his spear with black magic power. Yoo Dongsuk’s eyes widened.

“W-What? What’s up with the color of your magic power?”

“Bring Asura right now. Bring Asura here!”

Shin Jonghak spun his spear 180 degrees. He used the most basic spear technique called crescent moon slash. His black magic power shot out in an arc and exploded when it reached Yoo Dongsuk. It destroyed the bus and continued flying until it cut one of the watchtowers in half.

“Wow, scary.” Yoo Dongsuk chuckled as he leaped down. “I’m not lying. Asura isn’t here.”

“Then where is—”

An ominous thought flashed across Shin Jonghak’s mind. He gripped his spear tighter.

“Y-You bastards...”

“Haha, what were you thinking, leaving the crystals behind with your injured friend?”

Stealing from an empty house. It wasn’t that they didn’t expect it at all. They just didn’t expect the boss would go. Shin Jonghak, Chae Nayun, and Yi Yeonghan quickly turned back, but found themselves surrounded. Their faces immediately stiffened.

“Pft.”

However, one person remained calm. Kim Suho even burst into laughter.

“Hahaha.”

The others looked at him as though he had gone crazy. Chae Nayun even felt afraid and wondered if that was really Kim Suho.

“What are you laughing about, brat?”

Yoo Dongsuk felt anxious seeing Kim Suho laugh like that.

“No, it’s just... did your boss go alone?”

“...”

Yoo Dongsuk didn’t answer, but his silence gave it away.

“Then we have nothing to worry about.”

Kim Suho turned to his comrades and spoke with a smile.

“Hajin is stronger than me.”

Tak, tak. I slowly turned towards the ominous footsteps. A man appeared at the entrance of the abandoned building. His red eyes flickered under a black robe. I closed my eyes and smiled.

As expected, he chose the easy route and left his subordinates to ambush our base alone. The ghost must’ve told him the location of our crystals.

“Human, pitiful human. This is why I gave up being a human. I didn’t want to be tied down to useless emotions like you.”

“Shut it.”

I ignored the crap he spouted and studied the surroundings.

“You’re alone?”

“I’m not alone. I have my army with—”

“You’re alone.”

He amplified his magic power capacity by consuming mana crystals, but didn’t know how to properly use his new powers. Furthermore, Asura lacked direct attacks with magic power. After all, he was only a low rank djinn who knew how to do one thing.

—Ssss.

He unleashed his magic power and formed a giant pathway that spewed out strange creatures in all shapes and sizes. Some resembled a wolf, an orc, and even a pig. Their numbers quickly multiplied. One, two, four, eight, sixteen... I stopped counting at sixty-four. He summoned at least 2000, if not more. I stood in front of an overwhelming army.

Asura’s gift was called, Hail of Demonic Beasts.

He used magic power to summon creatures from the demon realm. They should all be around low-intermediate rank, grade 1 to grade 7. Kim Suho might’ve struggled since swinging a sword required more stamina. I couldn’t imagine swinging a sword 2000 times.

However, I wasn’t Kim Suho. I felt glad he came to me. Of course, I planned on finding him with the thousand-mile eyes if he didn’t come.

“Um...”

“Hm?”

Yoo Yeonha grabbed my sleeve when I tried to stand up and breathed heavily. “Leave me... and run...”

I stared at her as she spoke with a hoarse voice. I could see the guilt, worry, and concern in her eyes. I smiled at this side of her.

“Don’t worry and go to sleep. It’ll be over by the time you wake up.”

Yoo Yeonha fell into a daze as I closed her eyes and took out the Desert Eagle. I transformed it with aether into a modern weapon that could fight an army. Not a shotgun or a sniper, but an assault rifle.

This world didn’t prefer assault rifles because of the cost of bullets and its lower power, but neither of those disadvantages applied to me. Aether enhanced my attack power along with the Desert Eagle’s natural buffs. I also had one more trick.

Scan.

The number 44 flashed across my assault rifle. My luck gave me the best possible outcome.

“...”

A smile bloomed on my face. As always, I operated based on the principle of acting strong against the weak and weak against the strong. I perfectly countered his gift. He could summon as many small fries as he wanted, but they stood no chance. Furthermore, I wouldn’t use up any stamina or magic power. I only required bullets and a finger to pull the trigger. The disadvantageous terrain slightly worried me.

“I’ll have to use a little of this.”

I took out a finger-sized crystal from my pocket and modified the terrain by pouring in some of stigma’s magic power. Bzzzzz— The ground rumbled and transformed. The circular arena Asura created split in half. Now the army of summoned beasts couldn’t surround me anymore and could only attack head-on. I only needed to kill two or three with each bullet.

“You know how to use the crystal of the past? What difference does that make?”

Asura chuckled as I calmly replied.

“It changes everything.”

Chapter 105

Ghost (7)

Yoo Yeonha glimpsed an endless sea of monsters in her daze. One, two, three... one, two, three... She couldn't keep count. Everything felt like a distant dream within her groggy consciousness. She felt sure she wouldn't survive this army of monsters. The beast-like creatures growled and bared their teeth. She hallucinated that one of them bit off her neck as her consciousness faded.

There, she saw him standing in front of her when she opened her eyes again.

He stood in front of the army of monsters and looked like a small praying mantis in front of a skyscraper. He wouldn't be able to withstand that dark sea alone, but he could escape.

She used up all her energy to grab his sleeve and speak.

— Leave me... and run...

However, he didn't listen and only smiled.

— Don't worry and go to sleep.

He softly spoke.

— It'll be over by the time you wake up.

He reached out and closed her eyes. Her vision went dark and she began to dream a familiar dream where she had succeeded and several people bowed to her. People who ignored and disdained her, people who mocked her clan for being a hunting dog... they all knelt in front of her. She would accomplish this dream by herself.

Slowly, she opened her eyes again. The darkness faded away and light appeared. She saw his back, but couldn't remember his name anymore. He held an assault rifle, a mass-produced weapon that couldn't shoot magic power like spear and sword artifacts. An unstoppable army stood in front of his shabby gun. Time seemed to slow with her groggy consciousness. The sea of monsters rushed towards him. Beasts on four legs, orcs, spiders, snakes, birds, and one-eyed that shot out magic. All these demonic beasts rushed forward like a tidal wave.

He raised his gun against this raging wave. His bullets turned the world white as it pushed against the black wave. It pierced through the foreheads of beasts, the hearts of orcs, the abdomens of spiders, the mouths of snakes, and the eyes of cyclops. He struck all their vital points without missing and pushed them back. An endless rain tore the monsters apart and never stopped. Corpses quickly stacked up and formed a mountain. He didn't allow a single monster through and decimated the entire army alone.

Yoo Yeonha felt an incomprehensible warmth. She realized how relaxing it felt to be protected. She finally calmed and closed her eyes. Kim Hajin. His name entered her mind before she noticed. When she opened her eyes again... she hoped everything would be alright.

Kim Suho slashed out a crescent-shaped arc with his magic power. Yoo Dongsuk managed to block with his steel pipe, but it sent his subordinates flying past him. Kim Suho charged with no one left to interfere. Yoo Dongsuk swung his steel pipe as he asked, "Is it true?"

"What is?"

Kim Suho parried his pipe.

"That the person left behind is stronger than you."

Kim Suho smiled and found the question funny. "I don't like lying."

Of course, Kim Suho couldn't be sure since he only sparred once with Kim Hajin. However, he believed that Hajin would succeed.

“That’s not good for—”

“Kuaaaa!”

A horrible shriek rang out. Kim Suho and Yoo Dongsuk both glanced sideways at Shin Jonghak creating a mess. He looked ridiculous, but had achieved outstanding results. He viciously stabbed and slashed his enemies like an ancient warlord. Yoo Dongsuk saw his subordinates flying around and asked, “Is he as strong as you?”

Kim Suho simply smiled. His silence was enough of an answer. Yoo Dongsuk laughed as he swung his steel pipe again. KWANG! Their battle continued back and forth.

“Well, it looks like our strategy failed.”

“It’s not too late to turn back. We have no reason to fight.”

The two looked each other in the eyes and spoke amidst their fierce battle.

“The boss you call Asura isn’t human, but a djinn... uh, he’s an evil person who’s using the power of a ghost.”

The concept of djinns didn’t exist yet. According to textbooks, the rise of djinns occurred in the late 1990s.

“Huup!”

Yoo Dongsuk pushed Kim Suho back without replying. Kim Suho sighed as he enveloped his sword with magic power. The sword’s blue glow transformed into a brilliant gold.

“You hid a rather interesting power, eh?”

The same applied to Yoo Dongsuk. His body suddenly glowed red and he grew several times bigger. Kim Suho put on a serious expression as he fixed his stance.

Asura laughed at first and pitied the young man with overgrown hair and a beard. However, he began to feel fear as time passed and his army dwindled. He could feel a chilling killing intent from the young man's eyes, and the outpouring of bullets overwhelmed his army.

Even now, Asura's army continued to rush nonstop. Asura also snuck in ranged attacks now and then. However, the young man's mysterious bracelet defended against the demonic beasts' venom and the attacks. The young man killed the monsters that specialized in ranged attacks first.

Asura couldn't understand. He thought he would only have to wait until the magazine emptied. However, the young man reloaded in less than a second and continued firing. A single opening didn't exist.

Asura couldn't understand the bullets' destructive power either. His demonic beasts instantly died in one hit. A single bullet often killed two beasts, and sometimes three. Not a single claw could reach the gunman.

"Impossible..."

Asura watched this incomprehensible battle in a daze. The countless beasts gradually became countable. Asura stopped his remaining forces and took a step back. He wanted to assess the situation.

Kim Hajin also stopped firing. Then he murmured tiredly, "You must've merged with the ghost since you could summon so many. What did he want? Revenge? Wealth? Honor?"

Kim Hajin stared at Asura, who remained silent. He aimed at Asura.

"You don't have to answer."

Click. Kim Hajin pulled the trigger. Asura unleashed his magic power and formed a barrier. Dozens of demonic beasts also moved to block Kim Hajin's line of fire. However, no bullets came out. Click. Click. Click. Kim Hajin pulled the trigger a few more times. The result remained the same.

“...”

“...”

Whish. A brief wind blew. Asura and Kim Hajin stared at each other. Kim Hajin rummaged through his pockets, but ran out of ammo. Then he graciously spoke with a calm expression.

“Asura, I don’t hate you. I understand where you’re coming from.”

A character with no background that only served as a stepping stone for the main characters and the supporting cast. An extra, rather than a villain. Asura, or rather Cheonhwa, became a djinn for a simple reason.

“That’s how I created you.”

Kim Hajin felt sorry. At least, he needed to act like it.

“You had no choice but to become strong. You probably thought you could become a djinn who enjoyed wealth and honor by merging with the ghost.”

Kim Hajin sounded sentimental all of a sudden. Asura responded with a single sentence.

“You’re out of bullets.”

“I’m not.”

Kim Hajin took out a single magazine from his pocket. He slowly reloaded his gun and asked, “I want to know. What kind of a life have you lived?”

A smile emerged on Asura’s face.

“What? Can’t you see this?”

Kim Hajin tapped the magazine in his gun, but Asura leisurely replied.

“Then shoot.”

“Tsk.”

The assault rifle transformed into a handgun. Tang, tang, tang, tang, tang—! Kim Hajin quickly pulled the trigger and used up the entire magazine in less than a second. The monsters around Asura all turned to dust as he flinched in shock.

“See? I didn’t lie. This battle already ended.”

He pointed behind Asura. Kim Suho and the others had returned. Asura’s subordinates also stood there with complicated looks.

“...”

Asura looked around with a blank expression. He wasted too much time with a single person and lost his chance. He only had about a hundred demonic beasts left along with the partner in his heart.

“Uk!”

Suddenly, his heart began to violently beat. The ghost of the past was telling him something. Asura shook his head. However, his body twisted strangely and the ghost shot out of his heart. Then Asura’s body turned to dust.

—...

A black ghost floated in the air and howled. However, a formless being couldn’t pose any harm. Kim Suho attacked the ghost with Misteltein and instantly sucked it into the divine grade weapon. Misteltein grew stronger by absorbing spirits. The ghost of the past would now reside in Misteltein forever.

A short silence descended. Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, Chae Nayun, and Yi Yeonghan stared at the scenery in front of them. Kim Hajin stood alone amidst a desolate battlefield with a mountain of corpses. Soon, his voice rang out.

“Welcome back.”

Kim Hajin smiled at the four of them who returned just in time. Kim Suho had trusted him, but the others looked shocked.

“W-What?”

Kim Hajin couldn't understand their looks until he saw the mountain of corpses.

“Oh... this? T-These will disappear soon.”

The corpses would disappear in about two minutes without magic power. However, everyone's shocked expressions wouldn't disappear for a while.

I didn't ask Kim Suho how he convinced the people of the past. The story took a different turn from the original story, but the results remained the same. I felt satisfied as I sat on the ground in exhaustion. I wasn't physically tired, but mentally drained. I turned on my smartwatch to read the messages that would alleviate my fatigue.

[You have massacred a large number of enemies! You have received a huge experience boost in Master Sharpshooter!] [You have pierced the vital points of countless enemies! Master Sharpshooter has evolved to grade 5!] [Your luck has been applied! An understanding of the darkness attribute has been added to aether from decimating thousands of darkness attribute demonic beasts!] [You have obtained 330 SP!]

“Wow.”

Several alerts popped up. Master Sharpshooter also leveled up to grade 5, but the best gain was aether's understanding of the darkness attribute. It would also apply to the Desert Eagle when they fused. No wonder my bullets flashed white. Of course, special bullets created with SP would still deal more damage than bullets with aether's understanding.

“What?”

I couldn't properly think because Chae Nayun, Shin Jonghak, and Yi Yeonghan kept looking at me suspiciously.

“I mean, it doesn't make sense.”

“What doesn't make sense?” I shrugged at Chae Nayun's question.

“Stop kidding around.”

Chae Nayun looked serious and somewhat wronged. I grinned and transformed the Desert Eagle into an assault rifle. Everyone's eyes widened and wondered how such a weapon appeared.

“I told you. I have a gun-related gift. It was just a good matchup against Asura.”

“A good matchup?”

“Yeah. Pulling the trigger 2000 times is easier than swinging a spear or a sword 2000 times.”

I briefly explained and turned to Kim Suho, who rested nearby.

“Did you bring the crystals?”

“Ah, yeah.”

Kim Suho handed me three crystals.

“Are we going back now?”

I shook my head. “No, we're going to return these crystals where they belong.”

“Huh?”

“This is the greatest training area you could ask for, so we’re going to stay here for the next two weeks. It would be a shame to leave before we milk it dry.”

This place resembled an inferior hyperbolic time chamber. We should be able to grow stronger.

“We have plenty of people to spar.”

I pointed at Asura’s past subordinates, who awkwardly stood behind us.

Chapter 106

Return

I returned the crystals to where they belonged and headed to Gwangmyeong City Hall. We received a warm welcome surprisingly. Asura had ruled like a tyrant and the residents now rejoiced. They told me that Asura had led many to their deaths for mana crystals.

Everyone gathered at the abandoned building for a party that night. Gwangmyeong City Hall's residents brought rice and meat as we sat around a campfire. We happily ate and talked. Of course, I left as soon as I finished since I didn't feel like I belonged.

"Here, Kim Hajin. Take it."

Yi Yeonghan handed me a bowl of porridge.

"What's this?"

"For Yoo Yeonha."

Yoo Yeonha had yet to completely recover after we lifted the curse. She currently slept in the tent.

"Why are you giving it to me?"

"The others are busy."

Yi Yeonghan pointed to the campfire at Kim Suho and Chae Nayun talking with Asura's former subordinates. The topic must've been funny since even Shin Jonghak laughed.

"We've heard the news. Currently, Seoul is split into several factions. Gangnam is divided between Shin Myungchul and Chae Joochul, while Gangbuk is..."

“How is Shin Myungchul’s reputation?” Shin Jonghak asked.

“He’s a great person who brought peace to the Gwanak region.”

“Haha, I see.” He enjoyed hearing them praise his grandfather.

Chae Nayun also asked, “Then what about Chae Joochul?”

Chae Joochul the Immortal was Chae Nayun’s grandfather and one of the strongest in the world. She received a negative reply contrary to her expectations.

“He’s not trustworthy at all. I stayed in Seoul for a bit, so I know. He’s sly, like a snake. He’ll surely cause something big in the future.”

“...”

Chae Nayun’s expression stiffened. Indeed, Chae Joochul wasn’t a kind person in my settings. I took the porridge to the tent.

“Hey, I brought some food.”

Yoo Yeonha raised her upper body from the bed as she groaned. She looked a bit disappointed when she saw me, but tried to hide it.

“You’re pretending to be sick, right?”

“Yes? Ah, no, I’m still tired... uup.”

I shoved a spoonful of porridge into her mouth. Yoo Yeonha nibbled in confusion and ate like a kid. She frowned at me after chewing about 10 times.

“What is it?”

“What.”

“Why are you doing this all of a sudden?” Yoo Yeonha looked sullen.

“Didn’t you say you could barely lift your hands? I’m feeding you.”

“But that was...”

She probably pretended to get Shin Jonghak’s attention. I grinned and prepared another spoonful. —Kyahaha. I turned towards Chae Nayun’s laughter from outside.

“Ah, wait, wait! Ah!”

The porridge pasted around Yoo Yeonha’s mouth when I turned back.

“Open your mouth, would you?”

“What? You’re saying this is my fault?”

“...”

I cleaned off the porridge and fed her again. However, Yoo Yeonha kept her mouth tightly shut and glared.

“You don’t want to eat? You’ll starve to death.”

“No, it’s just that... it’s not very tasty. Don’t you have something other than porridge?”

“I have one ramen left.”

Yoo Yeonha swallowed hard and pretended like she would eat it reluctantly.

“Then I’ll take that. This is too bland.”

“I’ll make it for you if you finish this.”

Yoo Yeonha opened her mouth and started eating again.

“Why don’t you come out and talk instead of staying cooped up in

here?”

“I don’t have the energy.”

Yoo Yeonha fell back in bed and covered herself with the blanket. I stood up to leave her alone when she suddenly spoke.

“Um...”

“Yeah?”

“Thank you,” she whispered sincerely. I simply nodded.

“It’s good that you know.”

“You always end up helping me out.”

“Right? When are you going to pay me back?”

Yoo Yeonha smiled and softly replied, “Hey, don’t you think we can become good allies?”

Allies... I could easily live a comfortable life if I became her ally. She would become a top CEO with multiple corporations in various fields such as magic engineering, pharmaceuticals, guilds, auctions, and weapons.

“I can help you hit it off with Nayun.”

“What? I don’t need something like that.”

“Eh? You really changed ship?” Yoo Yeonha suddenly raised her upper body again.

“Change ship?”

“From Nayun to Rachel.”

“What? No, it’s neither of them. I can’t afford to like anyone right now.”

“Come on, don’t lie.”

Yoo Yeonha looked at me mischievously as though she knew everything. I stared at her and nodded.

“No ramen for you then.”

“Eh? W-Wait!”

I ignored her and left. Then I went to Yi Yeonghan.

“She said she doesn’t eat porridge.”

“Huh? Really?”

Yi Yeonghan tilted his head and went into the tent.

— Yoo Yeonha, why aren’t you eating? Don’t have an appetite?

— E-Eh? Ah... well, um... ramen...

— Ramen? Kim Hajin said he’d make you ramen instead? I thought you didn’t like ramen.

— Eh...? Oh... right...

— Then just rest for today. You don’t have to eat.

— I don’t like you, Yi Yeonghan. I’m serious.

— W-What? Why?

— Get out. Just get out.

I eavesdropped on their conversation as I boiled some water. Yi

Yeonghan came out and asked, “Kim Hajin? Why are you boiling water? Yoo Yeonha says she doesn’t eat ramen.”

“Did she?”

Yoo Yeonha peeked her head out of the tent and angrily blurted, “Leave him be. He saved my life. It would be rude to decline his offer.”

“What’s up with her?”

Yi Yeonghan retreated as I finished the ramen under Yoo Yeonha’s watchful eyes.

“Enjoy.”

“Thank you.”

Yoo Yeonha happily took the ramen into the tent. I glanced around and got on my bike, but Kim Suho noticed me.

“Hajin, where are you going?”

“Oh, I need to get something.”

I hadn’t used certain things in this world of the past. I noted them in my settings book, but never used them when I wrote the actual chapters. I planned on obtaining them since a few could come in handy.

Everyone continued training and sparring to become stronger. We relocated from the uncomfortable, abandoned building to live with the Gwangmyeong City Hall residents.

Magic power explosions and monster attacks occasionally occurred during the two weeks we stayed. However, we worked together with the residents to resolve any troubles.

Of course, they chased out some of Asura's subordinates who committed crimes. With Kim Suho's leadership, they also abolished the hierarchical system and any evil practices.

Kim Suho and the others grew quite close with the people of the past. Yoo Yeonha constantly looked for people who would become the ancestors of someone famous. Chae Nayun played with the kids every day and Shin Jonghak formed a crew that looked quite strong. Kim Suho also helped the residents create several facilities and renovated the existing ones. Everyone spent their time laughing and having fun.

However, I couldn't enjoy it as much as the others since some of the people I killed remained dead. I didn't know whether the residents knew or pretended not to know, but they treated me kindly.

"Huu."

Time passed. I sat in a barbershop surrounded by many people.

"This is great. My hands felt itchy every time I saw your hair."

"Yeah, it felt like the perfect length two weeks ago, but now it's too long."

Chae Nayun commented on my hair for some reason. I wondered if a barbershop should be in the middle of the road as I looked around. Kim Suho, Yi Yeonghan, Chae Nayun, Yoo Yeonha, and Shin Jonghak all glanced at me. Quite the crowd with people from the past also gathered to watch my haircut.

"By the way, can you leave a bit of his beard?" Chae Nayun asked on her own.

"Hm? Why? I want to shave it entirely."

I asked as I rubbed my beard. It would shock Evandel if I went home like this.

"I think you'd look better with some of it left."

“Nayun.” Yoo Yeonha smiled at her.

“What does it have to do with you?”

“Eh?”

Chae Nayun fell into a daze. Yoo Yeonha continued with an even bigger smile.

“I’m genuinely curious. Why does it matter how he looks?”

“W-What? I’m just trying to recommend a better path for him.”

“Mm, is that why you went on a drive with him last week?”

“What?” Shin Jonghak’s eyes coldly flickered.

“T-That was because we went to get food! W-What are you trying to say?” Chae Nayun shouted as Yoo Yeonha wriggled her eyebrows and backed off. Meanwhile, the surrounding residents smiled.

“Then I’m starting.”

The barber began to cut my hair. My head grew lighter as the scissors chopped off my shoulder-length hair. I gradually enjoyed the moment with the residents’ laughter, the light breeze, the warm sunlight, and...

“He doesn’t look all that bad, eh?”

“Of course! After all, he’s the one who drove away that tyrant.”

“How did he defeat him? Not even Dongsuk could do anything.”

The past would soon disappear.

“Alright, done. Now it’s time to shave.”

The barber finished cutting my hair and took out a razor. I felt startled since he brought it to my face without any shaving cream. Srrrk, srrrk— However, the barber used his magic power instead. I calmly entrusted myself to him. Soon, he finished and handed me a mirror.

“Oh?”

I felt surprised when I looked in the mirror. I could hardly recognize myself. The others felt the same. Chae Nayun, Yoo Yeonha, and even Kim Suho looked at me in awe. A clean pomade and a light beard like a Western model. I naturally checked my smartwatch.

[Buff – Master Barber’s Touch] [Will temporarily increase the invariable charm stat by 0.5 points.] [Duration – 4 weeks]

I shot up and respectfully asked the barber when I saw this alert.

“May I ask for your name?”

“Haha, do you like it that much? My name is Kim Woosuk.”

“Kim Woosuk. Do you perhaps have a son?”

“I do. I have an eight year old. His name is Kim Hojin.”

Kim Hojin. I would have to visit him in the present since gifts could often be inherited. I grabbed Kim Woosuk’s hands and bowed. Then I looked around. A mother waved with a child in her arms, elderly people smiled, and young men and women respectfully looked at me. I also bowed to all of them.

“Thank you for everything.”

My haircut was the last business of the day. No, of the past.

“We should be thanking you instead.”

“Goodbye.”

“Will you come by again?”

“These young men and women will achieve great things in the future. I’m sure we’ll see them in the newspapers.”

We didn’t explain much to them. They didn’t know that this was the past or that they were just records.

“Then...”

I turned to Kim Suho and the others. Now, we had to return. They nodded with a somewhat bitter smile.

“We’ll go get them.”

“Yeah.”

They each went to retrieve a crystal as I entered Gwangmyeong City Hall. I sat on the rooftop after climbing the stairs. Then I looked up at the sky. The sun fell halfway towards the horizon and the beautiful sunset dyed the world orange. I leisurely watched this beautiful scenery as I waited for the others.

Soon, the northeast water tower’s purple light disappeared. I could see Yi Yeonghan climbing the south steel tower. The fragments of the past slowly came together. I felt a presence behind me after about 10 minutes.

“Kim Hajin, take this.”

Shin Jonghak returned first. He casually threw the crystal at me and went back down. His lackeys (fan club members) waited for him with tearful eyes.

“Yo, Kim Hajin!”

A loud voice rang from below. Yi Yeonghan threw his crystal from the ground as I caught it.

“Thanks.”

Then I heard the clacking of Yoo Yeonha’s high-heels as she walked up to the roof.

“Where did you get those high-heels?”

“Someone gifted them to me. I’m quite popular, you see.”

Yoo Yeonha handed me the crystal.

“Oh, by the way...” I asked her something I felt curious about. “While you were cursed... you didn’t enjoy it or anything, right?”

“What do you mean? Why would I enjoy it?”

“Huh? Oh, um, never mind. Just ignore what I said.”

I had omitted a certain setting. [Yoo Yeonha likes being bullied.] I never mentioned it in the actual story since it felt strange and the opportunity never came, but I grew curious if that setting made it into this world.

“Anyways, I’ll be going now.”

Kim Suho came up as Yoo Yeonha went down.

“Kim Hajin! Here you... Huh?”

“Come down with me.”

“I want to be with Hajin. Ah, hey, what are you doing?”

Yoo Yeonha dragged him away as he gave me the crystal. The final crystal arrived three minutes later after Kim Suho.

“I’m here.”

Chae Nayun trudged up and handed me the crystal. With this, we had gathered all six crystals maintaining the past.

“Are you going to destroy them now?”

She sat next to me with her knees together.

“Yeah, get ready.”

“Can I watch?”

“Sure.”

I held the crystals in my palm. Then I infused stigma’s magic power into them. The tattoo on my upper arm glowed blue as the crystals fused into a small sphere. I held it up with my thumb and index finger before lightly squeezing. Clang— A sharp sound rang out as the crystal crumbled into purple dust. The changes quickly set in. The scenery began to disappear as the sky shattered. I calmly watched the recorded world of 1972 break down.

“Hey.”

Chae Nayun suddenly asked. Just like me, she watched the sky disappear. “Is this what it means to forget?”

“What are you talking about?”

“Nothing. I just wondered if forgetting meant the person would disappear from my heart like this.”

She sounded calm, but her eyes turned red as she thought about her family. However, she didn’t cry.

“How would I know? Why are you asking that?”

“I can’t recall my Mom’s voice no matter how much I try. Her scent, the happy days we spent together... I don’t remember anymore. It’s like they disappeared.”

I turned to the side and faced her. I had never experienced anything like that, so I chose some words from a book I once read.

“Don’t worry about it too much. You can’t smell anything from a flower that doesn’t wither.”

“What’s that. So cringy.”

“It is what it is.”

Memories felt precious only because they wore out and became partially forgotten over time.

“Hmm.”

It seemed like I had failed at comforting her. I took something out of my pocket.

“Here, you can have this.”

“Eh?”

Chae Nayun tilted her head at my explanation.

“A ticket that will help you see flowers for a while.”

I felt my fingers curl up at my own words. What I gave her was a time capsule. A small box with a lock and an analog clock marked 01/01/2018.

“What’s this?”

“A time capsule. You know what that is, right?”

“Do you think I’m stupid? Of course I do.”

One of the items I noted in my settings, but never used. It took me a whole day's worth of stigma's magic power to find it using the Book of Truth.

"What is it for? And why are you giving it to me?"

"You see the number there? You can change it to go back to that time period for a while. To be more precise, you'll be looking at your memory of that time from deep inside your subconscious."

"..."

Chae Nayun widened her eyes at me. Then she blurted a single word. "Really?"

"Yeah."

"Why aren't you using it instead?"

I felt a tinge of pain in my heart when she said that. Honestly, I had planned on using it for myself perhaps in five or six years when my parents' voices and appearances grew faint. I could hold onto my fading memories. However, an item from this world would surely cause a problem in the present. It would be better for Chae Nayun to use it.

"I don't even know my parents' faces, so there's no point in me using it."

I made up a good excuse. Chae Nayun looked at me before putting the time capsule down.

"Then I won't use it either."

"What?"

"It's cowardly. Either we both use it, or we don't at all. That would be the right thing."

I felt shocked, even slightly angry. Then I pressed her temple with a finger.

“I should smack you.”

“What? Are you crazy? Fight me then.”

She raised her fists and took a boxing stance.

“Shut up and just use it, or you’ll regret it.”

“...”

Chae Nayun pouted and picked up the time capsule. It seemed she didn’t want to give it up so easily despite her words.

“Where do you want to go?”

“To 2013.”

Chae Nayun changed the numbers on the clock.

“March... 13th.”

“Why then—”

Plop. Chae Nayun disappeared without a trace before I could finish. Almost like magic, or perhaps a miracle.

“Hm.”

Suddenly, I stood alone. I stretched and looked around. Everyone else seemed to have returned except for me. Half the world had turned dark. The sky looked blurry, but pieces of the setting sun still shone. Even a crumbling world looked beautiful. I closed my eyes inside this disappearing world. The ringing as it crumbled seemed to shake my heart as well. I should be back in the present once I opened my eyes...

“Hey, Kim Hajin!”

I opened my eyes at the sudden voice. Then I quickly looked around and recognized Wind Mountain. My half-closed eyes looked up at the person who called me.

“There you are.”

Lush vegetation, fresh mountain wind, and brilliant sunlight. Chae Nayun brightly smiled along with this beautiful scenery.

Chapter 107

Rest

I longed for a childhood memory. My only birthday with everyone: Grandpa, Dad, oppa, and even Mom. I wanted to experience that day again. I wanted to engrave it into my mind for the rest of my life.

[03/13/2013]

Would it work? I wasn't sure, but when I adjusted the time capsule next to Kim Hajin... Woong— A white light suddenly engulfed me.

“...?”

I became a child again in a familiar garden. I spotted balloons and a cake with cartoon characters. A big table had all sorts of delicious food.

“Nayun.”

A large hand touched my shoulder and I suddenly turned stiff. The kind voice called me once again.

“Nayun?”

A boy who had yet to pass puberty. I could barely hold back my tears at his familiar voice. Today was a good day. I didn't want to cry.

“Un, oppa. You're here?”

My tongue wouldn't work like I wanted. Oppa kneeled and snickered.

“Guess what I got for you.”

“A scooter.”

“Eh?”

Oppa looked flustered. I knew he saved up three months of his allowance to buy it.

“Uh... did someone tell you?”

He smiled wryly as I ran into his embrace.

“Thank you.”

He seemed disappointed that I found out, but smiled as he lifted me.

“I’m the one who should be thankful.”

The front entrance grew noisy as I looked past oppa’s shoulder. Dad had arrived with Grandpa.

“Aiya, my little babies.”

Grandpa approached us with a smile as oppa handed me to him. His chest felt harder than oppa’s.

“Happy birthday, Nayun.”

“Thank you, Grandpa.”

“Oho?”

Grandpa looked surprised because I used to be afraid of him as a child. He stroked my head and set me down. I stood on the grass and looked around with a restless heart and sweaty hands. That person finally appeared along with a slight breeze. Mom walked in with her jade-like skin and long, brown hair.

“Mom.”

I called her for the first time in a long, long time. I could feel my face contorting. My lips quivered and my vision turned blurry. Just calling her wasn't enough. I ran with all my strength into her embrace. Her delicate fragrance seeped into me. The voice I had forgotten sounded in my ears. I cried and cried, so much that I couldn't open my eyes. I sat at the head of the table in Mom's embrace as Dad worriedly spoke.

"Nayun, why are you crying? Are you hurt anywhere?"

"Leave her be. She's still a child."

I barely managed to stop crying after about 5 minutes. I remembered that this wasn't real. I couldn't waste this precious time crying. I wiped away my tears and looked at the cake in front of me. Grandpa waved his hand and lit the candles as Mom laughed.

"Nayun, make a wish."

"Wish?"

"Yeah. Whatever you want will come true if you close your eyes to make a wish and blow out the candles."

I closed my eyes. I didn't wish for anything much. I just wanted to remember this moment for the rest of my life. I blew on the candles and opened my eyes.

Clap, clap, clap—

Everyone wished me a happy birthday. I held onto Mom's hands and brightly smiled in her embrace.

"Here you go, a scooter!"

"Oh? When did my grandson earn so much?"

"It's because you give him too much allowance, Father. You shouldn't spoil him."

“Ha, are you complaining because I didn’t give you as much at his age? What do you think, Daughter?”

“I... Here, Nayun! It’s the penguin with glasses!”

Mom changed the subject and handed me a Pororo plushie. I remembered reminding her that this penguin was called Pororo. I couldn’t speak from the lump in my throat. The surroundings began to turn white like ink peeling from a painting. Time was up. My heart felt like bursting and the tears I held back began to flow. I closed my eyes as I listened to the loving voices of Mom and oppa.

Soon, the world turned silent. Chwaa— Leaves suddenly rustled. I found myself on a mountain when I opened my eyes. I stretched, unable to think. Then I went to find Kim Hajin.

Chae Nayun reached out to me as I stared at her. Was she trying to help me up? I took her offer.

“Thanks.”

Chae Nayun looked renewed.

“Hey.”

“Yeah?”

Chae Nayun handed me the time capsule.

“The time capsule?”

“I used it once, but it looks like it’s still here.”

“Really?” I checked my smartwatch to find out why.

“You keep it. I told you I don’t need it.”

“Huh? Why? You should use it this time.”

The time capsule now required immense magic power. Perhaps because it came to the present from the past or because it had been used. It needed 15,000 units of magic power to fully charge. One’s magic power stat needed to be at least 15 to use it again. The required amount would only continue to double, making it practically impossible to reuse. It could only be charged by a single person in one go.

“No, you should use it when you want to see them again.”

“No, I can’t. It’s your turn to—”

“I told you.” I interrupted her.

“I’ve never met them before.”

Chae Nayun immediately shut her mouth.

“So you use it, okay?”

“Okay,” Chae Nayun replied half-reluctantly and half-glad. I turned around with a grin and started down the mountain.

“Ah, hey, where are you going?”

“I’m tired, so I’m going home.”

“What?”

Chae Nayun ran up to me and grabbed my sleeve. She pulled her hand back when I turned around.

“W-Why? Why are you going back now?”

“Because I’m tired. Aren’t you? I sure am.”

“But still...”

“I’m not coming. I’m going home.”

“Fine.”

[Here’s my account number. I’ll pay you back as soon as possible.]

It came from Tomer. I had written a promissory note for her before we went on the trip. I even added a magic power contract to it. I transferred the money to her account through my smartwatch.

“Hey.”

Then I called Chae Nayun. She turned back with a mischievous grin on her face.

“Yeah? You’re coming, right?”

“No, tell the others that I’m going back.”

“...”

Her face crumpled like an ugly newspaper.

“See you later.”

I received an alert from Violet Banquet. Tomer immediately paid, which would be converted into points and transferred to me when I gave her the information. I sent Tomer what I found out.

[Fernin Jesus changed his name to Agus Benjamin...]

I wrote the reply as I descended the mountain. Then I received another message when I arrived at the foot of the mountain and took out my bike.

[Thank you so much for today.] [It feels like I received something precious.] [I’ll treat you to something good later ^-^]

It came from Chae Nayun.

“She sure sounds happy.”

I wondered what she saw and replied with a smile.

[Sure.]

* * *

I returned to Cube at 7 P.M. Only 7 hours had passed even though I spent 90 days in the past.

“Uuk.”

I stretched and took in the ocean breeze at Cube’s central park. I felt relaxed for some reason. This place felt like home now. I turned on my smartwatch as I walked to the dorm.

[Blessing in Disguise has increased your stats by 0.005 points!] [Blessing in Disguise has increased your stats by 0.005 points!] [Blessing in Disguise has increased your stats by 0.005 points!] [Your luck has activated! All stats have increased by 0.01 points from eating food rich in mana!]

I went through the backlog of alerts from the past 90 days. Then I checked my stats.

[Strength 2.970 (+ 2.970)] [Stamina 2.980 (+ 2.980)] [Speed 4.685 (+ 4.685)] [Perception 5.620 (+ 5.620)] [Vitality 3.070 (+ 3.070)] [Magic power 2.005]

“Oh, I’m at full power.”

The numbers in parenthesis represented the temporary stat boosts from energy conversion. It filled up to 100% thanks to living in a rich mana area for such a long time. Looking at the numbers made me happy.

“Hm?”

Someone ran towards me from the distance. A blonde girl wearing headphones, a sweatshirt, and sweatpants. I doubted my eyes when I spotted Rachel.

“What’s up with the color of those sweats?”

She wore spinach-green sweatpants with a bright blue sweatshirt. She dressed well for the karaoke, so did she just put on whatever for running? I never made such a setting, so I didn’t know. I had written that she grew up in a sheltered environment, but that was obvious for a princess. Rachel slowed as she saw me.

“Hello.”

I lightly bowed when she arrived. She took off her headphones and smiled.

“Yes.”

“Did you come back from England?”

“Yes.”

“Ah.”

I planned to head off since I didn’t have much to say, but her sweats kept bugging me. I coughed and carefully asked, “Do you usually wear sweats when you run?”

“Yes? Ah.” Rachel seemed embarrassed and shyly asked, “Are they okay?”

“Huh?”

“Well, um, this is a bit embarrassing, but I’ve never chosen my own clothes before. My attendant usually picks them out.”

Rachel spun as if to show off her clothes, but they looked too unfashionable.

“I’m putting more effort into choosing my clothes since I’ll be an adult soon.”

She sounded unconfident, and rightly so. I scratched my neck and muttered, “Um, I think you should just wear what your attendant picks out.”

“Does it stand out?”

“Yes, a lot.”

“Ah...”

She scanned her clothes before nodding. What did she plan on doing? I curiously watched.

“Ah.”

She suddenly bent down and pulled up one leg of the sweatpants. Then she looked at me for confirmation.

“How about now?”

“...”

She might’ve misunderstood what I meant by standing out. Perhaps it was her Korean.

“Just wear what your attendant suggests.”

“Mm.”

Rachel seemed disappointed and pulled up the other side of her sweatpants.

“How about...”

“Pull them both down.”

“Oh.”

Rachel pulled her sweatpants back down. I sighed and asked, “Are you out on a run?”

“Yes. You must’ve... come back from a barbershop. You have a beard now.”

“Yes? Ah, well, yeah. I’m going to buy some fried chicken.”

“Fried chicken?”

“Yes, some fried chicken, pig trotters, braised pork, and pizza.”

Rachel tilted her head as I briefly explained, “I eat a lot.”

“I see.”

Me too... Rachel murmured to herself and smiled.

“Then I’m going to keep running.”

“Yes, good night.”

Rachel went off as I headed to the cafeteria.

* * *

I returned home with both hands full of food, but Evandel didn’t run up to me like usual when I opened the door.

“Evandel?”

I walked into the living room feeling somewhat odd. Then the scene I saw slightly shocked me.

“The heck.”

Hayang stared at me from the top of her cat tower as Evandel slept while hugging the bottom. It looked like she tried to get Hayang to come down and fell asleep from exhaustion. Quite a chase seemed to have occurred from the mess.

"They're still fighting, huh."

I approached Evandel with a laugh and brought a fried chicken leg to her nose. Sniff, sniff. Evandel's nose wriggled before she opened her mouth wide. Haap— And bit down on empty air. Nyam, nyam. She frowned when she couldn't taste anything even after chewing.

Hayang jumped from the cat tower and struck Evandel's head. Pabat! Evandel suddenly woke up.

“Ah, aaang...”

She held her head and groaned.

“Ah!”

Then she discovered me and scurried away.

“W-What!”

“What do you mean.”

“Who, who is it?”

“It's me. Hajin.”

“Eh?”

Evandel took a closer look with her sleepy eyes.

“Hajin?”

“Yeah, I got a haircut. Come here. I brought some fried chicken.”

“Fried chicken?”

“Some pig trotters and braised pork too.”

“Pig trotters... braised pork...”

Evandel muttered in a daze as she approached me. I knelt and held my hands out as she waddled into my embrace. I smiled and did something I always wanted to do. I rubbed my beard against her cheek.

“Ah, aak! What is it? No!”

Evandel tried to run away, but it was too late. I missed her a lot after 3 months. I continued rubbing my prickly beard against her soft skin. Evandel resisted and even tried to shove her hand into my mouth and nose, but I didn’t stop until Hayang approached us with a weird look.

“...?”

Hayang stared at the back of Evandel’s head and raised her paw. I wondered what she would do when... Thwack! Hayang smacked Evandel’s head again and ran away.

“Ahhk! Uuu... Kim Hayang! You get back here!”

Evandel furiously chased Hayang. However, Hayang instantly climbed to the peak of the cat tower.

“Uuu! Y-You...!”

Evandel shook the tower with all her strength.

“Get down, get down, get dooown here—!”

“...”

I finally understood the messy scene from before.

Action (1)

Tomer read the reply as she bit her fingernails.

[Fernin Jesus changed his name to Agus Benjamin and smuggled himself to Korea in 2020. For unknown reasons, he entered a retirement center rather than starting a new life and died in 2024 at the age of 53. He was cremated through standard procedures and his remains are located at a memorial. The following is the name of the retirement center he stayed in...]

Tomer's face stiffened. Dead at the age of 53. She couldn't accept the words written on her smartwatch.

"Bullshit."

Tomer bit on her fingernails until they bled.

"Dead? What right does he have to die?"

Her heart filled with anger. The trash who killed her mother and abandoned her already died. She shot up with tearful eyes filled with resentment and glared at the information before storming off.

The retirement center wasn't far away. Tomer ran there as quickly as possible. The magic power inside her formed a special sequence that amplified her physical abilities. She only needed 15 minutes with the spell called haste.

[Sunshine Haven]

Tomer took a deep breath in front of the sign. She wiped away her tears and slowly turned the doorknob. Kiiik— A faint smell of medicine tickled her nose, but it didn't smell as bad as a hospital.

Tomer walked up to the counter. The nurse also spotted her and asked.

“Do you need something?”

“Um... I’m here to find a patient. His name is Agus Benjamin.”

“Who?”

The nurse tilted her head as though she never heard that name before.

“Agus Benjamin. He’s Latino like me, and old.”

“Ah, the Latino man.”

The nurse recalled since a Latino seemed to be rare.

“I remember now. He was extremely shy and quiet, but...”

The nurse’s face darkened.

“I believe he passed away already. About 2 years ago.”

Tomer felt her heart drop and her throat tightened. Was he really dead? On his own, so peacefully in such a calm place? Her hands trembled, and her heart surged with rage once more. No, it was still too early. She refused to believe until she saw definitive proof.

“Um, this person—”

Tomer rummaged through her pocket for a bundle of photos, but she lost her strength as the photos fell to the floor. The nurse came around to help pick them up.

“T-Thank you.”

“No, it’s fine. Ah, that’s him. He looks younger, but that’s definitely him. I remember clearly since he looked different.”

The nurse explained as she looked at the photos. Tomer could hardly maintain her sanity, but managed to endure the anger and asked.

“Then... what kind of a life did he live here?”

“I’m not sure. He didn’t talk much to any of the nurses or other elders.”

“Did he leave behind a will or any inheritance?”

“Yes? Ah... um, I’m not sure. Even if I did, I would need to know your relationship with him...”

Tomer took out her wallet and showed the nurse her magician license. [2 star Magician Jamer] The nurse’s eyes widened. Magicians were even more rare than heroes. Only 900 magicians graduated every year from the world’s number one Korean Magic Academy.

“I’m Jamer Jesus. This man’s real name is Fernin Jesus. He’s... my biological father.”

Tomer explained as best as she could. The nurse became more compassionate after hearing this.

“I see... but I really don’t know much. I’ve only seen him a few times while passing by.”

“Do you know anyone who would know something about him?”

“Mm... if I remember correctly, a volunteer student often talked to him.”

“Ah, really?”

The nurse nodded.

“Yes, I can’t remember too well, but they seemed to be close. He even came by recently.”

“Oh, ooh! Can you tell me who that student is?”

“Well, I’m not too close with him either. The head nurse is, but she’s away on a foreign volunteer trip.”

“Ah! You have a computer, right? Don’t you have some record of it?”

“Oh, you’re right. Hold on a minute.”

The nurse began to tap on the keyboard. Tomer’s smartwatch suddenly rang.

[Tomer, your mission has been terminated. We will deploy a new agent, so return. The disciplinary committee will decide on your punishment.]
[Congrats on your demotion.]

“Fuck that.”

“Duck?”

“Eh? Ah, never mind.”

Tomer sneered at the djinns who cared so much about hierarchy. She only entered djinn society because she thought that bastard became a djinn. She could care less about the mission or the disciplinary committee now that she had found what she was looking for. She didn’t care about anything else anymore. Tomer pulled off the smartwatch provided by Wicked.

“Ah, found it. It wasn’t recorded in the computer, but in the guest book.”

The nurse muttered as she held up a notebook.

“Really? So what’s his—”

“Kim Hajin.”

“Ah, Kim Ha... Kim Hajin?”

“Yep, Kim Hajin. It’ll be hard to meet him since he was admitted to Cube. He’s an aspiring hero.”

The familiar name and background matched too well to be a coincidence. Tomer fell into a daze.

I walked through the redwoods as Cube’s break ended. They planted many trees at Cube to maintain a certain level of mana. It made these roads a popular date course during this time of the year. Naturally, many couples walked past me. I wondered how bad spring would be when cherry blossoms bloomed if it was already this bad in autumn. Cube lacked disciplinary measures. They technically prohibited dating, but couples could always say they were just friends and no one would care.

Tok, tok. Someone tapped my back while I felt grumpy.

“Huh?”

I turned around and saw a girl staring at me with her arms crossed. Her black dress shone beautifully, and she perfectly maintained her silky hair.

“What’s up?”

“Here.” Yoo Yeonha handed me a document envelope.

“What’s this?”

“What I promised before.”

“...”

Promise? What promise? I tilted my head and checked the contents. It contained 20 carefully wrapped pills and several documents. Then I remembered.

“We made them from refining half of the ginseng you gave me.”

“Half?”

“We needed to keep some to appeal to the market. We’re planning on using the other half in various ways. We’ll give you company stocks to make up for the cost. I’ll give you the other half when things improve in the future.”

“That’s fine with me.”

She spent half of the ginseng as she liked, but I didn’t mind since Yoo Yeonha wasn’t the type to backstab someone. Unfortunately, she was the type to get crossed. She still trusted people too much once they earned her approval. Honestly, that seemed natural for a 17 year old. The internal power struggle of a massive guild was too dark and complicated for a young girl. Ah, that event should be coming up around winter break. The so-called Yoo Yeonha Arrogation Scandal.

“How are they?”

“Oh, are these what I asked for before?”

I took out one of the pills.

“Yes. We made them by condensing the ginseng and mana crystals together. Each pill should be worth at least 100 million won.”

“100 million won per pill?”

I had 2 billion won in my hands.

“Are they actually worth that much?”

“Not exactly. However, people who buy such pills will get suspicious if it’s too cheap. Also, those pills are a bit special. We could’ve made 300-400 other types of medicines with the same amount of ingredients. They have to be expensive to make a profit.”

“Mm.”

I checked the pill’s description with my smartwatch.

[Ginseng Pill] [High-intermediate rank] [Consumable] — A medicine created from neutralizing mana crystal solution with ginseng. A glimpse of a skilled, meticulous technique can be seen. Your strength, stamina, vitality, and magic power stats will permanently increase by 0.001-0.02 over 24 hours once consumed. (Note that the effect will diminish the higher the user’s stats.) Chance of Qi Deviation — 0.5% (Consuming several within 24 hours will drastically increase this chance.)

I felt satisfied. I could raise my stats or modify them for even better effects.

“Eat one a day.”

“Yeah, thanks.”

I returned the favor since I received something good.

“Oh hey, take this.”

I took out a ginseng from stigma’s storage. Yoo Yeonha’s eyes shone like jewels when she saw its faint brown glow.

“Wow, you found another one?”

“Yeah, but Shin Jonghak will be mad if he sees this.”

Yoo Yeonha stared at me. Even I would find it impossible to find a ginseng every time I went to a mountain. However, the Jinsung group privately owned Wind Mountain and no one hardly visited. I whispered to her, “I’ll leave it to your conscience. You can return it or use it.”

“Cough... Well, Jonghak forgot my birthday once.”

Yoo Yeonha understood what I implied and smiled. I also laughed as an accomplice. She held the ginseng that should've entered Shin Jonghak's stomach.

"Then I'll take off now."

"Yeah, see you."

Yoo Yeonha turned back as I continued on my way. Then my smartwatch suddenly rang.

[Um, it's me, Jamer.]

It seemed she got a new smartwatch since her messenger ID had changed.

[What's up? Are you paying me back already?]

She didn't reply for a long time. She must've gone to the retirement center, so she probably needed some time to collect her thoughts. I decided to patiently wait for her.

"Hajin, Hajin. What did you bring back?"

"Meow."

Hayang and Evandel ran up to me as soon as I returned.

"What? Why are you two so friendly today?"

"Un? We're always friendly. Right, Kim Hayang?"

Friendly? Yeah, right. And what's up with Kim Hayang?

"Hajin, Hajin."

Evandel hopped up and down for me to pick her up. I lifted her onto the couch along with snacks. I brought back a special roll cake today.

“Whoa...”

Evandel’s eyes sparkled at the cake’s white texture. I sat at the kitchen table and swallowed a ginseng pill. Then I checked the official schedule.

[Mission Experience] Cadets must select one of the six missions below: — Escort — Tunnel — Field — Colosseum — Group Monster Subjugation — Dungeon

Cadets had to experience various missions like heroes. It would be like combat training. Each cadet had the same six options. If I recalled correctly, Kim Suho and Rachel chose the tunnel. Lancaster also started to act around this time.

Wiing— My smartwatch vibrated.

[Yo, Kim Hajin.] [Which mission are you choosing?] [I’m thinking of going with the tunnel.] [(emoticon of a hamster running around)]

It came from Chae Nayun. A loud shout rang from the living room before I could reply.

“Aaaaang, Hajin, Hajin! Hayang keeps trying to steal my food!”

Evandel held up the cake box as Hayang tried to climb on her to get to it. Just when I thought they became friends...

“Hayang.”

Hayang retreated at the sound of my voice as Evandel looked relieved.

“Hajin gave this to me. You have your own food. Eat the cat food over there.”

Evandel scolded Hayang and set the cake box on the table. I received another message when I was about to reply to Chae Nayun.

[Are you awake?]

Boss had sent it.

[Yes, I'm awake.]

“Ugyak!”

Another ruckus broke out between Evandel and Hayang. I didn't know what happened, but I figured I'd just leave them to sort things out.

[Little apprentice, do you have a Violet Banquet ID?]

[No, I don't.]

[lol]

I frowned. Did she just laugh at me?

[Do you want onw?] [want one?] [Typo.]

I replied after laughing.

[It'd be great to have one.]

[lol]

She laughed at me again.

“...?”

I raised my head since everything sounded too quiet. Weren't Evandel and Hayang fighting? I saw Evandel pouting on the couch. — I hate you. You always steal my food. She murmured to herself.

“Hmm.”

Evandel and Hayang had the same amount of whipped cream around their mouths. It looked like they evenly shared the cake, or should I say they evenly stole from each other. Evandel stopped looking at Hayang, but Hayang acted quite strangely.

Meow—

Evandel glanced at Hayang, but immediately turned around and continued pouting. Hayang sneaked up and sat next to her.

“Hmph, who might you be?”

Evandel muttered and scooped away. Meow— Hayang chased after Evandel as she repeatedly moved away and plopped in front of the TV. Hayang purred cutely and rubbed against her. The corner of Evandel’s mouth twitched. It was only a matter of time before she forgave Hayang. Hayang seemed to know and continued being playful.

Boss replied as I watched them with a fatherly smile.

[I thought you’d say that, so I prepared a Violet Banquet ID for you.] [The access code is qkenpwnkWSD394820##3. The ID is Fenrir, password is: ‘youcanchangethepasswordinyoursettings’.]

“...”

The password seemed complex, yet simple.

[Thank you. Why Fenrir?]

[Fenrir. That will be your mercenary code name.]

[Ah.]

Fenrir was a mythical wolf monster that appeared in Northern Europe several years ago. It had devoured hundreds of heroes and caused billions of euros in damage. No one knew whether it was the real Fenrir from Norse mythology. Many also called it the demon wolf.

[That’s quite a grandiose name. Isn’t it too much for me?]

[I think it's futtinf.] [Fitting. You look like a wolf too.]

[Eh? Where?]

[Your chinky eyes.]

I looked in the mirror. Weren't my eyes pretty round? If anything, it should be because of my beard.

[Can it be Lobo if it's based on my appearance?]

[Lobo? Like robot wolf? That's a weird wolf.]

[No.]

I scratched my neck.

[Lobo. Like the wolf king...] [ref]In reference to “Lobo the King of Currumpaw” by Ernest Thompson Seton.]

“No, wait, why am I talking like I’m an official member? I never said I would officially join Jeronimo Mercenary!”

[Ah, wait, I still haven't...]

“...”

I deleted my reply after thinking about it. Now wasn't the time to play hard to get. Soon, Chae Jinyoon would wake up as a devil. I had to grow close with Boss as soon as possible. I already considered every other possibility, but killing him was the only way. I felt more complicated the more I thought about it. Finally, I replied.

[Do as you want. By the way, what about that 300 million won item we talked about?]

[I'll sebf it to yoru Violet Banquet ID.] [Send. Stay online.]

Did she have small fingers? Or was she just bad at typing? She kept sending typos. Then again, Boss was never good with electronics in the original story.

[Yes, I'll be waiting.]

Action (2)

Yun Seung-Ah looked around her new office inside the world's number 1 guild, Creator's Sacred Grace. She relocated to a new building called the Ark.

[Rank 250. Vice-leader Yun Seung-Ah]

She rubbed the badge that displayed her updated rank. The office she received for becoming the world's rank 250 hero looked grand and fancy as expected.

"Do you like it?"

Yun Seung-Ah only smiled at her secretary's question.

"Right, don't I have a schedule for Cube's Mission Experience?"

"Yes. Vice-leader will be in charge of the tunnel next Monday, October 5."

"Is that so?"

Yun Seung-Ah sat in her chair.

"Mm."

She hummed in joy from the comfy leather of a blood alligator.

"I can't believe it's October already. Time sure flies."

"You're right."

“Any other interesting news?”

“Just one. It seems Jeronimo Mercenary has a new recruit.”

“Oh, really?”

Yun Seung-Ah’s eyes flickered with interest. She also held a deep relationship with Jeronimo Mercenary. Several teams with different tasks made up Creator’s Sacred Grace like many other guilds. Yun Seung-Ah began her career in the djinn eradication team, which often required the help of mercenaries.

“Has his codename been released?”

“We aren’t sure, but sources are calling him Fenrir.”

“Oh?” Yun Seung-Ah exclaimed in surprise. “That’s quite a grandiose codename.”

Yun Seung-Ah had seen Fenrir before. Creator’s Sacred Grace also participated in the battle with that monster ten or so years ago. Valuable data on it still remained in their video records.

“Yes, but he specializes in assassination and sniping.”

“Really? That’s not very fitting considering his codename. After all, the demon wolf Fenrir tore everything apart with its teeth.”

Mercenaries who specialized in assassination often received the limelight since they primarily fought against djinns rather than monsters.

“He should be an extraordinary specialist since he joined Jeronimo Mercenary. They didn’t reveal his identity?”

“No, our sources only heard rumors of him joining. Not much else is known.”

“Mm. I’m looking forward to it. They make a spotlight video for every new recruit.”

They officially called these spotlight videos mercenary cinematics that showcased the new recruit’s gift and power. Jeronimo Mercenary began with 13 members and advertised themselves like this every time they recruited a new member.

“It doesn’t look like a new mercenary cinematic will come out.”

“Mm... Well, I’m looking forward to it.”

Yun Seung-Ah felt her heart beating faster. It felt like receiving news about her favorite video game receiving a sequel. She liked working with Jeronimo Mercenary that much.

[Yi Yeonghan invited Kim Suho, Kim Hajin, Yi Jiyeon, Rachel, Chae Nayun, Hazuki, and 3 others.]

Yi Yeonghan: [Hihi. This is the group chat for the tunnel team. Chae Nayun told me to make one.]

Chae Nayun: [When did I say that?]

Yi Yeonghan: [Huh?]

Chae Nayun: [What]

Kim Suho: [Mm? What’s up with this group chat? What’s it for?]

Yi Jiyeon: [Hi Suho!]

Yi Yeonghan: [I don’t know. Chae Nayun told me to make it.]

Kim Suho: [Oh, hey.]

Kim Suho: [Chae Nayun did?]

Chae Nayun: [No no, it wasn't me. Yi Yeonghan, do you want to die?]

Xie Chen: [Hello.]

Yi Yeonghan: [Oh, it's been a while, Chen!]

Yi Yeonghan: [Chae Nayun messaged me. She said to create a group chat, so we can move around together]

Chae Nayun: [When did I say that?? It isn't me, really, you know he's a pathological liar, right?]

“The heck is this?”

I came back from showering and my smartwatch received 500 or so new messages. It seemed like a group chat for the tunnel team.

“Was something like this in the original story?”

I didn't think so. I skimmed through the messages. Cadets usually went to their missions by 10 A.M. They talked about meeting and going as a group.

“Hm...”

I sent a message once I understood the gist of the conversation. Not to the group, but Rachel.

[Rachel, are you going with the group?]

[Yes, I am.]

[Then you should wear what your attendant picks out for you.]

[Why =_=?]

“Ah, what do I do?”

Honestly, I worried about Rachel lately. I still had to give her the butterfly seedling's dust, but I couldn't think of a way.

"Should I put it in an accessory?"

The butterfly seedling's dust only adhered to targets with hidden potential. The dust could naturally seep into her if I sealed it in an ordinary necklace or bracelet.

"Hm."

That sounded like a decent plan. A necklace seemed like too much, but a bracelet should do. I could say that she did a good job on the team challenge as an excuse.

"Perfect."

I entered an accessory shop on my smartwatch and picked out a decently priced bracelet worth about 100,000 won. Then I suddenly received a message.

[Hey, did you use to do volunteer work?]

It came from Tomer.

[Yeah, I did. Why?]

[No reason. I just thought maybe I should too.]

[That's a good idea.]

[Have you ever met a Latino like me while you volunteered?]

"Eh?"

Did she not find her father's letter? What happened when she went to the retirement center?

"Ah, she must've met a different nurse."

She must've not heard about the letter if she didn't meet the head nurse.

[Yeah, I have. Why?]

Tomer didn't reply. Did she plan to message me in a week again? Things must be complicated for her, so I somewhat understood.

"Hajin, Hajin."

Evandel called me from the living room. I put on a t-shirt and walked over. Hayang lay on the couch while Evandel made something in front of the kitchen table.

I quietly watched. Two sharp eyes, a protruding mouth, and a four-legged body with rough fur. She made a wolf.

"Wow, what's this? It looks so good!"

I sat next to her and stroked her head. Evandel joyfully laughed and handed me the wolf.

"Here, it's Hajin's."

"Mine?"

"Un, un. Look."

Evandel tapped the small wolf's back. The frozen white wolf suddenly developed color and ran into my chest with a growl.

"Whoa!"

I closed my eyes in shock and fell on my back. Then I quickly recovered, but the wolf disappeared. Evandel looked at me mischievously.

"What, did you pull a prank on me? You!"

“Ah! No, no, uhehe, ah, uhihihi, ahahahaha.”

I tickled her sides since Evandel was especially ticklish. Just tickling her sides could make her cry and roll around. I continued her harsh punishment for 30 seconds.

“Aaang... but it’s a present...”

Evandel muttered out of breath on the floor. I felt something different and looked at my chest where the wolf jumped into. The symbol of a wolf had been branded there.

“What’s this?”

I checked my smartwatch.

[Buff – Infused Ghost Wolf. The wolf has recognized you as its master.] — Energy of the Wolf: Will increase your strength, stamina, speed, and vitality by 0.1 points. — Sixth Sense of the Wolf: A huge wolf will emerge to protect its master when it senses a life-threatening danger. — Movement of the Wolf: You will make less sound while walking.

“Oh wow.”

Evandel finally made something useful. It seemed she wanted to show off and earn my praise, but I misunderstood. I felt sorry and hugged her tightly.

“Thank you.”

“...”

Evandel didn’t say anything. I looked down and wondered if she was angry, but she had already fallen asleep. She must’ve spent all her energy to make this wolf.

“So cute.”

I picked her up and carefully placed her in bed. I received an alert from Violet Banquet when I returned to the living room.

[You have received an item.]

It must've came from Boss. A purple portal appeared in front of my laptop screen. PONG! A cylinder object the size of a baseball popped out. It looked like a Yoplait, but was actually under armor.

[Pinnacle grade Under Armor] [Pinnacle grade] [Partial Artifact] [Stored Mana 5000/5000] — Body Reinforcement: Will increase your strength, stamina, vitality, and speed by 0.3 points. — Artifact Transformation: You may use the stored mana to activate the following effects: Haste, High rank Defense Enhancement, Body Adaptation (Will fit the equipment accordingly to your body.), Underwater Mask (Can create a mask that allows you to breathe underwater.)

This state-of-the-art equipment was made from refining artifacts with magic engineering.

“Let’s see...”

I placed the cylinder on my bare chest and infused some magic power into it. Chwaak— A dark blue mana spread out from the cylinder and enveloped my body. An under armor easily surpassed 300 million won as defensive equipment made from mana crystals. It could easily be a billion won or more considering the quality of this one. As I thought, Boss tended to undervalue items. I made sure to thank her with a message as I put the armor away.

* * *

The tunnel team met in front of the Cube portal station the next day at 9 A.M. except for one person.

“Isn’t Kim Hajin always the last one? Don’t you think so too, Rachel?”

Yi Yeonghan asked Rachel. He tried to act friendly, but Rachel didn’t respond. Her eyes seemed to say, It’s bad to talk about someone behind their back.

“Cough. Ah, there he is.”

Yi Yeonghan awkwardly pointed into the distance. A student who didn't look like a student appeared. He neatly styled his hair in a pomade and his beard looked well-trimmed. He wore a black jacket and boots that made him look like he was in his mid-20s.

“He didn't shave his beard yet. Maybe it's because a certain someone complimented him,” Yi Yeonghan muttered as he nudged Chae Nayun's shoulder. Chae Nayun grew flustered.

“W-What about me.”

“What?”

“I-It's not like that! He even ignored all the messages I sent him.”

“Oh? You even messaged him first?”

“Ii, iik.” Chae Nayun trembled in anger as Kim Hajin joined them.

“Kim Hajin, you're three minutes late.” Yi Yeonghan tapped on his smartwatch as he clicked his tongue.

“Ah, sorry.”

“It's fine. It's only three minutes. Anyways Hajin, you look great today.” Kim Suho spoke as he nudged Kim Hajin's arm.

“You're one to speak.” Kim Hajin placed his hand on Kim Suho's waist. Chae Nayun felt disgusted by how close they became.

“I'll forgive you since it was only three minutes. Alright, let's go to Busan!”

Yi Yeonghan led the group today. He was still the class president despite often being the joker. The group took the portal to Seoul before transferring to Busan. The most famous tunnel in Busan was the underwater tunnel. The world-renowned architect, Kim Kyunggwan, had constructed it through the ocean to connect with Japan and China. This tunnel wasn't for trade, but for subjugating sea-dwelling monsters and dungeons.

“Hey.”

Chae Nayun tapped on Kim Hajin's shoulder as the group walked to the underwater tunnel's entrance.

“What.”

“Why didn't you shave?”

“Hm?”

The beard's 0.5 charm buff would disappear if he did. Kim Hajin replied half-heartedly, “Just because.”

“Just because?”

“What.”

“No, nothing. By the way, why aren't you replying to my texts? It says you read them.”

Honestly, Kim Hajin was just playing hard to get. Thinking about it made Chae Nayun mad as she frowned.

“I forgot.”

“What?”

“Ah, over there!”

Yi Yeonghan pointed into the distance at a woman in front of the underwater tunnel's entrance.

“Whoa! Isn't that hero Yun Seung-Ah!”

The cadets' eyes flickered as they saw her. The world's rank 250 hero, Yun Seung-Ah, possessed both beauty and talent. Many often lauded her as the future of Korea and both civilians and heroes looked up to her. A few cadets completely froze in front of such a great figure.

Yun Seung-Ah stepped forward when she noticed that we spotted her. A powerful gale erupted and her single step covered 200 meters.

“Whoa!”

“Ah!”

She teleported using magic power combustion. Her sudden appearance caused several cadets to jump back in surprise.

“Hello, everyone.”

Meanwhile, Yun Seung-Ah scanned the group with a leisurely smile.

“Suho, Nayun, Yeonghan...”

She recited each cadet's name.

“Rachel, and... Hajin? Is that you, Hajin?”

“Yes.”

“Oh my, you changed quite a lot. You... even grew a beard.”

Kim Hajin silently nodded.

“Good morning, everyone. Mm... I'm not good with words, so let's just head down immediately.”

Yun Seung-Ah gestured as everyone followed after her like ducklings. Yun Seung-Ah and the cadets got on the elevator as she explained, “This underwater tunnel is extremely useful. It allows us to hunt sea monsters and serves as a pathway to underwater dungeons.”

Ding. The elevator soon arrived underground. The underwater tunnel felt truly massive. It looked as wide as a four lane highway going both ways and as high as two ogres combined. It also had rest areas, restaurants, and vehicles driving through.

“We’re still underground, but you’ll find that we’re surrounded by water as we walk further. It’s quite a beautiful view.”

The group continued following Yun Seung-Ah.

“You’ll see other roads forking out every once in a while down this main road. You can see where these roads lead by reading the signs. If it says D, it leads to a dungeon. If it says M, it leads to monsters...”

Tirring— Tirring— Yun Seung-Ah’s smartwatch loudly rang. She frowned and checked the content.

“Ah shoot! It looks like there’s an emergency at the end of the tunnel. I’ll have to go ahead...”

Yun Seung-Ah awkwardly smiled. “I’ll come back quickly, so take a look around in the meantime.”

“Yes!” the cadets replied loud and clear.

“Don’t go too far. Stay in groups of 2 and check out the side roads.”

Yun Seung-Ah suddenly turned around and snapped her fingers before leaving. “Ah, I’ll fairly form the groups.”

Yun Seung-Ah projected a smartwatch app that paired the cadets. Kim Suho and Chae Nayun. Yi Yeonghan and Hazuki. Xie Chen and Yi Jiyoona. Kim Hajin and Rachel. It quickly assigned the groups.

“I’ll be back in a jiffy!”

Yun Seung-Ah winked at Chae Nayun before running down the tunnel. However, Chae Nayun only bitterly smiled at her as she ran off.

You didn't need to do that...

Her gaze turned to Kim Hajin who laughed as he talked to Rachel.

“Tsk.”

Chae Nayun clicked her tongue and walked to Kim Suho.

“Hey, Chae Nayun.”

“Hey...”

Wiing— Chae Nayun’s smartwatch suddenly also rang. She casually checked it.

[This is the director of Daehyun Hospital.] [Patient Chae Jinyoon showed signs of waking up around 10:23 A.M. today] [I can't say for certain that he will wake up soon, but it is surely a great sign.]

Chae Nayun’s mind turned blank at the sudden news.

Author's Note: Yun Seung-Ah's age has been buffed. Now, she's only 10 years older than Suho!

Action (3)

Rachel and I walked along Road D-3C. The D meant it led to a dungeon, the 3 denoted that it was the third road, and the C signified that the dungeon had been conquered. The tunnel walls listed the monsters from the dungeon and heroes who participated in the dungeon.

“It feels like I’m in an aquarium.”

The transparent walls revealed a beautiful sight. We stood about 75 meters under sea level, which was too shallow for monsters above intermediate rank. The monsters here only looked cute.

I didn’t find the view too appealing, so I continued walking forward before realizing that Rachel had disappeared.

“...?”

I turned around and found her observing a school of fish far behind me. Her ocean-colored eyes sparkled like emeralds.

I sneaked back to her and pretended to also look while rummaging through my jacket for the bracelet. How should I give it to her? Would now be too random? I had little experience in giving presents. What was I supposed to say?

I picked it up on my way here... sounded weird. Thank you for everything until now... made it seem like I would disappear. It’ll help with your development... sounded like a scammer trying to sell a product.

“Wow.”

Rachel exclaimed like a child. I followed her line of sight to a school of tiny fish swimming in a line. They formed a giant blob the size of a whale.

“Amazing.”

“Right? Korea is the only country with an underwater tunnel of this size!” Rachel excitedly explained.

“Is that so?”

“Yes! I read many research papers on underground tunnels.”

It would be difficult to name a better duo than Rachel and research papers.

“I worked hard to understand those research papers in Korean. It’s even more amazing now that I’m looking at the real thing.”

“I see.”

Korean had become a shared language throughout this world and most papers used it.

“Yes, because translated versions often lose the meaning.”

“Ah, I see. Translated versions... right. I’m grateful Korean is my first language.”

I couldn’t help but chuckle. I had bombed English on the College Scholastic Ability Test and regretted not taking more English classes.

“I’m jealous. Ah, apparently English was the shared language before Outcall. Isn’t that interesting?”

“Oh, then—”

“Wow, look! A shark... ah, a baby shark!”

“You’re right.”

This princess loved the ocean as she stared in awe at the tiny shark.
This felt like the perfect moment.

“Huu.”

I took in a deep breath.

“Um, Rachel?”

“Yes?”

She turned from the baby shark as I awkwardly smiled and took out the bracelet. I had sealed the butterfly seedling’s dust inside its platinum outer shell.

“This might be sudden, but it seemed like the perfect opportunity.”

“...”

Rachel only blankly stared at me. She didn’t say anything or try to take the bracelet. I muttered the excuse I prepared beforehand.

“About this. Remember how you helped me a lot before as the team captain? Everyone chipped in to buy this bracelet, so don’t misunderstand.”

Rachel remained silent. A second felt like ten seconds.

Screw it.

I held the bracelet in my right hand and Rachel’s wrist in the other. Then I forced the bracelet onto her.

Click.

The butterfly seedling’s dust would seep into her once she unleashed her magic power.

I sighed in relief as Rachel silently looked back and forth between me and the bracelet. She looked a bit sad and dropped her head. She almost spoke when...

—KOONG.

A sudden vibration shook the tunnel and all the lights flickered off. It instantly went dark as I took out the Desert Eagle. Rachel also pulled out her rapier.

Tak, tak. We could hear footsteps. I turned towards the sound, but not even my thousand-mile eyes could catch the source.

“What?”

[You're with a companion.]

A dark voice rang out. I couldn't quite understand what he said since he spoke in English with a British accent, but I knew it was Lancaster. Rachel's face stiffened.

“Sir Lancaster.”

[Don't worry. I'm only here to talk. I'm not in the mood to fight since I watched something amusing today.]

I could only understand the first half that he only wanted to talk.

[Here.]

A corpse suddenly dropped from the sky. It looked bloodied from head to toe, and its limbs twisted in strange directions.

“Hiik!”

“Whoa! What the fuck is this!”

I cursed subconsciously out of shock. Rachel's eyes widened at me. “Y-You cursed...”

“Ah, cough.”

I awkwardly coughed before we focused again on Lancaster.

[That person is an agent who has been guarding you from the shadows.]

“...”

[Princess, I wanted you to know that I am always watching.]

Lancaster’s voice disappeared as I struggled to comprehend the situation. I expected him to appear, but I didn’t recall anything like this. He should’ve sent a few assassins and Rachel should’ve awakened her ability by defeating them. He should’ve said, My goal today was only to scare you. However, he chuckled out a corpse instead?

“The heck.”

No other threats occurred as the lights returned. The corpse also disappeared.

“Where did the corpse go?”

I muttered in a daze when Rachel tapped my shoulder.

“Hajin, let’s... go outside.”

“Ah, yes.”

We walked back with our guards up. The eerie atmosphere gave me goosebumps. Rachel glanced at me and asked, “Are you okay?”

“Yes? Ah, of course. It just surprised me. Who was that?”

“Um... I... I’ll tell you later.”

We came out to the main tunnel. Everyone else already returned and looked serious.

“Hajin, come here.”

Kim Suho called me over.

“What’s up with them? Um, hold on.” I left Rachel and ran up to Kim Suho.

“What’s up?”

“Hajin, you see...”

Kim Suho told me that Chae Jinyoon showed signs of waking up and that Chae Nayun had left to visit him. I blacked out the moment I heard and found myself running somewhere by the time I regained my senses.

* * *

I would’ve gone there by bike, but left it at home today. I took the Busan portal and ran to Daehyun’s VIP hospital in Seoul.

“Haa, haa...”

I finally arrived in front of the hospital. My heart screamed in pain and my lungs almost burst. I caught my breath as a familiar voice rang out.

“You heard the news?”

I turned around startled. Yoo Yeonha also arrived in a hurry, but her appearance remained the same.

“Yeah, you too?”

“Yes. I participate in all important matters related to the Chae clan. Why did you run over in such a hurry?”

“...”

I glared at the hospital without answering. I had predicted that the devil seed would sprout in January with the Book of Truth. I thought I still had time since it was only October. However, I forgot one important thing. Chae Jinyoon could wake up before the devil seed sprouted.

Things would get more complicated if that happened. It didn't take a genius to figure out that killing an unconscious patient would be significantly easier than killing a conscious patient. A piece of cloth suddenly touched my forehead. I looked up in surprise at Yoo Yeonha right in front of me.

"Why are you sweating so much? Are you that worried?"

Yoo Yeonha personally wiped my sweat off with her handkerchief. I wondered why we stood perfectly at eye-level until I noticed that she wore high heels.

"Done. Here, you can have this."

She gave me the handkerchief.

"Uh, yeah... thanks."

I took it and looked at the hospital. Then I subconsciously sighed.

"He didn't wake up, but showed signs. It's not something to make a big deal about," Yoo Yeonha answered my burning question.

I see. That's great.

I turned back.

"Eh? You're going back already? Don't you want to see Nayun?"

Yoo Yeonha sounded surprised. I replied as I walked away, "No, I don't think I belong here."

I only ran for a while, but my body and mind felt exhausted. Was this how mental exhaustion felt?

“Haa...”

My smartwatch received another message as I sighed.

[Little apprentice, I got the alert that you received yoru item.] [Your. So when are you goign to take on your next misson?]

It came from Boss. I realized once again that she was my only hope. I clenched my teeth and immediately replied.

[I can start tomorrow.]

Yoo Yeonha watched Kim Hajin slowly disappear as she thought about what he said.

— I don't think I belong here.

“Pft. It sounds like a line from a drama. I don't think I belong here.”

She murmured in a deep voice when she received a message.

[Yeonha, I'm heading over right now. Is Nayun doing okay?]

It came from Kim Suho.

[I haven't even met...]

She suddenly came to a realization as she typed.

“Did he leave to make room for Kim Suho?”

Everyone knew that Chae Nayun had favorable feelings for Kim Suho. She clearly acted differently in front of him.

“Hmm...”

Indeed, Kim Hajin would've realized that Chae Nayun liked Kim Suho. Yoo Yeonha half-heartedly replied, [not yet—] before heading inside. No, she almost entered when Chae Nayun trudged out from the entrance. She seemed to have aged by 5 years, but faintly smiled. Yoo Yeonha raised her hand.

“Nayun.”

“Ah, Yeonha.”

Chae Nayun saw Yoo Yeonha and scurried up to her with a bright smile. She desperately needed someone to talk to. Chae Nayun and Yoo Yeonha sat at a nearby bench. Then Yoo Yeonha carefully asked, “How’s the situation?”

“He’s still uncon... I don’t know. Um, the doctor said that the graph is spiking up and down. He chased me out, saying that oppa needed to rest.”

Yoo Yeonha understood what Chae Nayun implied.

“That’s good news, right?”

“Yeah. Patients in similar cases all woke up within three months.”

Chae Nayun placed her hands over her chest.

“I feel like my heart is about to burst. How embarrassing... I shouldn’t cry...”

Chae Nayun lived the past five years thinking Chae Jinyoon would never wake. Her pent-up sorrow and struggles seemed to overflow as she clenched her teeth and cupped her hands over her face. Soon, her feelings came out as she sobbed and her whole body trembled. She should’ve cried out of happiness, but she seemed rather sad and pitiful.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha patted her back without saying anything. Frankly, she couldn't empathize with Chae Nayun at all. Yoo Yeonha had a happy family despite an obsessive father and an ambitious mother.

Chae Jinyoon had been in a coma for 5 years with no signs of waking. The passing time could've only cycled between rage, sadness, frustration, despair, and resignation. Hope finally returned when it had almost disappeared. A family member thought to be lost forever could finally come back.

Yoo Yeonha couldn't imagine what Chae Nayun felt.

"Ah, hic... hic. My chest hurts."

"Oh right, Kim Suho is coming soon. That person already came by."

Yoo Yeonha spoke once Chae Nayun calmed.

"That person?"

"Kim Hajin."

"Kim Hajin came too?"

"Yeah."

Yoo Yeonha pictured the Kim Hajin she just met. He was covered in sweat and looked like he would cry.

"He arrived even before me all covered in sweat."

"..."

Chae Nayun slowly looked around for someone in hiding.

"He already left."

"Eh? Why?"

“I don’t know.”

Yoo Yeonha smiled mischievously. “Maybe he yielded the seat to Kim Suho.”

“What do you mean?”

“Don’t you like him? Kim Suho, I mean.”

Chae Nayun’s face stiffened. Yoo Yeonha slightly turned before she could respond.

“Or maybe you used to like him?”

“N-No, it’s neither. W-What are you talking about?”

“Really? That’s not how I saw it.”

Yoo Yeonha smirked and teased her. However, Nayun seemed to have lost all her energy from crying and didn’t react much. Then they felt several people running towards them. Yoo Yeonha and Chae Nayun simultaneously turned and spotted Kim Suho, Yun Seung-Ah, and Shin Jonghak.

Chapter 111

Action (4)

Rachel contacted the Royal Court as soon as she returned and revealed everything to her butler. Lancaster had appeared and murdered the agent protecting her, but returned without hurting her.

— Can you describe the situation before Lancaster appeared in more detail?

The butler seriously asked.

“Yes? Ah, um... A friend gave me a present.”

— By the way, Princess, you can speak to me in English.

“Ah, right, sorry. So um, about the situation...”

Rachel reported what happened in English. The butler rubbed his chin before continuing in a low voice.

— Hm... perhaps Lancaster wants Princess to suffer the same pain.

“Yes?”

Rachel tilted her head.

— Lancaster lost his most precious people in the London Incident. He must want Princess to share the same fate. He must’ve misunderstood Princess’ relationship with this friend.

“Ah...”

It seemed possible now that she thought about it. After all, Lancaster said he saw an amusing scene.

“But that’s not it...”

Rachel looked at the bracelet on her wrist. Lancaster was gravely mistaken if that’s what he thought. She wasn’t in any position to be intimate with someone.

— Anyways, Princess. I see you’ve changed a lot.

“Eh? In what way?”

— In the past, you used to love eating and playing around like a child. Now, you’re calm and collected.

“T-That was before I grew up.”

Honestly, Rachel acted quite playful until she turned six. She always fulfilled all her responsibilities before playing. The queen, the royal consort, and Rachel’s butler could only watch with a smile, but her playfulness disappeared after that incident.

— It’s getting late, Princess. You should sleep. We will notify you soon whether we’ll send another agent or hire a skilled mercenary.

“Yes. By the way, did that agent... have a family?”

The butler bitterly smiled and shook his head.

— No, he didn’t.

“I see. Please treat him well. I will also participate in the funeral.”

— Yes, understood.

Someone had died to protect her. That put a heavy burden on her heart, but Rachel hung up without showing any weakness.

“Haa.”

However, she couldn't prevent a sigh from escaping. Rachel took out her earphones to relieve her stress. She looked at the music app on her smartwatch.

[If – Kim Hajin] [Now I Wish It Was So – Kim Hajin (karaoke)] [You In My Arms – Kim Hajin (karaoke)] [To J – what I sang (karaoke)]...

She secretly made several recordings when they went karaoke and managed her insomnia to some extent thanks to Kim Hajin's voice. On a side note, she also realized her terrible singing after listening to herself.

"Today, let's go with..."

Now I Wish It Was So. Rachel hit the play button and hopped into bed.

[I can start tomorrow.]

Boss contacted me the next day after my positive reply.

Apprentice Mercenary Mission [Difficulty: D] [Reward: 400,000,000 Korean won or an item of equivalent value] [Goal: Attack a djinn group under Jehon's human trafficking.] [Jehon operates a human trafficking truck once a week. Two guarded trucks will cross the Weike Bridge at 10 P.M. Attack and rescue the hostages.]

The mission took place in China. To be more precise, it would occur on a road connecting China to Mongolia. Djinnns often used this smuggling route.

According to my settings, the Russian region neighboring Mongolia was a lawless zone where strength reigned supreme. It also served as a lair for djinnns who committed all sorts of crimes. However, a society operated by djinnns also inhabited this lawless zone. The UN refused to recognize it, but most referred to this place as Pandemonium. It equaled in size to a small city.

I went to Beijing through Seoul when classes ended the next day. I made sure to wear a mask and sunglasses once I arrived.

The northern region of Beijing was considered an intermediate rank danger zone filled with monsters. I arrived at a worn bridge above a river after an hour of driving.

Intermediate rank monsters frequently appeared and I didn’t spot a single person.

“Let’s see.”

I knocked down several trees to block the bridge’s only entrance. Then I received a message.

[There will be multiple enemies, but not all will be djinns. Some became the dogs of devils and others are simply evil people who lead despicable lives. These are your targets.]

“Hm.”

Contracts with devils amplified a djinn’s negative emotions. Weaker djinns tended to commit harsher crimes using all sorts of methods. Their instincts grew stronger with unmet desires that led to rage and pure evil.

“That’s nice to know.”

I could deal with them easier without being mentally burdened. I looked around for cover. The surrounding area looked like a desert. The trees in the nearby forest were all too short. I had no choice, but to directly confront them.

I got on my bike and drove about 600 meters over the bridge. Then I faced the bridge and saw everything around it in full view.

I checked the time at 9:35 P.M. They would arrive at 10. I weaved aether into a chair and sat as I took out a cloth and wiped the Desert Eagle. Finally, I spotted two trucks and four escort vehicles after about 30 minutes.

“Here they come.”

I slowly stood up and infused the Desert Eagle with Aether, transforming it into a sniper rifle. Then I aimed at the truck drivers. The driver in front seemed drunk or high as he snickered. I had no reason to hesitate and pulled the trigger.

TANG! My clothes fluttered from the pressure. The bullet blew up the driver’s head without a scream. The window shattered and the driver immediately scattered into black dust. It didn’t stop and pierced the truck’s cargo compartment.

Click—

I ejected the bullet casing and aimed for the second driver. He had no clue and made an easy target. I fired and a white bullet immediately pierced through. Kiiik— The trucks skidded and crashed into trees. The escort vehicles finally noticed and stopped. The doors shot open as a total of 18 djinns ran out. Three with swords, four with spears, two with axes, three with bows, and the rest with assault rifles. I observed their movements as I took out a ginseng pill with modified effects.

[Medicinal energy has spread throughout your body.] [All variable stats except magic power will increase by 1.5 points for 5 minutes.]

This modification only required 5 SP. It didn’t cost much since I changed a permanent stat boost into a temporary one. I swallowed the pill and activated the under armor’s haste. Then I transformed the Desert Eagle into an assault rifle. I could feel my body swirling with energy.

“Huu...”

I took a deep breath and stared at the incoming djinns.

— 他妈的是什么？

— 你想回去吗？嘿！你这个婊子的儿子！

They spoke among themselves. Of course, I didn't understand Chinese. Honestly, I didn't care.

“Would you shut up?”

I calmly aimed at them. They charged like raging bulls and kicked up a cloud of dirt. However, I activated bullet time and they felt like snails. First, I targeted the djinns with assault rifles. I fired a bullet into each of their heads. They couldn't even use magic power reinforcement and easily scattered into dust. Then I aimed for the ones rushing in with spears. They managed to close in about 200 meters away, but wouldn't proceed any farther.

“Hm?”

However, they could use magic power reinforcement. That surprised me, but magic power reinforcement was different from qi reinforcement. It was only a low rank defensive skill from randomly releasing magic power. I could easily break through such an elementary skill.

I fired three bullets at the djinn in the front.

The first made the magic power reinforcement unstable, the second destroyed the unstable magic power reinforcement, and the third pierced through the gap to kill him.

I only needed 3 bullets to kill each spear warrior. The world remained still as I fired nonstop. Multiple sparks of light flashed from my barrel and slaughtered all the weaklings. I aimed and fired like a machine.

“...”

I fired a total of 30 shots and killed ten warriors. Not even a minute had passed since they got out of their cars.

Now, only two djinns with bows remained. They pulled their bowstrings, but I only needed to flick my finger. White light flashed from my barrel.

The two djinns scattered into dust.

“Haa.”

Time returned to normal. I felt slightly lightheaded and walked over the bridge. Then I opened the cargo compartment of the right truck.

“Uaaaaaa!”

A man charged at me with a dagger. He caught me completely off guard as my head momentarily blanked. His eyes flickered with killing intent and blue magic power covered his dagger. A giant wolf shot out of my chest and bit his neck before it could reach my heart.

“AAAK! AAAAAAAK!”

The wolf equaled the size of two adult men. I rubbed my chest as the wolf restrained him. I... wasn't hurt.

“Whew.”

I sighed in relief at the potentially fatal mistake. I should've been more careful.

“Kuaaaaak...”

Crunch. His neck broke and the djinn scattered into dust. I looked around the cargo compartment full of kidnapped people. Their eyes filled with fear and sorrow.

“...”

[Mission completed.]

I sent Boss a message before throwing the djinn's smartwatch to them.

“The djinns are all dead. You can use that to call heroes and go home

now.”

The wolf that saved my life approached me. He panted for my praise, so I stroked its head. Boss quickly replied.

[Confirmed. We'll deal with the cleanup.]

I stayed up all night at the Beijing Hotel and returned at 6 A.M. when the Cube portal opened. The dorm room felt oddly warm for some reason. Was it because of Hayang on the couch and Evandel's nightingales on the TV?

I smiled as I walked into the bedroom. Evandel had already gone to sleep. I sat on the edge and stroked her head. I realized that this child had been my emotional support for a long time now. I couldn't help but wonder when I started relying on such a young child.

“Sigh.”

Only a year had passed since I fell into this world. I had reached this point after only a year. Once I spent another 10 years like this and returned to Earth... Could I go back to normal? Could I forget everything like it never happened?

“Yaawn.”

Evandel opened her eyes and stared at me. Then came into my arms with a warm smile.

“It's Hajin. Hajin, Hajin...”

She murmured as she rubbed her cheeks against my chest.

“Oh right, Evandel. You saved me today.”

“Yummy, yummy food...”

Evandel didn't seem to care.

"We can eat yummy food later. Go back to sleep."

I rubbed her back.

I slouched over my desk 3 hours later in class. I only slept less than an hour and felt exhausted.

"Auu..."

I struggled to stay awake as someone sat next to me and tapped on my shoulder.

"Yo, Kim Hajin."

I turned to face Chae Nayun while still slouching. She practically beamed with joy.

"What."

"You didn't forget your promise tomorrow, right?"

"Promise?"

Kim Suho joined in. "You forgot, Hajin? We said we'd eat together."

"Hah?"

Only then did I raise my body. I spoke while looking at Chae Nayun, "I thought you said you planned on eating with Kim Suho."

"Uh... ah, didn't I tell you we would all eat together?"

"I'll be there too." Yoo Yeonha appeared next to Chae Nayun. "Jonghak and Yi Yeonghan will also come."

“Yeah, it’ll be for all members of the time travel group.”

Chae Nayun placed her hand on my head as she said that. Startled, I stiffened up. Meanwhile, she straightened my hair with her hand.

“There.”

She smiled in satisfaction. I glared at her dumbfounded. Even my mom stopped doing that after I hit puberty.

“Anyways, don’t forget to come. We’re going to karaoke after.”

“I’m busy that day—”

“Otherwise, we’ll invite you to a group chat.”

“That’s...”

I frowned. Please spare me from that.

Chapter 112

Truth (1)

The Chameleon Troupe relocated to a new base in an underwater cave near England's Bristol Channel. A guild expedition would occur near Suwon's abandoned factory, so they took the opportunity to move.

"Oooh..."

The Chameleon Troupe gathered to assess their revenue for the third quarter and discuss the battle prowess of their seat candidate. At least, they had planned on doing that. However, several members couldn't make it due to missions or personal affairs. Only five had gathered. Boss stood in front of them and displayed a video of Kim Hajin's mission.

"He killed 20 people in 21 seconds. Is that even a gun?"

A handsome man with a gentle complexion spoke in awe. He was Chameleon Troupe's seat of green, Jin Yohan.

"How can a gun be that strong? What a mysterious gift."

"So? What do you think?" Jain urged him to give his assessment.

"Hmm..." I'm not sure, but he should be around a high-intermediate rank hero."

"What? That high?"

"Huh?" How is that high?"

Jin Yohan's tone caused Jain to frown. This was the problem with strong people. They underestimated the standards of lower ranks.

“Then 10 high-intermediate rank heroes could beat you.”

“Nah, that’s an exaggeration. Maybe a hundred.”

Jin Yohan shook his head and generously praised himself.

“What do you think, Jain?”

“I think he’s... intermediate rank. Like Kim Suho, he should be about intermediate rank, grade 7 to 9. I’m not sure about how he’ll fare against a strong opponent, but he seems helpful against many weaker opponents.”

Jain quickly pointed out Kim Hajin’s strengths and weaknesses. Kim Hajin would’ve collapsed from the praise if he overheard.

“Eeeh, only intermediate rank?”

“I’m being generous too. If he has that much potential at only 17... think about how he’ll be in 5 years. He’ll become an incredibly sharp weapon.”

Jain already concluded that Kim Hajin had a weapon-type gift that enhanced and transformed weapons. He also had a special physique that added an anti-magic property to his magic power.

“We need Gyeong for assessments like this. Is he still in the demon realm?”

“Yeah, that fool doesn’t want to come out.”

The demon realm was also another name for Pandemonium. Humans avoided talking about it, but Pandemonium was even more lavish and hedonistic than Las Vegas. Anyone could enter so long as they had the strength to break through the crowd of monsters. Cheok Jungyeong took pleasure in fighting there.

“What does Boss think?”

Jain asked their leader. However, she didn't reply. Jain turned and saw Boss clicking on a gaming console.

"Boss, you're playing a game?"

"Hm? Ah... it's nothing."

Boss nonchalantly replied with her eyes still fixed on the console. She looked rather cute.

"Did you fall in love with electronics after exchanging a few texts with Kim Hajin?"

"..."

Pibibip— A game-over effect could be heard. Boss switched off the console and looked sharply at Jain.

"Don't get cocky."

Jain slowly looked away, but recalled how friendly Boss acted when texting Kim Hajin. She felt slightly wronged and somewhat jealous. Then she changed the subject to Droon.

"Droon, did you clean up properly?"

"Yep. The victims were all rescued and I ate the rest! Both humans and bullets."

Droon responded with a bright smile as Jain sighed.

"Say you fed it. It's creepy if you ate it. Also, did you find out about that wolf?"

"Yeah, it's Kim Hajin's pet!"

"No, that's not what I..."

Jain felt unsure about that mysterious wolf that suddenly shot out of Kim Hajin's chest.

"Don't worry about that." Boss stepped in.

"I will ask him myself. Kim Hajin trusts me very much."

"Really?"

"He'll believe me if I say you use red beans to make wine."

"Well, if you say so."

Jain nodded for now.

* * *

As promised, we met 2 days later in front of the Korean restaurant Chae Nayun had reserved. Han Jung Gak boasted 3 Michelin stars and I ended up joining the other five.

"Welcome. Come in, come in."

Chae Nayun enjoyed eating at Han Jung Gak from childhood and led the group. The interior resembled a traditional Korean house that looked quite homely. We followed Chae Nayun to our seats at a long table for six. I sat in the middle next to Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan as Chae Nayun sat in front of me.

"The food here is amazing. Look forward to it."

Chae Nayun said as she looked into my eyes. I avoided her straightforward gaze and pretended to nod. She initiated the conversation in a cheerful voice.

"Being here reminds me of the past."

"The past?"

"In 1972. We stayed there for about 7 weeks. My skills improved so much. I haven't lost once since I came back."

"Didn't you lose to Rachel?"

"That was a tie!"

The others happily chattered about the world of the past. They also spoke about their worries concerning the upcoming exams. I silently listened as we waited for the food. Suddenly, I noticed that Shin Jonghak acted strangely.

"Oi, Kim Suho. Are you preparing well for exams?"

"It's so-so. What about you?"

"Have you ever seen me study? I'm different from you."

"Oh, is that so?"

"Right, we've been different since birth. Someone like you who only works hard wouldn't understand."

Shin Jonghak displayed his rivalry against Kim Suho, but didn't act particularly hostile. He should've been more intimidating like in the original story, but his current actions seemed mellow to the point that I found it funny. Of course, this was a good thing. However, I still felt curious. Why did Shin Jonghak change so much?

"Your food has arrived."

A waiter interrupted my thoughts and brought all sorts of dishes like braised short ribs, soy sauce marinated crab, kimchi, and stone pot rice. They served your typical Korean food. Only the grilled short rib patty was limited to one per person among the dozens of side dishes. I also liked it the most and took a bite.

"Wow, this is amazing."

The patty melted in my mouth as I subconsciously exclaimed.

“Yeah, it’s really good.”

Kim Suho commented from next to me. He seemed to be the type who savored his food as he only nibbled a small corner. However, I put the entire patty in my mouth.

Chae Nayun happily cheered as I ate. “It’s good, right?”

“It is, so quiet down.”

“Huhu.”

I swallowed and went back to observing Shin Jonghak. He stared at Kim Suho with hawk-like eyes for any breach of table manners so he could nitpick, but soon gave up to focus on eating. I also looked down at my plate.

“What?”

For some reason, another grilled short rib patty had appeared. What happened? Did I spit it back out? I raised my head and made eye contact with Chae Nayun. She smiled. So she gave it to me. Chae Nayun moved her mouth without a sound when I pointed to the patty with my chopsticks.

You can have it.

“...”

I felt burdened by her kindness. However, the patty’s irresistible smell tickled my nose. Gulp. I swallowed hard. In the end, I surrendered and took a bite. A spark suddenly went off in my head as I chewed. I looked at Chae Nayun eating a rice bowl before turning to Shin Jonghak. Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, Chae Nayun. In this three-way relationship, the biggest source of Shin Jonghak’s character development was... Chae Nayun.

I stared at Chae Nayun. Did giving her the time capsule affect her too much? No, that was impossible. Chae Nayun liked handsome men. She suddenly laughed.

“Why are you staring? Do you want me to order more?”

“Huh? Oh, um, no.”

“Excuse me, Auntie!” Chae Nayun called a waiter before I could stop her.

“Can we get two more grilled short rib patties?”

I watched her cheerfully ordering more and felt an inexplicable sadness.

* * *

We went to a nearby karaoke bar after lunch. Chae Nayun sang surprisingly well. Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan also sounded decent. Yoo Yeonha looked forward to Shin Jonghak’s performance, which was also better than average. However, Kim Hajin was... on a whole different level. He could’ve been successful as a professional.

“Wow, my ears are melting.”

“Why don’t you just go pro?”

Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan made a fuss as Yoo Yeonha glanced at Chae Nayun. Kim Hajin’s singing just ended, but Chae Nayun’s eyes remained closed as she savored the lingering images. Then Yoo Yeonha received a message on her smartwatch.

[Come outside. I have something to talk to you about.]

It came from Kim Hajin. Yoo Yeonha glanced at him before leaving the room. She waited for about 3 minutes when...

“Hey, buddy.”

Someone called her in a friendly tone. Yoo Yeonha couldn't help but laugh. "Buddy? What's up with the sudden English?"

"It means friend. Don't you know?"

"Do you think I wouldn't? Well, you know how I am, right?"

Kim Hajin laughed and nodded. He cut straight to the chase since Yoo Yeonha didn't like small talk.

"Of course. I need you to make some bullets."

"Eh? Bullets?"

Yoo Yeonha didn't expect such a request.

"Yeah, but I'm not looking for manufactured ones. I'm asking for custom-made. It's possible, right?"

"Yes. Essence of the Strait has state-of-the-art technology for it."

Most bullets were smaller than a thumb. Compressing mana into such a small object could only be done with state-of-the-art technology developed in the 2000s.

"I know. Also..."

Kim Hajin took out a small leaf from his pocket. Yoo Yeonha couldn't tell whether he picked it up from the ground or plucked it off a branch. The item didn't fit the situation.

"What's this? A leaf?"

"Grind it up and put it inside the bullets."

"Come again?"

Yoo Yeonha carefully scrutinized the leaf after receiving it. She couldn't find anything special about it no matter how much she looked. She frowned and stared at him.

“You won’t tell me what it is even if I ask?”

Kim Hajin nodded.

“I just have to grind it and put it in the bullets?”

“Okay.”

“Thanks. Ah, tell the others I’m heading out first.”

Yoo Yeonha tilted her head. “We’re leaving soon too, so why don’t you just stay?”

“I don’t feel comfortable. Shin Jonghak is eyeing me too much.”

Kim Hajin nudged her shoulder. Yoo Yeonha took a few steps back in shock.

“D-Don’t do that. It hurts.”

“Ah, sorry. Anyways, I’m leaving.”

“Yes, see you.”

Yoo Yeonha watched him leave as she rubbed her shoulder. Then an emergency message arrived on her smartwatch.

[Master, we may have found an incident related to Kim Hajin.]

Yoo Yeonha’s eyes widened.

[Report.]

[Something called the Kwang-Oh Incident occurred the year Kim Hajin was born. There is a huge cover-up on it. Someone attacked one of our men while looking into it.]

“Attacked?”

Yoo Yeonha quickly replied. The amount of effort and money she spent on her investigators lingered on her mind.

[Is he okay?]

[Yes, he is recovering without any issues.]

[Send me what you’ve gathered so far and halt the investigation for now. The safety of our investigators always comes first.]

[Understood, Master.]

Yoo Yeonha stared at the words, Kwang-Oh Incident.

“Kwang-Oh Incident... Kwang-Oh Incident... Why does it sound so familiar?”

She recalled the phrase from a casebook inside her family home’s library. No, it was more like her father’s diary. She was only seven, but clearly remembered. She didn’t understand it back then because he wrote most of it in Hanja, but her father harshly scolded her for reading it without permission.

“I’ll have to take a look later.”

I can sneak a peek since Father is going on a trip this Friday.

“Huhu.”

Yoo Yeonha felt proud. Now she could properly return the favor to her ally. She saw Chae Nayun glaring at her when she happily turned around.

“Hük!”

Yoo Yeonha jumped in surprise. “H-Hey, Nayun, what’s up?”

“I wondered where you went?”

Chae Nayun gestured for her to come back.

“Uh, yeah... Oh, Nayun, that person said he’s leaving first.”

“What? Why? What did he talk to you about?”

Chae Nayun frowned as she asked. Yoo Yeonha found this side of her quite cute and poked her with her finger.

“Ak! What is it?”

“Geez, you don’t have to look at me like that.”

“Like wh— ah, hey, aaang, s-stop!” Yoo Yeonha kept poking her from her side and a more sensitive area.

“Ahng, st-stop poking me.”

“What was that?”

“R-Really, aang. Hey!”

Chae Nayun could no longer endure it and covered her breasts. “Why are you poking me there? Are you crazy?”

“It’s because I’m jealous.”

Yoo Yeonha explained as she looked for an opening. She couldn’t help but wonder how someone could have such a perfect figure. Her skin looked milky white as well. Poke, poke.

“Ah, aah. S-Stop, d-don’t. I-I’m ticklish, ah, stop—!”

Chae Nayun ran away from Yoo Yeonha with a flushed face.

Truth (2)

I returned home late at night. Evandel and Hayang ran up to me as I opened the door. I was used to Evandel's Hajin Hajin and Hayang's meowing by now. I hugged the two of them and sat on the couch. I had bought an animated movie that Evandel wanted and played it on the TV. They grew silent as the movie began. Hayang's intelligence seemed to match humans. She refused to eat normal cat food and recognized me as the head of the household.

"Wait a minute."

I looked at the ring on my finger and Hayang's wagging tail. Then I came up with a strange idea. Who said only humans could wear rings?

[Homer's Ring] [Artifact] [Awakened] A ring Homer wore in the past. It resonates with nature and will endow its wearer with energy. [Intelligence Boost – Will increase the wearer's intelligence by 0.001 points every 24 hours up to a maximum of 0.365 points.] [High rank Magic Power Amplification]

I modified the ring's setting out of curiosity.

[Intelligence Boost – Will increase the wearer's intelligence by 0.001 points every 24 hours up to a maximum of 0.365 points.] [For a selected non-human target, the increase will become 0.01 points per 12 hours.]

[40 SP will be used.]

"Huh? This works?"

I calculated in my head. With 0.02 points per day, 18 days would be enough to maximize the stat. It also didn't require much SP. What if I erased the non-human part?

[The rate of increase will double for the first person who wears it.] [250 SP will be used.]

The gap between a human and animal was huge.

“Hmm.”

I pondered for a moment. It would cost 40 SP and 18 days. Would Hayang be able to help me if she grew smarter? I looked at Hayang in Evandel’s arms. She might not be able to help me, but she could help Evandel. It wouldn’t hurt to try.

I slipped the ring onto Hayang’s tail. She turned to look at me and spotted the ring. She stared at it for 1 second, 2 seconds, 3 seconds... then wagged her tail, satisfied by the sparkle.

“Let’s see how smarter you become in two weeks.”

I stroked Hayang’s back and thought of the wolf Evandel gave me. I turned on my laptop and checked its stats.

[Ghost Wolf] [Servant] [Intermediate rank] — The first servant created by Evandel the witch.

Basic Stats: [Strength: 5.350] [Bite: 6.150] [Speed: 7.550] [Perception: 7.605] [Vitality: 2.750] [Magic Power: 3.850]

Special Skills: [Intuition (Advanced)] Can sense danger. [Absorption (Low)] Can strengthen itself through absorption. [Tattoo Form (Low)] Can merge with its master in the form of a tattoo to recharge its magic power and strengthen its master’s stats.

First Servant: Its growth potential and hierarchical rank are superior to other servants.

Unity of Soul: Will grow stronger along with Evandel the witch.

“Wow.”

Its stats surprised me, especially its incredible speed and perception. I could even ride it instead of my bike if its vitality and stamina were higher. The word servant also caught my attention.

“So that’s why.”

Now I understood why it was so strong. One of a witch’s authorities was the ability to create servants. In doing so, a witch separated a part of her soul. As a result, servants were much stronger than normal creations, and a witch could only create 3-5 servants throughout her life. In the original story, Evandel’s most notorious servant was the three-headed dog, Cerberus. I remember describing its huge body with black flames.

“I’ll have to give the under armor to him.”

This wolf had the potential to grow into the real Fenrir. Why did Evandel choose a wolf? Did I resemble one like Boss said?

“Haha, look at that, Hayang.”

I could hear Evandel giggling as she watched her movie. She laughed, stared in shock, teared up, and swayed from side to side at various scenes.

Woong— I received a message.

[The Traveling Club will be going to a festival in Busan this Saturday. Please RSVP whether or not you will be attending.]

I furrowed my brows. Honestly, the traveling club would encounter some sort of trouble every time they went out.

“Vroom.”

Evandel tilted her head to the right along with the car on TV. I carefully placed my hand on her head.

“Evandel?”

“Yeah?”

“Let’s go out to play on Friday.”

The traveling club would visit the Busan festival on Saturday and Sunday. I could grab a hotel and spend some time with Evandel on Friday.

“Play?”

Evandel’s eyes sparkled.

“Yeah, it looks like I’m free on Friday. Since we went to Disneyland last week, this week we’ll...”

Evandel’s eyes sparkled with anticipation.

“Go to a festival.”

Friday at 2 P.M.

“Combat magic is very important, yet simple.”

I was currently in the middle of our [Combat Magic and High Rank Magic Application] class. I glanced at Tomer sitting next to me. She jotted down notes like usual.

Recently, I spoke a lot with her. She stealthily asked me questions about Agus Benjamin like what kind of relationship we had and what type of person he was. I planned on bringing her to our side as I answered her questions. Her father’s cremation urn should be surrounded by the flowers I brought.

“Most spells require you to refine magic power inside your body. However, certain spells are an exception. The most well-known example is the barrier spell...”

The class continued without end. Tomer tapped my shoulder as I dozed off. She handed me a piece of paper as I wiped my drool.

[How did you get close to that person?]

I looked at the paper, then at Tomer's face. She had a serious expression. I cleared my throat and jotted a reply.

[It wasn't easy.]

[So how? The nurses said even they couldn't get close.]

[Well, he didn't have a family. Our situations were similar.]

I passed the paper back. Tomer seemed like she didn't understand.

[What do you mean by similar?]

"Oh right."

However, she stopped writing mid-sentence. She had already investigated my background and recalled I was an orphan. Tomer glanced at me sympathetically, then scratched out the sentence and wrote a new one.

[Got it.]

I took the lead next.

[You've been asking about him since last week. Why?]

[That person is my biological father.]

"Eh?"

I wanted to poke her a bit, but I never expected her to drop the bomb. She seriously surprised me.

[I know what you're thinking. I feel the same. I never thought I'd find someone who knew him either.]

Tomer quickly jotted down.

[That person abandoned me and ran away. That's why I've been looking for him.]

I remained silent. Unlike Tomer, I knew the truth. Her father didn't abandon her. It was the opposite. He had protected her by leaving. He killed his wife because she became a djinn and tried to sell off their daughter.

[So I'm wondering. Did that bas... person leave a will or keepsake behind?]

The South American culture back then was to kill off all relatives related to djinns. Tomer's father chose to become a criminal because of this witch hunt culture. He ran away to protect his daughter, but had always missed her. He left behind a letter for that purpose.

[Yeah, he left behind a letter.]

Tomer's eyes coldly flickered.

[Where?]

[In a memorial, along with his cremation urn.]

[Where's the memorial?]

[Let's go together. I'll take you there.]

[Shut up and just give me the address.]

The theatrical effect wouldn't be as strong if she went alone, but it didn't matter too much.

[Here.]

I gave her the address. Tomer typed it into her smartwatch.

[By the way, today will be my last day at Cube. I'm not trying to run off with your money, so don't misunderstand.]

"Excuse me."

Kim Hyojun, the chief magician from Seoul magic tower, pointed at us.

"Are you two in a relationship?"

Only then did I realize our arms practically touched as we secretly passed notes back and forth. Tomer scurried to the side, but everyone's attention already fell on us.

"I don't think you two suit each other. Also, dating so openly is prohibited in Cube."

"It's not like that."

I felt an intense stare as I answered. It came from Chae Nayun. Yoo Yeonha, who sat next to her, continued taking notes without a care. However, Chae Nayun glared at me with puffy cheeks.

"Cadet Kim Hajin? Come here for a minute."

"Ah."

"Ah?"

"Ah, yes."

I knew this would happen. Kim Hyojun wouldn't just let it slide. He liked to embarrass students to feel superior. I scratched my neck and went up in front of the class.

"Cadet Kim Hajin, you passed the first semester with average scores all around."

Kim Hyojun projected my scores from last semester. I scored between a C and B+ on the light sphere, magic power emission, magic power harmonization, etc.

“Then what was today’s lesson about?”

“Uh...”

I didn’t know since I wasn’t paying attention. I remained silent until someone whispered.

— Barrier, barrier.

Kim Suho came to my rescue.

“...That’s right. Can you demonstrate it for the class?”

Kim Hyojun asked. Wait, barrier? I suddenly recalled a scene from the original story. Kim Hyojun always bothered Kim Suho like this out of jealousy.

“Barrier?”

“Yes, try it.”

My lips felt dry as I activated stigma’s magic power and created a barrier to cover my upper body. It cost one and a half streaks of stigma. The blue magic power formed a pentagon that looked quite decent. It had a vein-like circuit that efficiently transported magic power. I didn’t mean to, but stigma had created a perfect barrier. Kim Hyojun looked somewhat displeased, but soon faked a smile and praised me.

“It looks good. The magic power’s transparency is especially noteworthy.”

However, he quickly added negative remarks.

“But it’s weak, too weak. Everyone, do you know what the problem is with a cadet like him?”

He turned to the class and lectured as though I did something deplorable.

“It looks pretty on the outside. Too pretty, as if appearance is all that matters. That seems to be all there is to it.”

I glanced at the barrier. Stigma had decided on the appearance by itself.

“Cadet Kim Hajin!”

Kim Hyojun pointed his finger at me.

“You are not a celebrity! A barrier must be sturdy, even if its appearance isn’t the best!”

Kim Hyojun ignited a fireball on his palm.

“The barrier you created will be blown away by even this tiny fireball.”

“Um...”

I stared at the fireball. Honestly, I didn’t think it would penetrate my barrier.

“Cadet Kim Hajin, are you ready?”

“Yes? Ah, yes.”

“Then I will now demonstrate why a barrier shouldn’t just be pretty.”

Kim Hyojun didn’t throw the fireball. A combustion of magic power sent it flying towards me. Boom! A small explosion erupted, along with smoke. However, my barrier remained perfectly fine and the fireball had scattered. A heavy silence descended. As I thought, stigma’s magic power was on another level. Its only flaw was its quantity.

“Cough, looks like it isn’t so bad. BUT!”

Ding— The bell rang and signaled the end of class.

“Huu.”

Kim Hyojun sighed and glared at me before muttering.

“You can go back to your seat.”

Friday’s final class ended at 4 P.M.

[5:00 P.M.]

The family house of the famous Yoo clan was a large, 1500 square meter castle in Gangnam, Seoul worth tens of billions of won. Yoo Yeonha returned home after classes today.

“Welcome back, Young Lady.”

A butler politely greeted her as she approached the front door.

“It’s been a while. Are Father and Mother home?” Yoo Yeonha whispered.

“Master is on a business trip, and the Mistress left for a seminar.”

“Oh? How unfortunate. I dropped by to see them.”

“Should I give them a call? Mistress left not too long ago.”

“Ah, no. You don’t need to do that.”

Yoo Yeonha smiled as she handed her baggage to the butler. The situation turned out even better with her mother gone.

“I have exams coming up, so I’ll head to the library and read Father’s books.”

“Yes, Young Lady.”

She knew her parents weren’t home, but still tiptoed upstairs to look for information regarding the Kwang-Oh Incident.

“I haven’t been here in such a long time.”

Tens of thousands of books filled her father’s library. The entire collection would cost just as much as the house. She pushed aside her father’s desk and moved the carpet to reveal a secret vault.

“Huh? It requires a password now?”

It was only a simple box 10 years ago. Yoo Yeonha thought for a moment before entering four numbers: 0429. She tried both her birthday and her mother’s, but it didn’t work.

“Hmm...”

Yoo Yeonha thought harder. She had a skilled hacker among her investigators, but it would be impossible to hack since this vault wasn’t connected to the internet. Would she have to give up after coming all the way here? 04290816. She suddenly thought of combining her birthday with her mother’s. Bingo. Peebeep— The vault opened.

“Let’s see.”

She found an old and thick diary inside. Her father had kept it for 20 years. Yoo Yeonha looked for Kwang-Oh as she flipped through the pages. Kwang-Oh, Kwang-Oh, Kwang-Oh...

“Ah, here it is.”

[Today, I received a report on Kwang-Oh.]

September 9, 2008. Yoo Yeonha read through the diary entry.

Chapter 114

Truth (3)

[Today, I received a report on Kwang-Oh.]

As soon as she read the first line, her investigators sent her a message that Kim Hajin was admitted to an orphanage near the Kwang-Oh evacuation shelter. Yoo Yeonha felt sad she didn't have any potato chips as she slowly turned the page. She could easily read the Hanja now, which her father often used to write in.

[The media reported last night's incident as a djinn attack on the Kwang-Oh evacuation shelter. They said a single djinn massacred 9 heroes and all the civilians there, but I would never forget what happened in Kwang-Oh that day for the rest of my life.]

At first, it seemed like a simple recounting of the Kwang-Oh Evacuation Shelter Massacre. However, the tone of the writing began to change.

[President Kim Sukho declared Jin Younghwan, who troubled him, as a secret agent for djinns. However, I knew that Jin Younghwan was an honest man. His only flaw was that he was too honest. Perhaps Kim Sukho didn't want his embarrassing secrets to leak. However, Chae Joochul agreed that Jin Younghwan was a djinn and also wished for his death. Jin Younghwan had many loyal subordinates. It would surely raise suspicions if he was assassinated alone. As such, Chae Joochul ordered a skilled assassin to massacre everyone and left me to oversee the plan.]

“...?”

Yoo Yeonha turned the page back and forth as she read it again, but couldn't understand the contents. She even translated it with a smartwatch app thinking she had misinterpreted a few words. However, the contents remained the same. Yoo Yeonha read her father's confession in a daze.

[On that day, I received a transmission from Jin Younghwan. It sounded urgent, but I had concocted that monster invasion. I told Jin Younghwan that saving civilians came first and drove them into a corner at the Kwang-Oh evacuation shelter. Jin Younghwan tried to protect the civilians there.]

Yoo Yeonha stared at the neat handwriting that she recognized and felt a strong headache. However, she didn't stop reading.

[At 8 P.M. on November 8, Chae Joochul's assassin murdered Jin Younghwan and all his subordinates in the evacuation shelter. I wanted to bury this incident in my heart, but received the assassin's report the next day. It stated that one of Jin Younghwan's subordinates was with his pregnant wife.]

Yoo Yeonha froze at the words, pregnant wife. Kim Hajin was admitted to an orphanage the day after the Kwang-Oh Incident.

[The report contained another interesting matter. The assassin had found an umbilical cord at the site. The mother had given birth even in the face of death. The baby's corpse was never found.]

Yoo Yeonha realized what happened when she reached this part. Her heart ached despite the lack of evidence. She squeezed her chest and hoped the baby wasn't Kim Hajin.

[This baby was fated to die. He would have no future even if he survived, so I set out to find him and kill him.]

She felt something inside her shatter as she read her father's heartless declaration. Memories flashed in her mind.

— Don't worry and go to sleep. It'll be over by the time you wake up.

An image of a guy who fought an entire army of monsters to save her. He had risked his life for her. However, her father had led his parents to their deaths and even tried to kill him.

[However, I suddenly recalled my daughter's birth on April 29. She couldn't do anything by herself, but her existence alone brought me great joy. I called the assassin and asked what happened to the baby. The assassin had thrown the baby away without killing him.]

Yoo Yeonha dropped her head and clenched her trembling hands. A familiar voice suddenly rang in her head.

— Hey, don't you think we can become good allies?

It was her own voice. For the first time in her life, she had asked someone to become her ally. It seemed insignificant, but that was her way of showing gratitude.

[In the end, I omitted information about that child from the report. However, I killed his parents and didn't help him. He might be slowly dying at this very moment on the cold, hard ground. I have no intention of denying this.]

— Buddy means friend. Don't you know?

He had also acknowledged her as an ally. His voice became a sharp blade that pierced her heart.

Yoo Yeonha shook and no longer dared to turn the page. Her heart violently beat as she felt an unknown emotion rising from the depths of her heart. Guilt, resentment, anguish... She couldn't think, and no longer wanted to. Cold sweat formed on her forehead as her vision turned blurry and exhaustion engulfed her body.

[I've lived the life of a coward. It would make no difference if I further dirtied myself. I decided to forget for the sake of my daughter and my clan. However, I am leaving the truth behind in this diary. Am I just trying to appease my guilty conscience? Or is it to spite Chae Joochul? That, I don't know.]

Kim Hajin's face and her father's confession formed a monster that she couldn't withstand. Kim Hajin, Kim Hajin, Kim Hajin... His name flickered before her like an apparition. She choked and couldn't bear the torrent of emotions.

[Seoho Memorial]

Tomer stood alone under the crescent moon that illuminated the night. She had dealt with all her personal affairs before coming here, and could no longer predict her future since she had lived for revenge, but now that was impossible. She briefly thought about tearing her father's will apart and taking her own life.

Kiik— Tomer opened the door to the memorial and looked for the name, Agus Benjamin. She soon found it engraved on a cabinet that stood out from the rest.

[Agus Benjamin]

A cremation urn sat inside the small, square cabinet. It didn't look so lonely with flowers surrounding it.

"What's this?"

The number of flowers surprised her as she picked up one of the small cards.

[2024 April, Kim Hajin]

Tomer immediately checked the rest of the flowers.

[2024 August, Kim Hajin] [2025 April, Kim Hajin] [2025 August, Kim Hajin]

They all came from Kim Hajin. The flowers hadn't wilted either since they all contained useless magic power.

"The hell."

Tomer cursed and threw them aside. Then she found a yellow envelope inside the cabinet. She carefully held it up and read the Spanish on the cover, To my daughter. A sudden heat rose from her heart. She ripped open the envelope and began to read the letter inside. She was curious what excuse her damn father would cook up.

[Dear my beloved daughter,

I am wrought with complicated emotions as I write this letter. On one hand, I hope that you don't read it. On the other, I hope that you do. I am also worried about how you will feel after...]

Tomer skimmed over the letter, partly because she hadn't read any Spanish in a long time.

[Your mother could not withstand the temptation and sold her soul to a djinn.] [I couldn't let anyone find out.] [It was the only way to save you from a society that executed the relatives of djinns.]

She couldn't understand several sentences and found them harder to accept. Tomer felt rage rather than acceptance. As far as she was concerned, her father refused to repent and blamed her mother instead.

[I wanted you to go to Korea and live a better life in a better country. However, you disappeared when I arrived in Korea. I gave up everything and entrusted you to a friend, but I couldn't contact him either. I thought about ending my worthless life as the world betrayed me...]

Tomer crumpled the letter without finishing it. She considered it a lie and almost tore it apart when two items fell out of the envelope onto the ground. A rusty brooch her father had given her for her birthday and a small watch she had given him after saving up her allowance.

Tomer stared at the two items in a daze. The foundation of her being shook as she leaned against the wall and opened up the crumpled letter. She collected her thoughts before reading the letter again, slowly and thoroughly.

I rented a room in the presidential suite of the Lotus Inn Hotel in Busan. I sipped on a glass of wine on the balcony of this 500 square meter room. A suite like this was usually hard to come by, but someone had canceled before I made a reservation. It still cost 8 million won a night, but my luck managed to snag it.

“What a beautiful view.”

I sat on the balcony and stared into the horizon. I could see the beach and the streets decorated with colorful lights the night before the festival. We arrived in Busan at 5 and enjoyed water gun fights, fireworks, and a 3-star Michelin restaurant until 9. I took pictures of Evandel and Hayang running around and having fun. My personal favorite was Evandel's face as she tasted a 3-star Michelin dish for the first time. It felt like my first real vacation.

[Thanks.]

A message came from Tomer. This also made me happy. Our relationship as creditor and debtor still existed thanks to our magic contract. Now, Tomer should become my ally without any issues.

“Wow! Look at that, Hayang! We're inside this paper!”

I could hear Evandel's voice from the living room. She seemed fascinated by the pictures I printed. I couldn't help but smile at her pure soul. I received another message as I took a sip of wine and enjoyed the fresh air.

[Um, Hajin, if possible... can you maybe teach me how to wield magic power?]

Rachel had sent more than one message.

[Honestly, I felt amazed when I saw the barrier you made in class. Recently, I've been feeling like I hit a wall... (ㄸ_ㄸ)]

I found her messages cute, but I couldn't help her since I relied on stigma. Rather than that... a wall? Was the bracelet not working? I should've tested it before giving it to her.

[I can pay you lesson fees (★ω★)!]

The butterfly seedling's dust should've helped her reach a new level already if it had worked as intended. It wouldn't just simply awaken her potential since Rachel's gift also involved elementals.

“Hmm...”

Rachel had a lot of pride. I knew since I created her. The fact that she asked for help meant she was that frustrated. I couldn't blame her. She should've been enlightened at the end of the first semester, but it had been delayed for half a year now.

[See you Sunday night.]

I agreed in the end. I just needed to make the butterfly seedling's dust seeped into her body from the bracelet.

"Ah, what a great breeze."

I leaned against the handrail and looked down. The people below looked like ants from the presidential suite on the 60th floor. A certain man walking by a street caught my eye. He dressed very fancy and stood out from everyone else with black hair, a tall nose, and well-defined facial features. This handsome man resembled Legolas.

I felt an ominous sensation as I stared at him. The man looked up as though he felt my gaze. An ordinary person could never discover me from this distance, but I could tell he was looking straight at me. He almost smiled. I felt my heart tremble and returned a relaxed smile. Then the smile on his face grew thicker.

I felt like I knew him. My intuition as the original author screamed.

A man who came from another world like Kim Suho, but with a completely different personality. He despaired the loss of his world. A seeker of evil with twisted beliefs. The growth-type final boss that I designed, whose name I feared to utter.

I had no way of knowing what changes the co-author had made. Not to mention, I went on hiatus when the final boss began to make his move.

Hold on.

I suddenly had a strange thought. Did the final boss actually look like that? He did first appear at the Busan festival. However, his smile seemed strange. I didn't recall writing anything about him smiling so often.

The man nudged his companion and gestured at me, as if to say, Look at that guy. Right, he had a companion who was a girl. They both looked up at me.

I made eye contact with the girl. The navy-haired beauty with a sharp expression resembled an elf. Her eyes coldly flickered and I could feel her killing intent. This crazy girl exuded killing intent just because we made eye contact.

“Wait a minute.”

I began to feel a sense of fear and unease. Could it be? The final boss represented the polar opposite of Kim Suho. Could he have become... a she?

It wouldn't be impossible, but I hoped the co-author had enough common sense to not do that.

Chapter 115

The First Encounter (1)

I carefully observed them to find out who was the final boss. They spoke to each other while pointing at me. I could hear them with my gift.

— Sahyuk, what do you think about him?

The man called the girl Sahyuk. Then her last name should be Jin. Jin Sahyuk. I couldn't help but sigh as I pressed the temple of my forehead. She had the same name as the final boss. I held up my smartwatch, but no alerts popped up.

— Is he really looking at us?

Jin Sahyuk glared at me and asked.

— Of course, our eyes met.

— He doesn't look strong though.

I had designed Jin Sahyuk as a growing final boss with the same, or perhaps even higher potential than Kim Suho. She would grow faster than Kim Suho and become the final boss in the end. She served as Kim Suho's true rival. Her fate shouldn't have changed despite the gender swap. I wouldn't hesitate to kill her even if it took all my SP and the bullet made from Misteltein's leaf.

— Sahyuk, you must train your discernment. Someone who could observe us from that distance with the courage to glare back at you couldn't possibly be average.

My eyesight was special. One's perception stat needed to be at least 15 to match mine.

— And look at that beard. He looks quite strong.

I rubbed my beard. I had left it alone since I gained SP from just walking around Cube with it. I should get rid of it now.

— Didn't you tell me not to judge a book by its cover?

Jin Sahyuk glared at the man. However, he only laughed in response. I grew more curious about his identity. In the original story, Jin Sahyuk only had lackeys around.

“Sigh, never mind.”

This world was already different. I needed to stop crying about diverging from the original story.

— Cough, that's because I have good discernment and you don't. Listen brat, stop glaring at him. Are you trying to pick a fight?

— He glared at me first! He's still glaring!

— I'm sure he's just attracted to you. Why don't you wink at him instead? Show off your beauty.

— What about a death wink? I can shoot a beam of magic power at him.

I flinched. This crazy bitch... Thankfully, the man reacted sensibly and stopped her. Then he waved and they walked away. I watched them leave to an unknown destination. They caught me off guard, but I had confirmed the girl's identity. I still wondered about the man. Who could possibly stand beside her as an equal or even a superior?

“Hajin, can Hayang and I go swimming?”

Evandel's cheerful voice rang out.

“Hm?”

I turned around and saw her swinging her legs inside the indoor swimming pool while Hayang happily swam around.

“Sure, but do you know how to swim?”

“Of course, of course!”

Evandel jumped into the pool. She didn’t need to change since her clothes were made from magic.

“Hayang, Hayang. Let’s race!”

Hayang swam to the starting point and I could see the cat was growing smarter.

“It will be ready, start, then go. Okay? Ready...”

Evandel dragged out her word as she observed Hayang’s posture. Then suddenly...

“Start!”

She shouted and got a head start. Her cheap tactic surprised Hayang as the cat quickly chased after her. I smiled as I watched them. Is this how it feels to have a daughter? Of course, Evandel was a one-of-a-kind child.

We went to the new apartment I purchased instead of returning to Cube on Saturday morning. It was located in Seoul’s Seocho District and each room was about 160 square meters. I realized that my financial power wasn’t anything special yet. This apartment cost half of my savings even after I became a multi-billionaire through the stock market. Of course, the cost of the land always remained high since Korea was a tiny country despite being a superpower.

“Hajin, Hajin, where is this? It’s so big!”

“It’s our new house. We’ll be staying here from time to time. You can think of it as... a villa.”

“Aha.”

Evandel ran to the couch like usual as Hayang looked around for something to climb.

“I should have brought the nightingales.”

Evandel murmured as she rolled around on the couch. She referred to all the birds she created as nightingales. They all looked different, but we started calling them that.

“Evandel, play here with Hayang, okay? We have Legos, dolls, video games, and a TV. The fridge also has some food and snacks. Uncle is going out for a bit.”

“Un!”

“Meow.”

Evandel and Hayang happily agreed since I played with them all day yesterday. I raced through the roads on Agusta as its engine quietly hummed. Soon, I arrived at the Seoul portal station at 8 P.M. I came an hour earlier than scheduled and waited on a bench after parking my bike. Oh Hanhyun arrived first, and my early appearance clearly surprised him.

“You’re already here, Hajin?”

“Yep.”

Kim Suho arrived next and also reacted the same. He dragged along a half-asleep Yi Yeonghan.

“Hajin? Why are you here so early?”

“No reason. I guess I’m just looking forward to it.”

“Ah, I get it. Kuku, that’s cute.”

Kim Suho laughed. Then he suddenly recalled something and spoke to Oh Hanhyun.

“Oh right. Yoo Yeonha says she’ll come later tonight. She’s not feeling well.”

“What?”

That surprised me. Why wasn’t she feeling well? Nothing should’ve happened to make her sick.

“Do you know why?”

“She was hospitalized.”

“What? Hospitalized?”

My surprise turned into shock. Yi Yeonghan replied as he yawned.

“I think it was gastritis caused by stress? You know, she’s kind of sensitive. Chae Nayun went to visit her yesterday.”

Speak of the devil, Chae Nayun just arrived.

“Yo.”

She waved with a bright smile and ran up to us. She surprised me too. Chae Nayun wasn’t the type to smile so joyfully when her friend was sick.

“I heard Yoo Yeonha’s sick.”

“Oh, Yeonha? She’s fine now thanks to me staying up with her all night. Her complexion doesn’t seem pale anymore, so she told me to go ahead.”

“Did she?”

She must've just eaten something bad. After all, Yoo Yeonha liked to secretly eat junk food.

"Alright everyone, let's go!"

Oh Hanhyun smiled and led us through the portal. It only took ten steps to travel from Seoul to Busan. The scenery came into view as we left the portal station. It deserved to be called the second capital of Korea. A variety of shops lined the streets. People of all nationalities walked by, but everyone spoke in Korean.

"We'll take a street tour today. Busan is full of street shops with clothes, miscellaneous stuff, weapons, antiques, and more. It's my hometown, so just follow me." Oh Hanhyun confidently guided us.

"Busan, Busan. Busan seagulls."

Chae Nayun happily hummed and came next to me. "Hey, have you been to Busan?"

"Yeah, obviously."

"I see. Oh look, that must be Busan's road with street shops."

Chae Nayun nudged my arm and pointed to the street vendors. We walked together and looked at the displays of clothes, weapons, scrolls, books, etc. Then Chae Nayun disappeared and came back after around 5 minutes.

"Hey, try this."

She brought a hat from somewhere.

"What's this?"

"Try it on."

She put the hat on my head before I could say anything and glanced at me from top to bottom.

“Oh, not bad. Do you want me to buy it for you?”

“No, I’m good.”

“I already bought it though, so just keep it on.”

Then she disappeared again. I looked at the price tag. What kind of hat cost 350,000 won? I kept it on since it was a gift and continued browsing the shops. I wanted to find a proper antique shop to score some valuables. Chae Nayun appeared once again with a hot dog this time.

“Hey, eat this.”

“Where did you...”

She stuffed the hot dog into my mouth before I could finish.

“Why aren’t you eating?”

“I’ll get sick if I do.”

Chae Nayun giggled at me eating the hot dog. I silently stared at her. She seemed cheerful and energetic. Her bright attitude tired me out. Is she acting like this because Chae Jinyoon's condition improved? Or was it because she... Suddenly, I felt my stomach churn. A fundamental question rose in my head. Am I allowed to be this friendly with her? An uncomfortable acquaintance. Wasn’t that supposed to be the extent of our relationship?

“...”

However, feelings couldn’t be controlled so easily. A dark thought emerged inside me that it would be okay as long as she never found out.

“Hey, try this on. It’ll get cold soon.”

Chae Nayun placed a scarf around my neck.

“Where do you keep getting these things. Take it off.”

“Ah! It’ll get cold soon. Hey, Kim Hajin! Where are you going?”

I ran away as quickly as I could.

* * *

I felt exhausted. It became evening as we spent the day having fun. The sun set fairly early since it was autumn.

“Today’s final course is... Busan Disneyland!”

We stood in front of our last destination for the day. Smugglers should be secretly conducting a trade inside. Their conflict would soon turn into chaos and Kim Suho would run into Jin Sahyuk while suppressing them.

A limousine stopped in front of the entrance as Yoo Yeonha stepped out. Chae Nayun hopped towards her.

“Are you feeling better now?”

“Yeah.”

Yoo Yeonha walked past Chae Nayun and Kim Suho and stood in front of me.

“...”

She stared at me lifelessly. She seemed weak and fragile, unlike her usual self. Was her food poisoning that bad?

“Does it still hurt?”

Yoo Yeonha shook her head. Then Oh Hanhyun spoke up.

“Oh right, we’ll be traveling in pairs inside Disneyland.”

“You, go with me.”

Yoo Yeonha spoke before Oh Hanhyun could explain how pairs would form.

“Huh? Me?”

“What, what are you doing, Yeonha?”

Chae Nayun gave her an odd look, but Yoo Yeonha grabbed onto my sleeve. I also wondered why she acted like this, but I agreed since it seemed like she had something important to say.

“Sure.”

I paired up with Yoo Yeonha as we entered Disneyland. It felt like we stepped into a fairy tale, but Yoo Yeonha remained silent and occasionally sighed as she glanced at me. I wondered why she seemed so down, so I brought her on a rollercoaster. As expected, Yoo Yeonha panicked as we went up and seemed more energetic by the time the ride ended.

“Are you feeling better now?”

“...”

“If not, we’ll go again.”

“N-N-No, I’m fine. S-So let’s skip t-this and r-ride that.”

Yoo Yeonha pointed at the giant Ferris wheel. I slightly furrowed my brows.

“Isn’t that a couples’ ride? Why would you want to go there?”

“I need to talk to you about something.” Her voice slightly trembled.

“If you say so. What’s it about?”

“...”

Yoo Yeonha didn’t reply as I followed her. Honestly, this would be my first time riding a Ferris wheel. We silently stared at each other inside the slow-moving pod.

“What is it?” I asked out of frustration.

“Oh, is it about the bullet I asked you to refine? Is it too difficult?”

“No... I should be able to give you that by next month. That leaf wasn’t ordinary.”

“Right? Ah, you can use any leftovers for your research.”

“Research?”

“Yeah, for your pharmaceutical company. We’re allies, aren’t we? Or maybe I’m just an investor, haha.”

“...”

Yoo Yeonha clenched her teeth and dropped her head. It was then. KOONG! An explosion rumbled. I looked down from the window before looking back at Yoo Yeonha. To my surprise, she stared at me with a determined look and seemed unconcerned about the chaos below.

“What?”

“Remember what I said? That I had something to talk to you about.”

“Yeah, go ahead.”

“You see...”

KOONG! The Ferris wheel suddenly shook and stopped. Yoo Yeonha didn't react at all, but I quickly looked back down. Two people glared at each other where the explosion took place. I focused my sight and hearing on them.

— It really was you. To think you're having fun with a girl. Should I say it's to be expected from a kid?

Jin Sahyuk leered at Kim Suho and Chae Nayun.

— You.

Kim Suho glared at her with a stiff face.

— So you recognize me. You would be a fool not to. After all, it's just you and me.

— Who are you and why are you picking a fight with us?

Chae Nayun frowned and stepped forward. She wore a polar bear hat that she must've won from a game.

— Shut your mouth, shit for brains.

— Shi... I dare you to say that again.

Chae Nayun was a headstrong girl in her own right, but Jin Sahyuk took the meaning of crazy to another level. She condensed her magic power into a ball and threw it at Chae Nayun. It burst into a beam that instantly struck Chae Nayun in the stomach and sent her flying a hundred meters. Kim Suho couldn't even react to the sudden attack.

“Hey, I think we're going to have to talk later.”

The situation didn't look good. I didn't expect her to knock out Chae Nayun in one blow. Jin Sahyuk was supposed to be a growing final boss. Why the hell was she so strong? I quickly opened the pod door and prepared to jump down. However, Yoo Yeonha grabbed my wrist. I looked back at her.

“I don’t think I can do it later. If it’s not now... I don’t think I’ll ever be able to say it again.”

Yoo Yeonha looked like she would cry as she desperately spoke. I froze. Just what could have caused... Ah! A light bulb suddenly went off in my head. The pieces of the puzzle finally came together. A part of the Yoo Yeonha Scandal must’ve occurred already. It would make sense why she suffered from stress-induced gastritis.

“Then you don’t have to say it.”

I’ll always help you. I smiled and tapped her head. Then I jumped down from the Ferris wheel.

Chapter 116

The First Encounter (2)

I jumped from a height of around 100 meters. I felt the air against me as I landed, but I didn't feel much pain despite my weak body. However, my smartwatch revealed the truth. That fall cost me 15% of my stats from energy conversion. It felt like a waste, but I put the thought aside and quickly ran to Chae Nayun.

"Ah..."

She sat on the asphalt and held her stomach. Her injuries didn't seem too serious despite taking the powerful blast of magic power without qi reinforcement.

"Kueek!"

At least, that's what I thought. She coughed a mouthful of blood to prove me wrong. Then she staggered before collapsing again.

"Hey, wake up."

"Kim Hajin?"

Chae Nayun blankly looked up at me as she breathed roughly. I took out a potion and poured it into her mouth.

"Drink it."

"Uup."

Chae Nayun managed to swallow everything, but immense pain would follow.

"Uu! Uk! Uuk!"

She twisted her body before fainting. However, her pulse became steady and her breathing also returned to normal. She should fully recover in 20 minutes. I hid her away in some nearby shrubs. Then I ran to Kim Suho and Jin Sahyuk.

— Try running to that girl. I'll kill you both.

— Why did you change so much?

— Change? Don't talk to me so casually. We might be in a new world, but that doesn't change our past relationship.

Kim Suho and Jin Sahyuk spoke to each other about the past concerning nobles, peasants, knights, continents, and swords. They spoke about things only they could understand. A fight would break out once they finished.

— Sigoal, Rowle!

Jin Sahyuk unleashed her magic power with a roar. She created dozens of spears in the air. The magic weapons flashed towards Kim Suho as he fended them off with a steel pipe he found on the ground.

— Do you really need to do this? What reason is there for us to fight?

— What nonsense are you spouting? You think that pipe will be enough?

She sent her spears flying again like bullets. They carried immense power and exploded like missiles wherever they landed. The spears rained down from the sky as Kim Suho dodged what he could and parried the ones he couldn't. They left huge craters in the ground that caused many park rides to break down. Disneyland turned into a wasteland after a full minute of Jin Sahyuk's attacks.

“She's way too powerful.”

Jin Sahyuk had completely destroyed the surroundings without taking a single step. Kim Suho also didn't have Misteltein with him. In contrast, Jin Sahyuk didn't require any weapons. She only relied on her overwhelming steel-colored magic power. Kim Suho couldn't defeat her. No, the current Kim Suho didn't even intend on defeating her.

“Huup!”

Kim Suho swung his pipe and sent a magic spear back to Jin Sahyuk. However, Jin Sahyuk's defense was just as strong. She easily blocked it with a shield of magic power as another spear struck Kim Suho's shoulder.

“Uk!”

Kim Suho's qi reinforcement managed to stop it from penetrating, but the impact sent him flying. Jin Sahyuk didn't miss this opening. More beams shot towards him as he flew. Boom, boom, boom, boom. Kim Suho's body ricocheted in the air from dozens of blasts. Her attacks continued even after he lost consciousness. I had no choice but to intervene. Thankfully, I prepared some medicine for moments like these.

[Your stats have increased by 1.5 points for 10 minutes.] [An overlapping consumption has further increased your stats by 0.75 points for 5 minutes.] [An overlapping consumption has further increased your stats by 0.375 points for 2 minutes and 30 seconds.]

I felt a surge of energy through my body as I stood in front of Kim Suho. I wondered what I was doing, but reality had deviated long ago from the script. I had to correct it as the extra in this new scenario.

“Give it a rest.”

“Hm? Who are... Oh, the guy from yesterday.”

Jin Sahyuk stopped for a moment as she recognized me.

“You're his teacher?”

“Teacher?”

I guess I didn't look like a high schooler with my beard. I smirked and opened my mouth to correct her, but six spears shot past me.

BOOM!

A huge explosion erupted from behind. I fell into a daze at the sudden attack, but soon snapped out of it. I could still feel her killing intent. She wasn't done yet. I immediately activated bullet time as a spear shot towards my head. I could feel its movement as I tilted my head and narrowly dodged it. BOOM! The spear struck the merry-go-round behind me and exploded.

"Hm."

I wouldn't have survived if she continued. However, she only stared in surprise.

"You dodged that? I thought you wouldn't since you didn't react at all to the other six."

My heart beat like crazy as she looked at me with interest. Perhaps she overestimated me because of what happened yesterday. In that case, I could play the role.

"Why don't you stop here? Kim Suho and I didn't even bring our weapons." I spoke as imposingly as I could. She should be content now since she already beat up Kim Suho.

"And why don't you answer my question? Are you his teacher?" Jin Sahyuk asked once again. I shook my head.

"No. I'm just a friend."

"Then leave. Otherwise, I'll bury you along with him."

Jin Sahyuk acted more violently than expected. I placed my hand in my pocket. It didn't seem like she would stop. In that case, I should take advantage of her reckless attitude. I compressed aether into a 500 won coin and scanned it. I looked at the number as I slowly took it out of my pocket, 40%.

“What’s that?”

Jin Sahyuk furrowed her brows at the coin.

“I told you, I didn’t bring my weapon.”

“So?”

“So I’ll just have to throw this at your face.”

Jin Sahyuk snickered as I shrugged. Thankfully, her arrogant personality remained. I coughed and carefully asked, “Can I try?”

“Pfft. Try it if you think you can.”

She stretched out her arms to receive my attack. I smiled inwardly as I gripped the coin. I only had one shot to strike her head. I wrapped the coin with all of stigma’s magic power and added an anti-magic property along with one more item.

[Ginseng Pill] — Will seep into and strengthen magic power.

I used a similar method in the past to kill Evandel and obtain aether. I melted the ginseng pill into the magic power around the coin. Then I glared at Jin Sahyuk. She watched me with anticipation and showed no signs of defending. The coin glowed a bright blue after I infused the pill.

“Oho, that’s quite an interesting—”

“Huup!”

I mustered all my strength into my right arm. My muscles bulged as I squeezed out every drop of stigma’s magic power and threw the coin.

Pshuuuu—!

The coin shot towards Jin Sahyuk. Stigma’s magic power enhanced it many times over. Jin Sahyuk calmly watched as she formed a magic shield. No matter how strong her shield, it was only made up of magic power. Drrrrr-! The anti-magic coin drilled a hole in her shield and struck between her eyebrows.

“What!”

The coin pushed her back as she kept her eyes open and withstood the force. Her feet plowed through the asphalt.

“Fuck.”

The coin eventually came to a stop, but Jin Sahyuk showed no signs of losing consciousness. Clang— It fell to the ground and two streams of blood flowed from her forehead.

“That hurt...”

Jin Sahyuk condensed her magic power as she glared at me. However, my coin certainly succeeded in damaging her brain. The brain was vital in wielding magic power. As a result, she couldn’t properly condense her magic power and it repeatedly broke down. This seemed like a golden opportunity, but I couldn’t move anymore. I had nothing left in the tank as a man appeared.

“That’s enough. Get back.”

The mysterious man with her last night appeared out of nowhere. He grabbed Jin Sahyuk’s arm and pulled her back.

“Ah, let me go. I’m fine. I can still kill him.”

Her condition didn’t look good despite what she said. She couldn’t even stand straight and staggered.

“Sigh.”

The man karate chopped Jin Sahyuk’s neck. The light in her eyes faded as the man hung her on his shoulder. Then he coldly stared at me.

“This is our first meeting, right?”

I only nodded since I couldn't even move my mouth anymore.

“Mm... Well, she won't be so careless next time thanks to you.”

Then they disappeared.

The man had already left with Jin Sahyuk by the time the dispatched heroes arrived. She felt light as a feather, but the man could feel his back growing wet.

“Ah, she's drooling. Do you have to sleep like that?”

The man placed a mask made from magic power over her mouth. As he left the premises...

“Where are you going?”

A woman's cold voice held him back. The man recognized it. He paused and smiled in her direction.

“Jain.”

The voice belonged to a woman, but a man dressed as a security guard stood in front of him. Jain smirked and nodded.

“It's been a while, old man.”

“Yes, it has.”

The man recalled the days he wasn't called by his name, but a color. He set those useless thoughts aside and asked, “I heard the empty seat will be filled soon. Is the little brat not here?”

The little brat referred to Boss. Only he could call her that.

“I’d rather not see blood,” Jain briefly retorted.

“Oh, worried about me?”

“No, I’m worried about Boss since she can’t win against you.”

“Hmm.”

The man stared at her. With just a look, Jain’s camouflage faded. Soon, her beautiful appearance revealed itself.

“Then why did you come?”

“No reason. I just wanted to see how you were doing.”

Jain glanced at the girl on his shoulder. “Looks like you already found a new child.”

The man simply smiled. “Right, she’s my disciple. She’s a bit special and constantly tries to kill me.”

Magic power condensed around the man’s hand. No, his hand transformed into magic power itself.

“So Jain, looks like you gained some confidence. Or did you just become fearless?”

His hand wavered like a heat wave. Anything he touched wouldn’t come out unscathed. However, Jain remained calm despite his threat.

“Remember what you said? People who have something to protect can’t act as they wish.”

Jain pointed to the girl on his shoulder.

“You can kill me, but I can also kill that girl.”

“I guess you’re right.”

The man lightly smiled. The undulating magic power around him disappeared like it never existed.

“Then I’ll take my leave. It was good to see you.”

The man walked past Jain under the faint moonlight.

“Are you fine just leaving like this?” Jain’s voice rang out from behind him.

“The new black discovered by Boss is a wolf hired solely to kill you.”

The man continued walking without a reply. Like how Fenrir devoured Odin, Boss gave Kim Hajin that name in hopes of reproducing the old myth.

“Fenrir is right there.”

Only then did the man stop. Hidden from Jain’s view was a thick smile on his face.

“I wish him the best of luck.”

The man recalled what he saw before. Jin Sahyuk’s foolishness played a huge role, but the boy had suppressed his disciple with only a single coin.

“It looks like...” The man turned around to reveal his smile.

“He has the potential.”

His easygoing attitude made it seem like he really wanted to die. Jain’s expression turned sour, but she refused to lose and returned an even thicker smile.

Chapter 117

The First Encounter (3)

The heroes and police arrested all the smugglers who caused a scene at Disneyland. Tomorrow's headline would read something like, Failed Negotiation Leads to Smugglers' Infighting. Jin Sahyuk's party, the real cause behind much of the mess, disappeared before the authorities arrived. Kim Suho and Chae Nayun also recovered thanks to my potions.

“...”

Kim Suho sat between pieces of destroyed asphalt as I walked up behind him and placed my hand on his head. His hair felt quite soft. He turned around and smiled at me. I smiled back and sat next to him.

“Are you okay?”

“Yeah, thanks to you. I'll pay you back for the potion.”

“Don't mind it. So how are you related to that girl from before?”

I already knew, but asked anyways. Kim Suho looked into the horizon and murmured.

“She's just someone I know.”

“I see.”

I didn't ask any further as we stared at the night sky for a while.

“Hajin.”

Kim Suho suddenly called my name.

“Yeah?”

I spoke as softly as I could. He faced me with complicated emotions in his eyes. I understood what he felt, yet didn't at the same time. I could empathize with his sense of loneliness from losing his home, but Kim Suho had no hopes of returning.

“Never mind.”

“That's lame.”

I laughed to brighten the mood. Kim Suho faintly smiled.

“By the way, you're the one who suppressed her, right?”

“No, she suppressed herself.”

“What does that mean?”

I stood up and placed my hand on his shoulder.

“It means she underestimated me.”

“...”

Kim Suho looked up at me. He had several charms like his bright and reliable personality, but he seemed quite melancholy now.

“I'm leaving. I don't know who she is to you, but don't feel so down.”

“I'm not down.”

Kim Suho bashfully lied. I ruffled his hair.

“A-Ah! W-What are you doing?”

“I'm leaving for real now.”

“What? Hey!”

Kim Suho glared at me with his hair puffed up like a lamb. I returned to the hotel.

Yoo Yeonha deeply contemplated in a 2 person luxury hotel room.

“I couldn’t tell him.”

She murmured to herself. She had resolved to tell Kim Hajin the truth, but missed her chance while hesitating.

— You don’t have to say it.

Yoo Yeonha still recalled his words. However, he didn’t know what she would confess. Even without his words, Yoo Yeonha felt like she wouldn’t have confessed. She feared he would point his gun at her when he found out the truth. Her first ally would become her greatest threat. It brought her fear and sadness.

“Ah, that felt great.”

Chae Nayun came out of the shower and interrupted her somber thoughts. Yoo Yeonha looked at her putting on her underwear. Then she asked, “Does it hurt anywhere?”

“Huh? Oh, it’s fine. The emergency treatment went well.”

Her internal injuries quickly healed thanks to the immediate consumption of a potion and her body’s natural toughness.

“Whew.”

Chae Nayun sat on the edge of the bed with nothing but her underwear. It featured a cartoon cat, but she didn’t look childish with her excellent figure. Chae Nayun picked up her smartwatch instead of putting on some clothes. She typed on the holographic keyboard as Yoo Yeonha asked her.

“What are you doing?”

“Hm? Oh, I’m texting Kim Hajin. I thought I should thank him.”

“...”

Yoo Yeonha silently watched her. Chae Nayun respected her grandfather, Chae Joochul, but he had played an even greater role than Yoo Jinwoong in Kim Hajin’s suffering. Of course, Chae Joochul wouldn’t have shown his ugliness to his granddaughter. However, the longer Chae Joochul remained a good grandfather, the more Chae Nayun would feel betrayed when she learned the truth.

Should I tell her about Kim Hajin’s past? That the one who killed Kim Hajin’s parents and forced him to live in solitude was Chae Joochul, who she admired most. Or should I just remain silent?

Yoo Yeonha spoke her name.

“Nayun.”

“Yeah?”

Chae Nayun didn’t know anything about Kim Hajin’s tangled past. If possible, Yoo Yeonha wanted to keep it that way. Chae Nayun would undoubtedly feel worse than Yoo Yeonha since she knew the pain of losing one’s family.

“Who was that person?”

“What do you mean?”

“The person who attacked you.”

“Oh, I don’t know.”

“You didn’t tell the police?”

“Yeah, I was too lazy.”

Chae Nayun didn't tell the police since she feared her father would find out and cause a mess. Tap, tap, tap. Her eyes and fingers only focused on the smartwatch screen. Yoo Yeonha stared at her before adding.

“Be nice.”

“Hm?”

“Be nice when you text him. Don't be snarky.”

“What?”

“Just listen to me so you won't regret it later.”

“What? Do you have a screw loose?”

Chae Nayun looked dumbfoundedly at her before crawling into the bed. Then she frowned at the reply from Kim Hajin.

[Sleep.]

I returned to Cube two days later at 11:00 A.M. with Evandel and Hayang. Cube's dorm felt cramped now compared to the presidential suite and Seoul apartment we enjoyed over the weekend. Thankfully, I would be assigned a bigger room next year. I could always move out and commute to school.

“Chicken, chicken, chicken...”

Evandel and Hayang anxiously waited at the kitchen table as I brought 3 roasted chickens.

“Since Hayang only eats legs and wings...”

Evandel gave Hayang two chicken legs and wings. She finally learned how to share after fighting for a long time. I watched them eat with a smile before heading to the bedroom and turning on my laptop.

[You have obtained 433 SP!] [Your luck has been applied. You have received a 22% bonus in SP!]

I gained quite a bit of SP from last night's incident. The bonus itself was close to 100 SP. It was time to use it now.

"Mmm..."

I typed in a physique I recently came up with.

[Medicinal Memory Physique]

It seemed like I would consume a lot of medicine from now on, so I thought of a physique to make the effects more permanent.

Medicinal Memory — Your body will memorize a portion of medicinal effects when consuming medicine with the same properties. The amount will depend on your luck. Reproduction — Your body will naturally produce medicinal effects that are 100% memorized. The amount will depend on your luck. — Reproduced medicinal effects will have different cooldowns depending on their effects. Adaptation & Growth — The medicinal effect will increase with repeated consumption and reproduction. The amount and frequency will depend on your luck.

[1000 SP will be consumed. Would you like to save?]

"Damn."

As expected, modifications that permanently increased my stats were extremely expensive. However, it was also worth it. I had more than enough SP thanks to my fights with Asura and Jin Sahyuk.

[The setting has been changed.] [Your luck has been applied. Medicinal Memory Physique's overall functionality has improved!]

"Hm."

I tried eating a ginseng pill.

[Your strength, vitality, stamina, and magic power stats will slowly increase.] [Your body has remembered 4% of the ginseng pill's medicinal effects.]

I would only need to consume 25 pills to reproduce it if the increase was linear.

“That’s not bad at—”

My upper arm suddenly ached. I had been expecting the pain. I quickly took off my shirt and looked at my arm. A new crescent line began to form above the cross-shaped stigma. I clenched my teeth since Evandel and Hayang were outside. I didn’t want them to worry. My consciousness slowly faded from the burning sensation.

“Huk!”

I opened my eyes at 11 A.M on Sunday. I promised to meet Rachel today.

“Shit, I’m screwed.”

I went to the living room and found Evandel and Hayang asleep. First, I checked my smartwatch.

[Missed call – 6:34 A.M.]

I had one missed call this morning. Could it be...?

“Argh.”

My arm still hurt, but I quickly raced to the place where we promised to meet. I arrived in five minutes and looked for Rachel from a nearby bush.

“...”

As expected, she had been waiting for me. She sat next to a street cat to pass the time and stroked its back as she looked at the sky. Her mouth slowly moved. One, two, three... it seemed like she was counting the stars.

I felt bad, but checked her wrist for the bracelet first. I couldn't help her without it. Thankfully, she wore it. I approached her as I scratched my head.

“Um... Rachel?”

She silently dropped her head when she saw me. She didn't seem too angry for someone who waited five hours without hearing back. However, her lips faintly protruded and her sharp eyes told me she was upset. I couldn't blame her.

“Sorry, I'm late. Something came up.”

I slowly walked up to her. She greeted me with a faint smile.

“It looks like you just woke up.”

Rachel glanced at my hair. I touched it. Indeed, it puffed up like I just got out of bed.

“That's okay. I just arrived too.”

“Eh? Ah... cough, sorry.”

She definitely sounded upset. I awkwardly stretched my arms.

“I'll cut straight to the chase since I came late. Um, you wanted to learn about barrier, right?”

She nodded.

“Before I teach you barrier... why don't you try following my training method first?”

“Huh?”

“You know, people have different training methods. One of the best ways to overcome a slump is to change your training method. The method I use might be suitable for you too.”

Rachel doubtfully looked at me from my hurried tone.

“Why don’t we take it slow...”

“No, no, just sit like you’re meditating.”

Rachel tilted her head.

“Just sit like me.”

“Ah, yes.”

Rachel sat cross-legged on the ground.

“Next, spread your magic power throughout your body. This is called breaking through acupoints.”

I muttered some words I recalled from martial art novels. Thankfully, Rachel concentrated on controlling her magic power without complaint. A faint blue glow surrounded her body.

“Good, just keep going.”

I encouraged her, so she wouldn’t grow suspicious.

“Next, try moving all that magic power to your left wrist. We’re going to circulate it through your body afterward.”

This useless training method would become the greatest once her magic power activated the bracelet.

Pssssh. The bracelet began to shake from the vibration of magic power. However, the butterfly seedling’s dust showed no signs of releasing. Meanwhile, Rachel’s face turned red like a tomato.

“Harder, like you want to break that bracelet on your wrist.”

Rachel’s trembling grew stronger. Her magic power became so fierce until... Snap! The bracelet broke in half and the butterfly seedling’s dust finally poured out.

Chapter 118

What Must Be Done (1)

The butterfly seedling's dust scattered from the broken bracelet and seeped into Rachel's magic power. She didn't notice any changes as she focused on circulating her magic power.

"Now, with your right wrist..."

I made her circulate magic power throughout her entire body to avoid any suspicions. From the left wrist to the right, her ankles, then her forehead. Soon, Rachel was covered in sweat.

"Haa, haa."

"It's hard for everyone on their first try."

I couldn't help but inwardly laugh at coaching someone with a 9-9.5 potential. This breathing exercise shouldn't be completely meaningless. After all, Kim Suho did it every morning.

"Alright, next..."

The butterfly seedling's dust should've successfully seeped into her body. She only needed to exercise her magic power to reveal its effects.

"Try standing up."

Rachel stood up enthusiastically, thinking it was time for the real thing.

"We'll set barrier aside for now."

She lost all enthusiasm at my words and tilted her head.

“Rachel, we’ve known each other for 8 months now. We became pretty close for a semester because of team challenges, right?”

“Yes? Ah, yes, you’re right.”

“Take it with a grain of salt, but I’ve been watching you in battle. Have you ever taken an elemental affinity test?”

“Elemental affinity?”

“Yes, I’m quite good at discerning talent. I guess you could say I have sharp senses. You know that I helped Chae Nayun too, right?”

Chae Nayun was a hot topic among Cube's community and several guilds. She switched from a bow to a sword and showed immediate results.

“Yes, I took one when I was young and the results came out positive. How did you...”

She wondered how I knew.

“Something feels different about your magic power. Its property slightly changes depending on your environment.”

I had created this trait for Rachel. She seemed to know as her eyes widened.

“Ah, you’re right! I’ve felt it too, but my elemental affinity hasn’t increased since I was 10, so I gave up on it.”

People of this world didn’t know much about elementals and how to cultivate one’s elemental affinity. Even the other world where Kim Suho came from only had a few elementalists.

The butterfly seedling’s dust would serve as a pathway to connect Rachel with elementals. Furthermore, I already knew the training method she developed with Kim Suho in the original story.

“Then let’s start from the beginning. You might’ve used the wrong training method.”

“...”

Rachel looked doubtful. She must be annoyed since she came to learn barrier.

“Your current problem isn’t barrier. Didn’t you say you fell into a slump? You have to think about overcoming that slump instead. Learning barrier is putting the cart before the horse.”

“Ah, I see. You’re right.”

I surprisingly convinced her. She seemed like the type to easily change her mind.

“Try to resonate your magic power with the grass. Like you’re about to talk... or rather, share your magic power with it.”

“Yes, I’ll give it a try.”

The most important aspect of wielding elementals was resonating with nature. Rachel closed her eyes and followed my instructions. Time passed... 3 minutes, 5 minutes, 10 minutes. Rachel’s body became hazy, but no changes occurred. I thought it had failed when something finally happened.

“Oh!”

The grass began to emit shining particles. Only a few particles faintly glowed, but that undoubtedly confirmed Rachel’s ability to wield elementals. It required one’s gift to align with a certain disposition.

“Rachel. Rachel? Open your eyes.”

Rachel slowly opened her eyes.

“Un?”

She seemed uncertain until she saw the green particles floating in front of her. I smiled at her surprise.

“Well, it looks like I’ll have to accept quite a hefty lesson fee.”

Rachel looked in shock at me.

Nothing eventful happened after meeting Jin Sahyuk in Busan. This period would certainly have been skipped in a novel. I did what I had to do during this time.

First, I completed two more missions for Jeronimo Mercenary. I assassinated a djinn for one and escorted cargo for the other. Boss liked how I handled things and offer me an official contract this time.

I trained with Rachel every night for an hour. It benefitted both of us. She treated my words like holy scripture ever since I awakened her talent. She trained her elemental affinity accordingly. As for me, I trained to react more efficiently in bullet time with the help of her quick attacks.

*[Sparring with a strong opponent has increased your speed by 0.05 points!]
[Sparring with a strong opponent has increased your vitality by 0.05 points!]
[Sparring with a strong opponent has increased your stamina by 0.05 points!]*

My stats naturally increased for the first time in a while.

Time flew by and November came around. A year had passed since I came into this world. A new year would begin in a few weeks.

“This will be covered on the exam so make sure you know it.”

I sat in Phenomenon Realm Analysis II. The sky outside turned dark because of the abnormal climate even though it was only two in the afternoon. It also grew quite chilly. However, cadets acted no different than usual. They slept less to study for the upcoming exams and continued to train their bodies. Half went to the library while others worked out at the fitness center. As for me, I completely ignored the class and stared at my laptop.

[24 hours have passed since medicine consumption. All stats have increased by 0.005 points.] [You have memorized the painkiller's medicinal effects.]

[Completely Memorized Medicinal Effects]

1. Painkiller: Will increase pain resistance for 30 minutes. Reproduction Cooldown: 6 hours

2. Detox: Will cure toxins below intermediate rank. Reproduction Cooldown: 6 hours

3. Instant Amplification: Will increase your strength, stamina, speed, perception, and vitality by 2 points for 10 minutes. Reproduction Cooldown: 12 hours

[Strength 3.405 (+ 1.070)] [Stamina 3.435 (+ 1.980)] [Speed 5.140 (+ 2.685)] [Perception 5.655 (+ 2.620)] [Vitality 3.405 (+ 1.070)]

My body had memorized several medicinal properties and effects. I completely memorized the above three, which allowed me to use them whenever I wished without any side effects.

“This is as far as we’ll go. You’ll have free study periods starting next week. Focus on reviewing everything from this semester.”

The professor ended the class with a closing statement. I packed my stuff and stood up to leave since I had an appointment outside of Cube today.

“Hey, Kim Hajin.”

I turned around at the nasal voice. Chae Nayun stood in front of me with a red nose.

“Why is your nose red?”

“I caught a cold.”

Her nasal voice reminded me of a TV program. A child asked if heroes could catch colds. The answer was yes. Heroes could still catch a cold, but it only lasted a day at most. It meant that they had trained hard. A huge change would occur in one’s internal temperature when magic power instantly left the body. This left them vulnerable to light sickness like the common cold.

“Aren’t you working too hard lately? You’ve been training at the fitness center until 3. You’re only going to hurt yourself if you overwork.”

“What, are you worried about me?”

Her brows danced up and down. I shook my head.

“Never mind. So what do you need?”

“Ah, teach me this.”

Chae Nayun handed me the homework we just received for phenomenon realm analysis. I solved the entire thing since she clearly asked me to.

“Yay! Thank you.”

Chae Nayun smiled at all the answers and put her notebook away.

“Oh right, I’ll be going to Master’s camp for winter break.”

“Master?”

“Yeah, Yoo Sihyuk.”

“Ah...”

Yoo Sihyuk’s hell training. Only Kim Suho was supposed to go this year, but it seemed he also invited Chae Nayun since she switched to a sword.

“That’s great.”

I said with a smile. Yoo Sihyuk’s camp lasted from December to early February. She would be away for 3 months. I couldn’t be more glad.

“Good luck. Try your best.”

I tried to walk past her.

“Hey, hey, by the way...”

She grabbed my sleeve and pulled it back and forth.

“Let’s go on a trip with the others before that. I won’t have fun for the rest of winter break once I leave.”

“I... don’t think I’ll have time.”

“Come on. Let’s go. I’ll pay for everything.”

She kept pulling my sleeve with a smile. However, I refused.

“I can’t go.”

“Really?”

“Yeah, I don’t have time.”

She let go of my sleeve and pouted at my same excuse from before.

“Fine. You don’t have to if you don’t want to.”

She muttered in disappointment before leaving. Kim Suho, Yi Yeonghan, and Yoo Yeonha looked at me strangely.

— Hey, Yi Yeonghan, he’s playing hard to get, right?

— No doubt about it.

I could hear them whispering.

I arrived at the field in Gangwondo 3 hours later.

“Bite!”

The giant wolf shot out of my chest and raced forward to attack a troll.

— Kieeeeeek!

The troll struggled to pull off the wolf, but Evandel’s servant was several times stronger than a low-intermediate rank troll. The troll soon collapsed.

— Auuuuu.

The wolf happily howled after its kill as I checked my smartwatch.

[The ghost wolf has absorbed the troll’s blood and acquired its low rank regenerative power.]

He acquired an ability called skin hardening from an orc 5 days ago. The ghost wolf’s absorption ability produced great results.

Recently, I focused on raising him as much as possible since he was Evandel’s first servant. Honestly, he was already stronger than me. If anybody asked, I might have to say he was Fenrir.

— Hek, hek, hek.

The ghost wolf came back panting. I couldn’t call him cute with his teeth covered in blood, but I happily stroked his back.

“Well done. Well done.”

— Grrr.

The wolf closed his eyes in satisfaction. I contacted SH Agency and told them my location. One of their employees should arrive in 5 minutes to retrieve the troll's corpse. I sat on the wolf's back as I waited and looked around SH Agency's homepage.

“Wow, looks like they'll go public soon.”

The homepage looked much better than before. They had 23 contracted hunters now, including a hero named Jin Jangho. Park Soohyuk's business expanded quicker than expected. I couldn't help but smile at our relationship and how I owned 4% of this future giant's stock. I received a message while reveling in satisfaction.

[Where are you?]

It came from Yoo Yeonha.

[I'll go to you. Where are you?]

[No, I'll go.]

[I'm in the field at Gangwondo.]

[Just wait 30 minutes.]

“Hmm.”

Yoo Yeonha had asked to meet today. She probably succeeded in refining Misteltein's leaf into bullets.

The wolf continued to hunt for the next 30 minutes as I met Yoo Yeonha at the entrance.

She waved as I approached.

“Is it about the leaf?”

“Yes, our research showed it was extraordinary. We could hardly believe a single leaf had as much magic power as an artifact. Sadly, we couldn’t figure out its origin.”

“It must’ve been difficult to refine.”

“It cost around 100 million won considering all expenses.”

Yoo Yeonha nodded as she handed me a suitcase. I took it without restraint.

“Five bullets. We had enough leftovers for three-tenths of a bullet, but used it for research as you suggested.”

“Thanks.”

Yoo Yeonha bit her lips at my praise.

“Don’t thank me.”

“Then what, should I sue you or something?”

“No, I’m just sorry. Anyways, was it okay to use such a precious leaf for bullets?”

“Yeah, I told you. These are just what I’ve been looking for.”

All five bullets were made for my Desert Eagle. Their size didn’t matter since I could just modify them.

“Please, I’m not that gullible. Those bullets also have medicinal effects. I can’t believe you’ll actually use them.”

“You could’ve given me the medicine later...”

Yoo Yeonha interrupted me.

“We already set up our potion brewing chain with cultivated ginseng. They’re only novices, but we contracted three ginseng diggers.”

Yoo Yeonha smiled, but it lacked sincerity and she seemed a bit sad.

“Well, that’s good. Are there any other problems?”

I gripped an envelope in my pocket. It contained a list of all the traitors related to the Yoo Yeonha Scandal along with their misdeeds. It cost me 150 SP to obtain from hacking. I tried to give it to her, but she cut me off.

“No, there’s none.”

“Eh?”

None? Did the Yoo Yeonha Scandal not happen yet? I let go of the envelope in my pocket.

“I have some things to take care of, so I’ll be leaving. Feel free to ask whenever you need anything. I’ll do my best.”

She couldn’t be more reliable. It felt quite convenient to have the future queen of Seoul as my ally.

“Oh, I’m about to head out too. Do you want to grab lunch?”

“No, I have some things to do.”

Yoo Yeonha coldly turned away.

“Rice soup or hamburger.”

I only said 4 words.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha flinched before leering at me.

“I told you, I don’t like those things.”

She grumbled before quickly disappearing into a limousine. I didn’t doubt she headed towards a McDonald’s or rice soup restaurant. I opened the suitcase after she left.

Click—

Five bullets lined up on the luxurious velvet. I could see my expressionless face on the bullets’ sleek surface.

[Refined Misteltein Bullet] [Partial Divine Grade] [Null attribute] A.44 Macon platinum bullet with pure magic power and compressed remnants of Misteltein. It contains a portion of god-slaying powers. [Attack Power: 9/10]

An attack power of 9 would undoubtedly be enough. I closed the suitcase. I couldn’t tell my expression from the black surface. All the preparations were complete. It was time to make the request.

Chapter 119

What Must Be Done (2)

I sent Boss a message last Friday night that I wanted to negotiate. Boss went silent for a week until today. Her message contained a coordinate to an intermediate rank danger zone on the outskirts of Gyeonggido.

“Huh?”

I spotted an abandoned house in the middle of a forest when I arrived. It looked like the houses that often appeared in horror movies with faded bricks covered in moss and vines. I went inside as my footsteps echoed in the darkness. Goosebumps rose on my skin every time a chilly wind blew.

“Hello?”

Something large dropped from the ceiling the moment I spoke. Evandel’s ghost wolf shot out from my chest as I grasped the situation.

“A bat?”

Fenrir crushed the flying nightmare. Er, wait. I was Fenrir.

— Krrrr! Krrrr!

— Guaaaa!

The giant bat struggled until its neck twisted like a stringless puppet. The flying nightmare should’ve been an intermediate rank, grade 6 monster.

“I guess I’ll leave close combat to him.”

I could shoot from long range as the wolf took care of anything that approached. It seemed like the perfect combination.

Kiiiik—

The door behind me opened as small footsteps resounded. I turned around and saw Boss. She looked back and forth between the dead bat and the wolf.

“Is that your pet?”

“Yes? Ah, yes, something like that.”

Boss pointed at the table, which was the only furniture. I sat with the wolf next to me. Then I asked Boss.

“Did you leave the bat here on purpose?”

“No, many monsters live around here. It must’ve entered on its own. Anyways, I heard you wanted to negotiate?”

“Yes.”

“Let’s hear it. What condition didn’t you like?”

Boss took out the official mercenary contract. It offered a great salary, which mercenaries rarely received. However, what I wanted couldn’t be included in any contract.

“I liked the conditions.”

“Then what?”

“I’d like to make a request.”

Boss tilted her head. I told her what must be done.

“I need you to help me kill someone.”

Silence descended. I couldn't even hear Boss' breathing. I had done my research and concluded that it was impossible to kill Chae Jinyoon alone. Daehyun Hospital's VIP ward couldn't be underestimated. Each room resembled a fortress that could withstand a full-powered attack from high-intermediate rank heroes. Three powerful mercenaries protected Chae Jinyoon's room in shifts. Still, the security had lessened compared to the beginning. A high-intermediate rank hero used to guard him. Regardless, I had no way of penetrating their defense. My identity would certainly be discovered. The Chae clan could easily use Yoo Jinhyuk and I couldn't avoid his gift.

I knew it was selfish, but I still wanted to remain with the few comrades I made.

“You want to... kill someone?”

“Yes.”

I gave Boss an envelope with a stiff expression. Boss stared at it for a moment before grabbing it with a sigh. Then she opened it as pictures and details of Chae Jinyoon fell out. Boss' expression immediately changed. She looked at me with wide eyes.

“Is there a specific reason?”

I nodded.

“What is it?”

“Mmm... for the sake of world peace.”

I told her the truth, but Boss made a sullen face. I didn't have a personal grudge against him.

“...”

Boss remained silent. Chae Jinyoon was undoubtedly a difficult target. To be more precise, the Chae clan posed a problem.

“I’ll be the one to kill him. You just have to create the opportunity.”

I didn’t plan on asking anyone else to do the deed. I added a secret word as she remained silent.

“Boss.”

I purposely avoided calling her Boss for this day. Her eyebrows twitched. She tried to maintain an imposing attitude, but I could see the corner of her lips curling.

The group that went to the past, except for Kim Hajin, met at a coffee shop. Yoo Yeonha was the only one actually studying for the final exams. Even Kim Suho busily texted on his smartwatch. Chae Nayun stared at him suspiciously.

“Kim Suho, you’re texting Seung-Ah unni, aren’t you?”

“Huh?”

“I knew it. That’s why she kept asking about you.”

Kim Suho flinched.

“Uh... we’re just talking normally.”

Yoo Yeonha interrupted, “Isn’t that even stranger? A cadet casually talking with a guild’s vice-leader? She’s currently the most popular hero too.”

“Eh? Ah, no, it’s not like that...”

Kim Suho began to ramble. Luckily for him, the subject quickly changed as Yi Yeonghan teased Chae Nayun.

“Why are you so quiet? Are you thinking about Kim Hajin?”

“Why would Chae Nayun be thinking about that idiot?” Shin Jonghak reacted strongly as Yoo Yeonha frowned at his language.

“Jonghak, don’t call him an idiot. He’s rank 1 in theory.”

“Right, Jonghak. Didn’t you ask him for help yesterday?”

“What? Don’t make things up, Kim Suho. Have you finally gone crazy?”

“I saw you ordering Kim Horak to ask for you.”

Kim Suho remembered seeing Shin Jonghak awkwardly hand his notebook to Kim Horak. Then Kim Horak went to Kim Hajin with it.

“That was just him asking what he didn’t understand.”

“What nonsense is that...”

“Shut up! Stop being so loud. I’m tired and annoyed from my hellish training.”

Chae Nayun quickly suppressed them. Yoo Yeonha smiled bitterly and closed her textbook. No one seemed interested in studying.

“So, all three of you are attending Yoo Sihyuk’s camp? You’ll be a league above the rest once you finish.”

“Yeah, we’ll return in early March.”

“Hm... then when should we go on our trip?”

The best part about being a student was going on trips with friends. Chae Nayun’s mood lightened after Yoo Yeonha brought it up.

“A week after finals on December 17.”

“Oh, that day doesn’t work for me. I have plans with Hajin.”

“What?” Chae Nayun’s eyes widened at Kim Suho’s unexpected words.
“W-W-What plans?”

“Uh, we’re going...”

Kim Suho paused. Kim Hajin had discovered a dungeon last week and invited him. Kim Suho felt that he shouldn’t reveal it to others.

“...We’re going on a drive together.”

“A drive?”

“Uh, yeah. I’ve been wanting to ride his bike.”

“Pft, what a fitting duo.”

Shin Jonghak sneered while Chae Nayun banged her head against the back of a couch.

“Ha, haha, I can’t believe this. Ha, haha.”

Chae Nayun suddenly shot up after repeating this woodpecker-like motion.

“Hey, I’m leaving first.”

“Where are you going?” Kim Suho asked.

“Training. I’m going to train. Don’t follow me, Shin Jonghak.”

“Cough.”

Shin Jonghak sat back down.

Koong, koong. Chae Nayun angrily stomped away for no reason.

I met with Rachel at 9 P.M. after meeting with Boss. We trained one-on-one like usual.

“By the way, why did you ask me to help you with barrier? I’m only rank 334.”

I suddenly grew curious and asked. Rachel looked at me before speaking with a sheepish smile.

“I’m not that stupid. I already know you’re staying at that rank on purpose.”

“Yes? Ah, well...”

I shrugged at her high evaluation of me. She wasn’t wrong. I could easily climb to rank 30 if I fully utilized stigma’s magic power. Any higher would be doubtful because of my stats. I gained 0.7 from aether, 0.3 from the under armor, and 0.1 from my ghost wolf. My stats still weren’t great despite the 1.1 bonus from items.

“Let’s start. Try activating barrier.”

Rachel nodded with a determined look. She stood up straight and summoned a barrier. It seemed a bit jagged, but still covered her upper body.

“I’ll try attacking now.”

I held up my cadet handgun and aimed at her barrier. I could easily kill a low-intermediate rank monster with it, but it shouldn’t penetrate her barrier.

“Cover yourself with qi reinforcement just in case.”

“Yes!” Rachel enthusiastically replied and covered herself with qi reinforcement. She felt really passionate about learning.

“Try to stop my bullets with that barrier.”

“...?”

She seemed a bit confused and probably thought the barrier would defend on its own.

“Using this barrier?”

“Yep, you’ll know what I mean. It’ll be quite difficult.”

“...”

Rachel curled her body behind the barrier. I grinned and aimed at her.

“I’m shooting.”

I fired. The bullet oddly curved underneath her barrier and struck her arm.

“Uuu!”

Rachel shook at the sudden impact. Then she rubbed her arm. It should only sting since she had a qi reinforcement. I slightly provoked her.

“You’ll need to practice for at least three years if you want to block my bullets.”

“...”

Rachel’s eyes flared with pride. “I, I want to try again.”

“Of course.”

Rachel decided to enlarge her barrier to deal with my bullets. I aimed at the opening with a smile and fired at her feet. Tang.

“Auu! Ow!”

Her qi reinforcement must've been weaker there as she fell to the ground and held her foot. She glared at me with tearful eyes.

"T-That was mean!"

"What do you mean? That was your fault. Why block a bullet with just a barrier?"

"Eh?"

"Try asking the grass or the wind."

I remembered a scene I once described. A breathtaking scene from the future when Rachel asked her elementals to cast hundreds of barriers. She saved thousands of lives and finally overcame her trauma.

"..."

Of course, that wouldn't happen until later. The 17 year old Rachel could only glare at the grass.

Buzz—

My smartwatch suddenly rang. I had added this alarm to notify me of changes concerning myself.

[24 hours have passed since consuming a ginseng pill. All stats have increased by 0.0012 points.] [The medicinal effect, physical body reinforcement, has been 100% memorized.]

4. Physical Body Reinforcement: Will increase all stats by 0.001-0.02 points. (The increase will depend on your luck. Your physical stats will not affect it in any way.) Reproduction Cooldown: 24 hours.

I finally obtained this medicinal effect after eating Yoo Yeonha's ginseng pill every day. The effect permanently increased its user's stats by 0.001-0.02 points, but its upper limit could only be obtained by children or the elderly. I could only receive a max of 0.0015 points. My stats would continue to increase with this new effect. A year would give me 0.657 points if I gained 0.0018 points per day. Ten years would give me 6.57 points.

“Mm.”

I nodded in satisfaction and raised my gun.

“Alright, let’s go aga...”

Psssh, psssh. The leaves rustled behind me. Who was it? I quickly turned around, but the person had already run away. My thousand-mile eyes could easily spot them through the forest.

“Huh?”

The familiar silhouette with brown hair was Chae Nayun.

* * *

Time flew by as the hellish finals began. I breezed through the written exams like always. Most cadets worried about the combat exams.

“Listen up. Everyone will start from an equal position for the final exam.”

Every first year gathered in Gyeonggido on December 8 for the final exam.

“The final exam will be tower climbing!”

I didn’t know much since I skipped most of it after the first semester. I suddenly regretted it.

“This is a common training program before guilds attempt to conquer a tower. Up to 1500 people can enter at a time.”

The square building in front couldn’t be called a tower. I looked at it in a daze. The 10 floors should be much bigger inside.

“This tower’s entrance is a magically engineered device similar to a portal. You'll be sent to a random location, so don't be alarmed!"

The cadets entered one by one after the instructor's explanation. I closed my eyes as I stepped through. It felt similar to a portal. I could only see darkness until my thousand-mile eyes adjusted.

"Hmm."

I found myself in a small white room with only a narrow pathway to the right. I focused my vision, but couldn't see through the walls. As expected of a tower, something seemed to hinder my gift.

"Argh, my eyes hurt."

I felt like I could peer through the walls if I added stigma's magic power, but decided to save it for later. The lights came on and signaled the start. Glowing sentences appeared on the walls.

[The 3 Commandments] [Cooperate with white to climb.] [Be wary of traps.] [Have faith.]

"I'll be damned if Lancaster or any other djinns don't appear."

I felt all too familiar with how things always panned out. Djinns wouldn't dare to act too openly, but they had already taken over about 30% of Cube. First, I took a careful look around. The room didn't seem to have anything special.

"I'll have to cross that bridge."

The pathway on the right led to a bridge. It looked like a trap with both sides completely empty, but I had no choice. I walked down the only path and arrived at the bridge. Then I carefully proceeded over it one step at a time. Shweeek— An arrow came flying with a shockwave. No, not just one. Another also came from the left and right. However, all three arrows slowed in front of me in bullet time. They felt like turtles compared to Rachel's attacks. I grabbed the two arrows from the sides and dodged the front by tilting my head. Then I chucked them forward and destroyed the crossbow.

“Ahahaha!”

I easily cleared the first trap and laughed imposingly. However...
Doosh— I heard the sound of something opening.

“W-What!?”

The bridge beneath me suddenly dropped.

Chapter 120

What Must Be Done (3)

KOONG! I landed with a thud, but didn't suffer any injuries thanks to aether covering my back. I quickly got up and looked around. It seemed like an empty cave complex. Only the rocks on the ground seemed noteworthy.

"I'm not familiar with any tower like this."

Honestly, I had only carefully designed one tower called the Tower of Wish, which was the largest one in history. It could be considered an alternate world. I planned to go there in the future. I had to go, but that was for another time.

"What am I supposed to do now?"

"Uwoooah!"

A scream rang out from above as someone else fell. Was it a coincidence? Chae Nayun landed on the ground. Or were stupid people more likely to fall for the trap? That would mean I was stupid too.

"Auuu..."

Chae Nayun rubbed her back and seemed surprised when she saw me.

"Well, well, well, if it isn't Mr. Kim."

She narrowed her eyes and said some strange words.

"Did you hurt your head?" I reached out a hand. She hesitated, but soon grabbed it and stood up. Then she dusted herself off and asked, "Where are we?"

“How would I know? Rather, how did you fall?”

“Well, a crossbow shot an arrow at me. The floor suddenly collapsed after I destroyed it.”

Come to think of it, the crossbow was white. One of the three commandments said to [Cooperate with white]. How were we supposed to cooperate with a crossbow that tried to kill us?

“Wait a minute.”

I widened my eyes and looked forward. My thousand-mile eyes quickly expanded and I spotted a group of dwarves around a kilometer past the cave complex. They stood in front of a stone door and pulled on a rope tied to it.

“I found the way. Follow me.”

I gestured at Chae Nayun and proceeded forward. She looked at me somewhat grumpily before following.

“Where are we going?”

“There are NPCs ahead.”

“NPCs?”

A tower’s magic power could create beings that lived inside it. These existences were officially called tower residents, but people liked to call them NPCs like in a game.

“This tower has NPCs?”

“I don’t see why not.”

Even an artificial tower was mystical. We ran for about 5 minutes until we spotted the dwarves.

“Wow, your eyesight is freak... amazing.”

“Just say freakish.”

I didn't know why she changed the way she talked.

“W-What do you mean? I'm always like this.”

Chae Nayun dodged my eyes as she flipped her hair. I ignored her and observed the NPCs. They all wore the same green clothes, but nothing else stood out.

“Ah! Who is it!?”

One of the NPCs noticed us. The others also looked over.

“They must be here to help us!”

“Oh, venerable giants! Please open this door for us!” the dwarves pleaded.

“What do we do?”

“Hold on.”

One of the three commandments said to [Have faith]. I didn't know what that meant, but I couldn't be careless.

“What are your names?”

“I'm One!”

“I'm Seven!”

“I'm Twelve!”

“Never mind then.”

I counted them off myself. One, two, three... seven. I didn't know if we could trust them.

“Is there anyone else?”

“We have other brothers!”

“How many?”

“100!”

White^[1]? The stupid wordplay made them more trustworthy.

“Fine, we’ll help you.” I looked at Chae Nayun and signaled her. She grabbed the rope tied to the stone door.

“I just have to pull this?”

“Yes! But it’ll be difficult alone!”

“You hear that?”

I also grabbed the rope. The stone door easily opened when we pulled.

The problem came from within. A giant praying mantis jumped out as soon as it opened. It seemed like a fairly high ranked insect monster from its black carapace. It swung its front legs and charged at us. However, Chae Nayun slashed with her sword before it could approach. Her magic power cleanly cut its shoulder. Then she kicked the shrieking mantis in the abdomen and slashed again as it flew back. Swish— A crescent wave of magic power plowed through the ground and obliterated it.

Chae Nayun closed her eyes and sheathed her sword as her short hair fluttered in the wind. I blinked several times. She had grown crazy strong.

“Thank you, thank you!”

The dwarfs bowed and walked through. We should probably enter as well.

“Let’s go.”

“Take the lead, Mr. Kim.”

“...Hm.”

We walked through the stone door and instantly found ourselves in a forest. Then the dwarves continued leading us to their town.

“Are towers normally like this?”

“Towers have intelligence, so I’m sure they can change their structures.”

Towers had intelligence exceeding humans according to my settings. However, their intelligence didn’t exist for survival, but another reason.

“Let’s follow those NPCs. It looks like the town has other cadets.”

“Sure, Mr. Kim.”

“...Sigh.”

We followed the NPCs into town. They had all sorts of facilities like inns, restaurants, and weapon shops. Other cadets had also arrived.

“Oh, it’s Nayun!” one of the cadets shouted.

“Nayun!”

It was the high rank supporter, Yi Jiyoona.

“Yi Jiyoona? What is this place? How do we climb up?”

Yi Jiyoona pointed at the noticeboard in front of the town’s community hall.

“Take a look at that first.”

I began to read it as Chae Nayun joined me.

[Stage – Dwarven Town] [Enemies are terrorizing the dwarves who seek your assistance.] [Please leave your thumbprint here if you would like to join the war effort.] [You will be awarded 25 points for every enemy invasion you stop.] [100 points are required to proceed to the next stage.] [You will receive bonus points based on your contributions.]

Yi Jiyeon spoke once we finished reading. “Hurry and sign up. It’s the only way to earn points.”

We promptly left our thumbprints on the noticeboard.

“Enemies!”

A dwarf on a watchtower suddenly shouted. I turned in the direction he pointed and saw goblin warriors marching with archers in the middle and magicians in the back. A group of around 300 goblins approached.

“Hey! Gather up!” Chae Nayun quickly adapted to the situation and shouted. All the cadets soon gathered around her. We had 27 in total with 17 warriors, 8 supporters, and 2 sharpshooters. Chae Nayun didn’t know what to say after calling everyone over. I nudged her shoulder.

“Everyone’s here, Ms. Chae. What should we do?”

“Um... argh, who cares? They’re just goblins. Let’s just fight.”

“...”

A brief silence descended.

“Then I’ll snipe the goblin magicians.”

“Huh? Oh, sure.”

I looked around for high ground. The town had a watch tower, but I wanted somewhere higher. Thankfully, I spotted a 40 meter tree nearby. I climbed up using parkour and sat on a large branch. I took out the cadet handgun and aimed at the goblin magicians in the distance.

“Scan.”

The 40% buff wasn’t bad. The cadet handgun couldn’t compare to the Desert Eagle, but goblins had especially weak defenses. They should instantly die from headshots.

— Kieeeeeek!

A goblin raised its staff and howled. Was that the leader? I fired at the howling goblin. My bullet drew a clear arc and pierced its head. I fired at the other magicians after confirming the leader’s death.

Each bullet killed a goblin magician until none remained.

“Nice, Mr. Kim! Let’s go, everyone!”

Our warriors charged forward at Chae Nayun’s command.

* * *

This place seemed even more real as the sun set after we finished fighting. Chae Nayun and I walked into the town’s restaurant and wondered if this was really a tower.

“So, Ms. Chae, what are you going to eat?”

“Just fruit juice. By the way, why are you calling me that? It’s kind of annoying.”

“You started it.”

“That doesn’t mean you can do it.”

I had no clue what she meant, so I just ignored her. I looked around the restaurant before turning to her. She admired the sunset with a smile. I sighed with a heavy heart and called her name.

“Hey, Chae Nayun.”

She turned to face me.

“Eh? What’s up, Mr. Kim?”

“...How’s your oppa doing?”

Chae Nayun made a vague expression. “What, you’re finally worried about him?”

“No, I’m just wondering. It’s probably the same for everyone else.”

“Heh, don’t lie. I know you were the first to arrive at the hospital. Yeonha told me.”

“...”

I stared at her. Honestly, I wanted to ask how she would feel if someone killed him. However, that shouldn’t be asked as long as someone was still human.

“By the way, Mr. Kim...”

Chae Nayun changed the subject and wriggled her fingers. “Was it, um, last week?”

She stuttered and looked at the ground. “What were you, um, doing with Rachel? At night.”

Was she calling me Mr. Kim because of that? They were rivals.

I briefly replied, “Training.”

“Oh, why are you training so late?”

She stuck out her lips. I was more curious about Chae Jinyoon's condition. Would Boss help me?

“Also, I heard you're going on a drive with Kim Suho.”

Chae Nayun sure had a lot to say.

“I like motorcycles more than Kim Suho.”

“No, that's...”

“Let's go on a trip. I'll pay for all the expenses.”

“No, I can't.”

“Why? Tell me why you don't have time. I'll match my schedule to yours.”

I inwardly laughed at her tantrum.

Two nights passed since the final combat exam. We spent the first day killing goblins, and the next killing trolls and yetis. Three attacks took place over two days. We successfully defended against all of them and obtained 75 points. The bonus points would be given out once we defended against all four invasions.

“Wow, I guess they saved the best for last.”

The third day finally arrived. As expected, a boss monster appeared.

“Uaaak! It's the black ogre!”

The dwarf on the watchtower ran away screaming. A few cadets turned pale at its mountain-sized appearance.

“For real?”

“This has to be a prank, right?”

I carefully observed the black ogre. Even the weakest black ogre was an intermediate rank, grade 3 monster. It had great endurance and would serve as the perfect target to test my 3 streaks of stigma. I tapped Chae Nayun as she looked at the giant ogre.

“Let’s do it like usual. I’ll support from the back while everyone attacks.”

“Wouldn’t bullets just... Eh? You’re using a bow?”

Chae Nayun tilted her head. I bought one from Cube just in case. The cadet handgun was too weak. I also wanted to raise my rank to 100. Who knows? Maybe djinns had sent that ogre.

“You’re going to use magic arrows?”

“Yeah, I can’t use a gun forever. Alright, I’m going ahead.”

“Ah, hey, wait!”

I climbed the usual tree and looked down at the black ogre. It didn’t seem as big from this height. I calmly aimed and drew the bowstring. Then I imagined an arrow. It couldn’t be just a normal arrow. The tip had to be jagged for more power. It had to be perfectly balanced like a spear. I should be able to use it as a weapon by itself.

Ssss—

Stigma’s magic power sucked in the surrounding air. It continued to condense until it formed the exact arrow I imagined. I infused the light attribute into it as well. This single arrow cost almost all 3 streaks of stigma. Of course, that meant its destructive power was unimaginable.

I pulled the bowstring with all my strength. The light from it swirled like a tornado and only grew brighter. I released it after taking a short breath. The arrow shot forward like a beam of light. The black ogre seemed to have noticed as it raised its hand to block. However, an explosion erupted the moment its hand touched. The blinding light burned its flesh.

— Guooooo!

Its arm burned white as it screamed. It could no longer fight against over a dozen warriors with just a single arm. Not to mention, Yi Jiyeon had cast several buffs on Chae Nayun.

“Wow.”

Chae Nayun blankly stared at the black ogre instead of charging in.

1. 100 is “baek,” which is also white. 🤔

Chapter 121

What Must Be Done (4)

I took away the arm of a peak intermediate rank monster with an arrow that cost 3 streaks of stigma. It caused a decent explosion, but I didn't have the energy to watch the outcome. Drowsiness flooded my brain as I fell from the tree.

“Ah.”

I looked at the battlefield and saw a sword of magic power shooting up. Chae Nayun's greatsword extended to half the length of the black ogre's arm. The ogre staggered as countless attacks from every cadet poured in.

The recoil from stigma seemed to increase as I gained more streaks. My body couldn't withstand the magic power.

“Argh.”

I felt dizzy and closed my eyes. Boom, boom, boom. The battle grew fiercer, but the sounds slowly faded. I eventually gave in to the drowsiness.

Chae Nayun stood right in front of me when I opened my eyes. I could see her soft skin and curious expression. Her otherworldly beauty surprised me.

“Ah.”

She flinched and took a step back.

“What.”

“Y-You, You’re awake?”

Why is she so surprised?

“Did you do something to me?” I asked as I rubbed my face.

“W-What do you mean? You slept so peacefully while everyone else fought!” Chae Nayun sat next to me and nervously yelled.

“Oh, sorry. I just felt tired.”

“Cough. Well, what you did was quite awesome. Was that your finishing move? You know, like an ultimate ability.”

I nodded. Using it made me fall asleep for an hour or two, so it could only be called a finishing move.

“What happened to the black ogre?”

“We killed it. Thanks to you.”

“That’s good to hear.”

A hologram suddenly popped up in front of us.

[You have cleared the stage!] [Contribution points will now be awarded. The top three contributors are as follows.] [Chae Nayun: 68 points] [Kim Hajin: 39 points] [Yi Jiyeon: 33 points] [The bottom 30% will immediately move to a lower stage.] [The top 30% will move to a higher stage after 2 hours of rest.] [The remaining 40% will be given a chance to try again.]

I finally understood this tower after seeing the alerts. Cadets would either go up, down, or stay on the same level after completing stages. Grades would be given out accordingly once the exam ended.

“Ah, so this is how it works.”

Chae Nayun also understood as she clapped her hands. Then she poked my shoulder. “Hey, team up with me.”

“Team up?”

“Yeah, there’s a party function. Look.”

She showed me her smartwatch. They gave us exam watches like the last final exam. I thought it could only tell time at first, but it now had this party function.

“The heck.”

“Let’s team up.”

I looked at Chae Nayun and dodged her sparkling gaze. She grabbed my sleeve. “I want to team up with you.”

“Let me go.”

“Come on. Let’s team up. Please?”

She tried to act cute by pulling my sleeve back and forth. I could feel my brain shaking.

“Hey, wait. Let go. I’m going to puke.”

“I’ll let you go if you agree. Hurry up.” She shook me with enough force to rip my shirt. I nodded without a choice.

“Okay, okay.”

Chae Nayun didn’t stop until we officially partied up.

I went through two more stages with Chae Nayun. We protected an NPC from monsters in a forest and fought against other cadets or giant monsters in a colosseum. Honestly, Chae Nayun carried me with her overwhelming skill.

She specialized in prolonged fights. Not even Kim Suho could match her recovery with her immense magic power capacity. Naturally, she shined in stamina tasks like climbing a tower.

Of course, our grades would be decided individually even though she carried me. I racked up points whenever I could and constantly stayed in the top 30% of every stage.

[This is the final stage.]

Eventually, we reached the final stage in a cave. Only the top cadets made it. Chae Nayun nudged my shoulder.

“Hey, this must be the boss stage. Can you see anything in front of us?”

“Yeah, yeah.”

I widened my eyes and focused. My vision flew past until I caught sight of someone.

— Yaawn.

A girl squatted in front of a stone wall. I smiled as I spotted Rachel.

“Really?”

“Yeah, it looks like you can’t proceed alone. Let’s go.”

“Okay.”

Chae Nayun and I ran forward. Rachel shot up as she heard our footsteps. Then she took out her rapier and stood on guard.

“Rachel!” I greeted her with a shout.

“What? Rachel?”

Chae Nayun stopped running. Rachel sheathed her rapier and ran towards us.

“Hajin...?” Rachel called my name with a bright expression until she saw Chae Nayun next to me.

“Chae Nayun?”

“What, why is the princess here?”

They looked displeased at each other. I reached out and shook Rachel’s hand. Then they resumed glaring at each other like true rivals. The press would constantly compare and encourage them to fight for the next 5 years. They had the same gender, age, and also both used swords now. Naturally, hero reporters acted even more extreme than typical celebrity reporters and picked on them.

“So um, Rachel, why are you alone?”

“Huh? Ah, it said I couldn’t enter alone, so I waited for someone else.”

This final exam could pose serious harm to Rachel. Monsters above high-intermediate rank wouldn’t pop out since Lancaster didn’t have enough influence, but Rachel certainly faced more danger than any other cadet.

“That’s good to hear. Then let’s enter together.”

“Yes, follow me.”

The stone wall blocking the path suddenly revealed a corridor when Rachel touched it. She led us in as we followed along. Chae Nayun glared at us from behind. After walking for about three minutes...

“Oi, Princess.” Chae Nayun finally opened her mouth.

“You didn’t team up with anyone?”

“Yes, I was alone the whole time,” Rachel briefly replied.

“Oh, really? Teamwork should be part of the exam’s grading criteria. You’ll probably get a zero for that.”

Chae Nayun snickered to provoke her, but Rachel remained silent. Then Chae Nayun placed a hand on my shoulder.

“But we should get a perfect score.”

“What do you mean.”

“We teamed up since the first stage. Plus, I’m a warrior and you’re a sharpshooter. It’s the perfect combination.”

“Oh... well, sure.”

Rachel glanced at Chae Nayun. “It’s combination, not combination.”

“Same difference.”

Rachel suddenly clapped her hands after we walked for another 3 minutes as though she recalled something.

“Oh right, Hajin! Would you like to come to England over winter break with some of the other team members? Clancy Islet has a huge festival.”

“On Clancy Islet? Sure, that sounds great.”

I’ve been wanting to return, but couldn’t without an invitation. I felt a bit sorry for Rachel, but I wanted to make more money until the casino blacklisted me.

“Great! You can come with Hoseung, Bokgyu, and Jamer.”

Rachel smiled. Jamer. I suddenly grew curious about how Tomer was doing. Chae Nayun muttered from the side, “You’ll fall behind if you only play around.”

“...”

Rachel's eyes narrowed for a moment. Chae Nayun enjoyed such reactions and smiled triumphantly.

"Have you heard of Yoo Sihyuk, Princess? What about the Yoo Sihyuk Camp? The heirs of hero clans pay billions of won to get in. That's where I'll be going over winter break. I'll surpass you in swordsmanship soon."

"Hajin, stupid people can't comprehend what they're taught, so it's just not as efficient," Rachel retorted while pretending to talk to me.

"What? Did you just—"

"In that sense, I am a very efficient learner."

Rachel was obviously not talking to me.

"Recently, I've gotten quite close to elementals, elementals."

Rachel emphasized the word. She said it twice like how Evandel called me Hajin, Hajin.

"Elementals?"

"Yes, elementals. Elementals."

"What? What does she mean?" Chae Nayun furrowed her brows. I could see her burning with a sense of rivalry.

"Ah, my bad. That was supposed to be a secret."

Rachel proudly placed her hand over her mouth. Her cheeks puffed up like she held back from laughing. She usually didn't act like this. I guess Chae Nayun tended to make people act just as childish.

"Did a hamster enter your mouth?"

Chae Nayun mockingly murmured as we arrived at another stone wall. It opened by itself as we walked up to it.

“This is it?”

It led to a large circular room.

“Wait.”

I held up my arms to stop them since I spotted someone in the distance. He couldn't look more suspicious with a black robe covering his body.

“There's someone there.”

“Hello, cadets.”

The man approached us.

“I am Heuk Jeon, the exam overseer in charge of the final stage.”

His black pupils squirmed and his ghastly aura didn't match an overseer's. I could smell the scent of blood. Chae Nayun and Rachel also shared the same suspicion.

“Are you really an exam overseer?”

“Of course. However, I will have to pick someone to stay behind for this stage. Only two can participate at a time.”

The self-proclaimed exam overseer took out a die.

“1 and 4 for the male cadet, 2 and 5 for the short-haired cadet, and... 3 and 6 for the blonde cadet.”

Tok. The die rolled on the ground.

“You won't be able to participate if your number appears.”

It rolled a 5 as expected. Chae Nayun frowned as the overseer spoke.

“Short-haired cadet.”

“What.”

The overseer flicked his finger. Then a cage suddenly fell from above and trapped Chae Nayun.

“Ah! What’s this?”

“Stay there for now. It’ll end soon.”

“Ah! Wait! Ah, uaaaaah...”

The overseer flicked his finger again and the cage quickly shot up. Rachel nervously muttered after seeing this.

“Hajin, that person...”

“Yes, I also think he’s a djinn.”

Rachel shook her head and corrected me. “He’s from Dark Moon Society.”

“Dark Moon?”

“Yes, look at the symbol on his robe.”

It had a black goblet and a faint moon above it. Rachel clenched her teeth.

“Sorry, it’s because of me.”

“What? Ah, no...”

Was Dark Moon Society that amazing? I felt like I wrote a setting about them, but couldn’t put my finger on it.

“Now then, shall we begin?”

My thoughts didn't continue for long. Heuk Jeon unleashed his magic power as he stared at us. Koooong—! The ground rumbled as crevices appeared and slowly grew bigger.

“The test is simple.”

Dozens of daggers shot up from behind him as he emitted real killing intent.

“There is a dueling arena below.”

— You will clear the stage if you last 10 minutes there.

A heavy pressure fell on me. The ground beneath me sunk as I lost my footing.

“Ak!”

Rachel jumped and grabbed my hand. “Hajin, are you okay!”

“This...”

“It's a gravity field. Come... up... uk.”

Rachel tried to pull me up, but my body grew heavy. The pressure was undoubtedly immense since even Rachel struggled. I could hardly breathe.

— If one of you falls...

Heuk Jeon's voice echoed.

— I will kill that person.

He seriously meant it. Fear spread across Rachel's face.

— Ah, but don't worry. The gravity field will disappear once someone falls. For the record, the chance of both of you surviving for 10 minutes in that field is 0%. The gravity field will only grow stronger until even I can't withstand it, so one of you should just give up.

Indeed, it grew stronger as more of the ground broke.

“ ... ”

“ ... ”

Rachel and I exchanged glances. I finally understood his intentions. He wanted us to fight each other to survive or sacrifice ourselves. Rachel's expression turned serious.

“Hajin, don't have strange thoughts.”

“...What strange thoughts.”

Rachel held onto me with both hands. “Don't let go. Put some strength into your hand. Hurry!”

“...No.”

Unlike you, I can't let go of my own volition. I inwardly laughed as the gravity field grew unbearably strong. It pressed down on us with tens of times our weight. I found it difficult to keep my eyes open.

“Ah, ah, Hajin! Don't have any strange thoughts and come up—!”

“ ... ”

Rachel desperately screamed, but I felt like I would die if I stayed any longer. I let go of her hand.

“Ah, aah, no!”

I fell, but I felt liberated rather than heading towards death.

“Kim Hajin!”

Rachel screamed and also jumped. However, a transparent barrier appeared out of nowhere and blocked her. She slammed her fists against the barrier as she stared at me falling.

* * *

Thud.

“Argh.”

My back hit the ground. It felt like déjà vu. I didn’t suffer any injuries thanks to aether. However, the situation changed this time. I quickly shot up after spotting the self-proclaimed overseer.

“You came as expected.”

He should be from Dark Moon Society according to Rachel. I couldn’t remember much about this organization, but he was on the same level as an intermediate rank hero. I felt my heart beating. My bad feeling at the beginning of this exam turned out to be correct.

“So I have to fight you now?”

I was confident in not losing even if I couldn’t defeat him. He didn’t know about the ghost wolf. A surprise attack would give me the advantage. The ghost wolf would bite off his neck as soon as he approached.

“Are you confident?”

Heuk Jeon asked. I fired the cadet handgun without answering. Tang, tang, tang, tang, tang. I emptied the clip in less than a second. However, not a single bullet reached him. The daggers hovering behind him cut them all down.

“Unfortunately, I will kill you.”

He spoke quite a lot, which benefitted me. I threw the cadet handgun at him. One of his daggers flew forward and cut it in half.

“You’re abandoning your weapon? It’s too quick to surrender, don’t you think?”

“No.”

I stretched out my arm. Magic power shot out and formed another handgun.

“You see, I’m the type that’s overgeared.”

I transformed the Desert Eagle into an assault rifle. He didn’t show any signs of approaching, so I had to make him. Heuk Jeon kept smiling, so I smiled back.

“Don’t hold anything back. You might regret it.”

“...”

His smile stiffened as he threw off his robe and unleashed his magic power. However, the strange tattoo on his upper arm caught my attention. A black goblet with a faint moon. I felt like I recognized it after seeing it again.

“Dark Moon Society...”

The man proudly smiled. He seemed happy about his famous organization. What role did they fill in the original story? It was on the tip of my tongue.

“AH!”

A light bulb suddenly went off in my head. They served as one of the Chameleon Troupe’s many lackeys!

Chapter 122

What Must Be Done (5)

The Chameleon Troupe had ties with several organizations since they couldn't possibly manage everything alone. Of course, most of these ties only existed temporarily and the Chameleon Troupe always remained superior. Most groups they traded with didn't even know their true identity.

Dark Moon Society was one of many private organizations in Pandemonium. If I correctly recalled, their leader came from England and they functioned like a crime syndicate similar to the mafia.

"To think even a brat has heard of us. We must've become quite famous, eh?"

The United Nations and several governments denounced Pandemonium, but it wasn't the hell they made it out to be. Pandemonium had a sizable amount of residents that included humans. Dark Moon Society desperately clung to the Chameleon Troupe to elevate their own status. Having the Chameleon Troupe as a backer would give them an edge in power struggles against other organizations.

Lancaster must've hired the Dark Moon Society since their leader also came from England.

The fact that Dark Moon Society somewhat served the Chameleon Troupe wouldn't change anything. I couldn't just introduce myself as a friend of Boss. She would probably kill me.

"Then let us start."

Heuk Jeon spoke as he gathered his daggers. I counted one, two, three... seventeen. He must be at least intermediate rank since he could skillfully control all of them.

“Come. I’ll allow you to make the first move.”

He acted like he looked down on me, but didn’t leave a single opening. His daggers thoroughly protected him like a curtain of blades.

“Fine.”

I used the third medicinal effect I memorized. [Instant Amplification] A surge of heat coursed through my body as my muscles bulged. I could feel a rush of adrenaline as my thought process also sped up. I closed my eyes and took a deep breath.

“Despair is a part of death. I’ll let you experience it thoroughly.”

Click. I open my eyes and fired at the blabbering fool. Tududududu— Small explosions erupted as I emptied my 45 round magazine in a second. Heuk Jeon didn’t bat an eye against such a barrage. His daggers hovered like satellites and cut down all the bullets. Clang, clang— All the severed bullets fell to the ground and only silence remained.

“Hum... that’s it?”

Heuk Jeon leisurely smiled. Tsk. I clicked my tongue. Unfortunately, he was a bad matchup for me. I could fire bullets powerful enough to break his daggers, but he had seventeen of them.

“Huu.”

However, I couldn’t die here. Honestly, I could win whenever I wanted if I used the god-slaking bullet, but that would be like beheading a chicken with a guillotine.

“How disappointing. I’ll attack now if that’s all you have.”

He kindly announced his next move with a smile. I focused on his daggers as they flew at me.

I activated bullet time, but something felt off.

I could see a dagger accelerating towards my head before it happened. I could also see a second dagger suddenly shooting up towards my chin before it neared my heart. My bullets could change the daggers' trajectories now that I could see them.

Clang, clang, clang.

My bullets clashed with the daggers and continued to change their directions.

My gift, Master Sharpshooter, allowed me to predict the trajectory of any long range attack.

"Tsk."

However, actually defending against them was a different story. My eyes could follow their movements, but bullet time would only last 3 minutes. I would be in trouble once my sense of time returned to normal. Unfortunately, the flying daggers didn't show any signs of stopping. Heuk Jeon leisurely observed me from a distance. Then I thought of the other weapon hidden in stigma's storage.

[Awl of Weakening] [High rank – Enchant] [Poison attribute]: An awl that will weaken the pricked target. Enchanted with the high rank magic, weakening.

It was the weapon Tomer was supposed to receive from Wicked's executive. The high rank effect should work on Heuk Jeon.

"Uk."

A dagger grazed my shoulder as bullet time ended. I clenched my teeth in pain.

I only had to prick him once with this awl. The problem was how. Then I came up with an idea. Stigma's magic power could turn my will into reality. It was worth trying.

I focused all my senses on stigma.

“Uk.”

Heuk Jeon’s daggers continued to cut me as I stood my ground. I wanted to stand behind him!

Stigma shone brightly through my shirt. The world seemed to turn upside down as the scenery distorted and reassembled. I found myself behind him in the blink of an eye. I didn’t miss this golden opportunity and struck his shoulder with the awl.

“What!”

He reacted fast, but it was too late. I released the ghost wolf from my chest.

“Bite!”

The wolf jumped on him.

“Uk! W-What!”

He struggled underneath the wolf as I switched to a shotgun. I barely held myself back from collapsing. Kiiik— It took two seconds to transform the gun.

“Come back.”

I called for the wolf after it suffered several deep wounds. The wolf’s only flaw was its stamina and vitality. It jumped back inside me exhausted.

“A-Argh, fucking hell.”

His relaxed demeanor had completely disappeared as he glared at me with hatred. He tried to summon magic power, but the awl of weakening made it impossible.

“Try eating this.”

I shoved the shotgun barrel at him.

“It might hurt if it doesn’t end quickly.”

“...”

Right when I was about to pull the trigger...

[12 hours have passed since the first cadet completed the tower. The exam is now over.]

The exam ended and saved Heuk Jeon’s life. A blinding light engulfed me before transporting me away. I laughed, Who knew someone could be luckier than me? Heuk Jeon was it? I would inevitably run into him again. I should tell Boss.

* * *

I returned to the waiting room alone and stared at my smartwatch.

“Oho.”

[Your understanding of stigma’s magic power has increased.] [A new function, Imprint Idea, has been added.] [Imprint Idea – Will store stigma’s magic power as a special idea. You can store a total of two ideas. The cost of magic power for stored ideas is halved.]

“Interesting.”

Stigma received a new ability because of how I used it during the fight. I immediately decided to store the short-distance teleportation. Moving a mere 50 meters required two and a half streaks, but teleportation was an ability unique to gifts.

“Hey, Kim Hajin!”

“Hajin!”

I busily tapped on the smartwatch keyboard when two people called me. I raised my head and saw Chae Nayun and Kim Suho running towards me.

“Ah, w-what happened to your face? How did you become so ugly? Are you okay?”

Chae Nayun rubbed my body out of concern. Was she worried or making fun of me? I found it a bit insulting.

“I wouldn’t be here otherwise.”

“Was that bastard really an exam overseer? Did you clear the stage?”

I ignored Chae Nayun and turned to Kim Suho. She must’ve told him what happened since he looked just as worried. Chae Nayun found a deep cut on my waist.

“Wha! What’s this? It’s so deep I can see inside your flesh!”

Why did she act so anxious when I was the injured one? I calmly stared at her rubbing my arms, shoulders, and legs.

“Oh right! Kim Suho, the potion!”

“Ah, I almost forgot. Here, Hajin. It’s a potion for external injuries.”

Kim Suho handed me a potion.

“Huh? Oh... no, it’s fine.”

I slowly took a step back. I didn’t want to apply such a potion. External injury potions were especially painful.

“Ah, don’t run away.”

Chae Nayun snatched my hand and applied the potion to a gauze.

“Ah, wait.”

I felt excruciating pain as the wet gauze touched my wound.

“Ahuk, ah, hey! Go easy on me.”

“Come on, it’s not that bad.”

Chae Nayun smiled despite my pain. My smartwatch suddenly rang as she finished treating me.

[Your body has memorized 1.5% of the emergency potion’s recovery effect.]

Oh right, it also applied to potions. I forgot until now and questioned my intelligence.

“By the way, what happened to the Princess?”

“Rachel? She’s... oh, there she is.”

Rachel was desperately crying as she spoke to an instructor. I could hear her saying, Please find Kim Hajin!

Wiing—

My smartwatch rang again. It went off like overtime toda... My face suddenly stiffened.

[I talked with the other members about your request.]

It came from Boss. My heart dropped as I read the first line.

“Hey, I need to go to the restroom.”

“Huh? There’s no restroom here. Ah, hey, where are you going!”

I went to the most isolated place I could find and made sure I was alone before reading the rest of the message.

[The result was 5 yes, 5 no.]

I clenched my teeth. As expected, even the almighty Chameleon Troupe hesitated to kill Chae Jinyoon. However, the Chameleon Troupe had a total of 11 members, excluding the empty seat.

[I have yet to decide.]

Boss hadn't voted yet.

[Yes, Boss.]

I sent her a short message. However, she didn't reply. I didn't know whether she simply typed slow or tried keeping me on my toes. Boss finally replied as I grew impatient.

[Little apprentice.] [You've already killed several people, but they were all evil and deserved to die.] [Your request is different from your missions. This time, you said you wanted to kill someone yourself. No matter the reason, your conscious will bear a heavy weight if you commit murder of your own will.]

“...”

Her message sounded solemn, but I had a strong hunch she only pretended to be kind. A small mistake in her text ruined the atmosphere. I couldn't help but notice as a former writer.

[Will you be able to endure it?]

[Um, Boss, I'm sorry to say, but it's conscience, not conscious.]

[If you can]

Boss paused mid-sentence. I probably shouldn't have corrected her, but it was already too late.

[?]

Boss replied with a single question mark.

[Ah, I'm sorry.]

I quickly apologized, but she seemed to sulk and didn't reply. I felt a bit anxious, so I called her. Thankfully, she picked up immediately.

"Hello?"

— What is it?

She sounded unenthusiastic. I sighed and apologized once again.

Chapter 123

Chae Jinyoon (1)

“Sorry, we’ll have to discuss the details later since I’m in the middle of an exam.”

— Fine. It was a typo, just so you know. I was a bit offended you pointed it out. I was about to fix it.

As I finished setting an appointment with Boss...

“Kim Hajin, is Kim Hajin here?”

An instructor called my name in the waiting room.

“Ah, yes.”

“You’re here?”

I ended the call and raised my hand. The instructor looked surprised.

“Cough, Rachel is looking for you. Looks like you two got separated during the exam. Tell her not to make such a big deal. This isn’t England, so she can’t order us around.”

I bowed in apology. “I’m sorry.”

The instructor clicked his tongue and reported to the higher-ups. “All cadets are accounted for.”

Then he quickly left. Rachel stood behind the instructor who just left.

“...”

She stared at me with tearful eyes. I felt sorry for making her worry. I should've looked for her first.

"I was looking for you. You should've told me you were okay."

"Ah, sorry. I had to take care of an urgent matter."

— Thank goodness.

Rachel muttered with a sigh. Her sincerity almost made my heart skip a beat. Then she asked, "So what happened in that last stage?"

"Well, I won."

"Eh? Wow, really? Against a member of the Dark Moon..."

She suddenly stopped and looked around. Then continued in a softer voice.

"Against a member of the Dark Moon Society?"

"Yeah, I beat him up."

"Ah!"

Honestly, I barely turned the situation around after suffering multiple injuries, but Rachel didn't need to know.

"Wow..."

She seemed awestruck with a half-opened mouth and looked at me with shining eyes. I casually shrugged as she fully accepted my explanation.

"From now on, I'll have to call you Master."

"What? Ah, no. You don't need to."

Our master-disciple relationship would shatter after a single proper fight. No, I could probably win against her at least once since she's never fought anyone with so many tricks like me.

"Master."

"Please, you don't have to."

I scratched my neck in embarrassment.

"Cadet Rachel, Cadet Kim Hajin."

Kim Soohyuk approached us.

"Ah, Instructor Kim."

"What's going on?"

Our class instructor felt trustworthy, unlike the rude instructor from before. Rachel and I explained everything. He took it seriously and said he would report it to the academy, but Cube's executives would likely dismiss it. They could easily make excuses since Rachel and I were the only witnesses. They would probably say it was all according to plan or that we misunderstood the instructor.

"Anyways, well done."

Kim Soohyuk patted our shoulders and turned back. I asked Rachel, "What are you going to do now?"

"Me? I'm going back to England tonight... Master."

She added the last word with a teasing smile. I took special care not to look at her. Rachel was the type that would drastically change the more she opened up. Her appearance and the way she acted would be too fatal for my heart.

I returned a small smile and looked at my smartwatch.

[Hajin Hajin.] [I learned how to text. Hayang helped me.] [When are you coming back? I miss you.]

Nowadays, Evandel was too preoccupied with the smartwatch I gave her. She learned how to look up videos and would probably learn how to order food soon.

I should hurry home to eat with Evandel.

Kim Suho and I visited a nameless dungeon in the Baekdu Mountain Range's Upper Sword Mountain.

"Whew. Good work, Hajin."

I sprawled on the ground as Kim Suho praised me.

"Wow, my hands are still shaking. Wasn't that super fun?"

Kim Suho reflected on the previous battle with a bright smile, but I felt too shaken up to do anything. The dungeon boss was an intermediate rank, grade 1 snake called Jqr that spat out black venom.

I came up with a simple strategy. I would support from the back as Kim Suho charged in. It went mostly according to plan. Kim Suho easily slashed away its venom as I shot its eyes. However, the damned monster began to rampage after losing its sight. It shot venom everywhere and attacked without a care for its safety. I would've died if I hadn't memorized the detox medicinal effect.

"Is this urn the reward?"

"Yeah, that should be it. Jqr was protecting it, right?"

I forced myself to stand.

"What is it?"

“I’ll have to appraise it first.”

Kim Suho handed me the urn without hesitation.

[Jar of Greed] A random effect will be added to whatever item you place inside.

This was one of the randomization items I created. You just had to place an item in it for about ten days. No one knew what effect would be added, but I wasn’t too worried with my luck.

“You can take this one.”

Kim Suho suddenly spoke up.

“Mm? What do you mean?”

“Isn’t it obvious? I took Misteltein, so you should take this one.”

“Still...”

I knew this jar could be used twice.

“It’s fine. I’m happy with just the combat experience. Oh right, we should go on a trip together if you feel bad.”

I lay down and pretended to sleep. Kim Suho laughed as we passed the time in silence.

Wiing—

Someone’s smartwatch vibrated. It wasn’t mine. I turned and saw Kim Suho earnestly typing. I felt like I knew who he was messaging.

“Yun Seung-Ah again?”

“...”

Kim Suho flinched. I couldn't help but laugh. Their relationship had developed earlier than planned. In the original story, she couldn't even text Kim Suho because Chae Nayun always kept a close eye on him.

"You two going out?"

"Huh? N-No, how could someone like me go out with Senior Seung-Ah."

"If you aren't worthy, then no one is."

Any girl would fawn over his looks alone.

"Anyways, Hajin."

"You're good at changing the subject."

"N-No, I'm going back to what we talked about before. About the trip."

"You like going on trips that much?"

"No, it's just that I'm leaving soon. We won't see each other for at least 3 months."

Kim Suho continued with a serious face, "And you can also get closer to Nayun."

"Also?"

"Yeah, Chae Nayun has changed a lot. Now, she's..."

"No, not that." I changed the subject.

"Huh?"

"If I also get closer to Chae Nayun, that means you're getting close with someone too. It must be Yun Seung-Ah."

“N-No, it’s not like that!” Kim Suho angrily shot up.

“Haha, it’s not like that for me. I don’t like Chae Nayun. I never said I did in the first place.”

“Eh? Really? That’s not good.”

“Not good how?”

“Uh... never mind.”

Kim Suho closed his mouth. It seems like they talked about me. Should I hack into their smartwatches later?

“You can take the jar, but you’ll have to come on the trip.”

I smiled and nodded. I could do that much since I wouldn’t have cleared this dungeon without him.

The trip took place on December 17, a cold winter day with Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, Yoo Yeonha, Yi Yeonghan, and Chae Nayun. We headed towards a luxury resort near Gyeongpodae. The Daehyun group owned a 5 star hotel there. Chae Nayun suggested we take a limousine since none of us had a driver’s license.

“Nom, nom.”

Everyone seemed full of energy, but only Yoo Yeonha remained awake after 30 minutes.

“Nom, nom.”

I watched her happily eat the chocoballs that Chae Nayun brought. Yoo Yeonha showed no interest until everyone fell asleep. I found it quite funny how she savored every one of them.

“...”

We suddenly made eye contact. Yoo Yeonha reluctantly handed me the box.

“Would you like some?”

“No, I’m fine.”

“That’s a good choice. They’re not that good.”

She ate another one as she said that. Thud. The limousine shook and Chae Nayun’s head fell on my shoulder. Her fragrant scent tickled my nose.

“Hmm.”

Yoo Yeonha murmured to herself as I pushed Chae Nayun’s head to the side, but it fell on my shoulder again after 2 minutes. She isn’t awake, right? I turned back to the front after giving up and met eyes with Yoo Yeonha. For some reason, she looked at us with a sad expression.

“What.”

“Yes? Ah... um, I felt a bit bad since Nayun’s head must be heavy.”

“Mm, I guess you’re right. Her head’s too big.”

I made fun of Chae Nayun to check if she was awake, but she didn’t react. She must really be asleep.

We arrived at our destination after another 30 minutes. My jaws dropped at the resort. Even the buildings nearby looked luxurious. Gangwondo lived up to its setting with a GDP that matched a small country.

“Follow me!”

Chae Nayun got up as soon as we arrived and guided us with a lively voice. We would stay in a huge suite with 6 bedrooms for the next 2 days. We put our bags away and met in the living room.

“Our schedule is packed, so make sure you don’t get lost!”

Chae Nayun shouted with a smile. Everyone looked forward to what she had planned. From 12:00 to 9:00, we participated in a 9 course schedule consisting of playing pool, bowling, jet skiing, swimming, hot spring bathing, and other events. I didn’t know whether we were on a trip or training for the Olympics.

We held a barbeque at 11 P.M. for our final event of the day and enjoyed some high-quality meat with Gyeongpodae’s view in the background. Tssss— I felt relaxed from the sound of the meat sizzling.

“Kim Hajin, this is stuck. Give me a hand.”

Chae Nayun tapped my shoulder. I turned around and saw a piece of meat stuck on the grill.

“I can grill by myself.”

“Yeah, no.”

Everyone else sat at the table, but Chae Nayun insisted on helping.

“Oh right, I bought a motorcycle too.”

“What? Really?”

“Yep, it’s parked in the parking lot. Want to go for a ride after this?”

“Do you have a motorcycle license?”

“I do, but you’ll need to drive since I’m still inexperienced.”

“Oh? What’s this?” Yi Yeonghan’s teasing voice rang out. “What are you two doing over there?”

Chae Nayun frowned and glared at him.

“Shut up, Yi Yeonghan.”

“Ouch, scary.”

“Why don’t you leave the cooking to him? There’s no reason for you to help.”

Shin Jonghak muttered somewhat annoyed. He still had the meat I gave him stacked on his plate. It seemed he was too busy paying attention to us to eat.

“Why? It’s nice to see.”

Kim Suho chimed in. Shin Jonghak glared at him.

“W-What do you mean it’s nice to see? Y-You shut up too, Kim Suho.”

Chae Nayun stuttered and glanced at me. Our eyes briefly met before we dodged each other’s gaze.

“Cough.”

Chae Nayun’s face turned red. “Hey, don’t have any strange thoughts.”

“I don’t.”

“Why? Did things go well with Rachel?” she suddenly pouted and grumbled.

“What are you talking about?”

“Never mind.”

“Oi, Kim Suho, why don’t we play some pool again after this? The loser has to swim in the ocean.”

“Sure, I’m down.”

Shin Jonghak and Kim Suho planned another match while Yi Yeonghan mischievously stared at us. Yoo Yeonha focused on looking for an opportunity to cook some ramen.

I inwardly laughed at all of them. This kind of atmosphere called for soju. A night sky full of stars, the sound of crashing waves, and people whom I now felt lonely without. I felt deeply moved since I never thought I would feel affection in this world. I could let myself go today if I had a glass of alcohol.

Tak, tak. Chae Nayun tapped my shoulder. “See, aren’t you glad you came?”

I couldn’t deny her beautiful smile.

“Heh, I know you love it.”

Chae Nayun grinned. Then her smartwatch rang. “Ah, I have to take this. Hello?”

She picked up the call on a pair of earphones.

“Ah, yes. This is Chae Nayun.”

I could hear the voice on the other side.

“Yes?”

She suddenly dropped the tongs. Her hands trembled and her breathing sped up. She fell in shock as the voice continued.

“He...”

She paused.

— Yes! Patient Chae Jinyoon woke up! He fell asleep again, but...

Chae Nayun held her breath. What I feared ended up happening. Chae Jinyoon had woken up before the seed sprouted. I closed my eyes. I needed some time to think, but Chae Nayun hung up the call and pulled my sleeve.

“Hey.”

She looked at me with tearful eyes and pleaded, “Please give me a ride.”

Domestic portals had closed 30 minutes ago since it was 11:30 P.M.

Chapter 124

Chae Jinyoon (2)

I found it hard to believe, but the doctor's hopeful voice didn't seem like a lie. My mind completely blanked. I couldn't even feel happy because I'd given up a long time ago.

“...”

The doctor's voice grew softer as my head rang and my vision turned blurry. I slowly turned to the side and saw Kim Hajin. His perfectly average face seemed especially vivid today.

“Hey.”

I wasn't sure what to think, but I knew I had to go to the hospital. He seemed like the only one who could help.

“Please give me a ride.”

Kim Hajin looked at me with a heavy expression. Did he overhear the call?

He sighed as Yoo Yeonha asked, “A ride? Did something happen?”

“Huh? Erm...”

“Let's go. It won't take more than 20 minutes,” Kim Hajin spoke as I struggled to answer.

So he did overhear. I smiled at how reliable he was even in this situation.

“I thought only your eyes were good, but I guess your ears are too.”

“We can talk about that later. Where did you park your motorcycle?”

“Follow me.”

“What? What happened?”

Shin Jonghak shot up and asked. Yi Yeonghan, Yoo Yeonha, and Kim Suho also seemed concerned. I ran to the parking lot with Kim Hajin without explaining. Soon, we reached the motorcycle.

“Where’s the key?”

“Key? Ah, right...”

“...”

Kim Hajin shook his head. I couldn’t remember where I put the keys. I was such an idiot even in this situation.

“Am I really an idiot?”

However, Kim Hajin carefully looked at the motorcycle and sighed in relief. “It’s fine. This works with a smart key.”

“Smart key?”

“Yeah.”

Kim Hajin tapped on his smartwatch a few times and the engine suddenly started. He pulled me onto the back seat before I could even express my surprise. The engine’s roar echoed throughout the parking lot.

“Hold on tight.”

“Y-Yeah.”

Hold on where? I grabbed onto the hem of his shirt not knowing what to do.

“Scan.”

The moment Kim Hajin murmured in a barely audible voice...

Vroooooom—

The bike shot out of the parking lot. The wind felt too strong even with Kim Hajin's body shielding me. It felt like we were going at 400 km/hr.

“Hey, I'm going to— fall off—”

I tried to speak, but the sheer speed prevented my voice from reaching him. I didn't have any other choice. I slowly moved closer and leaned my head against his back while wrapping my arms around his waist. The only reason my face turned red was because I had never done something like this before. That's how I justified it, but Kim Hajin's back felt surprisingly large and comfortable.

“Uwat!”

The bike suddenly turned as I put more strength into my arms.

I've been putting off what I had to do and even avoided thinking about it.

I wondered why I was even here and why I had to complete such a task. I might've been avoiding reality, pretending to question whether I had to kill Chae Jinyoon.

However, I couldn't find a method to save him and I had a duty to fulfill as this world's creator.

Chwaaaaa—

A fierce wind blew against me. Chae Nayun's bike went far beyond its capabilities under the random consolidation system's effect. It went 400 km/hr or even higher. I could feel a soft sensation on my back as I focused on driving.

It took exactly 20 minutes to reach Seoul from Gyeongpodae. We finally arrived at Daehyun's hospital after speeding like crazy.

"We're here."

I spoke to Chae Nayun leaning against my back. She didn't react, so I nudged her with my shoulders.

"Uun..."

She opened her eyes and started sobbing. I spoke again as her eyes filled with tears.

"We're here."

"Ah."

Chae Nayun stared at the hospital in a daze, as though she were dreaming. I grabbed her hand and pulled her off the bike.

"Aah."

"You're not dreaming. The others should be on their way too."

Not even a hero could run from Gyeongpodae to Seoul. It would take at least an hour and a half even if they woke up the chauffeur and took the limousine. We didn't have time to wait for them.

"Let's go."

"Um, yeah."

"What about your father?"

"He's out of the country with my grandfather."

Not even the Daehyun group's president could forcibly open a closed portal. We walked into the VIP ward. The guard at the entrance recognized Chae Nayun and quickly opened the door.

The outer area of the VIP section contained a luxurious garden. The number of hidden cameras and anticrime magic easily surpassed three digits. I could see a doctor and a group of nurses coming out.

"Nayun?"

They ran up to us and seemed surprised at my presence. Chae Nayun scratched her neck and introduced me.

"He's my frien... he's an acquaintance. Can we go in?"

She introduced me a bit strangely. An acquaintance?

"Ah, yes, come in."

A middle-aged doctor with glasses and well-combed hair guided us inside. The VIP ward had refined décor like a temple. Chae Nayun asked as we walked through the hallway.

"How's his condition?"

The doctor smiled. "He's not fully awake yet, but you'll be able to see him wake up soon. It's truly a miracle."

We stopped in front of an escalator heading underground. Chae Jinyoon would be downstairs.

"Excuse me, but he's..."

The doctor glanced back and forth between us.

"Ah, it's fine. He brought me here."

"Is that so?"

“Of course. Right? I know you’re tight-lipped.”

Chae Nayun’s trust caused me even more pain.

“Then let’s head down.”

We took the escalator to Chae Jinyoon’s room, which took up almost half the floor. A magic barrier protected the room with three mercenaries guarding the entrance. They could easily match intermediate rank heroes.

“Congratulations, Young Miss.”

A particularly intimidating mercenary walked up and smiled. Chae Nayun nodded with a dazed expression.

“Y-Yes, thank you.”

“Is he also going in?”

The mercenary pointed at me. Chae Nayun nodded.

“Yes.”

“Hm. He’ll need the president’s permission...”

“I’ll permit him. Father is probably too busy to come today.”

“Cough.”

The mercenary opened the door as we entered with the doctor. I could smell a clean, flowery scent and felt the dense magic power in the room. A masterpiece painting hung on the wall along with pictures of Chae Nayun and Chae Jinyoon around the room.

“Ah...”

Chae Nayun muttered in a daze. Chae Jinyoon lay at a 60 degree angle as he collected his breath. He was awake, but physically and mentally exhausted.

“We told him he hasn’t woken up in four years, but it’s only been two hours since he first regained consciousness. His memory is still hazy, but he should fully recover in a month.”

The doctor explained, but Chae Nayun couldn’t hear him. Tears flowed down her face as the doctor excused himself.

“Then I’ll be back in a bit.”

He left and closed the door. Silence filled the room as Chae Nayun stared at Chae Jinyoon. Then she said what she wanted to say for a long time now.

“Oppa?”

Chae Jinyoon turned his head. The kind and gentle older brother I created. He saw Chae Nayun and silently stared at her for a long time. Eventually, a thin smile emerged on his face and he managed to speak.

“Nayun.”

He still remembered his younger sister’s face despite his brain damage. That was the kind of man Chae Jinyoon was.

“You’ve gotten so big. I heard from the doctor that it’s been four years, right?”

Chae Nayun trembled at his gentle voice, but couldn’t move. I grabbed her wrist and walked towards him. Chae Jinyoon watched me with interest.

“Is he your boyfriend?”

“E-Eh? W-What are you talking about? He’s not.”

Chae Nayun strongly denied it, but added a final word after sneaking a peek at me.

“...y-yet.”

“Yet?”

This time, I felt dumbstruck. “W-What!”

Embarrassed, Chae Nayun pushed me away. Meanwhile, Chae Jinyoon watched us with a warm smile.

I scheduled to meet with Boss 2 days later in Gangwondo. Boss sat in a chair while reading a book in an empty cave. Tak, tak. The sound of high-heels rang out as Jain walked out from the darkness. Boss continued to read as Jain stood in front of her.

“Boss, Chae Jinyoon woke up.”

Boss silently closed the book.

“Are you really thinking of doing this?”

“...”

Boss stared at Jain and nodded.

“Will the four of us be enough? Ah, I guess it’s five since Kim Hajin wanted to kill him with his own hands.”

Jain murmured with interest. Boss only told a few members about Kim Hajin’s request. Only a few would know what happened regardless of whether or not they would succeed.

“Yes, I am.”

“Hmm... Well, this indeed seems to be the best way to rope Kim Hajin in.”

The Chameleon Troupe would obtain Kim Hajin's debt and gratitude by accepting this request. Even Jain felt tempted. She believed Kim Hajin had the potential to become one of the world's strongest heroes.

"Don't we have too much to lose though? We don't know why he wants to kill Chae Jinyoon and we would be turning that geezer into our enemy."

"No."

Boss shook her head. She already checked Chae Jinyoon's condition the day Kim Hajin made the request. Chae Jinyoon's magic core had been destroyed. Chae Joochul would feel no sympathy towards someone like that, even if it was his own grandson. That was the kind of man he was.

"He might even appreciate it since he would obtain the world's sympathy at the price of his grandson's life."

Boss gritted her teeth as she spoke. She showed a rare display of emotion since they had quite the history, but Chae Joochul had cut off all contact after the previous boss' death.

"Well, I can't say for sure, but Kim Hajin is strange no matter how I think about it."

Jain crafted a chair out of magic power and sat down.

"Explain."

"That greedy ghost refused our request even after we offered another 3 billion won."

"Greedy ghost... You mean Yoo Jinhyuk?"

"Yep."

Yoo Jinhyuk was a hedonist who wasted his money gambling in Gangwondo, Las Vegas, and Clancy Islet, but he was still the number one informant in Korea.

“It’s just too strange. He’s never hesitated to look into someone’s past, whether it was a chaebol or a hero. Why would he be so adamant about Kim Hajin?”

Yoo Jinhyuk had refused a 500 million won offer to look into a single person. Jain raised the price as high as 3 billion won, but Yoo Jinhyuk didn’t budge.

“This must mean he already looked into Kim Hajin’s past.”

“And?”

“He’s staying quiet because he thinks it’ll jeopardize his life. There must be something special about Kim Hajin’s past.”

It sounded logical. Boss nodded in agreement.

“Should we keep poking him?”

“No, look into another information guild.”

Jain grinned at Boss’ words. Yoo Jinhyuk just lost a big customer today. Boss was the type to easily hold grudges.

“Well, information guilds nowadays all have low standards, but I’ve been watching a couple of places for a while now.”

“Where?”

Jain turned on her smartwatch and projected a hologram.

[Falling Blossom] — Naturally and elegantly, like falling petals.

“One is Falling Blossom, a rising star in the field. It’s only been half a year since they started, but they have great reviews so far.”

“Mm.”

Falling Blossom. She liked the name.

“And the other one?”

[Truth Agency] — Anything you seek is at our disposal.

“...”

Boss frowned at the lame name and description.

“It has great reviews despite how it sounds. It’s the best information agency when it comes to finding people.”

“We’ll go with Falling Blossom.”

Boss liked luxury and expressed her decision.

“Alright, I’ll put in a request.”

“And next?”

“We’re good to go for Chae Jinyoon. The plan is perfect. Just ask Kim Hajin when he’s available. I’m sure that child needs time to prepare his heart.”

Tap, tap. Footsteps sounded in the cave. Jain immediately sharpened her senses and stood on guard.

“Who is it.”

“I already called him.”

“Called who? Kim Hajin? Already?”

“Yes. It’ll be the first time you’re seeing him. Act accordingly.”

Jain looked forward with a startled expression. Kim Hajin wore a black coat that reached his knees and styled his hair in a clean pomade. She liked his fashion sense, but he didn't look particularly handsome with his average face. He leisurely walked through the darkness.

“At least he walks like a model.”

Jain murmured with a grin.

Chapter 125

Chae Jinyoon (3)

I could see Boss and Jain sitting as I walked through the cave. They emitted powerful magic power like everyone who surpassed a certain threshold. I took a deep breath and walked up to them.

“You’re here, little apprentice.”

“Yes.”

I bowed. However, she seemed to be asking for more with her eyes.

“Boss.”

“Mmm.”

She hummed in satisfaction and formed a chair out of her black magic power. I sat and stared at Jain as she scanned me from top to bottom.

“This is Jain. She’s a fellow member.”

Jain smiled and waved. “Hi hi.”

“Yes, nice to meet you.”

This would be our first official meeting despite the many times I saw her in disguise. I respectfully bowed.

“Hajin, I have so many questions.”

“Yes, what is it?”

She probably wanted to know my motive for killing Chae Jinyoon.

“Those clothes, did you copy them from a fashion magazine?”

“Come again?”

What kind of question was that?

“You have excellent fashion sense, unlike other male cadets your age.”

“...”

Honestly, I put a lot of effort into my clothes because of my average looks. Of course, I could afford better clothes now than other cadets.

“I’m just a bit interested.”

“I see.”

“Jain.” Boss leered at her and she quietly backed off.

“I want to know why you want to kill Chae Jinyoon.”

“...”

Should I tell them about the mysterious devil’s seed? Would they believe such a calamity existed without any proof?

“You don’t have to if you don’t want to.”

However, Boss cut off my worries. Jain smacked her lips in disappointment as Boss continued with a serious face.

“However, you’ll have to pay the price.”

Boss’ eyes flickered with a strange fervor.

“You will become our strength. Remember this debt and sign the contract.”

The last part made me chuckle. “Of course.”

“Good, then I’ll explain the plan.”

Jain immediately spoke and created a triangular table with her magic power.

Chae Nayun visited every day after Chae Jinyoon regained consciousness. His condition steadily improved. He still spent more time asleep than awake, but would recover fast enough to walk in a month.

“Mmm...”

Today was the fourth day since Chae Jinyoon had woken up. Chae Nayun visited him with her friends, including me.

“Hmm...”

Chae Jinyoon scrutinized us before pointing at someone.

“You’re Kim Suho, right?”

“Y-Yes, I’m Kim Suho. How did you know?”

Kim Suho widened his eyes.

“Chae Nayun used to talk about you a lot when she was in Military Agent Academy.”

Chae Nayun flinched and peeked at me before explaining, “Y-Yeah, I said you looked delicate and acted like a know-it-all.”

“What? Isn’t that too harsh?”

“Haha, I agree with you, Chae Nayun.” Shin Jonghak chimed in with a hearty laugh.

“Jonghak looks just as delicate though.”

“No, no. I look much more manly.”

Shin Jonghak objected to Yoo Yeonha’s point. However, I couldn’t focus on their conversation and sat deep in thought.

The devil’s seed had reached 97% according to the Book of Truth. I only had two months or maybe one if 100% took 4-5 years.

“Why are you so zoned out?”

Yoo Yeonha tapped my shoulder. I smile bitterly.

“Nothing, I’m just a bit tired.”

“Ah, you’re Hajin, right?” Chae Jinyoon pointed at me. Our eyes met and he smiled.

“Thank you for coming every day. You’re making me ashamed.”

“Eh? He came every day?”

Yoo Yeonha asked in surprise. Shin Jonghak seemed disgruntled while Kim Suho shrugged with a smile.

“Of course, he’s been coming with Nayun every day.”

“Ah, d-don’t say that, oppa.”

Chae Nayun could only visit once a day for about three hours when he was awake. She had pleaded for me to come along for the past 4 days. I agreed, thinking I could maybe talk to Chae Jinyoon privately.

“He’s, um, oppa’s fan.”

“My fan?”

“Yeah, he used to talk about you all the time. Right? Remember last semester?”

Chae Nayun jokingly growled and put me in a headlock. I didn’t have the energy to play along with her jokes and silently squirmed away.

“I was just joking.”

Chae Nayun muttered as she awkwardly poked my arm. “Hey, I was just joking.”

“Chae Nayun.”

Shin Jonghak cut in, clearly showing his displeasure.

“What.”

“Follow me outside.”

“I don’t want to.”

“Your watch.”

Chae Nayun looked down at her watch.

“Ah, I’ll be back in a moment, oppa.”

They seemed to have received a message and left me alone with Chae Jinyoon. We stared at each other in silence. I finally got the chance to talk to him in private, but my head was filled with complicated thoughts. I spoke after some time.

“Chae Jinyoon.”

He smiled at my stiff voice. “Yes, Kim Hajin?”

“How’s your body?”

“Mm, I think I’m getting better,” he softly responded as I asked another question.

“What about your head?”

“My head?”

Chae Jinyoon seemed confused at my question.

“Yes, have you experienced any urges to do something bad?”

“Huh?”

“Like suddenly having horrible thoughts or feeling demonic energy rather than magic power from your body.”

“...”

I could see my fearful reflection in his eyes. I wanted to ask, Will you believe me if I said you will become a devil? Can you give up your life to protect your younger sister?

“Mm, I’m not sure. Are you perhaps talking about Operation Fireflake?”

Chae Jinyoon thought about the past. I dropped my head, unable to ask those questions. I remained silent as I clenched my teeth and tightened my grip on the chair from the worries in my heart. Then Chae Jinyoon suddenly placed his hand on my head.

“I don’t know what’s troubling you so much, but...”

Thud— The door suddenly opened.

“Ah, sorry oppa. What?”

Chae Nayun furrowed her brows as she saw Chae Jinyoon’s hand on my head.

“Hajin must’ve been a big fan of mine.”

“Pft, really?”

She didn’t think much of it and sat next to me as Chae Jinyoon asked, “Where are the others?”

“I sent them back. You have to rest soon anyways.”

“Ah... that’s a shame. Did something happen?”

“Yeah, um, Master Yoo Sihyuk said he’d delay his camp for about 4 days. I’ll be leaving on the 25th.”

Yoo Sihyuk had heard about Chae Nayun’s circumstances. However, she didn’t seem too happy.

“Oppa, should I just not go?”

Chae Jinyoon didn’t reply. Instead, he slowly turned towards me.

“I think she’s asking you, Hajin.”

“What? N-No, I’m obviously asking you, oppa.”

“What do you think, Hajin?” Chae Jinyoon asked.

Yoo Sihyuk’s school was located at the peak of Baekdu Mountain with one of the highest concentrations of spirit energy and mana in the world. It was impossible to reach its peak without being above a certain level. You had to forcefully train your lungs to arrive at Yoo Sihyuk’s school. Chae Nayun, Kim Suho, and Shin Jonghak would be unable to leave until winter break ended.

“Should I not go?” Chae Nayun turned to me and asked.

I responded resolutely, “No, you should go.”

Chae Nayun had to leave.

“Eh? Ah... but it’s not the end of the world even if I don’t go...”

“Go.”

“Tsk.”

Chae Nayun’s face turned into a bulldog’s as she glared at me. Thankfully, Chae Jinyoon seemed to agree.

“Nayun, I agree with Hajin. You don’t have to worry if it’s because of me. You can see me any time, but this might be the only chance to train at Yoo Sihyuk’s school.”

“I was planning on going anyways. Oh yeah, I brought a camera.”

Chae Nayun changed the topic and took out a camera from her bag. Then she pushed it at me.

“Here, take some pictures of us.”

Chae Nayun ran next to Chae Jinyoon. It surprised him, but he soon smiled. I silently watched them and murmured.

Scan.

The number 44 came out. Jackpot. I wondered what kind of photos this camera would take and raised it with a somber expression.

“Say cheese.”

Click. Click. Chae Nayun and Chae Jinyoon made all sorts of poses. She hugged him, gave him a peck on the cheek, and leaned on his shoulder. After about thirty or so photos...

“You should take one with Hajin.”

Chae Jinyoon made an unexpected suggestion.

“Ah, no, I’m fine...”

“I insist. Nayun, go stand next to him.”

“What? No...”

“Chae Nayun.”

“...”

Chae Nayun stood next to me embarrassed when Chae Jinyoon raised his voice.

“Alright, say cheese.”

“C-Cheese.”

Chae Nayun bashfully made a peace sign. Click. Chae Jinyoon took the only photo of us together.

The visiting period ended at night. Chae Jinyoon slept as Chae Nayun and I walked around the hospital garden.

“Kim Hajin.”

Chae Nayun skipped through the garden under the faint moonlight and called my name. She made the happiest expression in the world.

“Kim Hajin, Kim Hajin.”

“...”

“Kim Hajin, Kim Hajin, Kim Hajin.”

“What?”

“Nothing. I just wanted to thank you.”

I became speechless.

“Cough, you have nothing to thank me for.”

“You came with me every day.”

She continued as we strolled through the garden. “Honestly, I was too afraid to come alone. I love oppa so much, but it’s been almost 5 years since we talked. I didn’t know what to say or what he might think about me all grown up.”

Then she poked my shoulder.

“But it didn’t feel awkward at all with you around.”

We arrived at the entrance with my bike parked next to the wall.

“I see.”

I replied unenthusiastically and prepared to leave. I got on my bike, put on my helmet, and turned on the engine.

“Are you free on Christmas?” Chae Nayun spoke as I was about to step on the gas. I turned towards her.

“That’s the day you’re leaving.”

“I want to see you before I go.”

“...”

I didn’t answer, but Chae Nayun continued.

“I’m leaving at 6, so I’ll meet you at noon in front of the hospital.”

“I’m leaving.”

“Yeah, good night.”

I smiled bitterly and stepped on the accelerator. I could see Chae Nayun looking at me from the side mirror as I raced away.

Evandel and Hayang greeted me as I opened the door to the luxury apartment I bought in Seocho District, Gangnam.

“Hajin.”

“Meow.”

“Hey, you two.”

I picked up Evandel in one arm and Hayang in the other. I did my best to smile at their bright expressions.

“How did ordering food go?”

“It went well! We ate steak! Steak!”

“You followed my instructions?”

“Yeah! I told the delivery man to leave the food in front of the door. Then I brought it inside after he left!”

“Good job.”

I placed them down on the couch. It felt nice to have such a big house. All the space gave me some peace of mind.

“Oh right, did you take Hayang on a walk?”

“Un!”

Recently, I’ve been making Evandel practice going out. I made her wear a smartwatch just in case, but I didn’t worry too much with Hayang by her side.

“Good girl.”

“Hehe, ehehe.”

I patted both of them as Evandel giggled. Then I received a message.

[Little apprentice, we have finished all the preparations. We will make our move on January 3. Be ready.]

My face immediately stiffened.

“Watch TV for a bit.”

I went into the bedroom and took out the Jar of Greed. I had placed aether inside it after obtaining it. Aether was certainly worthy enough to upgrade. More than ten days had passed since December 10. I slowly opened the lid.

“Eh?”

My hands emitted a golden light. I had experienced this before. It meant my accumulation of luck had activated. Golden light rose from the jar.

“Bravo.”

Aether carried a strange pink light.

“Wait, what?”

I turned on my smartwatch with a sense of foreboding.

[Aesthetic Greed] The desire to seek beauty has been attached to aether. — Its user's invariable charm stat will increase by 0.002 points every 24 hours, up to a maximum of 1. (Note that the charm stat cannot increase beyond 9). — Aether will now react to beautiful things. — Aether's detail materialization will become more exquisite.

“...”

I stood in a daze. Objectively, it seemed fantastic. After all, it permanently raised an invariable stat. Furthermore, the charm stat not only affected one's outer appearance, but also your musculoskeletal balance and height. With a full point, I should grow at least 2-3 cm taller. Such a drastic change would indeed trigger my accumulation of luck. Still...

“Why?”

Why couldn't it have been intelligence instead of charm? I would've been happier if it increased my variable stats by 2.

“Sigh...”

I couldn't do anything about it. Of course, I could change the settings with my gift, but erasing an existing function to add a new one would cost too much. I decided to be content and reached for aether. It shot towards me and coiled around my body like a snake.

Chae Jinyoon (4)

Christmas arrived as huge news swept through Korea on this beautiful holiday celebrated by lovers and families. The world's rank 1 guild, Creator's Sacred Grace, announced their Tower of Miracle campaign. Their announcement came a couple of weeks late, but I didn't mind since the results would remain the same. I already bought 4 billion won of their stocks and would sell them soon.

"Are you worried?"

I spoke on the phone with Kim Suho while reading the guild's stock chart.

[Creator's Sacred Grace +10.1%]

A top guild's stock price rarely fluctuated, but theirs had already risen by 10%. I almost made a 100% profit thanks to stock market leverage.

— Not at all.

I could hear the concern in his voice despite his words. The Tower of Miracle campaign would last 6 months. Most tower conquests took 3 months, but the Tower of Miracle was the world's largest tower. Creator's Sacred Grace would announce their defeat after 6 months. I thought about stopping them, but their guild master wouldn't listen to a kid like me. After all, he even refused to listen to Yun Seung-Ah.

— She'll come back victorious.

"I hope so."

They might have a chance since they delayed the announcement by 2 weeks, or they might suffer an even greater loss. I couldn't be sure of the future anymore. I might have a forest of knowledge in my head, but infinite trees existed. I couldn't know every single one.

— By the way, you're on your way to meet Chae Nayun, right?

I glanced at my watch. 11:59 A.M. A minute left before the promised time Chae Nayun forced on me.

“Why would I be?”

— What? Come on, don't be like that. She planned a lot for today.

“What?”

— Well, uh, she asked me about what you liked and what to do for fun. She was looking forward to it a lot, so you have to go.

It seemed like Kim Suho worried about us more than Yun Seung-Ah.

“I'm hanging up.”

— Wait! Please, just go. Please?

“Why are you trying to act cute?”

It was a Kim Suho-like thing to do. I hung up with a grin and closed my laptop. Then I lay down on the couch and turned on the TV. After an hour passed by...

Tididi— The door opened as Evandel and Hayang returned from their walk.

“We're back!”

“Meow.”

Evandel raced to the couch and stared at me like she wanted something. I handed her the remote since it was about time for her favorite anime and headed to the bedroom.

“Sigh.”

I hopped on the bed and subconsciously sighed. My heart ached and I suddenly had a strong urge to smoke. This uncomfortable feeling wouldn't disappear, so I reluctantly looked at my smartwatch. I hadn't received any messages or calls from Chae Nayun. She should've already gone home by now. An hour had passed and she wouldn't have waited with her personality. I convinced myself and picked up the game console.

I finally left the bedroom at 3 P.M., unable to calm my heart. Evandel slept on the couch with Hayang as a pillow. I carefully turned the doorknob, but they woke up and stared with sleepy eyes.

“Uh, I’m going out for a bit. I’ll bring back yummy food.”

“Un...”

Evandel went back to sleep as I left. I rode my bike out of the parking lot and drove to Daehyun's hospital.

“She’s still there?”

I came just in case. Chae Nayun leaned against the wall wearing clothes she had carefully picked out. She did her hair in a short wave and uncharacteristically wore light makeup. My heart ached as I looked at her. I swallowed a sigh and drove towards her. She pouted at her smartwatch, but suddenly looked up with a smile when she heard the bike's engine.

“Ah! Hey! Kim Hajin!”

She pointed at me and ran up.

“You’re freaking... I mean, you’re very late. Where were you?”

“I didn’t agree to meet in the first place.”

Chae Nayun leered at me, but didn't complain. She just held up her watch.

“I had a lot planned today. We were supposed to eat brunch at noon, go bowling at 1, then a café at 2, visit a fortune teller at 3, an arcade at 4, a restaurant at 4:40...”

I lightly struck her head as she recited her schedule.

“Uk.”

She stiffened and slowly raised her head. I thought she’d react harsher, but she only looked at me confused.

“Why’d you hit me?”

“Who plans everything out like that? This isn’t combat training.”

“Then what do we do?”

“Let’s go on a drive. We have about two hours left.” I tapped on the seat behind me.

“Drive? Sure!”

Chae Nayun rejoiced and got on the back seat as I stepped on the accelerator.

“Let’s go straight to the arcade. After we play for 40 minutes, we can go to the restaurant.”

“Shut it, fool. Dates are supposed to be spontaneous.”

“I-It’s not a date. I told you not to misunderstand— ugyak!”

I sped up to prevent her from making excuses. We circled around Seoul’s beautiful scenery on Christmas without going to the arcade. I came 3 hours late, but we saw many things and enjoyed our time together. We stopped by a clothing store and left wearing completely different clothes. Then we ate at a restaurant and I forced her to try some pancakes.

We spent two and a half hours together before I drove her to the portal station.

[Domestic Portal Station]

“Ah... mm...”

The portal she had to take led to the North Hamgyeong Province. However, she hesitated to leave and stayed by my side.

“Hurry, you’re going to be late.”

I couldn’t look at her and only muttered at the portal in the distance. Chae Nayun nudged my shoulder.

“Hey.”

“Hm?”

“Today was fun.”

Her words pained me.

“I’m glad.”

“By the way, before I come back, don’t...”

She didn’t finish before shaking her head and smiling.

“Never mind. I’ll see you soon.”

She reached out with her small and pale, yet calloused hand. I grabbed it with a bitter smile. Her cheeks turned faintly red.

“Your hand is pretty big... and soft.”

“I only have to pull the trigger when I train.”

“I’m jealous. Cough, anyways.”

She let go of my hand.

“I’ll see you later.”

I smiled without a word.

“Then I’m going.”

“Yeah.”

“Stay safe.”

Chae Nayun walked to the portal while glancing back.

The 3rd of January finally arrived with sleeting weather. I got in a sedan in a desolate park. Jain and a man I hadn’t met before sat in the front with Boss in the back.

“This is the helper I mentioned. Don’t be too surprised.”

“Hello.”

Judging by the man’s reggae-style hair and black skin, he was likely Khalifa, the Chameleon Troupe’s blue seat.

“Now that the main hero is here, everyone close your eyes and entrust yourselves to my magic.”

Jain unleashed her magic power and I could feel something painted over my skin.

“Done. Here are your fake IDs.”

It only took 3 minutes to become completely different people. I opened my eyes and looked at the rear-view mirror. It reflected a nurse instead of Kim Hajin.

“I don’t know why you want to make things difficult. We could’ve just used poison.”

However, the devil’s seed couldn’t be killed so easily. I had to use the god-slaying bullet.

“The plan is simple. We’ll enter Chae Jinyoon’s room as nurses. Then we’ll bring him away and kill him in a secluded area.”

Jain made it sound easy, but it would be extremely difficult considering the security. However, it would be possible thanks to Jain’s disguises and Khalifa’s portal ability.

“As for how we’ll kidnap Chae Jinyoon, that’s why he’s here. Our helper can open portals, but we’ll be found out if the magic power is too great. Our best bet is a small portal that only travels 20 km. My disguise will wear off once you go through the portal, but you won’t have to worry about anyone seeing you. We already have a barrier set up where you and Chae Jinyoon will arrive.”

I would face Chae Jinyoon there alone.

“Boss and I will create a fake Chae Jinyoon once you and Khalifa leave. All you need to do is finish your task and come back through the portal.”

Jain’s ability wore off once her target went past a certain distance. She had to stay in the hospital room to maintain the fake Chae Jinyoon.

“Now, get off and pretend like you’re heading to work. Only I will be in the sedan. I’ll stay close enough to maintain your disguise, so don’t worry. Just make sure you’re no more than 4 km away.”

Her distance was restricted to 10 km for 1 person, 8 km for 2, 6 km for 3, and so on. Khalifa got off first, followed by me, then Boss. The sedan drove off slowly as the three of us maintained an appropriate distance.

We successfully entered the VIP ward as I headed to the counter and waited for Jain to call.

“Haeyeon?” Jain called at exactly 11:00 A.M.

“Yes?”

“It’s time to check on Chae Jinyoon. Follow me downstairs.”

“Ah, yes.”

I followed Jain along with another nurse and doctor who were actually Boss and Khalifa. We took the escalator down and arrived in front of Chae Jinyoon’s room. Jain looked at the clipboard and spoke to the mercenary.

“It’s 11:10 A.M. Time for a check-up.”

“Yes.”

He let us through without any suspicion. We locked the door as soon as we entered. Chae Jinyoon was sound asleep. Jain murmured, “CCTV.”

I was in charge of dealing with the CCTV and temporarily stopped it with my smartwatch. It cost 200 SP.

“Good.”

Jain turned to Boss.

“Boss, be careful so the mercenaries outside don’t notice.”

“I know.”

Boss carefully unleashed her magic power and created 2 puppets. Then Jain turned them into Chae Jinyoon and the nurse I disguised as.

“Alright, you’re up, Khalifa.”

“Okay.”

Khalifa created a small portal. Wooong— The undulation of magic power felt slightly stronger this time. We had to hurry before the mercenaries noticed.

— W-What was that? Hello? Did something happen inside?

I placed Chae Jinyoon in a wheelchair and walked into the portal.

The portal led to a desolate forest with sleet covering the ground and leafless trees all around. I parked the wheelchair next to a wooden bench and waited for Chae Jinyoon to wake up. Chae Nayun’s face suddenly overlapped with his as she smiled at me. I tried to suppress the thoughts in my mind.

“Fucking hell.”

But I just couldn’t do it. I pulled out a cigarette. Then I put it in my mouth and lit it with magic power. The acrid smoke passed through my throat into my lungs. The combination of nicotine and tar made me relax just a little.

Chae Jinyoon finally opened his eyes after an unknown amount of time.

“...”

He stared at me, unbothered by the foreign scenery. I stared back and bowed.

“...Kim Hajin?”

I didn't reply.

"Where are we?"

I didn't reply.

"Did something happen to the hospital?"

I didn't reply. Instead, I took out my gun and loaded it with the god-slaying bullet.

"Hajin?"

Chae Jinyoon's innocent voice caused me heart-wrenching pain. I closed my eyes and took a deep breath. Then I dropped the cigarette and stomped it out.

"Chae Jinyoon, have you heard of the devil's seed?"

"What?"

"It should be something that hasn't been confirmed in this world yet."

I continued while looking at him. I felt like I needed to explain why he had to die out of respect, but it was honestly just my cowardly justification.

"A devil's seed is a devil that takes over a human like a parasite. Once the seed sprouts, the devil will take over and transform the host."

My clothes fluttered in the wind. I could taste the bitterness from the first cigarette I smoked in almost a year. I slowly raised my gun and pointed it at his head.

"Chae Jinyoon, this seed is inside you."

He silently stared at me.

"You will become a devil."

My vision turned blurry and my hands trembled uncontrollably.

“I’m... I’m sorry.”

I held the gun with both hands and tried my best to stop trembling as I placed a finger on the trigger.

“I’m sorry. I really am. I’m sorry...”

However, I couldn’t help but hesitate. Chae Nayun’s smiling face overlapped with Chae Jinyoon once again. Her feelings made my heart ache. The pain and sorrow suffocated me. I was afraid. Afraid of the pain she would feel and the wound she would bear.

Chae Jinyoon’s face suddenly contorted and demonic energy rose from his body. It burned the ground and stifled me. His entire body turned ash-black. Chae Jinyoon, or rather the devil, reached out to me. I could feel the killing intent from its deathly black fingers and bloodshot eyes. I hesitated even as its hand drew closer to my neck. I didn’t have the strength to pull the trigger from mental exhaustion. My hesitation should’ve killed me. However, no danger occurred. It felt as though the world had stopped.

I looked into the devil’s eyes in the middle of this serene forest. Its bloodshot eyes froze, but carried a hint of tears. My heart sank. The devil’s seed couldn’t fully sprout due to Chae Jinyoon’s will.

“...”

Chae Jinyoon stared at me and suppressed the evil within him. I couldn’t say anything. He had made his decision and I couldn’t betray his conviction. I couldn’t let his efforts go to waste. I clenched my teeth and aimed.

“I won’t hesitate this time. For the both of us.”

A small thought crossed my mind as I pulled the trigger. Chae Jinyoon, the man I created. A kind, warm, selfless, and righteous... hero.

KWANG!

The world seemed to grow farther as a brilliant light dyed the surroundings white. The god-slaying bullet pierced Chae Jinyoon's forehead and destroyed the seed. His blood and brain splattered all over me and his bones pelted my skin. A strange ringing reverberated in my ears. My legs gave up as I collapsed to the ground. All sorts of emotions swept through me. My face felt wet from what could've been tears or blood.

"Ah..."

An indiscernible sound came out of my mouth. I couldn't tell if it was the cry of a human or a beast.

Today, I had murdered Chae Jinyoon.

Chapter 127

Funeral (1)

My body felt heavy and dizziness overwhelmed me. I could barely maintain consciousness as a strange suspicion surfaced inside me. Was this world a novel or reality? The sentences I wrote popped up in my head as Chae Jinyoon's heroic tales flashed before my eyes. The Tower of Wish, artifact scrambles, and the Tower of Miracle...

However, these things could no longer occur. For the first time, I realized I had killed someone, and something inside me broke. The subconscious belief that this world was just a novel finally shattered.

Tsss.

Black boots descended on the sleet-covered ground. I raised my head in a daze and saw Boss' dark pupils. She fluttered along the snowy field.

"Take care of the corpse."

Boss muttered as I stared at the tragic Chae Jinyoon lying with half his head blown up. He had partially transformed into a devil and the demonic energy in his body would soon explode.

Boss helped me up as I noticed my half-burnt body. The thin clothes I wore for Jain's disguise had burned when I fired my gun. I staggered as I tried to stand and my head fell on Boss' shoulder. She stood still and accepted me.

A portal opened nearby as Jain and Khalifa walked out. Their expressions turned grave when they saw the scene.

Then demonic energy suddenly shot up from Chae Jinyoon's corpse. I couldn't recall what happened next.

Chae Shinhyuk threw open the door on the night of January 3.
KWANG! He saw a familiar face inside the morgue.

“Hello, Chae Shinhyuk.”

He met the forensic scientist, Kim Joongho, again 11 years after his wife’s death.

“...”

Chae Shinhyuk approached the corpse next to Kim Joongho. He clenched his teeth when he saw the man with only half a face. It was his son, Chae Jinyoon.

“Do you have any leads on the suspect?”

Chae Shinhyuk tried to maintain his composure.

“Not yet. An isolation barrier must’ve surrounded the crime scene. They didn’t leave a single trace.”

Investigators had all sorts of supernatural gifts like psychometry, cold reading, etc. However, not even the most competent could find any evidence.

“Was it djinns?”

“We aren’t sure.”

“But there’s demonic energy right here.”

“Do I look like a fool?”

Tears began to flow from Chae Shinhyuk’s eyes.

“...Chae Shinhyuk.”

Kim Joongho softly sighed. He had no choice but to explain.

“This demonic energy... came from Chae Jinyoon.”

“...What?”

Chae Shinhyuk’s face contorted frighteningly. Kim Joongho stared at him with a complicated expression.

“This demonic energy came from Chae Jinyoon, but was stopped as it traveled through his veins. It must’ve stopped because he died.”

“...”

Chae Shinhyuk couldn’t understand. No, he refused to accept it. Demonic energy came from his son’s body? That was impossible... unless Chae Jinyoon was a djinn.

“You should be able to find the murderer with your abilities.”

Kim Joongho continued as Chae Shinhyuk began to breathe roughly.

“With Daehyun’s power, with Chae Joochul’s power, even rampaging through Pandemonium shouldn’t be difficult. However, we are no longer living in the ’80s.”

Kim Joongho’s gaze fell on Chae Jinyoon’s right arm.

“Jinyoon became a djinn. No, this is the first time I’ve seen such an arm. This is even more elaborate than a djinn’s devil transformation. It’s persisting even after his death.”

Chae Shinhyuk’s breathing grew even more disheveled. Killing intent could be felt in his eyes.

“I can only surmise that something happened four years ago during the djinn suppression operation. An autopsy will be necessary to discover the exact reason. However, that will also reveal Jinyoon's true state."

Chae Shinhyuk looked at his son. A half-blown face, an eye forever closed, a frail body, and... a right arm devoured by a mysterious existence. Chae Shinhyuk slowly closed his eyes as an emotion from the depths of his heart ate away at him.

"This right arm."

Chae Shinhyuk spoke after some silence.

"Are you the only one who knows about it?"

Kim Joongho remained silent and nodded.

"Are you certain?"

"...Yes, but it's something we will have to reveal one day. For humanity."

"..."

Chae Shinhyuk placed his hand on his son's cheek. The skin already felt cold and dry. Caressing it felt no different than a fish. Chae Shinhyuk muttered with a somber tone.

"...I never thought I'd see the day my son woke up."

He thought Chae Jinyoon had died four years ago, but his son miraculously woke up 2 weeks ago and he had felt like he was on the top of the world.

"Today, I lost my son for the second time."

His son passed away too quickly, almost as though he had woken up just to say a final goodbye. Chae Shinhyuk would bear this heart-wrenching pain for the rest of his life.

“I don’t want to lose him a third time. I want to bury him peacefully for Nayun.”

Chae Shinhyuk spoke while looking at Kim Joongho. Kim Joongho could only bow with a sigh as tears flowed from Chae Shinhyuk’s eyes.

“...I will do my best. I’ll take my leave now.”

Kim Joongho left the father and son alone.

“...”

Chae Shinhyuk caressed his son’s face with a trembling hand. He couldn’t say anything as he choked on his tears. He only had one wish.

Son... my son... I hope you have a better father in your next life...

A memory from the past came to me. It lacked color and missed several moments, but I often dreamed of it.

— Nayun.

Oppa called me after watching me practice archery for a long time.

— Un?

— You can take a break if it’s too hard.

He held up my hand and seemed sad when he saw my blisters and cuts, but I shook my head.

— I’m going to work even harder. I want to become an even greater hero than oppa.

Oppa smiled at my arrogant remark and stroked my hair. His hands felt warm and reliable.

— I hope you do. By the way, you didn't forget about next week, right? We're going to the amusement park.

He had planned a trip to Korea's most famous amusement park, Foreverland. However, instead of being happy, I shook my head with a troubled expression.

— Um, I can't go. I'm going somewhere else with my friends.

— Really?

He seemed disappointed, but quickly grinned.

— Then I guess we'll go some other time. Oppa is going to work now, so don't overwork yourself. You won't grow taller if you do.

— Un. See you later, oppa.

That morning remained so vivid in my memory for one reason. That night, oppa came back in a coma.

“Ah.”

Tears flowed from my eyes as I woke up. The dazzling sun shone through the window as morning on Baekdu Mountain arrived. The air at Yoo Sihyuk's martial arts school felt refreshing without any mana phenomena like fogs.

I looked beside my bed at the precious pictures I took with oppa.

“Huhu.”

A smile emerged on my face. I took out another picture hidden below after making sure no one was around. It was the picture of me and Kim Hajin.

“It came out so well.”

I wasn't looking at it for any particular reason. It just came out really well. It definitely wasn't because of Kim Hajin.

“Auu.”

I stretched after putting the picture back and headed to the bath.

“You're here, unni?”

A small 10 year old girl greeted me as I entered the bath.

“Oh hey, you're up early too.”

“It's Jihae.”

“Right, Jihae.”

Yoo Sihyuk had 16 official disciples, eight males and eight females. They received training under Yoo Sihyuk and five other instructors. However, Kim Suho, me, and 10 other camp members weren't included among the official disciples. We would only stay for winter break.

“Auu, so good.”

I hopped in the hot spring after showering. Nothing could go wrong with a mana-rich hot spring. I came out after 20 minutes. Then I switched into my uniform and went out to the front yard for morning training.

“Yo, Chae Nayun.”

Shin Jonghak and Kim Suho came up to me. They seemed to have taken a bath too. I snickered at them.

“Isn't it a beautiful morning?”

“Yeah, it is.”

“I feel like I can beat you today. You better watch out.”

Was it because of the clear sky? I felt particularly good today. Kim Suho looked at me and laughed.

“Why are you so energetic? Is it because today’s letter day?”

“Eh?”

Today was January 3, our tenth day here. The schedule contained a special event.

“N-No, that has nothing to do with it.”

Electronics didn’t work on Baekdu Mountain, so we couldn’t communicate with the rest of the world. This problem could be fixed, but Master Yoo Sihyuk left things as they were. However, we could communicate with the outside world on letter days.

“She’s right, Kim Suho. The only one she would want to write to is already here, so cut the nonsense.”

“You shut up... geez.”

I smacked Shin Jonghak’s shoulder. He kept making me curse when I tried to fix my way of talking.

“He’s coming.”

Yoo Sihyuk walked towards us with his hands behind his back.

“Get ready.”

We stood in a straight line. How long would today’s training last? 10 hours? 12 hours?

The sun had long after 14 hours of hellish training. Chae Nayun lay in bed and stared at a piece of paper.

[Hi, I'm on Baekdu Mountain.]

“...That doesn't sound right.”

She had already written her letter to Chae Jinyoon. It only took 30 minutes as she followed her heart. However, this particular letter required more time.

[I'm in Baekdu Mountain lol. Training is so easy;; What are you doing?]

“No, that doesn't sound any better...”

Chae Nayun ruffled her hair and threw her pen down.

I should have read some books. I don't know how to write at all!

Chae Nayun sighed, but wouldn't give up this chance that only came once every 10 days. She picked up her pen and fell deep in thought. Tok, tok— Someone knocked on her door and burst inside.

“W-What!”

Startled, Chae Nayun hid the letter with her body. Yoo Sihyuk looked down at her as she slowly raised her head.

“...Chae Nayun.”

He sounded somber. Chae Nayun hid the letter in her pocket and slowly got up.

“Yes, Master. Um, you should knock before entering a lady's room.”

“...Come outside for a minute.”

Yoo Sihyuk seemed uncharacteristically serious.

“...Just come outside.”

He sounded kind, unlike his usual self. She tried to recall if she did anything wrong as she followed him.

The tragic news was announced on January 5. Yoo Yeonha quickly ended a meeting and got in her car after receiving the news from her parents. Chae Jinyoon had died. Her parents didn't tell her anything else. She remained shocked until she thought of Chae Nayun. Yoo Yeonha's heart sank when she recalled the cheerful Chae Nayun 2 weeks ago.

“Let's get off.”

Yoo Jinwoong spoke softly as Yoo Yeonha followed her parents out of the car. No reporters dared to besiege Daehyun's funeral home, making the venue oddly quiet and lonely.

“Eh?”

Yoo Yeonha paused while trudging to the entrance. She saw a familiar person under the shade of a nearby tree. Kim Hajin smoked a cigarette while staring at the funeral home with a complicated expression.

“Why isn't he going in? And he's smoking?”

“Yeonha, what are you doing?”

Her mother suddenly called her.

“Ah, yes, I'm coming.”

Yoo Yeonha followed her mother inside. She spotted Chae Nayun sitting in a daze with hollow eyes as soon as she entered. This was the first time she ever saw the cheerful Chae Nayun like this.

Yoo Yeonha swallowed a sigh and stood in front of their family.

“Nayun.”

“...Ah, Yeonha... you came.”

Chae Nayun greeted her and tried to smile, but that only made her look more pitiful. Her lifeless eyes seemed ready to burst into tears. However, she desperately held herself. Yoo Yeonha understood that was the type of person Chae Nayun was.

“Yeah, wait just a minute.”

After adjusting her dress, Yoo Yeonha stood in front of Chae Jinyoon’s portrait and bowed with her family.

“Oh, you’re here.”

Yoo Yeonha walked back to Chae Nayun as their fathers talked. Yoo Yeonha looked into her eyes and softly held her hands.

“Um, Nayun... Where are the others?”

“...I didn’t tell them. I didn’t tell them, so don’t call them here.”

Chae Nayun sounded desperate. However, Yoo Yeonha thought of Kim Hajin smoking a cigarette outside.

“Even if you say that... that person is already outside.”

“...That person?” Chae Nayun meekly asked.

“Kim Hajin.”

Chae Nayun fell into a daze at his name and remained motionless.

“I, I’ll be back soon.”

Then she walked out of the funeral home.

“ ... ”

Chae Nayun couldn't even walk properly. Her legs shook as she staggered forward. She seemed too different from her usual self. Yoo Yeonha could only feel sorry.

Chapter 128

Funeral (2)

I saw an unfamiliar ceiling when I opened my eyes. It looked luxurious with Catholic frescoes that became clearer through mana resonance when I focused on them. The change in color was quite a mysterious mechanism.

“You’re up?”

A voice spoke as I stared at the frescoes. I turned and saw Boss sipping tea in a chair.

“You slept for 2 days.”

“...!”

I quickly raised my upper body. Many things could’ve happened in 2 days. However, Boss seemed calm.

“Don’t worry. The cover-up was perfect.”

I wanted to ask many things, but couldn’t. Boss lightly smiled and looked at me for a while.

“The funeral is starting today.”

“Ah...”

Memories of when I pulled the trigger returned. Chae Jinyoon’s funeral. Did I have the right to be there? I clenched my teeth. Suddenly, a strong urge overwhelmed me. I rummaged through my pockets, but I couldn’t find my pack of cigarettes.

“Your weapon is here.”

Boss misunderstood and pointed to the shelf with my Desert Eagle. I carefully grabbed it. It didn't seem damaged anywhere since aether had reinforced it.

"Where are we?"

I asked as I stored the Desert Eagle into stigma. Boss widened her eyes as the handgun transformed into a current of mana and seeped into my arm.

"That's quite an interesting storage method."

"It's nothing much."

I shrugged. Boss grinned and proudly explained, "This is my mansion on an island in the East Sea. Ah, just in case you misunderstand, this entire island is my home."

"Wow, that's amazing."

I exaggerated since Boss liked being praised.

"Huhu, why don't we open the windows?"

I looked outside at the gem-like ocean, the clear sky, and felt the salty breeze. Indeed, it was worth bragging about.

"Wait, how do we get back?"

"Hm? You don't have a personal portal?"

Boss was clearly bragging. Only the rich could afford personal portals. It could connect to Busan if I recalled correctly.

"I'd like to head home."

"You can stay a bit longer."

"Someone is waiting for me."

“I see.”

Boss reluctantly led me outside. Many attendants ran about on the unknown island. However, none of them were humans. Boss created these puppets from her magic power to perform set tasks. She lived among them.

“Sometimes you need to get used to loneliness.”

“...”

I walked through the garden to Boss’ personal portal while taking in the beautiful scenery. The portal was smaller than usual, but it still performed just as well.

“I just have to go in?”

“Yes, it should be connected to Busan. I’ll come with you. I need to take care of something in England.”

Boss made a call. Then the portal activated and we stepped inside. We walked through the Busan portal station’s VIP area until we reached a crossroad. Boss planned on going to England while I headed to Seoul.

“Then I’ll see you later.”

“Yes.”

We went our separate ways after exchanging goodbyes. I closed my eyes and felt the portal’s magic power around me. Shooong— I could see the familiar sight of Seoul’s portal station once I opened my eyes again. I left and bought 3 packs of cigarettes at a nearby convenience store. Chae Jinyoon’s funeral should be held at the Daehyun’s funeral home. I located it using the Book of Truth and walked there.

“...”

I couldn't bring myself to enter the somber funeral home. I also didn't think I could pass the guards outside, so I decided to watch from a distance and told myself I'd go back once my heart calmed down.

I took out a cigarette and lit it under a nearby tree. A puff of smoke entered my lungs. One, then two... I subconsciously began to smoke again.

"Hm?"

A fourth visitor came to pay their respects. I saw Yoo Yeonha walking into the funeral home. We didn't make eye contact, but I felt an unknown sense of foreboding. I felt like I should leave, but it was already too late.

"Ah."

Chae Nayun walked out and our eyes met as she looked around the funeral home. My feet refused to move when I saw her tearful expression.

Tap, tap. She walked towards me in a black mourning dress. She slowly drew closer.

"Kim Hajin."

And arrived in front of me before I noticed. I didn't know what to do, so I just remained silent.

"How did you find out? Did Yoo Yeonha tell you?"

Chae Nayun forced a smile. She tried to pretend like she was fine.

"By the way, are you a delinquent? Why are you smoking?"

Her forced smile made her look even more pitiful.

"Why aren't you answering? Hey, let me have that."

Chae Nayun reached out for my cigarette.

“What? Are you crazy?”

I subconsciously blurted and threw the cigarette on the ground. Then stepped on it. Chae Nayun didn't look down. Her gaze remained fixed on me.

“Does smoking make it better?” she suddenly asked. Her voice shook and a stream of tears flowed down her face. Immediately, my vision turned hazy.

“Why are you crying?”

Only then did I realize I was crying.

“...”

I wiped my tears with one hand as she walked up to me. Soon, she was only a single step away. Our bodies practically touched. I had to push her away, but I couldn't bring myself to do so. My heart couldn't follow my brain and I froze in front of her tears.

“What... what should I do now?”

She quietly sobbed and lowered her head to hide her tears. Then her forehead touched my chest and I couldn't breathe. I suddenly remembered what I thought about before. That I could maintain this relationship as long as I wasn't found out.

“I, I...”

I realized that was impossible after seeing her like this.

“Huaaang...”

She put her arms around me and cried in my embrace. It felt like my heart would burst. I tried to push her away, but she wouldn't let go. She only drew closer as the pain inside me grew worse.

“What, what do I do about oppa?”

She couldn't hold back anymore and trembled uncontrollably.

“Oppa, oppa, oppa...”

Her sobbing seeped into me like poison.

“Poor oppa... what am I supposed to do... uaang...”

“...”

I couldn't bear to watch her. I knew all too well that I had no right to comfort her. I didn't belong here. However, my arms tightened around her before I realized it. She dug into my body, as though to fill the emptiness in her heart.

“If I, if I... Huaaang—”

Her tears fell on my chest as mine fell on her shoulders. The cold winter breeze blew against us, but the bitter cigarette smoke lingered.

“Ah, aaah...”

Chae Nayun couldn't withstand her grief anymore. Her legs gave out as she crumbled. I finally managed to say something.

“Sorry.”

I could only tell her that.

“I'm... sorry...”

Yoo Yeonha watched the two of them from a distance. This depressing situation couldn't be called a reunion.

“...”

All sorts of complicated thoughts flashed across her mind. If Chae Nayun found out the truth one day. If Kim Hajin found out the truth one day. Would their story come to a sad end? Or would they overcome all odds and achieve happiness?

Yoo Yeonha didn't try to come up with an answer. She simply set the future aside.

“Eh?”

Chae Nayun suddenly lost all strength and collapsed. She had undoubtedly fainted. Yoo Yeonha ran up to them.

“Is she okay?”

Her eyes met Kim Hajin's when she yelled out. Yoo Yeonha instinctively shuddered at his frighteningly hollow eyes.

* * *

I left Chae Nayun to Yoo Yeonha and returned to the Seoul apartment where Evandel and Hayang waited. I stood in front of the door and pressed the password. BeebeebEEP— I could hear rustling inside, but I didn't enter on purpose.

— Who is it?

Evandel quizzically murmured after hearing the password, but the door remained closed. I grinned and opened the door.

“I'm home.”

Not even half a day had passed since I last saw them, but they had waited for 2 days. Evandel smiled brightly and ran into my embrace.

“Hajin!”

I got on my knees and hugged her. She felt light and warm. Then I wondered if I hugged her first or if she hugged me first? Something rose from the depths of my heart as I shuddered from all the exhaustion.

“Hajin, why are you so late? I was waiting.”

“Sorry, something came up.”

I held her tighter as Evandel tried to squeeze out.

“Ak.”

“Did you eat well?”

“Un, we ordered food. By the way, it’s getting stuffy.”

“I’m glad. And you went out on a walk?”

I continued to ask as I loosened my arms to avoid hurting her.

“I went with Hayang. Oh right, I even built a sand castle with a new friend!”

“Really?”

I couldn’t say anything else. My voice wouldn’t come out from the lump in my throat.

Chapter 129

Funeral (3)

I opened my eyes to a white ceiling. My mind felt hazy and I couldn't see clearly. Was I still dreaming? Did I wake up already? The boundary between dreams and reality felt ambiguous. However, the cigarette smell on my body told me the truth. I couldn't deny the painful reality.

“Hng.”

Chae Nayun sniffled. Then she sighed and looked out the window. The emotions that ate away at her disappeared after she released all her pent-up sorrow.

“You're up?”

Chae Nayun turned in the direction of the soft voice.

“Master?”

Yoo Sihyuk calmly looked at her and sighed, “You can come back to the mountain whenever you want. Take your time and rest.”

Yoo Sihyuk rarely let go of the disciples he accepted. Chae Nayun and Chae Jinyoon were two of the few exceptions.

“Ah...”

Chae Nayun blankly stared at him, unaccustomed to his kindness.

“What, got a problem?”

“No, not at all.”

Chae Nayun quickly shook her head.

“Good, then—”

“Actually...”

Chae Nayun cut him off and raised her upper body. Her heart ached when she saw the black mourning dress she wore, but she didn’t want to waste any more time lying around.

“I’ll return right away once the burial ends.”

She clenched her fists with strong conviction in her heart. Yoo Sihyuk shook his head out of concern.

“No, you shouldn’t push yourself.”

“I heard he was murdered.”

Chae Nayun clenched her teeth. Her father didn’t say much, only that an unknown assailant had attacked Chae Jinyoon.

“I was told so as well.”

Chae Jinyoon was one of Yoo Sihyuk’s beloved disciples. Even Chae Nayun felt his chilling rage.

“Don’t think about taking matters into your own hands, Master.”

Chae Nayun looked at her small and calloused hands. She finally found something she had to do. Only she had the right to accomplish it.

“I will find him and kill him myself.”

“...” Yoo Sihyuk looked at her murmuring in rage.

“Oh right.”

Chae Nayun suddenly recalled something. “Please give me 4 days before then.”

“Sure.”

“Ah, no, maybe a week is better. So um... is a week okay?”

“...”

Yoo Sihyuk narrowed his eyes. However, he couldn’t say anything when she tried her best to mask her sorrow with anger.

“Just contact me whenever you’re ready.”

“Thank you, Master.”

“Hmph.”

Yoo Sihyuk stood up to leave when Yoo Yeonha walked in.

“Ah, hello, Sir Yoo Sihyuk...”

“I don’t need to be addressed so politely by a kid.”

“Ak.”

Yoo Sihyuk poked Yoo Yeonha’s forehead before walking past her. Yoo Yeonha watched him leave with a pout, then approached Chae Nayun on the bed.

“Yeonha.”

“Hey, Nayun. Are you feeling better?”

“Yeah, a lot better now. By the way...”

Chae Nayun didn’t finish her sentence, but Yoo Yeonha knew what she wanted to say.

“That person went back home.”

“Ah... I see. Where’s my smartwatch?”

Yoo Yeonha pointed to the shelf. Chae Nayun grabbed it and grinned.

“Hey, which information guilds are good nowadays?”

It was clear what she wanted to do. Yoo Yeonha put on a serious face and spoke, “Leave it to me.”

She proudly announced to Chae Nayun, “I’ll take responsibility and find out who did this.”

“Oh.”

Yoo Yeonha smiled at Chae Nayun’s expression of awe.

“I’ll give you a 30% discount since we’re friends.”

“What?”

* * *

Chae Joochul, the former president of the Daehyun group, had a well-known hobby. He liked to collect castles and owned over a hundred in various styles.

“Ho...”

Chae Joochul had purchased a famous castle in France’s Centre-Val de Loire region. This castle called Chateau de Chenonceau was built during the Renaissance and served as an important landmark in the city.

This castle was one of his favorites. Currently, Chae Joochul sat on a throne inside it.

“To think this old man would lose his grandson at this age.”

Chae Joochul was well over 80, but no one would dare to call him an old man. His abundant white hair pushed up neatly and he wore a luxurious suit over his well-built body. The only thing that made him look like an old man was his cane.

“Secretary Kim, what do you think I’m feeling?” Chae Joochul asked the secretary bowing in front of him.

“I wouldn’t dare imagine.”

The secretary answered. Chae Joochul stood up from his throne.

“You’re right.”

Chae Joochul’s apathetic eyes fell on his secretary, who lowered his body even more, unable to withstand those eyes.

“Shinhyuk should be holding a funeral right now.”

“Yes, President Chae Shinhyuk is handling the funeral and investigation. He wanted to quietly take care of it.”

“Is that so?”

Koong. Chae Joochul’s cane knocked on the ground.

“Something must’ve happened to my grandson if my hot-tempered son is staying quiet.”

Chae Joochul didn’t react to his grandson’s death. He sounded rather apathetic.

“What shall we do?” the secretary asked.

“Mm... No matter the situation, someone touched the Chae clan. That won’t reflect well on me if I let them off.”

His voice lacked any semblance of emotion. He calmly spoke as though it was the most natural thing.

“Call Yoo Jinhyuk.”

“Yes, understood.”

Chae Joochul smiled. Yoo Jinhyuk was kicked out of the Yoo clan for committing a grave mistake in the past, but Chae Joochul had kept him alive because of his useful ability. Chae Joochul felt it was time for Yoo Jinhyuk to pay back his debt after making quite a name for himself.

“How shall we set the price?”

“Price?”

Chae Joochul’s expression changed for the first time as he furrowed one of his brows, but soon relaxed and rubbed his chin.

“Price, you say?”

He laughed sinisterly and spoke, “Tell him to carefully consider why he is still alive if he dares to ask for a price.”

* * *

Four days passed after Chae Jinyoon’s 3 day funeral. I currently sat in Seoul Grand Park since Chae Nayun wanted to meet here. I couldn’t refuse when she said Chae Jinyoon would be buried in a memorial here.

“It’s so cold.”

I could see my breath as I waited on the bench. Ten minutes had already passed since our promised time at 3, but I didn’t see her anywhere.

“I shouldn’t have come.”

I murmured in regret. Suddenly, something warm touched my shoulders and something else fell on my head.

“...?”

I glanced up at Chae Nayun pressing her hands on my shoulders and resting her chin on my head.

“What are you doing?”

“Sorry, did you wait long?”

“No, not really.”

Chae Nayun sat next to me with a smile and leaned against my shoulder. Then she sniffed my clothes and frowned.

“You smell like cigarettes.”

“Cough.”

I scratched my neck. I’ve been addicted to smoking lately. It was worse than when I smoked in the past, which wasn’t too surprising given the situation. What surprised me most was that cigarettes temporarily raised the perseverance stat. A single cigarette increased it by 0.3 points for about an hour. I spent some time looking for the best brand as well.

“You better not.”

I couldn’t help but laugh as I said that. I never thought I’d say something so pretentious to a girl.

“I’m already smoking it indirectly.”

“...”

I raised my right shoulder that she was leaning on.

“Ah, ow.”

She pouted as I pushed her away, then suddenly bit my shoulder.

“Ak, what’s wrong with you?”

“Yummy.”

“Don’t say strange things.”

She pulled her head back and scanned my clothes from top to bottom.

“Hehe, I see you carefully picked out your clothes.”

“No, I normally wear these.”

“Please, you usually only wear the cadet uniform. By the way, they look good on you.”

We talked as though everything was normal and didn’t bring up anything from that day.

“Hey, I’m... going back.” Chae Nayun suddenly changed the topic.

“Going back where?”

“To Baekdu Mountain.”

“Will you be okay?”

Only a week had passed since Chae Jinyoon’s funeral. I became short of breath and trembled when I thought about it. I could only imagine how bad it was for her.

“Yeah, of course.”

Even so, she cheerfully replied. I felt somewhat relieved. However, she seemed to have something else to say as she poked my shoulder.

“What now?”

“So um...”

“Yeah?”

“Wait for me for just a month and a half.”

That was how long her training would take. I knew what she implied. I suppressed the pain in my heart and feigned a smile.

“What’s in it for me if I do?”

“I can’t tell you that.”

“Haa.”

I sighed. From this point on, everything would be uncharted territory. I couldn’t predict what would happen. I only wondered how we would see each other by the end of this story.

“Don’t worry. I won’t run away until then.”

I could only offer her a slight assurance.

“Really?”

She wrapped her arms around my neck and pulled me in. Her face filled my vision. We were close enough for our breaths to mix and our noses to touch. Chae Nayun smiled bashfully.

“Then I can be at ease.”

She placed her forehead on my chest as I rubbed her head a few times.

“Uuu, you smell like cigarettes.”

She shot up with a frown and turned around. She tried to hide her face, but I could see her bright red ears.

“Your face is going to explode. What did you do that for?”

“W-What about my face!”

Chae Nayun stuttered. I smile bitterly and stood up. We looked at the scenery side by side. The park bustled with countless people under the cold winter sky.

* * *

News of Chae Jinyoon’s death swept across the entire world. However, the Daehyun group didn’t reveal much information. Only unfounded rumors and speculations floated throughout the web. Naturally, none were remotely close to the truth.

“Here you go, Kim Hajin.”

“Thank you.”

I came to the post office on January 27 to receive a letter. Chae Nayun didn’t know my address, so she sent her letters to the Seoul post office instead.

I sat in front of a nearby desk and opened it. She acted like a man, but her handwriting couldn’t be more girly.

[How are you doing? I’m doing fine. Honestly, what happened still pops up in my head every time I sleep. I don’t know for how long, but what’s funny is that training so hard actually makes things okay. Also, the food here is at least 3 star Michelin level. The ingredients are all super high quality because of the mana around here. It’s super good. Oh right, I tried smoking a cigarette that I stole from an instructor.]

“Eh?”

I widened my eyes and continued reading.

[I can’t believe you can smoke this thing. It tasted so bitter I immediately threw it away.]

Should I be glad? I reached the end of the letter.

[Can you write back more often? I can write letters once every 4 days, unlike the others. I'll write another one then.]

I could see another piece of paper behind her letter. This blank letter was a magical item if I recalled correctly. Once I wrote on it, the same thing should appear on a letter in Baekdu Mountain.

“ ... ”

I wasn't sure if I could accept her letters or write to her. I thought about running away, just disappearing from her side. However, I couldn't make up my mind no matter how much I thought about it.

— Kyaaaaaak!

Someone suddenly screamed as I looked out the window.

“What?”

Monsters climbed out of a manhole in the middle of the street. I didn't expect to see monsters in Seoul, but it didn't surprise me. After all, monsters would start appearing more frequently from now on.

“ ... ”

I frowned and observed the chaos outside. I knew heroes would arrive soon, so I didn't have to take matters into my own hands, but I caught sight of a vicious mole rat chasing a kid. My body moved before I could think. I left the letter behind and ran out with my Desert Eagle. Immediately, I pulled the trigger and a bullet pierced the mole rat's head.

“Sunghyuk!”

The mother ran over and quickly took her son away. Ordinary people screamed and ran at the sight of monsters. However, I walked in the opposite direction and transformed the Desert Eagle into an assault rifle.

“There sure are a lot.”

About 70 or so monsters had appeared out of the manhole. They all looked different, but the strongest one only seemed to be intermediate rank, grade 7.

I aimed forward and fired. I didn't need to move the gun in any way. My bullets curved in all sorts of directions as though each was alive and chasing its prey.

It only took a second to kill 70 monsters. The road became completely silent as the gunshots subsided. I placed the Desert Eagle back into stigma.

"Ah, don't take pictures."

I admonished the people trying to snap photos of me. They began to type, slightly disappointed. I saw something amazing in Seoul. Someone killed all the monsters with a gun. They probably wrote things like that.

I couldn't stop them since everyone knew a Cube cadet used a gun. I simply returned to the post office. An interesting piece of news came up on TV as I agonized over what to do with the letter.

[Essence of the Strait's leader, Yoo Jinwoong, allows his daughter take on important guild matters.] [The world's rank 2 guild, Essence of the Strait, is caught in suspected nepotism and abuse of authority. The person in question is a 17 year old minor?] [Emergency: Monsters have invaded various parts of Seoul's underground system. The danger level is low, but civilians are recommended to stay home.]

"Ah."

The timing had been delayed, but it finally happened. I wasn't too worried since I already had all the ingredients for a counterpunch. Yoo Yeonha would use this opportunity to purge and placate all opposition, paving the way for her absolute rule.

"Sigh..."

This letter in front of me posed more of a problem.

Chapter 130

Crossroad (1)

[Yoo Jinwoong's daughter, Yoo Yeonha, caught in a scandal... The guild leader's daughter is running the guild?]

Yoo Yeonha bit her fingernails as she watched the news. She thought it would be buried under the monster outbreak that occurred in the middle of Seoul. However, more articles came out the next day and false rumors began to circulate on the third day. Her smartwatch kept buzzing from all the calls and messages. She also received threats and attacks on social media. They said all sorts of things like she didn't deserve her place or that she used her appearance to coax people.

"Auu..."

Her head hurt from all the stress. Yoo Yeonha closed her eyes and massaged her forehead. She usually noticed such attacks before they happened, but this caught her completely off guard. It must've been meticulously organized.

"I've been too relaxed."

Yoo Yeonha criticized herself. She had only used her information guild for outside threats and overlooked internal ones.

"It's not looking good."

Most of Yoo Yeonha's money came from her mother and she used it to invest in various businesses. It wasn't illegal, but she had used Essence of the Strait's money. Falling Blossom also existed on Violet Banquet, so she could be expelled if the public found out. That would negatively impact the guild as a whole. However, her mother's disappointment worried her the most.

"Who is it?"

Yoo Yeonha bit her lips. Too much of the guild's internal data had leaked. The perpetrator was most likely a guild member from the vice leader's faction, but no one there should have so much information on her.

“Argh, my stomach.”

Her stomach churned from the stress. She buried her head on the desk and squeezed it. The timing wasn't good. Kim Hajin's past. Chae Jinyoon's death. Creator's Sacred Grace's Tower of Miracle campaign...

“Argh, my stomach!”

Her stomach hurt for a different reason this time. Creator's Sacred Grace was in the middle of conquering the Tower of Miracle. If they succeeded, Essence of the Strait would only be chasing their shadow. However, they could fall below rank 2 with this scandal.

“Argh, aaang...”

Yoo Yeonha stomped as she cried out. She had trouble sleeping and eating for the past 4 days. It wouldn't be strange if she fainted.

— Excuse me, Young Lady.

Yoo Yeonha raised her head.

“What is it now?”

— You have a visitor.

Yoo Yeonha shot up and strode to the interphone.

“I told you to kick all the reporters out!”

— Ah, well... He's not a reporter, but a cadet. He keeps saying that he's the Young Lady's ally.

“Ally?”

Yoo Yeonha furrowed her brows. Only one person would call himself that.

“Is it... Kim Hajin?”

— Yes, he says he has something to give you. Should I let him in?

“Ah... Tell him to wait. I’ll go out myself.”

Yoo Yeonha left her room and came out to the family mansion’s lobby. It took some time because of the mansion’s sheer size.

“Sigh.”

Yoo Yeonha opened the front door and breathed in fresh air for the first time in a while. She saw Kim Hajin waiting by the main gate beyond the garden. The guard opened it when Yoo Yeonha gave the signal. Kim Hajin walked towards her.

“What’s up?”

Yoo Yeonha asked as he arrived. Kim Hajin held up a plastic bag.

“You weren’t responding to my calls or messages, so I came myself.”

“Ah, well, you know things haven’t been going so well. Anyways, what’s that?”

Yoo Yeonha pointed to the plastic bag. Kim Hajin opened it and showed her the spicy rice cakes, sausage, fish cakes, hamburgers, fried chicken... It contained all the food she loved.

“I, I told you I don’t like these things.”

Yoo Yeonha almost fell for the temptation, but quickly snapped out of it. She reacted sharply to avoid showing any weakness.

“This is just a present.”

However, Kim Hajin forced the plastic bag into her hands.

“Auu, really.”

Yoo Yeonha wanted to refuse, but the smell prevented her from doing so.

“Huu, I’m going to throw them into the trash later. I can’t just have them lying out here.”

“Sure, do whatever. By the way, are your parents home?”

“They’re out dealing with what happened, but I don’t know if we can recover from this.”

Kim Hajin suddenly grinned and pulled out a large envelope from his pocket. Yoo Yeonha tilted her head.

“What’s that?”

“Bullets.”

“Bullets?”

Kim Hajin handed her the envelope. Yoo Yeonha opened it.

[Truth Agency] Thank you for using Truth Agency, the center of trust and honesty. The information you wanted has been summarized below. The following is a list of the individuals involved in the Yoo Yeonha Scandal.

The first page displayed a logo of a half-bitten apple with the words, Truth Agency.

“What’s this?”

“Truth Agency. You haven’t heard of them? They’re the hottest information agency right now. I splurged quite a bit of money.”

Kim Hajin sounded like he was joking. She asked him again dumbfounded.

“What’s up with the half-bitten apple?”

“Why is something like this their logo?”

“I’m sure you’ll notice its charms once you stare at it long enough.”

“It looks bad though.”

Yoo Yeonha glanced over it again.

The following is a list of the individuals involved in the Yoo Yeonha Scandal.

The last line caught her attention.

“It’s fine. I can deal with it on my own. I’m not so shameless as to receive help for such a private matter.”

“Who said it was free?”

“Eh?”

Yoo Yeonha tried to return the envelope. Kim Hajin snatched it out of her hands.

“You make armors too, right?”

“Um, yes. Of course.”

“What about armors for beasts?”

“Why would we make that?”

“Try it.”

Then he gave the envelope back. Yoo Yeonha took it as though enchanted by a spell.

“And read that carefully.”

Kim Hajin turned around and left.

“What was that?”

Yoo Yeonha watched him leave with a blank face. Once he disappeared, she peeked inside the envelope.

[Perpetrators] [1. Park Sangho] Kept secret records of Yoo Jinwoong's dealings in his personal database. Greedy for money. Has participated multiple times in the vice leader's illegal dungeon campaigns.

Yoo Yeonha's eyes widened. The list inside didn't just contain the names of the perpetrators, but also definitive proof of their wrongdoings.

“W-What is this?”

Yoo Yeonha quickly raised her head. However, Kim Hajin already drove away on his bike. Her eyes chased after him in a daze.

The tide quickly reversed. Yoo Yeonha had been at the center, but that changed when the wrongdoings of the vice leader's faction came to light. Smuggling, illegal hiring of mercenaries, unreported dungeon conquests, and tax evasion... Of course, the guild couldn't avoid a temporary drop in rank and loss of public trust. However, only growth and prosperity awaited them after they pulled out all their rotten roots. Yoo Yeonha would undoubtedly lead Essence of the Strait to the world's rank 1 position.

[Thank you so much. Please convey my gratitude to Truth Agency as well.] [Thanks to you, the vice leader's faction are groveling at my feet ^^] [Oh right, what did you mean by armors for beasts?] [We've never made them before, but we can make as many as you want of the highest quality. Just give us the details.] [(emoticon of a squirrel clasping its hands)]

I checked Cube's announcement on February 13 after replying to Yoo Yeonha.

[Cadet Rankings] [Kim Hajin: rank 334 → rank 121 (213↑)]

Cadet rankings had been updated. I climbed 213 ranks and reached rank 121, the top 10% of my grade. It was quite drastic considering I ranked 934 a year ago. I grew curious about how others would react and logged in to Cube's cadet community.

— Damn, Kim Hajin. He's shooting through the ranks.

— I mean, he's a god in theory. I heard he aced all the PRAII tests. I don't think anyone can deny that he's a genius. The professors said he could easily win a Nobel Prize if he focused on theory.

— Isn't there a rumor that he wants to become a mercenary?

— Why would he do that? Even with his gun gift, many high-intermediate rank guilds are after him.

— Um, I heard he might enter the English Royal Court guild...

— English Royal Court guild? lol Wait, is this Rachel?

— No, I don't know what you mean.

As expected, my name came up all around the community. For the record, PRAII stood for Phenomenon Realm Analysis II.

[Congratulations! ★ Rank 100 ★ (๑□∪□)!]

Rachel's suddenly sent me a message.

[Thank you.]

I checked Rachel's rank as well.

[Rachel: rank 3 → rank 3 (—)]

She remained at rank 3 since Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak occupied the top 2 spots. Chae Nayun also remained at rank 4 while Yoo Yeonha fell to rank 9. That didn't surprise me since she only cared about staying in the top 10.

[Oh right, when will you be coming to England? Winter break is ending soon.]

Rachel must've sent it without much thought, but it made me ponder. The new school year began a bit late for second year cadets. Classes would be reassigned and cadets could decide their own schedules like in college. I thought about dropping out.

[I don't think I'll be able to visit. I just don't have time.]

[Ah... really? That's a shame ∟.∟]

PeebeebEEP—

“I'm home~”

“Meow.”

The door suddenly opened and Evandel and Hayang returned.

“Oh, welcome back.”

I greeted the two kids. Evandel went out more frequently these days. However, I didn't worry since we lived in a rich neighborhood with plenty of safe playgrounds and cafes.

“Hajin, I went on a slide today!”

“Oh yeah? How was it?”

“It was like a cave! I went down like shooooong!”

“I’m happy you had fun. It’s time to study now.”

“...”

Evandel’s expression became sour. It was great that she had fun and made friends outside, but increasing her intelligence would further her potential as a witch. After all, Evandel would become a great boon for humanity in the future.

“I’ll do it after I eat.”

“Really?”

“Un.”

Evandel jumped out of my embrace and began to text someone on her smartwatch, probably her new friend.

“Evandel.”

“Un?”

I wanted to ask.

“Do you want to keep staying here?”

Even if I didn’t drop out, I could commute starting from the second year. It would be a bit tiresome to take the Seoul portal every morning, but that wouldn’t be a big deal.

“Un, no.”

To my surprise, Evandel shook her head.

“Eh? Why?”

“Hajin, are you leaving?”

Evandel replied with another question. She sounded afraid and worried. I smiled brightly.

“No, both of us... all three of us will always stay together as long as you want.”

“With Hajin?”

“Then yes!”

Evandel happily nodded.

Baekdu Mountain’s [Yoo Sihyuk Martial Arts School]. Chae Nayun ran to the mailroom as soon as her hellish 12 hour training ended.

“Mister, is it here today?”

The man at the counter grinned and took out a letter.

“Here ya go, kid.”

“Ah! Thank you!”

Chae Nayun took the letter. Today was February 13. Almost 2 weeks had passed since she last received a letter.

“What is he even busy with?”

Kim Hajin hardly replied after the first letter. His replies went from 4 days to a week, then 2 weeks. However, she felt a surge of joy now that she received one and left with a big grin.

“Hm? What are you two doing?”

Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak waited outside. Chae Nayun had told them what happened, that her older brother passed away.

“Hello? Can you hear me?”

“No, it’s nothing.”

“Yeah, it’s nothing.”

They glanced at each other and scratched their cheeks.

Sigh.

“Just treat me like usual if you want to help. Got it?”

Chae Nayun acted the same on the outside, but she couldn’t hide her sorrow and practically cried herself to sleep every night. She only put on a strong front since her oppa would’ve wanted the same.

“Still...”

Kim Suho sighed with an uncomfortable face. Shin Jonghak suddenly stepped up.

“Chae Nayun, you can lean on me whenever you want.”

“Are you crazy? I’m leaving. Also, don’t follow me around. It’s gross.”

Chae Nayun pushed them away and ran to her room. She slammed the door shut and opened the letter.

[I’m glad you’re doing well. It’s almost time to come back, so make the best out of it. Don’t get hurt. I’ve been busy lately, so I won’t be able to write often. Sorry.]

“That’s it?”

Chae Nayun murmured in a daze. Was she being pranked by her masters? She checked the back, but it was blank. The letter only contained a few sentences. Chae Nayun was confused. She didn't want to believe that this was it.

“Did I do something wrong?”

She felt a strong urge to leave the mountain.

Chapter 131

Crossroad (2)

A man sat reading a newspaper in a mansion lit by a dim lamp. He looked quite handsome with well-defined facial features, but seemed somewhat displeased.

“Haa...”

Soon, he dropped his head with a sigh. The door on the other side of the room burst open as a girl in a leather jacket stomped in.

“What, did something happen?”

She sat next to him and mockingly sneered, “Did you blow all your money on gambling again?”

“Yeah. Anyways, Sahyuk, there’s only a little scar on your forehead now. It’s barely noticeable,” the man calmly retorted at her mocking tone.

She angrily reacted, “What?”

“You know, where that kid’s coin hit you? I remember you furiously trying to wash it off.”

The memory of that day flashed across her mind. Three months had passed, but her fury and humiliation returned whenever she thought about it. She had never experienced such disgrace before.

“Don’t make me remember.”

Jin Sahyuk gritted her teeth and warned. However, the man had no plans of listening to her.

“You should’ve never allowed it to happen. I always tell you not to overestimate yourself.”

Tak. The man put down the newspaper. Jin Sahyuk glared at him without paying attention to the crumpling newspaper.

“Sahyuk, don’t misunderstand. You’re still a rookie. I can kill you with the flick of a finger.”

Jin Sahyuk’s eyebrows twitched.

“Then try it.”

The corners of her lips twisted as she fearlessly spoke.

The man’s eyes coldly flickered as she repeated, “Try killing me.”

“Hmm.”

“Try it.”

As expected, she always acted recklessly. The man closed his eyes and backed off with a smile.

“Sorry, I was a bit on edge today.”

Jin Sahyuk seemed somewhat appeased at his surrender, but soon brought up the topic again.

“I can win if I fight him again.”

“That’s what you think.”

“I just underestimated him.”

“So you lost to a single coin?”

“...”

Jin Sahyuk shut her mouth. She couldn't refute him. Three months ago, that bearded man pushed her back with only a single coin and left a deep mark on her forehead. She still found it hard to believe that a coin could hold such power. The mark didn't disappear for a month and she was too embarrassed to even go outside.

"Bell."

"Hmm?"

A woman came into the room with food.

"Are you not feeling well today?"

"Ah."

The woman called him Bell. Bell grinned.

"I'm just a bit mad at myself. An important matter didn't go as planned. It seems I've stayed in Pandemonium for too long."

He tapped on the newspaper in front of him. The woman stared at the contents.

"Chae Jinyoon's death... What's this?"

"Just a little something. He was supposed to live, but someone killed him."

"..."

Jin Sahyuk stared at Bell before shooting up and flicking her long hair.

"I'm leaving."

"Where are you going?"

"To the arena."

“Pft.”

Bell laughed.

“What, you got a problem?”

“No.”

“If you do, then let me fight those guys.”

Jin Sahyuk had been throwing tantrums about fighting Kim Suho and Kim Hajin ever since Kim Hajin defeated her. She wanted payback. However, Bell never gave her permission. He needed Kim Suho and Kim Hajin to perfect Jin Sahyuk. He only had Kim Suho at first, but another one appeared by chance.

“I don’t have any problems. Go have fun at the arena, but it’s none of my business if Satan’s Servants beat you up.”

Satan’s Servants was the number 1 ranked organization in Pandemonium. All 33 members contracted with the infamous devil, Satan. They maintained Pandemonium’s laws and rules with overwhelming strength.

“...”

Jin Sahyuk silently left the mansion. The smell of blood and alcohol wafted outside. Pleasure and entertainment could be found on every corner. Jin Sahyuk walked to the center of Pandemonium and reminded herself of what happened. It angered her whenever she thought about it, but she carved it into her memory.

KWANG. The power contained within the coin. KOONG. The lightning force it held.

Without a doubt, he was a formidable foe like Kim Suho. Someone worthy enough to stay on her mind. Jin Sahyuk wondered how strong he would become and shuddered with her hands over her face.

“Ah... hahaha...”

I want to fight. No, I want to kill. I want to tear his limbs apart and slaughter him.

Her body shook with desire.

On a peaceful afternoon 1 week before school, Essential Armory's employee personally delivered a black envelope and a box to my apartment.

"Hmm."

The box should contain the beast armor, but I wasn't sure about the envelope. I opened the envelope first. It contained a black card.

[Essential Armory Special VIP card]

It also came with a letter.

[You can directly ask the armory without going through me if there's anything you need. It's the same card I use so there shouldn't be a limit. P.S. The card can be used for other businesses owned by Essence of the Strait.]

Yoo Yeonha's handwriting looked like a work of art.

"Isn't this abuse of power?"

I smiled bitterly. She only grew bolder after the scandal. Did I help her too early? Oh well. I couldn't complain about such a nice gift.

I placed the card in my wallet and opened the box. As expected, it contained the armor I asked for.

[Magic Crystal Armor] [Masterpiece] [Charged Mana 2000/2000] — Physical Body Reinforcement: Will increase stamina, vitality, and speed by 0.3 points. — Intermediate Durability Reinforcement — Damage Absorption: Will absorb damage equivalent to charged mana. — Multirole:

Installed with a body scanner. Can be worn by non-human beings.

This wasn't wearable armor, but high-tech armor that projected over the body. Armors that weren't partial artifacts couldn't compare. Still, it wasn't perfectly to my liking. I added another setting.

[The stat increase will be tripled when equipped by a non-human target.]

It only cost 150 SP thanks to the non-human requirement. I summoned Fenrir from my chest.

“Graawr.”

Hayang raised her tail and ran away when the huge wolf appeared out of nowhere.

“Ah! It's my wolf. Hehe.”

Evandel smiled and approached him.

“Grrr, grrr.”

The wolf enjoyed being petted by her soft and small hands.

“Fenrir, try wearing this.”

I placed the circular armor on his chest and infused magic power into it. Immediately, the armor expanded over his body. He seemed satisfied and happily growled. Woong. My smartwatch suddenly rang.

Woong. Woong. My wrist shook from the multiple alerts.

[You have obtained 144 SP.] [Magic power filled with rage and obsession has formed a spell from far away. You have been selected as the target.] [However, a stroke of miraculous luck has activated!] [A mysterious power has reversed the spell!] [An unknown individual's Targeting gift has been changed to benefit Kim Hajin!] [Narrow Escape from Death (4/9) – A special stat, accumulation of luck, has partly unlocked!]

“Huh?”

Why did my SP go up and what's with this target? Did I ever come up with a gift like this? I wasn't sure what just happened, but I couldn't complain about my accumulation of luck increasing.

“Ah, is it him?”

I suddenly recalled that guy named Heuk Jeon from Dark Moon Society who tried to kill Rachel and me during the final exam. It seemed like he tried to curse me.

“I'll tell Boss about it later.”

“It's finally over.”

March 13 arrived and tonight would be Chae Nayun's last on Baekdu Mountain. She packed her belongings and looked around the room she had stayed in for 2 months. She didn't bring much, but it held many precious items.

“...”

Several photos lined up on the shelf next to her bed. Chae Nayun and Chae Jinyoon smiled together in a photo. She held up the frame and lightly caressed it. Something surged within her.

“I thought you'd stay with me forever this time.”

She embraced the photo with a trembling voice. Reality still felt like a dream. Multiple times, she thought her older brother would be waiting for her when she came back.

“Sorry, oppa.”

She regretted it every night and blamed herself. She couldn't help but think he would still be alive if she hadn't left for Baekdu Mountain.

“Sorry.”

She continued to cry even after all this time. Chae Nayun quickly wiped away her tears.

“Wait just a bit, oppa.”

Then she placed the frame in her bag.

“I will definitely avenge you.”

She muttered with determination.

* * *

I picked up my belongings from Cube 2 days before the second year began.

“Here you go, Cadet Kim Hajin.”

“Thank you.”

I received everything from the dorm manager. Surprisingly, I had quite a lot: the VR gaming set, shirts, coats, jeans, slacks, etc. I walked to the portal with a big box.

“Eh? Hajin?”

I heard a familiar voice and spotted Rachel.

“Rachel?”

We coincidentally met and stopped by the park we often trained at. The grass still had signs of Rachel trying to call elementals. She bashfully smiled and hopped to the spot.

“I got hit with a lot of bullets here. I can’t believe it’s already been 3 months.”

“I feel the same.”

I set down the box as Rachel curiously looked at me.

“What’s that box for?”

“Oh, um...”

I smiled bitterly before scratching the back of my neck.

“I’m dropping out of Cube.”

“Eh?”

Rachel widened her eyes.

“W-Why?”

“Well, I’m more comfortable being a mercenary.”

“Mer... mercenary?” Rachel muttered in shock.

“I’ll stay for the first semester. Ah, I guess I’m leaving in the middle, but I should be here until the midterms.”

I had to stay in Cube for one final main story event. I needed to stay until that incident.

“Then, um, about the English Royal Court guild...”

“I won’t be able to. Sorry.”

“...”

Rachel looked sad. I never said I’d go to the English Royal Court guild.
What did she imagine?

“Who knows? We might work together, like in a mercenary partnership.”

“Yes?”

Guilds commonly recruited more manpower to conquer dungeons and towers.

“Ah... You are always welcomed, but partnerships are done with an entire mercenary group...”

Only a few mercenary groups stronger than guilds existed. I could understand why Rachel felt that way since the English Royal Court guild was England’s top guild.

Of course, a single name would change that. Jerónimo. This mercenary group with a lame name always chose the guilds they worked with.

“You can worry about that when the time comes.”

“Ah, yes, you’re right.”

Rachel smiled bitterly and scratched her cheek. I stared at her for a moment before taking out the cadet handgun.

“Since it’s been a while, should I help you train?”

“What? Ah, cough,” she proudly exclaimed.

“Yes, let’s do it. I’ll show you how much I’ve improved.”

The new school year began on March 15. Spring arrived as cherry blossoms fell. I stood in front of my new classroom. I didn’t feel particularly nervous, but rather apathetic. Our new class was called Sacred Flame. My class contained Rachel, Yoo Yeonha, and Yi Yeonghan. Chae Nayun should be in Kim Suho’s class and Shin Jonghak should be by himself.

I opened the door and spotted 3 familiar faces. Yi Yeonghan slept at his desk, so I couldn't quite see his face. Many cadets already surrounded Yoo Yeonha. She would reign as queen without Chae Nayun and Kim Suho.

“Hm?”

She smiled and waved when she saw me. It seemed she didn't mind openly interacting with me now that my ranking neared the top 100. She silently mouthed.

— Nayun is asking why you aren't replying.

“...”

I gave her a thin smile and sat at the back.

“Good morning.”

Rachel also sat in the back and greeted me.

“Good morning.”

I greeted her with a smile. The door opened at exactly 8:00 as the instructor walked in.

“It's great to see you, ladies and gentlemen.”

The enthusiastic instructor released his magic power into the air. Yi Yeong Jin. He wrote out his name with red magic power.

“I am Sacred Flame's chief instructor, Yi Yeongjin.”

We listened to his introduction.

“Classes will be held a bit differently from the second year onwards. I'm sure you all know, but I'll briefly explain.”

Cherry blossoms fluttered through the windows as a sweet scent drifted in.

“Other than the morning class, end-of-the-day class, and two common classes, all cadets will train according to their own schedules.”

I didn't have many days left in Cube. I had experienced plenty of painful and sad moments, but I could say that I had fun if I ever looked back on it.

“Our common class is joint stamina training. You will need to form groups of four.”

After 2 months, I would disappear from Cube.

Chapter 132

Crossroad (3)

Chae Nayun peeked into the Sacred Flame class.

“Argh, when does it end?”

Sacred Flame’s chief instructor, Yi Yeongjin, was rumored to be overly zealous. That seemed correct, considering he spent 20 minutes with announcements at the end of class.

“Is it still not over?”

“I know, right?”

Kim Suho walked up to her. Chae Nayun glared at Yi Yeongjin through the window. He didn’t plan on dismissing the class until the cadets in charge of cleaning duty finished.

“Ah, it’s finally over.”

The instructor tapped his desk as all the cadets stood up. The classroom door opened as a 190 cm giant walked out. It was Yi Yeonghan.

“Oh, were you two waiting for me?”

Chae Nayun only responded with a blank expression.

“What’s up with that face?”

“Shut up and move.”

Chae Nayun couldn’t see behind him even though she tiptoed. She still couldn't spot Kim Hajin when Yi Yeonghan finally moved.

"Geez, why you gotta hurt my feelings like that?"

"Oh please. Where's Kim Hajin?"

Yi Yeonghan's expression turned into schadenfreude. His eyes formed crescents as his eyebrows danced up and down. Chae Nayun held back the urge to smack him.

"What?"

"Ha, so our little Nayun is finally being honest with her feelings."

Surprisingly, Chae Nayun didn't overreact to his teasing.

"Yeah, I am. Do you have a problem with it?"

Yi Yeonghan became speechless. She spoke as though it was the most obvious thing in the world.

"Huh? Uh, no... I don't."

Kim Suho watched her with a smile and interrupted, "So, where's Hajin?"

"Over there. Look, he's leaving."

Yi Yeonghan pointed to the back door. Chae Nayun turned and saw Kim Hajin walking out. Was it because she hadn't seen him in 2 months? He seemed to move in slow motion with light footsteps. His clothes and hair looked neat and stylish, but his face showed no expression like a dead fish.

"Wait, Kim Suho. You're also looking for Kim Hajin? What about me? Am I just livestock?"

"I'm leaving."

Chae Nayun sped away. Kim Hajin didn't expect to bump into her. Their eyes met as Chae Nayun smiled.

"Hey, Kim Hajin. Wanna go out for dinner?"

She stealthily locked arms with him and felt her heartbeat speeding up from the bold move. However, Kim Hajin didn't say anything and shook her arm off.

Chae Nayun felt someone else's gaze and turned around. Rachel walked out of the classroom.

"Oh, Rachel. It's been a while."

Chae Nayun waved. Rachel glanced at the two of them.

"Yeah."

She walked past them with a single word. Chae Nayun stared at the back of her head. Then she pulled on Kim Hajin's arm again, but he didn't budge.

"What, you're not going?"

Kim Hajin smiled bitterly. "I don't have time today."

"You don't even have time to eat?"

Chae Nayun pouted. First, he didn't reply to her letters or messages. Now he wanted to avoid her? Was he playing hard to get?

"I have work, so I'll be busy around dinner. We can eat lunch tomorrow."

Lunch. That wasn't quite the plan, but she was more than happy.

"Okay, then... promise."

She held out her pinky. Kim Hajin just stared and placed his hand on her shoulder.

“See you tomorrow. Lunch will be on me.”

“Eh?”

Her cheeks turned red at his lighthearted touch. She looked up at him and shyly nodded.

“U-Un.”

I returned home at 6 P.M. Evandel paused her online lecture and ran up to me.

“Hajin, I learned subtraction today!” she proudly exclaimed.

“That’s great!”

“I can subtract now. Give me a problem!”

“Hm, then...”

I gave her a problem after thinking for a moment.

“What’s nine thousand eight hundred fifty-three minus two thousand six hundred fifty-six.”

“Eh?”

Evandel’s eyes trembled. She tried to count it out, but didn’t have ten thousand fingers. Eventually, Evandel muttered with a shaky voice.

“I, I didn’t learn anything like that...”

“Okay, then what’s twenty-eight minus seventeen?”

This time, Evandel didn't use her fingers and spoke after a while.

"Eleven!"

"Good! Such a quick learner, aren't you? You must be a genius."

"Ehehe."

I patted her head and walked into the bedroom. Then we ate some steaks in the living room after I changed into casual clothes. I left Evandel after she fell asleep at 9 P.M. and went to the park past the dorms. I planned to meet someone today.

"Haa..."

I sighed on the bench and suddenly felt depressed in the dark. Recently, I hadn't been feeling like myself. My 7.207 points of perseverance barely held my mind from crumbling.

Pssst— A tree on the right rustled.

"Are you here?" I greeted Boss as she walked out of the darkness.

"Yeah."

"Did you purchase the place I recommended?"

"I did, but..."

Boss asked me to set up an outpost in Seoul for Jeronimo Mercenary. I recommended an apartment complex next to mine. It was completely out in the open, which didn't suit Boss' style.

"Try living there."

"I asked for an outpost. Why did you recommend a residential apartment complex? I ended up wasting money for nothing."

Boss seemed unhappy at the price. Honestly, the apartment complex was much more expensive than mine. It cost at least twice as much.

“Let’s go buy some clothes later.”

“Clothes?”

“Yeah.”

Boss’ fashion sense wasn’t as bad as Rachel’s. Her slender 170 cm figure would suit anything, but her choice of clothes was too manly.

“I’ll help you pick out clothes.”

Boss immediately shook her head. “I don’t need it.”

“Cough.”

I felt a bit awkward. I tried to open her up since she hadn’t mentioned anything about the Chameleon Troupe. She still wasn’t sure how to rate me.

“Boss, you bought a huge amount of stocks from Creator’s Sacred Grace, right?”

“Hmm?”

Boss faintly twitched. She was supposed to be dense, but her greed for money was an exception. She should already be a shareholder in Creator’s Sacred Grace.

“I have a little.”

“I think you should start selling it.”

“Why?” Boss’ eyes narrowed like a hawk. She acted stone-cold when it came to money.

“I don’t have a good feeling about it.”

Boss had no intention of listening to my advice.

“But I only ate 3% so far.”

“Don’t blame me if you lose all your money.”

Boss frowned at my remark.

“Kim Hajin.” Her voice sounded chilling.

“Don’t act so comfortable with me.”

“Huh?”

“I’m telling you not to be so arrogant. The difference between you and me is like heaven and earth.”

Her eyes turned sharp as she subtly threatened me. I quietly dropped my head. I shouldn’t have brought up money.

“The reason I called you today was for a proper test.”

“Test?”

“...”

Boss silently stared at me.

“What do you mean by test?”

“You said you wanted to become an official member.”

“Ah... yes.”

Indeed, I planned on winning over the Chameleon Troupe. They mercilessly killed djinns and humans in the original story, but would play an important role in the middle to late stages.

“To become one of us...”

Boss unleashed her magic power and created a human-shaped puppet around 200 meters tall.

“Your stats will need to meet our standards.”

I knew what she meant. Mercenaries cared more about stats than heroes. Clients judged them based on things like strength, speed, perception, etc.

“Attack that magic puppet with everything you’ve got. I’ll be the judge.”

I had to take this seriously. Boss probably wanted to see something. This could be the final test.

“You want me to attack with full power?”

“Yes, use a gun, your main weapon.”

Boss put a barrier around us. I didn’t have to worry about any outsiders with a dome shrouding us.

“My strongest attack doesn’t use a gun.”

Boss tilted her head. “Then use whatever to show your strongest attack.”

“Yes.”

I turned serious and transformed aether into a bow. Boss widened her eyes at the elegant black bow that appeared in my hands.

“A bow...”

I felt her interest as I formed a magic arrow with stigma. Then I infused an explosion attribute into it.

“Could it be... an anti-magic arrow?”

“...”

Boss seemed to want anti-magic, so I also added that attribute. Sssss— The bow emitted a cold mist as it turned bluish-black. This was the color of anti-magic. My arrow became smaller, but Boss seemed extremely satisfied. I wasn’t done yet though. I still had something left to add.

[Medicinal effect – External Magic Amplification]

The sixth medicinal effect I had memorized seeped into the arrow. It grew sharper like a harpoon. I nocked the anti-magic arrow onto the bow and pulled. I used 3 streaks of stigma like the time I fought the black ogre, but this arrow was on another level thanks to the aether bow and the medicinal effect.

“Mmm.”

I released it when Boss nodded in satisfaction.

Chweeeeek—

I fired at the puppet. The arrow shot out like lightning and magic power scattered in every direction. There was no delay between its release and strike. Kooooong—! Not only did it pierce the puppet, but it also erupted and shook the barrier. KOONG! KOONG! The entire area rumbled from the explosion as magic power thrashed against the barrier like a rising dragon.

“...”

Boss stepped in after realizing the arrow’s might. She unleashed her magic power before the barrier shattered. A shadow bloomed like a lotus from her back. It completely devoured my arrow as the lotus closed its petals. Shadow Lotus. That was one of Boss’ cheat defensive abilities.

“Haha.”

Boss laughed as she approached me.

“I stopped it since it looked like it would destroy the barrier.”

She put her hand out.

“Ah, yes.”

“I’m satisfied. As I thought, my eyes weren’t wrong.”

It seemed like I passed. Dizziness overcame me, but I braced myself and shook her hand.

“Thank you.”

Boss squeezed my hand and spoke in a serious tone. “June 1.”

“Yes?”

“On June 1, there will be a group meeting.”

I understood what she meant.

“Come find us if you still want to join and don’t mind completing dirty tasks.”

We exchanged gazes. Soon, Boss let go of my hand as I replied, “Yes.”

“Good.”

The moon peeked out from the clouds and shone on Boss. She wore a beautiful smile.

Sacred Flame was currently in the middle of theory class on the second week of school. Sssk, sssk. Rachel busily jotted down notes. She wore a pair of circular glasses that prevented eye strain and helped in basic calculations.

The professor announced as cadets scratched their heads. Rachel placed her glasses down and leaned against her chair. She could hear her classmates whispering as she relaxed.

— Hey, didn’t Kim Hajin change recently?

— Yeah. Other guys are copying his hairstyle too, but they look better with it than he does. His face just isn’t that good.

— No, I think his face has gotten better too.

— Did you hear he has something going on with Chae Nayun?

— What? Really?

— Yeah, Chae Nayun said it herself.

They all talked about Kim Hajin. Rachel turned towards him, but he seemed focused on his smartwatch.

“...”

This wasn’t the first time she heard rumors about him and Chae Nayun. It didn’t seem groundless either. After all, they ate lunch together every day.

It has nothing to do with me.

Rachel picked up her pen. She might’ve wanted things to turn out this way now that she thought about it. She could treat Kim Hajin more comfortably if things went well between him and Chae Nayun.

“...”

However, she couldn’t focus on studying anymore. She glanced at Kim

Hajin again. He was still on his smartwatch. She couldn't help but wonder what he was so focused on. He seemed to be on it for the entire class. Was he messaging Chae Nayun? Did he not care about class anymore since he was dropping out? Rachel pouted and returned to her notebook. Focus. Focus. Focus. Now is the time to study.

"Ah, why is this so hard?"

Soon, she expressed her annoyance.

* * *

"Hmm."

I contemplated creating a new gift since last night.

*[Dexterity] [Low rank] [Null attribute] [Evolving] [Grade 10] —
Dexterity: Your hands will become more skilled and nimble.*

It didn't seem special, but it was classified as a gift instead of an art. Dexterity applied to everything that used hands from everyday tasks like cooking, drawing, and writing to combat-related things like martial arts and swordsmanship.

I debated between this passive gift and another active gift. I had an active gift in mind that I would need in 5 years. However, active gifts couldn't evolve. As such, I could create it whenever I saved up enough SP. It would be better to create dexterity first, but I didn't know if I could save up enough in time for the other one.

"Argh, whatever."

I hit enter after agonizing over it for a long time.

*[Dexterity] [Low rank] [Null attribute] [Evolving] [Grade 10] —
Dexterity: Your hands will become more skilled and nimble.*

This simple gift cost 2000 SP. Like I said, simple was best. Simple gifts had a wider usage. Of course, it would probably only help with simple tasks like cooking since it was still grade 10.

[Your gifts have become linked!] [With great luck, the link has become even more elaborate!]

I suddenly received some unexpected alerts.

[Master Sharpshooter & Dexterity] [Master Sharpshooter has been reclassified as a high rank gift and has awakened a new ability.] [Dexterity's proficiency has increased to grade 8.]

“What’s this?”

Master Sharpshooter gained a new ability and Dexterity increased by 2 grades even though I just created it a minute ago.

“Oh, right.”

I remembered writing something about gifts having synergy. I didn’t expect this, but I couldn’t complain. Synergy between gifts. I grabbed my pen to test it out. Sssk, sssk. I jotted a string of words. I never had bad handwriting, but I couldn’t call it pretty.

“Wow.”

I was practically Han Seokbong. [1]

Chapter 133

Crossroad (4)

An office with a half-broken sign sat on the outskirts of North Hamgyeong Province.

[Yoo Jinhyuk's Office]

Ordinary shops and stores surrounded the office. No one would believe such a powerful ability user lived here. Honestly, this place used to be a wasteland. An office was irrelevant since his clients came from Violet Banquet. This hillside town didn't even exist before he arrived. Yoo Jinhyuk's arrival marked the birth of this town.

He drove away the monsters to build his office, killed them to get a peaceful night of sleep, and hunted for money. His selfishness transformed the 1 km area into a habitable area. Then the poor and ignorant began to flock to this place.

Yoo Jinhyuk didn't care who came to live there. They had to deal with monsters themselves when he was gone.

After 3 years, 5, 10, then 12... The tiny village became a town. He couldn't help but admit he was bound to this town now after witnessing familiar faces give birth to new lives.

So he chose not to run away from Chae Joochul's request. Yoo Jinhyuk the Investigator. Before he realized, he had become this town's patriarch.

Wiing—

His helmet vibrated, signaling that he ran out of magic power. Yoo Jinhyuk took it off and got up from the couch.

“What did you find out?”

His secretary asked. Yoo Jinhyuk silently walked behind her. Her computer screen displayed a large tattoo. Three streaks, 2 forming a cross and 1 forming a crescent moon above it.

“...”

Yoo Jinhyuk stared at the tattoo. He figured out the location of the murder, but this was the only thing he could find due to the magic power density in the area. He had prepared to suffer from magic power deficiency when the barrier around the area exploded along with demonic energy. Then he saw it, a shining tattoo on someone's upper arm.

“Is it Jesus?”

“Are you crazy?”

“I mean, there's been a monster like Fenrir and we've even seen a cyclops. Who says there can't be Jesus?”

The secretary scowled at his groundless remarks.

“Stop messing around and tell me what you saw. This is important.”

“I found something, but it's not related to the culprit.”

Yoo Jinhyuk couldn't identify the culprit from just a tattoo, so decided to trace the victim. He figured he could find the culprit's motive by doing so. However, he couldn't find any other clues even after exploring for dozens of days. Then he finally discovered a shocking truth today.

“What is it?”

“Chae Jinyoon... became a djinn.”

“Huh?”

The secretary's face stiffened.

"No, I shouldn't say djinn. The examiner said he became something more than a djinn. So... a devil, I suppose?"

"A devil?"

"I'm not sure, but Chae Shinhyuk wanted to hide this fact. The medical examiner seemed to have accepted his request."

However, the examiner couldn't abandon his conscience and duty. He didn't cremate the corpse and stored it in his basement. The cremated body was shockingly a fake made to look identical.

"Then... what about the culprit?"

"There's nothing more I can do. Finding the culprit is beyond my ability. It's impossible, but this tattoo..."

Tok, tok. Yoo Jinhyuk tapped the screen. Such a tattoo wouldn't be unique, but it wasn't entirely common either.

"Tell Chae Joochul that this is the only evidence. As for the information we found out about Chae Jinyoon, encrypt it and keep it archived in our Violet Banquet database."

"W-What if people find out?"

Chae Joochul. He became a sociopath after slowly losing his emotions from his gift's side effect. This old man terrified even the level-headed secretary.

"That's exactly why we should keep it archived. Not even that old man can touch Violet Banquet. Plus, don't you think we should hold on to the only card we have against him?"

"...You want to fight back?" the secretary asked with a trembling voice.

“No, I wouldn’t say I’m fighting back.”

Only a few could go against Chae Joochul. Most likely a member of the Nine Stars or Shin Myungchul, who died 5 years ago.

“If I’m killed, it’ll be on you to tell the world. You’ll avenge me, right?”

Yoo Jinhyuk smirked and looked out the window. The scenery felt outdated, as though he was looking at Seoul in the year 2000. He wondered when this town would catch up to modern times.

“I... still want to live. You see, there’s still a lot I want to do and see—aak!”

PANG—! A soccer ball suddenly hit their window.

“Haha.”

Yoo Jinhyuk feebly laughed and opened the window.

“Hey, you little brats! I made you a playground, so why are you playing soccer here?”

“Huh? Oh, we got chased out by the older kids.”

“That’s none of my problem! Don’t play soccer here!”

KWANG. Yoo Jinhyuk slammed the window closed. Then a lightbulb went off in his head. He could practically feel his synapses firing.

“Brats... children... a kid...”

Someone who didn’t have a grudge against Chae Jinyoon, but a grudge against Chae Joochul. One such person existed. His niece, Yoo Yeonha, once asked for a background investigation.

“No way.”

However, he laughed and shook his head. That boy couldn't cast such a powerful barrier. If he did, he would've attacked Chae Joochul directly. After all, a sociopath like Chae Joochul wouldn't care about his grandson's death.

"Oh right, Chief."

His secretary spoke as if she recalled something.

"Gangwonland contacted us. They've completed the anti-monster system."

"Oh? Great, tell them I'll be there to pick it up."

"There goes our money again."

"We need to pay for it somehow."

Yoo Jinhyuk sighed and looked out the window again. No matter what, he had to hide how much he cared about this town from Chae Joochul.

Friday's final afternoon training.

[Tactics Against Monster Armies]

I didn't have a special reason for taking this class. I just thought it suited me.

"Rachel, do you want to team up again?"

I only knew Rachel among the 40 cadets at the park.

"Yes, gladly."

She smiled and nodded. I received envious gazes from the other male cadets.

“Alright, hold your partner’s hand and gather in front of the cave!”

The instructor shouted. It was undoubtedly a figure of speech, but Rachel looked back and forth between our hands. She tried to reach out, but hesitated and looked at me like a puppy.

“Ah, um...”

“We don’t need to hold hands.”

“I, I see.”

She dryly coughed.

“Alright, line up! Each team will enter starting with Team 1!”

The cave didn’t feel so crowded even after all of us entered.

“Ah, there’s something there.”

Soon, we arrived at a 10 way crossroad. A sign that read O or X stood next to each road. Other teams probably already took the ones marked with an X, so we chose one of the open paths. Ssss— A chilling wind swept over us.

“It looks like we’re up against skeletons.”

“Skeletons?”

“Yes, at least 1000 of them.”

Clack, clack, clack. The sound of bones approached. Sssh, sshh. Wind blew through the army of undead.

“Two against 1000. Looks like we’ll be graded on how we deal with the situation.”

Rachel quickly concluded.

“Maybe not. They’re only skeletons. We should be able to take care of them.”

I held up my handgun with one hand and 2 daggers with the other.

“You’re using daggers?”

“Yes.”

I could use all 3 weapons together now with my new gift, Dexterity.

“They must have a commander. I’ll crush his head.”

I could see a skeleton commander sitting on a palanquin surrounded by 13 skeleton magicians. It should be a piece of cake to defeat the rest after dealing with those 14. Rachel looked at me with a bitter smile.

“Hajin is always full of confidence.”

“Yes? Oh... um, I guess that’s why I’m your master.”

“Oh, right.”

She snickered at our old joke.

“Then let’s go. Wait until I attack first.”

I released stigma’s magic power and infused the daggers with a light attribute. Then I threw them in opposite directions. First was the commander. The attack didn’t need to be strong. Just a simple snap of the wrist.

Whoosh—

The 2 daggers drew an arc, left and right, towards the skeleton commander.

Clack, clack.

As expected, it reacted swiftly and easily blocked the daggers with its hands, but I already shot a light bullet towards its head. It couldn't avoid all 3 simultaneous attacks.

The skeleton commander's skull cracked in half and crumbled.

"Haa... haa..."

Fighting 1000 opponents took a toll on Rachel's stamina as she sat on the ground to catch her breath. Her hair and clothes became disheveled with sweat.

"Are you tired?"

"Yes... haa..."

Honestly, I wasn't tired at all since all I did was pull the trigger from behind. A voice rang out from the speaker above us.

— Perfect! Team Rachel and Kim Hajin, perfect score! Catch your breath and come out!

The instructor sounded impressed. Rachel felt glad after hearing that. She widened her eyes and held up her arms.

"Whoa!"

I noticed her disheveled hair as she smiled.

"Ah, Rachel. Do you have a comb?"

"Eh? N-No, I don't."

"Mmm..."

I walked up to her with an unbearable urge.

“Sorry, your hair is too messy.”

“My hair?”

“I’ll fix it for you.”

I placed my hands on her hair. Immediately, she froze.

“W-Wait, w-why... aahng, that tickles.”

“Hold on just a minute.”

“Wait, why so suddenly...”

My hands moved by themselves as I ignored her resistance. Honestly, I didn’t know why I was doing this either. I just followed my instinct. Soon, I tidied up her hair with a portion of it tied in a pretty ribbon.

“There.”

Her eyes widened in shock when I showed her a mirror.

“H-How? You didn’t even have a comb.”

“I’m wondering the same.”

I looked at my hands.

“Maybe I have a magical touch.”

I practiced using stigma’s magic power in an empty park near my apartment at 11 P.M. I concentrated on instantaneous movement — dash. Emitting stigma’s magic power under my feet — jump. Teleporting dozens of meters away — blink.

“Kuaa.”

I sprawled out on the ground after spending all 3 streaks of stigma on different movement abilities.

Bzzzz—

My smartwatch vibrated with a call from Chae Nayun. I sighed when I saw her name. Should I pick up or should I ignore it? It ended as I hesitated, but then she immediately called again.

Bzzzz—

I stared at the smartwatch before closing my eyes and picking up.

“Hello?”

— Hey, where are you?

That was the first thing she asked.

“I’m home. Why?”

— I heard you’re commuting.

“Yeah, did you just find out?”

— What? That’s because you never told me! Do you wanna die?

Chae Nayun angrily blurted before falling silent.

— You should’ve told me earlier.

She sounded full of disappointment.

“What difference would that make?”

— I could live next door.

“...Someone’s already living there.”

— That can be solved with money.

“...”

— I’m rich, you know.

Chae Nayun quietly laughed.

—Did you forget? You won’t have to worry about money as long as you’re with me.

I slowly sighed and looked at the night sky. Seoul’s sky looked no different than any other night. The darkness suffocated me.

—... Say something.

“I’m just sleepy. Can I hang up?”

— N-No, wait. Don’t hang up.

Her desperate voice echoed in my ears.

— Um... not until I fall asleep.

She continued in a frail tone.

— I-It’s not like I have trouble sleeping. Just that, um, my room is a bit too big.

It was a Chae Nayun-like excuse. I lowered my gaze at an ugly rock on the ground.

— Just, just a little bit longer...

I knew I shouldn’t agree because of momentary guilt and sympathy. I knew very well it would only lead to a vicious cycle. Even so, I couldn’t hang up... because of my guilty conscience.

— I want to hear your voice.

A chill gave me goosebumps as my knees trembled. I looked helplessly at the sky. The darkness seemed to devour me with no stars, light, or moon.

— Hey, just so you know, you'll be a real jerk if you hang up after I said all of this.

Chae Nayun's feigned cheeriness couldn't get through to me. I quietly replied.

"I won't hang up."

—... Then reply quicker. You're making me embarrassed for nothing.

"Just talk. I'll listen to you at least."

— Talk about what?

"Did you hurt your head?"

— No, hahaha.

Chae Nayun laughed. Then she began to talk about what happened today. What she ate, what happened during class, etc. Eventually, she brought up something I didn't expect to hear.

— Oh right, Yeonha's uncle told me something about the murder...

"...Murder?"

Yoo Jinhyuk. His name made me nervous, but I still had a certain degree of confidence. Even his power should have restrictions.

—... No, it's nothing. I don't want to talk about these things with you.

"What, why? Tell me."

— No, I don't want to. I only want to talk about good things with you.

I couldn't bring myself to ask any further after hearing her bashful laughter.

— Oh, I'm getting sleepy now. Looks like the sleeping pills are working.

“...Don't eat too many of those.”

— What, are you worrying about me?

“...Oh please.”

I picked up my water bottle for a sip...

— Hajin!

“...!”

Her sudden shout almost made me snort water. I coughed as she began to yawn.

— Good night.

“Ah, erm, yeah. Good night. I'm going to bed too.”

—... Hey.

She kept going. What was it now? I strained my ears.

— I want to see you.

Those words that came out of nowhere left me speechless.

— Ah, wait! Never mind. I must not be thinking straight because of the pills. I'm hanging up! Sorry—!

She hung up first as I thought about what to say. I could only imagine how she must be reacting right now.

“Why is my face heating up.”

A familiar figure approached as I felt my cheeks.

“Boss?”

“Hm?”

Last week, she spoke like she wouldn’t show up until June, but seemed to be enjoying Seoul since this was the third time we ran into each other outside.

“Kim Hajin?”

“We’re running into each other quite frequently.”

Boss held onto a bag of ice cream. Not just a pint, but a huge bucket.

“Good, I’ve been wanting to see you.”

Boss hopped over.

“What, why? Is it another test—?”

“It went up.”

Boss angrily glared at me.

“Went up?”

“Stocks! It’s up 2% compared to when I sold them!” she blurted out uncharacteristically.

“Oh, you really sold all those?”

I thoughtlessly spoke. I felt confident it would plummet soon, but nothing about the tower campaign had been finalized yet. Their stock price naturally fluctuated.

However, Boss’ eyes flickered with real killing intent.

Chapter 134

Farewell (1)

“Auu, Chae Nayun, you crazy idiot...”

She scorned herself and smacked her head. Her drowsiness completely disappeared after what she said to Kim Hajin.

“Uuuu... ah, wait.”

She suddenly recalled something she had to do while circling the room in embarrassment and video called Yoo Yeonha. Tuuu— Tuuu—

— Yeah, Nayun.

As expected, Yoo Yeonha quickly picked up. She usually slept only 3 hours a day and it was still only 1 A.M.

“Hey, Yeonha.”

— Why did you call? Why is your face so red?

Yoo Yeonha tilted her head and asked. That was how red Chae Nayun’s face was.

“Ah, it’s, it’s nothing.”

Chae Nayun frantically fanned herself.

“Here, here.”

She nonchalantly pushed her hair back and sent a file to Yoo Yeonha. [Tattoo.jpg] It was a piece of critical evidence. Yoo Yeonha opened the file.

— Tattoo? What is this?

“Evidence.”

—... Evidence?

Chae Nayun’s voice turned serious.

“Yeah, this tattoo was on the murderer’s arm.”

Yoo Yeonha also turned serious.

— Hmm...

A cross with a crescent above it like an umbrella. Yoo Yeonha carefully scrutinized the tattoo.

“Is, is it not that useful?” Chae Nayun asked without confidence.

— It’s not a conclusive piece of evidence, but it’s still better than nothing. First...

Yoo Yeonha began to type on her keyboard like an IT expert. Chae Nayun stared at her in awe.

— I’ll look into arrested criminals or active villains and djinns.

“T-Thanks, Yeonha!... Yaawn.”

The tension left her body and drowsiness overcame her once again.

— Are you sleepy?

“Yeah, I’m going to collapse any moment now.”

—...

Yoo Yeonha grinned.

— Good, then sleep.

“Yeah, you shouldn’t overwork yourself either.”

Chae Nayun waved through the screen and promptly went to bed.

— Okay.

However, Yoo Yeonha remained busy with her pharmaceutical company, core technology development, information guild, dungeon research, resource distribution, and Essence of the Strait’s reformation. She still had to take care of many things.

— Hello? Ah, yes, Yi Jin-Ah.

She received a call from one of the former vice leader’s subordinates. Although this person had a previous conflict with Kim Hajin, Yoo Yeonha judged that her talent was too important to waste.

— Ah, don’t worry about it. I don’t think you were involved in that incident. No, you don’t need to thank me. Oh, rather than that, I’m going to send you a special image of a tattoo. I want you to...

Yoo Yeonha paused in the middle of her sentence and looked to the side.

— Hold on, I forgot to hang up a video call.

She waved her hand. — Chweek. The floating hologram disappeared and Chae Nayun’s room became silent.

I worked hard to convince Boss as her killing intent filled the park.

“Calm down, Boss. That’s how stocks work.”

“Ha, that’s how they work?”

Boss mockingly laughed. She was seriously angry. I couldn't blame her since she must've invested a huge sum. If she used leverage, even a mere 2% increase would've netted her hundreds of millions of won.

"It will drop soon. Trust me."

"..."

Boss shut her mouth. She closed her eyes and took a deep breath to appease her inner fury. Despite her cold personality, she greatly valued her comrades.

"From now on, I don't think I can trust you too much anymore. No, I can't trust you at all."

I couldn't prevent my loss of credibility. Her trust in me would probably drop from a C to an F if I left things the way they were. Puuu. Boss sighed like a kid and turned around.

"Ah, wait. I'll make up for it since you suffered because of me."

I stopped her from leaving.

"I'll give you some solid information."

"...Solid information?"

It seemed to pique her interest as her ears perked up.

"Yes."

I nodded confidently. Of course, even I couldn't predict the future economy with certainty, but I knew a few companies that would rise to the top.

"You'll become a billionaire if you invest a million. And if you invest a billion, you'll become the ruler of a country."

"..."

Boss shook her head after a brief silence. Her ears drooped back and her interest disappeared.

“I’ve lived my entire life with skepticism at my core. I won’t believe someone who isn’t an expert twice.”

“Um, I’m the rank 1 cadet in theory.”

“...”

Rank 1 in theory. Such a position was impossible without extraordinary intelligence. However, Boss still seemed doubtful. Without a choice, I showed her my stock portfolio.

“Eh?”

Her mouth immediately opened in shock. The total value of my various stocks reached 2.5 billion. My profit rate was almost 500%. Not to mention, these stocks would all multiply by at least 10... no, 20 times in the next 5 years.

“You see? Now you believe me? Take a seat.”

I sat on a nearby bench and tapped the empty seat beside me.

“...”

Boss seemed to trust me again as she looked around the park and modestly sat next to me.

“Right, you have to show me proof to earn my trust.”

“Makes sense. So, I’ll recommend a few companies. One still hasn’t been publicly listed—”

“Wait.”

Boss cut me off to take out a pen and notebook from her pocket. Her eyes flashed as she prepared to take notes.

“Go on.”

“...Right.”

I cleared my throat and continued.

“The non-publicly listed company is called SH Agency. Essential Pharmacy will also go public soon. Essential Corporation is a well-known giant...”

Boss nodded passionately and frantically took notes.

My remaining days at Cube flew by. May, the month of cherry blossoms, arrived in a flash. During this time, I maintained an appropriate distance from Chae Nayun. I could tell she felt annoyed and confused, but I believed it was for the best. That was the only thing I could do. Her feelings for me were so clear I felt like I would give in otherwise. I knew it was just an excuse, but I didn't have a choice. The final incident at Cube would soon occur.

“Today, we will sculpt with magic power.”

The class from 10 A.M. to 2 P.M. was called [Advanced Magic Power Application]. It had 2 familiar faces in it — Shin Jonghak and Kim Suho.

“You will not be given any tools. You must sculpt the bronze with only your magic power.”

Each of the 50 cadets received a single lump of bronze to sculpt something.

“You're free to make whatever you want, but don't think of this as simply a dumb art class. Dexterity plays an important role in magic power application and harmonization, so do your best to create the most beautiful sculpture. You can take your results home.”

I quite enjoyed the female instructor's relaxing voice. Then I cracked my fingers and began.

Stigma's magic power formed a carving knife in my hand. Who should I use as a model?

“...”

Someone caught my eye as I looked around. Black hair in a 2 block pomade style that strangely resembled mine. A handsome popular boy who looked like the ideal model with his sharp jawline and facial features.

Alright, I choose you.

I began to sculpt while peeking at Shin Jonghak. My fingers moved mysteriously and transformed the bronze lump into a masterpiece. When I was halfway finished...

Ding—

The class took a break. I stealthily moved closer to Shin Jonghak, who was in the middle of carving something like a chimera.

“Wow, an abstract piece.”

I muttered subconsciously. Shin Jonghak immediately turned and glared at me.

“Kim Hajin?”

His eyes pierced at me probably because of the recent rumors about me and Chae Nayun.

“Oh, um, I was just curious. Who is this?”

“...Leave.”

Shin Jonghak waved without saying much.

“Is it Chae Nayun?”

He flinched and glared again with hawk-like eyes.

“Tsk.”

However, he only clicked his tongue and went back to sculpting.

“So it is Chae Nayun.”

“Shut the hell up.”

“Uwaa!”

Shin Jonghak changed his carving knife into an axe and I quickly ran back to my seat. Then I returned to staring at him.

“It must look like her.”

He murmured in satisfaction and focused on sculpting.

“He changed a lot.”

The current Shin Jonghak wasn't as bad as the one I wrote. Many things had changed and more was bound to change. Did Chae Jinyoon's death and Yoo Sihyuk's hellish training affect him that much? He still acted haughty like a young master though.

“Well, whatever.”

Jin Sahyuk gained a mysterious supporter, so having Shin Jonghak as an ally would only balance things out.

I unleashed my magic power and went back to sculpting. Sssk, sssk. The bronze lump became nothing more than tofu in front of my knife. I snapped out of my daze after about 30 minutes. The sculpture had already finished.

“...Oh.”

It was unequivocally a masterpiece.

“Wow, amazing job. This gets a perfect score, Cadet Hajin.”

I took the sculpture and walked over to Shin Jonghak after receiving my grade (although the class wasn’t over yet).

“Hey.”

“...”

Shin Jonghak focused on his own sculpture. However, it had become barely recognizable. It certainly couldn’t be gifted. I tapped his arm.

“Hey.”

“Argh, what now, you bastard?”

Shin Jonghak spoke harshly and glared at me.

“Do you really wanna die...”

However, he froze when he saw the sculpture in my hand. I named this piece the Shin Jonghak Bronze Bust. The model was also handsome, but the sculpture was even more handsome. Just look at this jawline and these facial features!

Shin Jonghak loved things like this. I didn’t make any detailed settings about this, but I could guess from his personality. He blankly stared at my sculpture as I spoke.

“You want it?”

Bzzzz— A series of messages popped up on my smartwatch.

[Devilish Dexterity has been luckily activated.] [The Shin Jonghak Bronze Bust has been judged as a low-intermediate rank art. It will receive a fitting special effect.]

[Special Effect — why art is needed in life] — When a person is touched by the beauty of this sculpture, their perseverance will increase by 0.1 points for 24 hours. — This sculpture's beauty will calm the heart.

[Aether has reacted to a beautiful object. The perseverance boost has been granted to aether (24 hours).]

“Oh right.”

My dexterity was at the level of a gift. It had the inherent power of creating such effects. Shin Jonghak looked back and forth between me and the sculpture. It seemed like he wanted it.

“You don’t want it?”

“Screw off.”

Shin Jonghak always acted differently than his inner feelings.

“Really? I guess I have no choice.”

I didn’t mind keeping it.

“Ehem.”

However, he grabbed my wrist as I was about to leave with the sculpture.

“You can’t do that. That’s facial rights abuse.”

“What?”

I laughed at his childish excuse.

“Why don’t you just say you want it?”

“...”

Shin Jonghak squeezed my wrist, but didn't say anything.

"Fine, I'll leave it here. Do what you want."

Shin Jonghak would be a suitable owner since this sculpture could calm one's heart and help him with his... anger issues.

Ding—

The bell signaled the end of class.

"Hey, Kim Suho. Let's go eat."

"Huh? Oh, wait a bit. Let me get mine graded."

I left the classroom with Kim Suho. He carried a sculpture that perfectly resembled Yun Seung-Ah.

"You sculpted Yun Seung-Ah?"

"Huh? Ah, yeah. I guess it looks like her, but no, it isn't."

"Please, it's practically a carbon copy."

"No, no. It's not."

"Fine, it's not."

Kim Suho acted quite stubbornly in his own right. I turned back and looked through the walls. Everyone had left except Shin Jonghak. He loitered around while whistling to himself. Then he suddenly snatched my sculpture from the table and ran out the door.

— Uaak!

However, Kim Horak stood on the other side.

— Jonghak, why were you taking so long? What's that?

— Ah? What do you mean?

— That. Oh, it looks like you! Someone made it for you?

— I, I guess? Ah! It, it must've been a fan of mine. Let's go. I'm going to stop by my room first, but I'll meet you at the training center.

Shin Jonghak gave a half-hearted excuse and ran away with the sculpture in his embrace. I snickered while looking at him.

Farewell (2)

I went to a restaurant with Kim Suho. It was time to settle all my personal affairs and I needed to give him something.

“By the way, why haven’t you been eating with Chae Nayun lately?”

Kim Suho sat and looked around the restaurant.

“No reason. I have something to talk to you about.” [1]

“...”

Kim Suho had a mischievous expression.

“What’s up with that face?” I asked.

“Nothing. You sounded like Chae Nayun. I must be mistaken.”

“Screw off.”

I ignored his dumb comment and ordered my food. Then I placed a jar on the table.

“What’s this?”

“You forgot already? It’s the jar we got from fighting that snake.”

This Jar of Greed came with 2 uses. I thought about using both, but that would’ve been too greedy. Kim Suho should use the second. After all, an amazing greed would definitely adhere to Misteltein.

“I remember, but I said you could have it.”

“I already used it once.”

I cut him off before he could reject.

“Plus, I’m not saying I’ll give it to you for free. I found another dungeon, you see.”

“Another dungeon? Do you work part-time at an information guild?”

Kim Suho’s eyes widened as I grinned. I couldn’t clear this dungeon alone, but the artifact inside would eventually fall into the hands of djinns if we didn’t try.

“Let’s clear this dungeon together in exchange for using this jar. We’ll split the loot 7:3.”

“You’re 7?”

Kim Suho silently looked at me. Then he grinned and pulled the jar closer.

“So how do you use this? Did you get it appraised?”

“Yeah, it’s called the Jar of Greed. You have Misteltein with you, right?”

“Yeah.”

“Then you just have to put it inside for 10 days.”

“That’s it?”

“This artifact strengthens whatever’s put inside. I’m sure Misteltein will receive a huge boost.”

Misteltein would undoubtedly show great synergy with any type of greed. Well, as long as it didn’t receive a charm one like aether. Kim

Suho seemed satisfied. If I recalled correctly, his affection towards Misteltein should be at an all-time high. He should even be sleeping with it.

“Thanks.”

Kim Suho seemed apologetic and softly spoke, “You’ve only been helping me out recently.”

“It’s a give and take.”

“No, even in Busan. It was because of you that...”

Busan. He must be talking about Jin Sahyuk. I shook my head.

“No, you would’ve been fine without me.”

“You’re pretty stubborn, you know that?”

“Like you’re one to talk.”

“Nu-uh, you’re more stubborn.”

“No, you are.”

“No, you are!”

Kim Suho and I both frowned. Our sudden exchange of praises turned into a staring contest. Soon, we laughed and smiled.

* * *

That night, I went to Seoul through Cube’s portal. The weather had turned dull and unpleasant. My chest felt especially heavy.

“Hey.”

A familiar face popped out as I left the portal station like usual.

“Kim Hajin.”

Chae Nayun linked her arm with mine the moment she appeared.

“Why are you always late?”

“...”

I had dinner plans with Chae Nayun. I would say my farewell tonight.

“...Hey.”

I replied without an ounce of emotion. She slightly shrunk back, but soon smiled.

“Geez, what’s up with that reaction? Where are we going today?”

“I reserved a restaurant near Seocho District.”

Evandel and I often frequented a restaurant near the apartment.

“Oh, really?”

“Yeah, follow me.”

“Ah, wait for me.”

I walked over to the parking lot next to the portal station. I parked my bike in the best spot thanks to my 1 year VIP membership. Chae Nayun seemed overjoyed when she saw my bike. I drove much more skillfully than before (thanks to Dexterity) and arrived at the restaurant.

I felt somewhat nervous that the waiter would notice me, but I didn’t receive any strange looks since I always wore sunglasses when I came with Evandel.

Chae Nayun asked several questions from across the table as we waited for our food. However, I replied to all of them half-heartedly.

"Hmph."

She seemed to have grown tired of it and pouted. I didn't say anything even when the food arrived. Chae Nayun snuck glances at me as she quietly ate. We finished our dinner in complete silence.

"That will be 230,000 won."

"Hey, I'll pay—"

"No, I'll pay."

I paid and we left the restaurant. The sky looked fairly dark. I walked underneath this dreary sky as Chae Nayun followed from behind.

"Hey."

We arrived at an empty park after a few minutes of silently strolling. She finally spoke as I stopped and turned around. I could see faint tears in the corner of her eyes.

She glared at me and clenched her fists.

"Are you tormenting me on purpose?"

"..."

I didn't reply as she continued angrily, "Or are you just ignoring me, fully aware of my feelings?"

I closed my eyes at her tearful voice. Once again, I repeated my resolve in my head.

"Do you really not know?"

"..."

The only way I could remain in her memory was as a bad person rather than someone she had to kill.

“Sorry.”

I had to end our relationship before it progressed any further.

“About what?” she asked with a trembling voice.

“What are you sorry about?”

I spoke resolutely while looking into her eyes, “I’m dropping out.”

“...!”

Chae Nayun sighed in shock. “W-Why?”

“I’m going to become a mercenary. I already received a good offer.”

“Yeah, but why?”

“I don’t want to tell you.”

Her eyebrows twitched. “Then when are you dropping out?”

“Next week at the earliest.”

Next week. Chae Nayun laughed dejectedly at those 2 words.

“And when did you decide?”

“Before the second year began.”

She clenched her teeth and forcefully smiled. “So you decided that long ago? Without telling me anything?”

“Why would I?”

“Ah... r-right, right, right...”

Unable to speak properly, Chae Nayun dropped her head and smacked herself. Her hair had grown fairly long and shook across her face. After a brief moment of silence...

“Fine, I get it.”

She wiped away her tears.

“Do whatever you want. It’s none of my business. It has nothing to do with... dammit.”

She silently cursed and turned away. Tak, tak. Only her lonely footsteps rang out in the empty park.

“...Yeah.”

I also turned around and bitterly sighed. Then I began to walk away. Beeep— Beeep— My smartwatch suddenly buzzed like crazy. Not just mine. Chae Nayun’s watch and even from people far away began to ring. It was an emergency evacuation.

“Eh?”

Puzzled, I turned on my smartwatch. It displayed breaking news that Creator’s Sacred Grace had failed their tower campaign. I didn’t think much of it since I knew it would happen.

“Hey! Kim Hajin!”

Chae Nayun suddenly ran into me. She embraced me before I could even react and covered me with her body as though to protect me from something. In the next moment...

KOONG—!

A giant explosion swept over us. I didn’t even have time to be confused. A huge shockwave struck my body after a flash of light. Then my consciousness faded.

Yoo Yeonha was currently in her dorm room, which was smaller than last year's thanks to her rank dropping.

“Hmm...”

She sighed at the report that came in.

[We looked into every known criminal, but no one had such a tattoo.]
[Our newest member, Kim Hosup, contributed greatly to this investigation.]

The complete investigation only took 3 weeks to finish. She felt surprised since she expected it to take at least 3 months.

“The new recruit must be quite useful.”

Yoo Yeonha positively replied about a bonus for the new recruit's hard work. Then she went back to looking at the tattoo. It looked ordinary, but wasn't so common. The deep color made it quite odd, but also more natural-looking.

“Where did a tattoo like this come from?”

Another message arrived as she curiously muttered. It shocked her more than the previous one.

[Master, Creator's Sacred Grace has failed its Tower of Miracle campaign.]

“What?”

Beep— Beep— A loud alarm suddenly rang from her smartwatch.

“Kyak!”

She jumped out of her seat from the emergency evacuation alarm.

“W-What is it!”

However, she soon calmed down and replied.

[Are you positive?]

[Yes. Their failure caused magic power to leak from the tower. Several magic power explosions occurred around the area.]

“...”

Yoo Yeonha made a strange face at the revelation. Failure to conquer a tower often caused its magic power to clash with the outside world, causing huge explosions. Either the tower naturally reacted like that or the guild that failed had been careless.

The Tower of Miracle was located in Umyeon Mountain in Gangnam. If explosions occurred because the guild acted carelessly...

“Hmm.”

That would be the end of Creator’s Sacred Grace. The corners of her lips subconsciously curled up. However, now wasn’t the time to celebrate. Yoo Yeonha quickly turned serious and contacted Essence of the Strait.

“Immediately deploy guild members to regions around the Tower of Miracle. Yes, as many as possible! Our foremost goal is to protect and rescue civilians.”

A competitor’s downfall served as an opportunity for growth. Yoo Yeonha would make full use of this situation.

“Whew...”

After spending about 10 minutes in her comfortable chair... Tiriri—Her smartwatch rang again. She picked up the call without much thought.

“Yes, hello?”

However, she turned grave at the contents of the call.

Yoo Yeonha ran to the Gangnam Severance Hospital where Chae Nayun and Kim Hajin had been hospitalized. Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak hadn't arrived yet because of the slow news. The hospital was in a state of chaos. Patients arrived by the minute and most suffered from severe injuries.

"Yoo Yeonha, over here."

The hospital's chief resident greeted her.

"Um, where are the 2 patients you mentioned?"

"Ah, neither are seriously injured, so don't worry too much. They're currently in the VIP rooms."

She breathed a sigh of relief, but also couldn't help but wonder why such things always happened to them?

"What about other civilians?"

"We've yet to grasp the total damage, but several mana barriers reduced the impact from the explosions in Gangnam. The damages should be within a moderate range."

"Ah... then can you take me to my friends?"

"Yes, follow me."

She followed her contact and visited Chae Nayun first.

"It's here."

"Thank you."

[VIP – Chae Nayun] The nameplate indicated only one person inside. Yoo Yeonha opened the door and walked in.

“Eh?”

Chae Nayun was still unconscious. Her hair also seemed much shorter than earlier in the day.

“Her hair is... practically a short cut.”

“Her hair was burnt from protecting the other person, so we had no choice but to cut it.”

“Ah...”

Yoo Yeonha immediately knew that Chae Nayun had protected Kim Hajin.

“You know, he would’ve been fine even if you hadn’t protected him.”

“Hm?”

Chae Nayun slowly opened her eyes when Yoo Yeonha murmured. Startled, Yoo Yeonha quickly walked up to her.

“Nayun!”

“...Eh?”

Chae Nayun blankly muttered after seeing the hospital ceiling. Then she suddenly shot up. Her hands trembled uncontrollably and her eyes filled with terror.

“Nayun, everything’s okay.”

“W-What, what just, uu, uaaah...”

Despite Yoo Yeonha’s reassurance, Chae Nayun began to tear up. Yoo Yeonha couldn’t help but pity her struggle with unspeakable terror.

“Nayun, calm down.”

“Ah, uu, Hajin. What happened to Hajin?”

“Patient Kim Hajin is fine. He’s sleeping next door. He’s in much better condition than you.”

“Really?”

“Yes, really.”

Only then did Chae Nayun stop trembling. Then she began to hyperventilate and fainted.

“Ah! Is she okay?” Yoo Yeonha shouted in shock.

“Yes, as I said, she has no physical injury, but she keeps showing signs of a panic attack. This is already the third time.”

“Third time?”

“Yes, I believe she’s suffering from PTSD.”

“T-That’s...”

Yoo Yeonha quietly placed her hand on Chae Nayun’s forehead. It felt burning hot.

“Oh right, what about the other patient?”

“Patient Kim Hajin is next door.”

Yoo Yeonha left Chae Nayun and went next door. Kim Hajin slept on the hospital bed with no noticeable injuries like the doctor said.

“He suffered light burns to his legs and arms, but is completely fine otherwise.”

“That’s great to hear.”

Yoo Yeonha stared at him in a patient gown. He seemed relaxed and at peace, almost as if he had fallen asleep instead of fainting. Yoo Yeonha smiled at him sleeping like a child. She had an urge to poke his puffy cheeks. By pure coincidence, something suddenly caught her attention.

“Hm?”

Below his right sleeve, a black line peeked out from his upper arm. It looked strangely familiar and ominous. An image in Yoo Yeonha’s head overlapped with the line in front of her.

“What’s... this...?”

She softly murmured and reached out. Her instincts roared when her fingers almost reached his sleeve. It told her to stop, to step back, and not go any further.

“This...”

However, her hand continued and pulled up Kim Hajin’s sleeve. Regret only came after. His sleeve still covered half the tattoo. However, Yoo Yeonha didn’t need to see the full thing. Half a cross and half a crescent moon. Exactly like the picture of the tattoo.

“E-Eh?”

She murmured and let go. The sleeve fell back and covered his arm.

“T-This...”

She couldn’t find the words to speak. She couldn’t think. Only her head hurt. Her train of thought cut off to protect herself from the stress she couldn’t handle. Her brain stopped functioning and she could only breathe.

Yoo Yeonha clenched her head in a daze. She seemed to be burning up. Her hair tangled up from cold sweat.

“Ah...”

It hurt.

“Auk...”

Her head felt like it would explode.

1. He talks like Chae Nayun here. 🤔

Chapter 136

Farewell (3)

Yoo Yeonha blankly stared at the ground. Her vision spun and turned blurry as a mysterious chill strangled her.

“...Haa.”

She raised her head after finally managing to breathe. Kim Hajin still lay in the hospital bed. However, the bed shook like an earthquake in her eyes. She bit her lips.

No way. I must've seen it wrong. That must be it.

She raised her smartwatch with trembling hands. A clear picture of the tattoo appeared on her screen. It looked exactly like the one on Kim Hajin's upper arm. An indescribable shock struck her in the head.

“Uuu...”

“Hiik!”

Kim Hajin moved and Yoo Yeonha instantly shook. He slowly opened his eyes and stared at the ceiling before turning. Then they made eye contact.

“Yoo Yeonha?”

Kim Hajin called her as she swallowed her saliva and struggled to speak.

“...He, hell, hello.”

“What?”

“H-How, how has it been?”

“...Good, I guess?”

She couldn't maintain her composure as Kim Hajin looked at her. However, she refused to lose her mind. She told herself this was the one time she needed to stay calm. First, she collected her breath. A rush of oxygen flowed into her brain as if she hadn't breathed for a while. Her vision cleared and her thoughts came back.

“Huu...”

Calm down. Nothing is certain yet. Everything might just be a huge misunderstanding. Yoo Jinhyuk might've made a mistake or someone tried to pin the blame on Kim Hajin. For now, nothing is 100% certain...

“Oh right, how's Chae Nayun?”

Kim Hajin quickly asked. He sincerely worried about her, which confused Yoo Yeonha even more.

“Chae Nayun is, is fine. Uh, I, I'm going out for, a minute.”

Yoo Yeonha left as Kim Hajin stared at her strangely. Despite her emotional distress, Yoo Yeonha knew what she had to do. She quickly messaged her information guild.

[Gangnam Severance Hospital. Patient name, Kim Hajin.]

She found it difficult to type as her head spun. She felt sick to her stomach, but held back from throwing up. Most hospitals recorded their patients' identifying characteristics. Naturally, that included tattoos. All data gathered about Kim Hajin today had to be erased. It had to be wiped from existence before Chae Joochul or Chae Nayun found out. Only she would know about Kim Hajin's tattoo.

[Delete all data related to Patient Kim Hajin.]

A few doctors and nurses may have already seen his tattoo. However, no one would ask if nothing existed on paper.

“Um, Yoo Yeonha?”

The doctor in charge of the VIP rooms walked over.

“Ah, doctor. Can you get a jacket for Kim Hajin?”

“A jacket?”

“Yes, he looked quite cold.”

“Ah... sure.”

“Argh, my head.”

I clutched my head once Yoo Yeonha left. My body shook like I just took an ice bath.

“Auuu.”

First, I thought back to what happened before I fainted. I tried to get away from Chae Nayun, then... something exploded.

“What was that?”

I wasn't sure, but I remembered writing something similar. It felt a bit out of place for a rank 1 guild to fall to rank 7 from a single failure, so I added a bigger incident. Why did it happen today though, and why in Seocho?

“...”

I needed more information. I looked around and spotted my smartwatch on the shelf. As expected, only articles about Creator's Sacred Grace appeared when I checked the news.

“...Haa.”

My heart suddenly sank as I took in the information. I recalled Chae Nayun protecting me. The explosion must've struck me directly since I lost consciousness. The only reason I wasn't hurt was because of her.

Tok, tok—

Someone knocked on the door.

“Yes?”

A doctor walked in.

“Patient Kim Hajin?”

“Yes.”

“Here, you can put this on.”

He handed me a jacket and I put it on without much thought.

“Are you feeling okay?”

I felt my body here and there. I didn't feel any pain, but noticed that 90% of my stat points from energy conversion had disappeared when I checked my smartwatch. To think all those points I painstakingly saved instantly disappeared...

“Yes, I'm fine.”

I swallowed a sigh and replied.

“In that case...”

The doctor coughed and slowly spoke. My face stiffened as his somewhat envious voice continued. I could no longer hold back from my sighing.

“...So.”

What the doctor told me could be briefly summarized. Chae Nayun suffered from a severe trauma. She had developed a mental illness after losing another loved one.

“If it’s okay, can you go see her?”

“...”

I silently got up. I couldn’t feel much strength in my legs, but had no trouble walking. Chae Nayun was only next door. I took a deep breath and walked in.

“Nurse Kim?”

“Ah, yes.”

The nurse checking Chae Nayun’s pulse stepped back. I sat next to Chae Nayun with a bitter smile.

“I just have to stay here?”

“Yes.”

The doctor checked something on his clipboard and glanced at the nurse.

“Let’s leave them alone.”

“Ah, yes, doctor.”

I scratched my neck and waited for her to wake up. She seemed to be sleeping peacefully, but I could see a hint of tears around her eyes. I wiped away her tears with stigma’s magic power. Then I noticed something.

“Her hair...”

She recently started going to a beauty parlor to get her hair done. However, it was now cut short. I touched my hair, but mine was perfectly fine.

Her hair should've been left untouched even if I had to go bald.

I sighed inwardly as Chae Nayun moved.

“Kuuung...”

Her eyelids shook from a nightmare as she tightly gripped her blanket. I tried to wake her up.

“Hey, hey. Chae Nayun.”

Chap, chap. She remained asleep even after I slapped her. She seemed to be in even greater pain now. Chap, chap, chap. I continued slapping her face, unsure of what to do. However, Chae Nayun still wouldn't wake. Should I use stigma's magic power? I continued slapping her for now. Chap, chap, chap, chap.

“Kuaaaa, aaah...”

“Hey, wake up!”

“Ah...”

I slapped her a bit harder one last time before she woke up. Chap!

“Ah... it freaking hurts!”

“...”

Her shout filled the room. I quickly pulled my hand back as she shot up with red cheeks. Chae Nayun subconsciously cursed and stared at me with half-cloudy eyes.

“Ah...”

A teardrop fell from her eyes and she began to sob.

“...Ah, I, I thought you...”

Something warm and soft embraced me. Chae Nayun jumped into my arms.

“I really, really thought...”

She only cried and couldn’t speak.

“...”

I deeply sighed. It seemed I was mistaken. Chae Nayun wasn’t stronger than in the original story. Of course, she might be physically stronger since she changed to a sword earlier and received Yoo Sihyuk’s teachings.

“I, I thought you would disappear too...”

However, the current Chae Nayun was weaker than in the original story no matter how strong she tried to act. Her mind was already half-broken. I couldn’t help but worry. Would she be able to endure everything in the future? Alone?

“Hng, hnng.”

“Stop crying, you’re always crying. I’m going to call you a crybaby on social media.”

“Hmph, I’m crying because of you, bastard.”

By the time Chae Nayun stopped crying...

“Hey, Chae Nayun!”

The VIP room shot open and Kim Suho appeared.

— Creator’s Sacred Grace failed in their Tower of Miracle campaign, causing a huge magic explosion. Currently, the Hero Association is investigating if members of Creator's Sacred Grace are to blame for this incident.

"Haa..."

Kim Suho sighed seeing Yun Seung-Ah on the news with her head down like a criminal under arrest.

Honestly, Yun Seung-Ah couldn't be blamed for this failure. She displayed outstanding leadership as the vice leader. Of the 1000 members and 300 mercenaries that participated in their campaign, 75% had returned alive. Without Yun Seung-Ah, that number wouldn't have even reached 50%.

"Hajin, are you okay?" Kim Suho turned towards me and asked.

"As you can see."

"I'm glad. It looks like Chae Nayun... is also fine."

She had cried herself to sleep and still tightly held onto my hand.

"You should contact her."

"Hm?"

"Yun Seung-Ah. Call her, message her, do something."

"..."

Kim Suho shook his head with a troubled expression. The door shot open once more. Shin Jonghak stormed in and looked at Chae Nayun. I tried to let go, but Chae Nayun only frowned and held my hand tighter after murmuring.

"..."

Shin Jonghak only silently glared at me. His face was filled with rage, but he didn't express any anger or jealousy. He didn't even try to separate us. He only softly caressed Chae Nayun's shortened hair before leaving.

"Hajin, I'll be back soon."

Kim Suho followed after him. Unfortunately, I couldn't do the same. I couldn't even leave for a smoke because Chae Nayun kept holding onto me, but I could eavesdrop on any conversation with my gift.

"...Hey."

Suddenly, a voice spoke from next to me. Chae Nayun stared at me with narrow eyes.

"I knew you were pretending."

"Pft." Chae Nayun laughed. Then she silently moved her mouth.

— Come, here.

"Speak out loud."

She continued to only move her mouth. She might've been speaking extremely softly or acting as a mime. I moved my ear closer. Then she suddenly wrapped her arms around my neck.

"Ah!"

"Got you."

We were close enough that our lips practically touched. Chae Nayun smiled and lightly bit my nose.

"Ah! Hey, what are you doing!"

I tried to get away, but I found it impossible. Chae Nayun was way stronger than me. I stared into her eyes without a choice after struggling and failing. Then I spoke.

“Don’t you remember?”

“Remember what?”

“What happened today.”

“I do.”

I tried to get away again, but she wouldn’t let me.

“Hey, can you let me go?”

“What if I drop out of Cube too?” I frowned and seriously glared at her.

“Then I’ll start to hate you for real.”

“Why?”

“Who would like a girl foolish enough to give up her dreams for a guy?”

“...”

Chae Nayun seemed to agree and slightly loosened her arms. I tried to escape now, but still failed. My pride as a man would only continue to fall, so I decided to just wait.

“But you know...”

Chae Nayun shook her head and continued, “I thought about it. Even if you drop out to become a mercenary, that doesn’t mean we can’t see each other.”

“No, that’s...”

“What, I can’t even see you? That doesn’t make any sense at all!”

“...”

I didn't know what to say as she turned serious. I could tell she spoke from the bottom of her heart.

“We can call each other and meet every once in a while. Then, when I graduate...”

Tok, tok. Someone knocked with a deep voice.

— Nayun, it's Dad. I'm coming in.

“Uaat!”

Chae Nayun quickly pushed me away.

Chapter 137

Farewell (4)

Chae Nayun helplessly looked at me with her father's sudden arrival.

“Ah, that’s my dad.”

“Alright, see you later.”

“N-No, you don’t have to leave. I, I’m not embarrassed to have you here...”

“I know.”

The door opened before we could finish and a light breeze blew in.
Tap, tap. A man in a suit walked in.

I stood up and greeted Chae Shinhyuk. I’d seen him several times in the news, but we finally met for the first time.

“Hm?”

He looked similar to Chae Nayun, but with a sharper appearance. His taller height made it seem as if he was coldly looking down at me.

Neither his appearance nor aura seemed ordinary. However, Chae Shinhyuk wasn’t particularly outstanding as a hero or businessman. He spent most of his youth in his father’s shadow. Despite his average talent, he became the Chae clan’s successor thanks to his righteous character and endless self-cultivation.

“Who’s this?” Chae Shinhyuk asked.

“Ah, I’m Chae Nayun’s friend. My name is Kim Hajin.”

“Kim Hajin...”

Chae Shinhyuk rubbed his beard.

“H-He’s just a friend. There’s nothing between us.” Chae Nayun scratched her cheek in embarrassment.

“I’ve heard of you. You’re quite well-known in Cube. Your weapon is a gun, correct?”

“Ah, yes.”

“I see.”

Chae Shinhyuk tapped my shoulder. I forced a smile and headed towards the door.

“I’ll let the two of you talk.”

I wasn’t used to such a bigshot and spoke as politely as possible. Chae Shinhyuk returned a big smile.

“Thank you.”

“No problem.”

“B-Bye. I’ll message you later.”

I left the room without replying to Chae Nayun. Then my smartwatch rang as I closed the door.

“Hello?”

— Yes, customer. The items you ordered are ready for delivery. I’ve called for your address.

I ordered some items from Essential Armory two weeks ago with the black card from Yoo Yeonha.

“Both of them?”

— No, we are still preparing the drones. They will be delivered next week.

I ordered 2 drones and 3000 12.7 mm heavy machine gun bullets. The bullets came out to around 500 million won in total. I urgently needed both for next week.

“Yes, the delivery address is...”

After giving my address, I accessed my laptop through the smartwatch to create a new setting. I should have about 1532 SP. I gained 2600 SP from killing Chae Jinyoon and 1532 remained after creating Dexterity. Right, destroying a change in the story rewarded me with 2600 SP. Of course, I could’ve gained more by revealing myself as Chae Jinyoon’s murderer, but that obviously wouldn’t benefit me in any other way.

[Current SP – 1572]

“Hm?”

I had about 40 more SP than in the morning.

“Oh right.”

I hit my knees. It must’ve been because they named me as one of the cadets injured by the magic power explosion. I walked through the hospital lobby and sat on a bench.

“Desert Eagle, heavy machine gun mode.”

Tok, tok. I tapped on the smartwatch’s holographic keyboard to create a new setting.

[Desert Eagle – Heavy Machine Gun Mode] — Will fuse aether and the Desert Eagle to form a heavy machine gun using a small amount of stigma’s magic power.

[The amount of SP required has increased due to the many additional functionalities added to the Desert Eagle.]

“That’s a lot.”

A heavy machine gun modeled after the M2. It was larger than an assault rifle and displayed far greater destructive power. It was a true weapon of war, but it wasn’t worth 1500 SP since it could only be used situationally.

“Hm.”

I tried to increase the amount of stigma’s magic power required to reduce the cost.

[— Will use 1.5 streaks of stigma.]

The cost decreased by 400 SP.

“This is good enough.”

Next week, I had to conquer a dungeon with Kim Suho. I found out the last stage would be defense from the Book of Truth. I had to get this heavy machine gun for the dungeon and future episodes.

I hit save.

Yoo Yeonha dragged her exhausted mind and body back home to Seoul.

“Oh, my daughter Yeonha! How was your—”

“It was okay. I’m going to bed.”

She left her worried father behind and buried herself under a blanket. Various thoughts swirled in her head and only grew more chaotic. Kim Hajin and Chae Jinyoon. Chae Nayun and Kim Hajin. Did Kim Hajin really kill Chae Jinyoon? If so, why? Did he have to kill Chae Jinyoon?

Tok, tok. A sudden knock on the door interrupted her train of thoughts.

— Um, Yeonha? Are you hurt?

Her father asked from the other side.

“I’m fine.”

— Really? I cut some fruits for you.

—...

The presence behind the door disappeared. Yoo Yeonha tried to refocus when the uninvited voice returned.

— Yeonha, do you want me to make you some ramen?

“Ah, geez. Just leave me alone!”

— Huk, huuuk...

Yoo Yeonha shouted and dug into her bed. She could feel her father’s disappointment, but this was partly his fault. He had to be punished too.

“ ... ”

After her father disappeared, Yoo Yeonha recalled everything she saw today. If Kim Hajin really killed Chae Jinyoon, what could be his reason? Did he find out the truth behind the Kwang-Oh Incident? No, that was impossible. Not even her information guild could gather any information about it. She only found out the truth from her father's diary. Kim Hajin surely couldn't have found out...

"Wait, the Truth Agency?"

Yoo Yeonha shook her head. There were things information guilds could discover and things they couldn't. The Kwang-Oh Incident most certainly belonged to the latter. Plus, it just didn't add up. He wouldn't treat her so kindly if he knew the truth.

Then a slight suspicion crept up inside her. What if he forgave her? What if her efforts had appeased his anger?

"No."

That still didn't make sense. If he forgave her, he would've also forgiven Chae Nayun and Chae Jinyoon.

"What if there was another reason?"

If Kim Hajin murdered Chae Jinyoon, the only person who might know why was...

"Yoo Jinhyuk."

He was also the one who found out about Kim Hajin's tattoo. In that case, he might know more about it. Yoo Yeonha quickly made a call.

[You are unable to call the receiver because your number has been blocked.]

"Hah?"

Yoo Yeonha felt dumbstruck and murmured with a red face.

"You blocked me?"

I'll tell Dad! She suddenly thought as she gritted her teeth.

“Blocked...”

The fact that Yoo Jinhyuk blocked her only reassured her.

Why would he block me? He doesn't even know that I saw Kim Hajin's tattoo.

Yoo Jinhyuk must be hiding something from her.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha thought hard under her blanket, but the door suddenly shot open.

“Yoo Yeonha, get up.”

A cold voice rang out. Yoo Yeonha felt a chill down her back and peeked out of the blanket. Her mother, Jin Yeojung, sharply glared at her.

“M-Mom?”

“What did you do? Your father is drinking and calling your name.”

“Eh? No, I didn't do any—”

“Yeah right. Come out and apologize.”

“Ah, but I'm in the middle of something impor—”

“Hurry up!”

“Ah, wait. Aah.”

Jin Yeojung dragged her out of her room.

I arrived at a nameless dungeon with Kim Suho on the weekend. It was a stage-type dungeon hidden in a swamp with giant alligators.

I worried at first since I didn't know much about this dungeon, but I felt fully confident now with Kim Suho after I mapped out the dungeon with the Book of Truth. We made a cheat-like pair together. I guess you could say we complemented each other's weaknesses. Each stage contained dozens of mobs and one boss monster. I easily took care of all the small fries while Kim Suho slashed all the boss monsters in half like tofu.

"This looks like the final stage."

We smoothly arrived at the final stage, which carried a slightly different atmosphere. An ominous open field stood in front of us.

Kim Suho pulled out Misteltein. Then a message popped up in front of us.

[Final Stage – survive for 30 minutes against an army of high-intermediate rank, grade 8 monsters.]

"...High-intermediate rank?"

"Whoo!"

Kim Suho frowned as I cheered. The final stage was defense like the Book of Truth stated, which was advantageous for me.

"Surviving for 30 minutes. Does that include..."

"Them?"

Kim Suho and I turned around. Three high school girls trembled behind us in fear.

"Do you think they're NPCs or real people?" I asked Kim Suho.

"...I'm not sure."

“Geez, we’re not NPCs!”

They overheard us and one of them bravely shouted, “We’re cadets from the Military Agent Academy!”

“Okay, okay.”

NPCs existed in some dungeons and towers. Naturally, they were usually people of that world and not high school girls from Earth.

“I’ll set up a bunker just in case.”

“A bunker?”

I consumed one streak of stigma to form a bunker. I learned how to precisely use stigma after obtaining Dexterity. Stigma’s magic power manifested according to my will, but I required Dexterity to materialize exactly what I imagined.

“Wow, what’s this?”

I created a bunker that resembled one from the famous game Starcraft.

“Stay inside.”

“Thank you!”

The high school girls scurried inside.

“Wow, that’s amazing. How long can it last?”

“It’s not that strong. I only used one... er, a little bit of magic power. It should be enough to protect them from getting caught in the crossfire.”

Kim Suho seemed more relaxed with the bunker protecting the girls.

Clack, clack. Countless monsters began to appear in the field. Ghouls, zombies, banshees, flesh golems... They were all undead.

“30 minutes.”

I took out the Desert Eagle and set an alarm on my smartwatch.

“Kim Suho, have you ever played any games like this?”

“Hm?”

“In tower defense games, waves of monsters grow stronger as time passes.”

I transformed the Desert Eagle into an assault rifle.

“I’ll deal with the front, so you deal with the back. You can dodge my bullets, right?”

“As long as you aren’t shooting too wildly.”

“Don’t worry.”

I fixed the assault rifle on the ground and infused more of stigma’s magic power. Then it grew in size and transformed into a heavy machine gun on a tripod.

“Oh? Isn’t that new?”

“It’s a bit stronger than an assault rifle. Should I shoot first? Or do you want to lead?”

“You can go ahead. I’ll dodge your bullets on my own.”

“Alright, run!”

Paat! Kim Suho shot forward faster than my bullets.

“Scan.”

I murmured as I held the heavy machine gun. This weapon of mass destruction hindered the movements of its user and prevented precise aiming. However...

Tududududu—!

Its destructive power made up for its flaws. The barrel flashed white as bullets shot forward like cannon shells, each striking 3-4 monsters.

Koooong—!

One magazine carried 300 bullets and the gun had a firing rate of 1300 bullets per minute. I could use up all my bullets in just 3 minutes. However, I purposely maintained a slow speed to avoid hitting Kim Suho and to kill several enemies with each bullet.

Clang, clang, clang—

Bullet casings rained down on the ground.

Chwiing—!

A claw suddenly shot towards me. The magic power reinforcement seal on my obsidian bracelet easily blocked such attacks.

“Kueeek—!”

Next, a ghoul ran towards me. I activated bullet time because of its unexpected speed. The world slowed as my awareness sped up. Hunter Ghoul. It was an intermediate rank monster many times faster than others at its level. It figured out that most of my attacks flew low and cleverly jumped.

However, a mob monster was still just a mob monster.

I instantly twisted the machine gun's handle at a sharp angle and fired. Two curving bullets pierced the hunter ghoul's head.

“Keuk!”

It fell to the ground with its head blown up. The battle had become messier since I focused on the ghoul. Thankfully, Kim Suho held back the stronger monsters. With bullet time still active, I turned the machine gun once again. I fanned it out in a cone and fired in every direction.

Dudududu—

My calculated barrage destroyed the enemy lines. A bullet pierced a ghoul's chest and blew up a zombie's head. Flesh and brain splattered everywhere. The zombie and ghoul fell to their knees without moving a single step.

The sight couldn't have been good for their mental health, even for undead monsters.

I used up around 1000 bullets. As planned, I took care of the small fries while Kim Suho cut down the elites. The final stage came to an end after 30 minutes. Then we approached the bunker behind us.

“Hey, you all there?”

However, the high school girls had disappeared. Kim Suho murmured with a sigh.

“They were NPCs.”

“Yeah.”

Modern people who appeared in dungeons as NPCs. We knew what that meant and couldn't express our joy in beating the dungeon.

“Hajin, look over there.”

Kim Suho pointed to 3 beads huddled together on the ground like the high school girls.

“Ah.”

Those who died in dungeons sometimes became NPCs. These beads were all that remained of them.

[Low-intermediate rank Pink Soul Bead] — Formed from the condensed soul of an individual killed inside the dungeon.

Soul beads could be used for magic seals and enchantments. Even low-intermediate rank beads easily sold for hundreds of millions on Violet Banquet. We looked at each other. Neither of us seemed too keen on using them.

“What should we do?” Kim Suho asked.

“We’ll have to give them back. To their families.”

That seemed like the best solution.

“Right.”

We knew full well what these beads would mean to the parents who lost their children.

“Let’s open up that chest first.”

I walked towards the chest in the middle of the open field. Kim Suho followed after me.

“Oh, there’s more than one this time!”

It contained 3 items: a bow, a wrist protector, and a leather belt. They formed a set together with their sand-colored appearances.

“Ah, this is it.”

“Hm? You know about them?”

“No, it’s nothing.”

[Blessed Bow of Horus] [Egyptian Archer’s Wrist Protector] [Leather Belt for the Strong]

The bow and wrist protector were supposed to become the main equipment for Valerion, an executive of the djinn group, Sin. I glanced at Kim Suho staring at the contents and asked in a cheerful voice, “How should we split these?”

“Hm?”

Kim Suho smiled.

“I’ll leave it to you since you found this place and we also beat the final stage thanks to you.”

“Okay.”

Honestly, Kim Suho didn’t need the bow or wrist protector. After all, he was a close range combatant. The only item that suited him was the leather belt, but there was just one problem.

“...You take this leather belt.”

“You’re taking the other two?”

Kim Suho didn’t mean anything by it, but I felt slightly guilty. This leather belt was simply an artifact for training.

[Leather Belt for the Strong] [Ancient Artifact] — When used, a maximum of 1000 jin can be added to the wearer’s body. — Will increase the physical growth of its wearer.

“Can’t you read the item description?”

I used my gift, Observation and Reading, but other people should be able to read the descriptions too. It only required enlightenment and the special stat called insight.

“Oh, enlightenment? I’m bad at these things, so I usually get items appraised.”

“I see.”

“So how do you use this leather belt?”

Kim Suho picked up the leather belt with a smile. I suddenly felt sorry.

“Training?”

Unlike what I expected, his eyes sparkled like he found a treasure.

“Y-Yeah, your body will get heavier if you wear it. Look over there, you can change the weight too.”

“Oooh.”

Kim Suho exclaimed in awe. However, my expression darkened. He only made me feel worse.

“It’s kind of like a portable gravity room, but a bit better. It’s an ancient artifact that speeds up your physical growth.”

“R-Really? That’s amazing! You’re giving this to me?”

“What I’m taking is better.”

Honestly, they were incomparably better.

[Blessed Bow of Horus] [Ancient Holy] [Ghost attribute] A bow blessed by Horus, son of the ancient Egyptian god, Osiris. — Power of Horus: Arrows shot with this bow are endowed with sacred flames. Sacred flames are particularly powerful against evil spirits. You can form a healing arrow by imbuing magic power into the bow. — Sun of Horus: From 6 A.M. to 6 P.M., the user of this bow's vision will improve. — Moon of Horus: From 6 P.M. to 6 A.M., the user of this bow can move more quietly.

An artifact bow with 3 different abilities. I carefully picked it up. I would've felt bad enough just taking this, but received another unexpected benefit.

[Your gift, Master Sharpshooter, has linked with Sun of Horus and stigma.] [When you activate Sun of Horus while holding the Blessed Bow of Horus, it will fuse with thousand-mile eyes and allow you to use Eye of Horus for 5 seconds.]

[Eye of Horus] — Your vision will extend far beyond the horizon, piercing through people's feelings and the laws of the universe.

“...”

All sorts of jaw-dropping messages popped up as Kim Suho innocently asked.

“Oh right, Hajin. You're good with bows too, right?”

“Huh? Oh, yeah. I am...”

“That's great! You got yourself a bow and also... a wrist protector, I think?”

He was too pure. I stared at Kim Suho and felt extremely sorry.

Chapter 138

Final Incident (1)

I ate dinner with Kim Suho and returned home after clearing the dungeon. Beep, beep, beep. I entered the password and opened the door. However, Evandel didn't greet me like usual. I could hear 2 kids having fun and wondered if Evandel was mad at me for coming home late when I saw an unexpected guest. Evandel was with a girl I had never seen before.

"Hajin."

Evandel smiled and waved. I curiously looked back and forth between Evandel and the pretty girl next to her. She introduced herself.

"Hello."

"Uh... Hi."

I greeted her and looked at Evandel for an explanation. Evandel simply smiled and introduced her.

"She's my friend."

"I'm Yun Haeyeon."

The 2 children bowed at a 90 degree angle. I couldn't help but smile at their adorable gesture.

"H-Hello. You must be the friend Evandel mentioned before."

"Un! Haeyeon said her parents were busy tonight, so I told her she could eat dinner at my place!"

"Oh? What did you order?"

“Haeyeon is giving it a go!”

“Giving it a go?”

Evandel giggled as Haeyeon sheepishly looked down and scratched her cheek.

“Yep, Haeyeon says she’s never ordered food before.”

“Oh...”

Everything was a challenge for children. I had trouble ordering food when I was 5 too.

“Don’t order anything. I’ll cook tonight since your friend is here.”

“Wow, really?”

Evandel’s face turned even brighter. Cooking was one of the skills I acquired with Dexterity. I could copy what most professional chefs did on TV as long as I knew the recipe. It surprised Evandel when I first showed her.

“Alright, then wait just a bit.”

I opened the fridge. We had more than enough ingredients.

“What do you want to eat?”

“I—”

“I’m asking Haeyeon.”

“...”

Guests first. Evandel pouted, but quickly smiled again as I patted her.

“I’m... fine with anything...”

“Steak please!” Evandel’s eyes sparkled.

“Haeyeon, are you okay with steak?”

“Yes, I like it.”

“Good.”

I took out 4 pieces of beef sirloin and some seasoning. Three were for Evandel and the other was for Haeyeon and Hayang.

“Can I watch you cook?”

“Sure.”

I began to cook under the curious eyes of 2 children. Tak, tak, tak— I quickly chopped up some onions and garlic. Chwiik— Then I made a 3 star Michelin chef’s steak sauce. Tzzzzz— After that, I plated the steak with garnish and topped it off with the sauce. Finally, I presented the completed dish to the awestruck children and cat.

“Here you go.”

“Whoa.”

Evandel and Haeyeon stared at the steak in anticipation as I checked my smartwatch.

[A sense of satisfaction and fatigue recovery seeps into your well-cooked dish.] [8:52 P.M.]

It was almost time for my appointment at 9 P.M.

“Alright, I’m going out for a bit. Let the steak rest for 5 minutes before you eat.”

“Un!”

“Thank you for the food.”

I left behind the 2 kids eagerly waiting to eat and arrived at a nearby park. I checked the items I obtained today while waiting.

[Egyptian Archer's Wrist Protector] [Ancient Artifact] [Sand attribute] [Stored Mana 3000/3000] — Ancient Archer Proficiency: Will increase your proficiency with bows. — Blessing of the Desert: Will allow you to cast a sand barrier using stored mana.

The Blessed Bow of Horus and the Egyptian Archer's Wrist Protector. These 2 items, which I called the Egyptian set, would serve me well at least until the middle stages of the story.

"Hmm..."

I couldn't help but hesitate between a bow and a gun now. At this point, it was hard to say one was better than the other.

My gun wasn't ordinary. As my main weapon, I had attached all sorts of additional options to the Desert Eagle. First was the attack boost for every monster I instantly killed. This effect alone made my Desert Eagle 2.2 times stronger than any other Desert Eagle. It could also transform into a shotgun, anti-material sniper rifle, assault rifle, and heavy machine gun. I could display great firepower in various situations. The only flaw was that I couldn't use aether for defense since I fused it with the gun to change forms.

"I'll only use a bow as an ultimate ability."

That seemed to be the right choice. I stared at the sand-colored bow and tried attaching aether to it. Immediately, the ancient bow transformed into a more modern and elegant design.

"Is it because of its aesthetic greed? It keeps doing this."

Even my guns took on new forms ever since aether received the aesthetic greed. I couldn't quite describe it, but everything became more beautiful.

"Did you get a new weapon?"

The person I waited for finally arrived after about 10 minutes. Boss approached with a smile.

“You were right. Creator’s Sacred Grace failed their tower campaign. Horribly, at that.”

“Are you happy?”

“Of course, haha.”

The stock price of Creator’s Sacred Grace fell by 30% in just 4 days. It took a massive dip on the first day and steadily fell ever since.

“So, what’s your request?”

“Will you accept it?”

“As long as it’s possible.”

I requested her help for the upcoming incident in exchange for stock-related information.

“Have you heard of the Dark Moon Society?”

The Dark Moon Society would infiltrate Cube during this episode. This was Lancaster’s first real move in the original story and I already confirmed both using the Book of Truth.

“Dark Moon Society? How do you know about them?” Boss frowned suspiciously.

“Well, you see...”

I scratched my neck and awkwardly explained. I didn’t have a choice. The co-author would’ve surely made the upcoming incident messier. It was only natural to gain an ally or two to balance things out.

“They tried to kill me during the previous final exam.”

“What?”

Boss’ expression turned vicious. As expected of the Yaksha, she valued her comrades dearly. I felt proud.

I looked over Cube’s dropout form before class on May 1 and wondered what to put down for my reason. After much thought, I only wrote 2 words — [career change]. Then I signed the document.

“Good morning! I will announce the random teams. Remember, you will be in pairs.”

Our morning common class was more or less a walk in the park. We would train in a VR dungeon today. It was no different than the mock dungeon trial from last year, except the government sponsored it and we used VR instead.

“Team 6, Yoo Yeonha and Kim Hajin.”

Yoo Yeonha twitched in front of the VR capsule. She turned her head like a machine as our eyes met and sighed when I smiled.

“Now, sit together with your teammate.”

She slowly walked up and sat next to me.

“...Hello.”

“Hey.”

“Alright, listen up! The visual effects for this dungeon will be more realistic than the real thing, so stay on your toes! Now, put on your helmets!”

I put on my helmet after the instructor’s enthusiastic introduction. A vivid scene spread out in front of me.

— Wow, it's like I'm in a LAN café.

I murmured.

“...”

However, Yoo Yeonha remained silent. She wasn't even logged on from the looks of it. I took off my helmet and stared at her. She kept frowning at my right arm. I flicked her in the forehead.

“Ak.”

“Ak? What are you doing?”

“N-Nothing. Let's start.”

Yoo Yeonha put on her helmet and walked on eggshells around me. I ignored her and put on my helmet. She was probably up to her usual delusional antics. Then we teleported into a huge cave.

— Where should we go?

— Let's go straight.

— Okay... kyak!

[A giant bat has appeared!]

— Why are you so surprised? Oh right, you hate scary things.

Yoo Yeonha hated everything scary from ghosts to jump scares.

— N-No, I don't.

— How should we kill it?

—... Attack its ears.

Yoo Yeonha murmured. I shot twice according to her instructions and instantly killed it.

— Next up is a zombie. Weakness?

— Head.

— Got it.

We progressed smoothly and quickly reached the end. The 30 minute course only took us 20 minutes.

“...Um.”

“Hm?”

Yoo Yeonha carefully asked.

“I... I heard you were dropping out.”

“Did Chae Nayun tell you?”

Yoo Yeonha nodded.

“She’s quite a blabbermou—”

“She was crying.”

“What?”

Yoo Yeonha’s voice became heavier.

“She was crying?”

“Yes, she said she didn’t want you to leave.”

“Uh...”

I felt a mysterious gaze and turned to the side. Then I made eye contact with Rachel. However, she quickly looked away after seeming to have overheard us.

“...It’s not something I have a say in. I believe you’ll deal with it properly.”

Yoo Yeonha murmured before leaving.

“Team 6 has finished.”

* * *

Lunch came after the morning class. I ate alone at Cube’s cafeteria. Rachel also ate there, but a female agent disguised as a cadet stood next to her, so we only exchanged glances.

“I’ll take the special set.”

“Alrighty.”

Someone sat next to me as I sat with my food. It was Chae Nayun.

“H-Hi.”

She awkwardly waved as I looked at her plate.

“You can eat cafeteria food?”

“O-Of course.”

Chae Nayun courageously ate a sausage. Nom, nom... However, her chewing began to slow.

“So, um... when are you leaving?” she asked without swallowing the food in her mouth.

“This week.”

Kuhuk. She loudly coughed and almost choked. Luckily, she managed to swallow before anything bad happened. Chae Nayun looked at her plate dejectedly. Then she clenched her fists and slammed on the table.

“Hey.”

“...What.”

“Can’t you stay?”

I could only shake my head.

“Ah, okay. Well, you should leave if you have to. I can... I can also find someone else to be my boyfriend,” she mumbled as she glanced at me.

“Yeah, go ahead.”

“...I’m kidding. I won’t date anyone else.”

“You should.”

Chae Nayun immediately frowned. However, I quickly finished my food and stood up. She ran after me. I left the cafeteria after returning my tray and walked to a nearby park. There, a second battle began between us.

“Uuuu, it’s so infuriating the more I think about it! Don’t you know how to be tactful? You know, some lip service?”

“What?”

“I mean, didn’t you like me at first?”

“What are you talking about—”

Shooooong— We felt a strange undulation of magic power in the middle of our conversation. I immediately froze. A sharp, yet light aura swirled near the ground and ominous magic power seemed to interfere with the earth. We looked at each other.

“Hey, what was that?”

I sighed at her question. I couldn't find the specific date because I didn't have enough magic power, but the day finally arrived.

“It should be a magic phenomenon.”

An extremely rare magic disaster that occurred when dragons in the depths of the East Sea touched the ocean's keystone. This phenomenon usually happened by coincidence, but djinns had orchestrated it this time.

“Magic phenomenon? Ah, look over there.”

Chae Nayun pointed to Cube's changing scenery. The green leaves changed colors and the cool breeze turned hot. Cube's state-of-the-art buildings all disappeared with only a dilapidated building and forest left behind.

“Follow me.”

“O-Okay. Ah, your hand...”

I grabbed her wrist and ran towards the only building at the center of Cube.

“W-What's happening?”

“Don't let go of my hand!” I shouted because she kept twisting her wrist.

“S-Sorry, but you should explain what's going on...”

“Space distortion.”

“What?”

“We learned about it in class, remember? It’s the broken mirror phenomenon.”

A magic phenomenon where space shattered into pieces like a broken mirror. I created this magic disaster using interesting random theories I heard about. Technically, this phenomenon was a barrier that formed when a dragon interfered with mana clouds that rose through convection currents. Djinnns had provoked a dragon and invaded Cube to find suitable hosts for devils.

They had carefully organized this invasion. Even if I was willing to sacrifice Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak’s growth, I couldn’t stop the djinnns’ plan since that required me to kill a dragon.

“What? Then...”

“Space might shatter at any moment, so stay sharp. See that building in the center? We need to get there as quickly as possible... Uk!”

The space distorted once again and forced me to let go of Chae Nayun. The scenery changed into a half-day and half-night world. The scent of blood filled the air. I ran towards the direction without hesitation and shouted as soon as I discovered the smell’s source.

“HEY!”

Twelve pairs of eyes turned to me. Ten or so djinnns surrounded Rachel there.

“Hajin!”

Rachel’s expression faintly brightened. First, I checked her condition. Thankfully, she didn’t seem to be the one bleeding. Rather, the blood came from the djinnns she already cut down.

“Oh? What a coincidence to meet again. It’s been a while.”

A somewhat familiar man clapped his hands and revealed himself. It was Heuk Jeon, the assassin who interfered in the final exam.

“Yeah, it’s been a while.”

As expected, Lancaster and the Dark Moon Society worked together in this incident.

“Yes, yes. It’s been such a long time.”

Heuk Jeon unleashed vicious killing intent as he fanned out his daggers. However, I simply tilted my head. Did he not hear the news yet?

“Hajin, run away. There are too many of them. I’ll hold them back, so you should go find reinforcements—”

I faced Heuk Jeon while ignoring the serious Rachel.

“Kim Hajin, Kim Hajin. I’ve been waiting for this day ever since you humiliated me.”

“You haven’t heard the news?”

“...News?”

I pointed to the walkie-talkie on his belt. The djinns all carried walkie-talkies that worked in this distorted space. I had also prepared something.

“Hold on.”

I sent Boss a message using a magical device. [Boss, those guys are bothering me again...] It was similar to the magic letters that Yoo Sihyuk used at his school.

“What are you doing? I advise you to take out your weapon...”

— Heuk Jeon! Where are you, you son of a bitch!

Harsh words came out of his walkie-talkie. Heuk Jeon and the djinns around him all seemed shocked.

“Eh? I’m in the middle of the miss—”

— What? You motherfucker, I told you not to do that!

Sweating profusely, Heuk Jeon lowered his walkie-talkie’s volume. He clearly didn’t want to embarrass himself.

“Um, sir. I thought we already finished our talk with the Lancasters.”

— Do you think I give a shit about Lancaster right now! That person contacted me just now. I will kill you myself if something goes wrong.

The radio message came to an end.

— I’m not kidding! I will really kill you! I’ll tear your limbs apart and feed you to the highest rank monster I can find!

Then the walkie-talkie came back on with a final warning. Heuk Jeon stared at the walkie-talkie in his trembling hands before placing it back. Then he carefully asked while sweating.

“Um, Kim, Kim Hajin? C-Can you please explain what’s going on?”

I couldn’t tell whether he was slow or just shocked.

“Well, think about it this way. I make money on the side from investing in stocks. One of my clients happens to know your group, so I asked for a favor. Who knew one of my clients would be so close with all of you?”

“...”

Heuk Jeon looked like his soul was being sucked out. He seemed to be saying, I’m being humiliated because of mere stocks? It sounded like a decent excuse considering Boss’ personality.

“What are you doing?”

I pointed at a nearby rock. It was the perfect place to kowtow.

“If I were you, my head would be kissing the ground right now.”

Chapter 139

Final Incident (2)

“Um, what happened?”

Rachel whispered. I looked back at Heuk Jeon and his crew following us without answering her. I said I would let him off even if he didn’t kowtow, but he decided to follow me like an attendant.

“Who knows?”

“...”

Rachel seemed suspicious of my vague reply.

“Well, like I said before. I trade stocks on the side. That’s it.”

“Stocks?”

It wasn’t easy to come up with a good explanation. After all, I didn’t want to seem related to djinns.

“Yes, I gave one of my clients a valuable piece of information. That client just happened to be extremely influential around people like them.”

“Eh? Then is your client also a djinn?”

“No. It’s all about money. That’s why they’re here too.”

I wasn’t lying. Boss was a money-loving fool. Well, maybe calling her a fool was too harsh. She only focused on money while the Chameleon Troupe was relatively free, but would undoubtedly show why she was called the Yaksha once they became involved in the main story.

“...”

Rachel didn't seem to completely believe me, but didn't ask any further questions.

“Stocks... stocks...” she mumbled to herself until her eyes shot open.

“Ah, Ha-Hajin.”

“Yes?”

She called my name while stuttering.

“Then did you make a lot of profit with stocks?”

“Uh... my nickname is the Invisible Hand.”

Rachel's cheeks flushed with anticipation when I said that. The English Royal Court guild was currently in a financial crisis. They suffered from a lack of investors after last year's incident on Clancy Islet.

“I see... it makes sense since you're rank 1 in theory. You must be good at analyzing charts and data.”

However, she seemed too embarrassed to outrightly ask for any favors and fiddled with her fingers.

“I guess you could say that.” I acted obliviously.

“Ah... right.”

Rachel finally worked up the courage to speak.

“So, um, I heard guilds have recently started investing in stocks to make money...”

“Oh, is that so?”

I felt the urge to tease her. I could only relax in this situation thanks to Boss.

“Y-Yes... and um, the English Royal Court guild is looking to start a business at the moment...”

“Oh right.”

I cut her off to give her some important information. “Stay calm and head over to that building if the space distorts while we’re walking.”

“You don’t have to worry about that.”

Heuk Jeon interrupted me. I turned around as he flinched at my gaze, then took out a palm-sized orb from his pocket.

“Hajin doesn’t have to worry about that. We have a pathfinder orb.”

Pathfinder orb? That must be what they used to find Rachel.

“Give it here then.”

I put my hand out towards the black orb.

“...” Heuk Jeon scratched his neck, but didn’t refuse. Instead, he pleaded with me.

“Um, about this matter...”

“I know, I know. How many times do I have to tell you?”

I wasn’t interested in ordering him around. I’ve read this trope so many times in novels and even used it a few times myself until I got bored.

“Y-Yes, thank you.”

“He interrupted us in the middle of our conversation.”

Rachel pouted unhappily. I grinned and went back to the topic.

“So, Rachel. Do you want me to give you a recommendation?”

“Yes? Ah, well, you see...”

She quickly livened up and began to list all of the English Royal Court guild’s business plans. I found them lacking to Yoo Yeonha, but could see their passion and hardworking attitude.

“It’s going to be difficult to take all that on with just taxes. It’s a long-term plan, and with the economy so bad recently...”

We walked together while talking about the English Royal Court and arrived at the central building before we noticed. It looked like a small abandoned school in a rural town.

“We’ll talk about this later. Now isn’t a good time.”

“Ah, yes.”

Rachel nodded and looked at the worn-down building.

“Where are we?”

“It should be a building in Cube.”

To be exact, it was a lighthouse that went obsolete after Cube introduced portals. The spatial distortion dragged the building from the deepest corner of Cube here.

“Let’s go in.”

We entered while Heuk Jeon and his crew stopped at the entrance. I turned around and looked at them.

“We’ll go back, but Lancaster won’t give up.”

Heuk Jeon warned us before leaving. I didn’t stop him so others wouldn't associate me with djinns.

"We'll stay in the area and stop Lancaster's subordinates if we spot them."

Yesterday's friend is today's enemy. Djinns had a thin concept of loyalty.

"Thanks."

Heuk Jeon was a trustworthy guy in terms of strength. He should be able to deal with Lancaster's djinns somewhat evenly with his number of subordinates.

"By the way, you don't need this pathfinder orb?"

"No, we have another one."

"Good, then see you."

I waved as they left. Then something rustled from a nearby bush.

"...!"

Rachel and I cautiously glared in the direction. However, we knew the person that popped out.

"Ah, Kim Hajin!" Chae Nayun shouted and ran up to me.

"Hey! Geez, I was so surprised. You suddenly disappeared..."

Chae Nayun almost ran into my embrace, but stopped when she saw Rachel.

"What."

"Are you okay? You're not hurt, are you?"

“I’m fine, but why are you with her?”

“That’s not important. Anyways, follow me. We have something to do. You too, Rachel.”

“Yes.”

“Ah, what is it?”

We entered the building and walked up the stairs to the broadcasting room on the highest floor.

“Aah, aah.”

I fiddled with the microphone and tested the sound. Using this, I planned to gather all the cadets and instructors to this building. Kim Suho was supposed to do it, but the earlier the better.

“Will everyone hear us if we speak into this?” Chae Nayun asked.

“Yeah, probably.”

At least 10,000 people resided in Cube. However, one needed to have enough magic power for this broken mirror phenomenon to pull them in. Only about 3000 people, including the instructors, should be here. I could confidently say it had also transported me because of stigma’s magic power. My arm had been constantly throbbing ever since.

“Aaah, testing, testing, 1 2 3.”

I turned on the microphone and spoke. As expected, the speakers properly worked.

“This is an announcement to all cadets and instructors who might be panicking. I repeat, this is an announcement to all cadets and instructors who might be panicking.”

I cut straight to the chase after grabbing everyone’s attention.

“Space has been distorted due to the broken mirror phenomenon.”

I paused to choose my next words.

“...Do not panic if you are a cadet. Head to the building in the center of the island. Continue heading towards the building even if you get lost. I repeat, continue heading towards the building even if you get lost.”

I placed the microphone down after repeating the same thing several times.

People began to arrive at the central building after 30 minutes. Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, Yi Yeonghan, and several others all arrived at the same time. Our former instructor, Kim Soohyuk, also ran over. First year cadets appeared after an hour, but didn't look to be in good shape.

“Instructor! Some strange people in robes kidnapped Hyunsuk!”

“What?”

The djinns' goal was to kidnap cadets with the potential to host devils. This invasion wasn't happening only in Cube. The same should be happening in several hero academies across the world as one of the largest planned attacks on humanity.

“Ah, what should we do?”

Kim Suho stomped and glared into the forest. He probably wanted to save his comrades and juniors, but couldn't because they would easily get lost.

“Hey, Kim Suho. Do you want to go?”

“Hm?”

Kim Suho's current strength was far beyond any other cadet. He should be even stronger than in the original story. With Misteltein also strengthened, he could join the rescue team without a problem.

"But if I go into the forest..."

"Here."

I threw the pathfinder orb to him. Kim Suho caught it with a curious look.

"That's a pathfinder orb. The space shouldn't suddenly distort with it. Go with the instructor."

"Really?"

"Are you doubting me?"

"Of course not. Thank you, Hajin!"

"Pathfinder what?' Kim Soohyuk joined in on our conversation.

"Pathfinder orb. You won't get lost if you have it around. Oh, Shin Jonghak. Do you want to go too?"

I also asked Shin Jonghak, who stood guard with his spear like a sentry. His eyebrows twisted up. It didn't look like he wanted to listen to me.

"Let's go, Shin Jonghak."

Kim Suho also chimed in. Shin Jonghak glared at us unhappily.

"I guess Yoo Yeonha isn't here yet."

However, he soon joined.

"I, I'll help too."

An unexpected individual hopped in.

“You want to go too, Rachel?”

“Yes, I want to help rescue them, ” Rachel spoke resolutely with her hands clasped over her heart.

“Mm...”

I understood where she was coming from since her trauma had to do with a rescue effort, but because of Lancaster... no. Objectively speaking, she was probably safer with Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, and Kim Soohyuk.

“Ah, then I wanna join too.”

Yi Yeonghan also raised his hand. Only Chae Nayun and I didn’t take part. Kim Suho grinned.

“Hajin, you stay here and protect the other cadets.”

“Like I’m strong enough for that.”

Of course, I planned to do just that. Now was the time for Kim Suho to shine. Thankfully, other high ranking cadets also remained to protect the place. For example, the samurai Yohei and supporter Yi Jiyeon.

“Don’t worry about us.”

“Yeah, be safe!” Chae Nayun also waved at them from the side.

“You aren’t going with us, Chae Nayun?”

Shin Jonghak asked while pretending like he didn’t care. Chae Nayun would’ve followed them in the original story even if it cost her life. However, she currently didn’t hesitate.

“You’re all going, so it’ll be a waste if I go too.”

“...I see.”

Shin Jonghak faintly sighed and turned around. Kim Suho followed him as he stormed off.

“Ah, hey! You have to stay close to the pathfinder orb!”

“Everyone, make sure you stay in this building!”

The rescue team led by instructor Kim Soohyuk departed. After they left, Chae Nayun and I climbed to the roof to look out for any djinns that might ambush us.

“Wow, look what we got ourselves into this time.”

As always, it was best to maintain the high ground over enemies. Chae Nayun looked out into the horizon and mumbled, “First, Creator’s Sacred Grace. Now this. These things just keep happening to us, huh?”

“Yeah. After today, many things will change...”

This incident served as an important turning point in the original story. I skipped over the main cast’s time in Cube after this incident.

“Yeah, you’ll be leaving too.”

“That has nothing to do with it.”

Chwaaa— The cool breeze blew my hair.

“At least the wind is nice.”

“I guess so...”

The gentle breeze suddenly turned violent while we leisurely talked. It sharply slapped my face as a waterspout rose from the East Sea in the distance.

“What’s that?”

A fierce tornado shook Cube's island. I couldn't help but frown at this supernatural phenomenon.

"Ah, look at that!"

Chae Nayun jumped in surprise, but I remained calm. The monstrous waterspout sent a chill down my back as my smartwatch buzzed.

[Criticism – It doesn't make sense that djinns, known to be vile and brutal, would only slightly provoke the azure dragon.]

"...But that doesn't mean you can do this."

You son of a bitch, how could you send a dragon after cadets! I quickly raised my head and looked into the distance. Then I became speechless. A single creature appeared from far away and I fell into a daze at its proud and noble figure.

A soft, beautiful azure body that resembled the clouds. A face that resembled a mix between a snake and a tiger. Two sacred horns protruded from behind its ears. The master of the East Sea, a creature that seemed too noble to be called a monster. The azure dragon was one of the cardinal guardians described in legends.

"..."

The beauty of this legendary dragon almost made me forget the gravity of the situation. However, the azure dragon wasn't so kind. Krrrrr! It glared in our direction and roared. His roar swept the entire island.

"Kyak!"

I was unaffected, but Chae Nayun screamed in pain and collapsed.

"Ah, hey!"

I quickly ran to her.

“Uuu, uuuuaa...”

Veins protruded from her neck to her face. This was magic convulsion.

“Dammit!”

The azure dragon was especially skilled in handling magic power. However, Chae Nayun was directly exposed to such a being’s breath. The azure dragon’s breath must’ve flowed into her body and suppressed her magic power, leading to this convulsion. This theory also explained why it didn’t affect me because my body didn’t contain any magic power.

“Uuugh, huaa, huaaa...”

“Calm down. Don’t panic and collect your breath.”

“Hu, huu, huuuu...”

“BREATHE!”

Well, fuck. That was all I could think. A creature that could do this to Chae Nayun with just a single breath... such a monstrous creature simply opened its mouth. Its rage wasn’t directed at us, but its tantrum after waking up was a matter of life and death.

My sense of time slowed. I could see blue magic power forming from the azure dragon’s mouth. I couldn’t dodge it. This magic power bomb would surely be catastrophic as I looked at the unconscious Chae Nayun in my arms. I didn’t need to think. I would protect her this time.

I held her in my arms and released the magic power reinforcement seal on my obsidian bracelet. Then I added the Egyptian Archer’s sand barrier on top of it. However, I wasn’t finished with just 2 layers of protection. Gritting my teeth, I poured in every ounce of stigma’s magic power. Immediately, the stigma on my upper arm shone brilliantly through my clothes. I squeezed out everything without saving a single drop. The pain on my arm grew sharper, but I clenched my teeth and held on.

The dragon's tantrum descended on us once my third barrier set in.

“...Uk!”

A mere tantrum, something that couldn't be compared to a real dragon breath, made my body feel like it was bending in half.

“...”

I looked down at Chae Nayun while enduring the attack. However, she only stared at the symbol shining through my clothes. Her eyes seemed hollow and out of focus.

Chapter 140

Final Incident (3)

Whish—!

Kim Suho swung Misteltein and suddenly twisted it at an odd angle. He had developed this new technique after watching Kim Hajin's curving bullets. The final djinn collapsed after his elegant sword technique.

"Whew, they just keep coming." Kim Suho sighed and wiped his sweat.

"Yeonha, are you okay?" Shin Jonghak asked her as he nonchalantly cleaned his spear after fighting a group of djinns.

"Yeah, thanks to you." Yoo Yeonha seemed a bit tired, but still smiled.

"I'm glad."

Kim Suho smiled back. Including Yoo Yeonha, they had already rescued 15 cadets with the pathfinder orb. More remained, but they prioritized getting these cadets to safety.

"Everyone!" Kim Suho clapped and gathered their attention. "We will guide you to safety, so follow us."

"Why are you talking like they're children? They're cadets just like you." Yoo Yeonha narrowed her eyes.

"Huh? Oh, sorry. I've been playing with my nephews recently."

"Cadets, stay on guard and follow us to the central building!" Kim Soohyuk gallantly shouted.

"See? It's the instructor's job to say those things."

“Yeah, yeah.”

The cadets began to walk towards the central building.

“E-Eh? Look over there!”

Someone pointed at the sky. KOOOONG—! The breath of a divine existence swept the island. Trees fell and clouds of dirt rose from the massive shockwave. Kim Suho kept his eyes open and watched. The point of impact struck the central building, which began to crumble.

“...!”

Kim Suho moved before his thoughts could catch up. He immediately ran towards the building, but stopped because of the pathfinder orb.

“Hurry up, everyone!”

Kim Suho urged them on. By the time they returned to the central building...

“T-This.”

A devastating scene lay before them. The building had toppled and many cadets collapsed on the ground unconscious. However, someone stood in the middle of this horrific scene.

“Hm?”

The mysterious man wore a half-broken mask and smiled at Kim Suho.

“Who are you?”

Kim Suho gritted his teeth and asked. However, the man only gave an ominous smile through his strange mask. Kim Soohyuk stepped up.

“Fall back, Kim Suho. He’s not someone you can handle.”

“Ah, so you’re Kim Suho.”

The mysterious man muttered. His voice changed as he spoke. He sounded like a woman in one phrase, then a man in another, and a child for the next. Kim Suho immediately frowned at his strange voice.

“What djinn are you?” Kim Soohyuk asked.

A deep smile emerged on the man’s face. “That’s an interesting question. What djinn? Are you asking for my name? Unfortunately, I don’t have one.”

He grabbed the neck of one of the cadets on the ground. “But I hear you guys call me Destruction.”

This title caused everyone’s eyes to widen in shock. Destruction snickered at their reactions and stared at the cadets who just arrived.

“There are many of you I want to take, but unfortunately I’m out of time. I’ll just have to take this child.”

Destruction formed a bundle of magic power and placed an unconscious cadet inside. Immediately, a crescent sword slash and a spear beam flew towards him. Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak attacked as soon as he lowered his guard.

“Huaa.” Destruction breathed and unleashed a wave of magic power that scattered their attacks. Then he leisurely laughed.

“Unfortunately, you’re too weak to do anything against—”

Kim Soohyuk charged forward before Destruction could finish his sentence. He was within arm’s reach in the blink of an eye. Then he reached towards Destruction’s face as Destruction placed a hand on his neck. A magic power blast shot out from Kim Soohyuk’s palm and struck Destruction in the head. KOONG—! The ground rumbled, but Destruction only laughed.

“I praise your courage.”

His laugh sounded ominous. Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak quickly charged forward, but... PUAK— Claws shot out from Destruction’s fingers and pierced Kim Soohyuk's chest. Kim Soohyuk coughed up blood and collapsed. Only then did Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak reach him. Destruction closed his eyes and shook his head.

"How unfortunate."

Destruction snapped Shin Jonghak's spear and pushed Kim Suho back with a single wave of his hand. The difference in power was too overwhelming.

"I said I would let you live. What makes you so eager to die?"

Destruction muttered arrogantly while looking down at the weaklings. Kiiiiik— The sound of wind and lightning resounded in every direction.

"Hm?"

Everyone in the area looked up. Soon, a lump of magic power appeared in the middle of the sky and landed like a shooting star.

KWANG—!

The shooting star descended with an overbearing force. The shockwave caused a cloud of dirt to rise and the ground rumbled.

Pzzzt— Pzzzt— Electricity crackled in the center of the big crater.

"..."

A brief silence descended from this unexpected phenomenon. Whiish... The wind lifted the cloud of dirt to reveal a single man.

"D-Dad!"

Someone shouted in surprise. It came from Yoo Yeonha. Naturally, everyone correctly guessed the identity of their savior.

"..."

Yoo Yeonha's father, Yoo Jinwoong, glanced at his daughter and sighed in relief.

"You're... Yoo Jinwoong!"

Destruction and Yoo Jinwoong seemed to know each other as the former glared with hatred. Yoo Jinwoong nonchalantly muttered, "It's been a while, Changdong."

"..."

Destruction's face immediately distorted.

"I thought I told you never to call me by that name again."

"Mm... did you?" Yoo Jinwoong smiled.

"But you know..." His smile quickly disappeared and crimson electricity crackled around him. Yoo Jinwoong the Berserker tried his best to suppress his rage. "It's none of your business what I call you, you motherfucker."

The side effect of his extraordinary gift was rage. Yoo Yeonha and her mother were quite embarrassed about it. However, one person watched him with respect.

"...I can't believe it," Shin Jonghak muttered in awe.

The rooftop shook and the entire building crumbled. I briefly floated in the air before plummeting. Steel and concrete rained from the sky. The azure dragon's breath had caused complete chaos.

Koogoogoong— The building collapsed and I found myself instantly buried under the rubble. I looked down at Chae Nayun in my arms. She fell unconscious with her eyes tightly shut.

"..."

Soon, everything became silent. Darkness surrounded me, but I peered through the debris with the thousand-mile eyes.

“Whew.”

I looked for the azure dragon. Thankfully, its anger seemed to have subsided and returned to the ocean wagging its tail.

“Auuu.”

My head spun and I couldn’t feel my right arm anymore. Thankfully, my barrier still worked. The obsidian bracelet almost broke, but what was left protected us from the debris.

“Hey.”

I poked Chae Nayun’s cheeks. However, she had completely passed out. Her magic convulsion stopped, so why did she faint?

“This is a bit dangerous.”

I wasn’t sure how long my barrier would last or how long I would last. Yi Yeonghan or Kim Horak might’ve dug their way through, but for me...

“Haa.”

Our oxygen was running low and my blood boiled from expending all of stigma. Nothing changed even after I used my recovery potion medicinal effect. My vision grew blurry, but something shot out of my chest when I almost fainted.

“Grrrr.”

The wolf I named Fenrir moved quickly. He opened his mouth and gathered magic power. Then blasted it forward and cleared a path. I felt genuinely surprised that he had a long ranged attack.

“Krrrrr.”

Fenrir placed us on his back and walked towards the light on the other side.

Jain celebrated at her mansion near London.

“Ah, I’m so happy.”

She stared at the items she stole last night with an ecstatic smile. She had taken the shiniest and most expensive jewels from Pandemonium’s notoriously rich djinn.

“You’re all so pretty!”

Each of these jewels contained pure and high quality mana that made everyone who looked at them feel wonderful.

“I wonder what it feels like to live buried under jewels? Ah, my goal will be to make a swimming pool filled with jewels!”

Jain happily grinned as she rubbed the jewels on her face.

“Jain.”

A young boy called her name. Droon was watching anime in the same room.

“Yeah?”

“I’m curious. Why did you do it?”

“What do you mean?”

Jain retorted half-heartedly. She found it annoying having to deal with a 13 year old, but could listen to any of his requests today.

“I saw it. You showed it to them.”

“...”

Jain's expression slightly stiffened. “Mm... What do you mean? Show who what?”

“You know what I'm talking about.”

Droon was in charge of the barrier during Chae Jinyoon's murder. Boss only told him to set it up in a designated location, but Droon understood what he was doing.

“I saw everything.”

“Ah, that?”

Jain grinned as though she just recalled.

“It's nothing much. It's just that I'm quite fond of that child too.”

The silver bullet that could kill that man. Jain stood shoulder to shoulder with Boss when it came to her hatred for the Chameleon Troupe's traitor. If possible, she wanted to tear his limbs apart with her own hands.

“Eh?”

“You heard me.”

If Chae Jinyoon died, Chae Joochul would obviously employ Yoo Jinhyuk. However, Droon's Mimyo was a unique lifeform that Yoo Jinhyuk couldn't see through. ^[1] This lifeform existed only in the present, not the past or the future. As such, Yoo Jinhyuk shouldn't have been able to see anything from that day.

“Why did you do that if you're fond of him? That doesn't make sense.”

“Mm, that's because you're still too young to understand.”

Jain purposefully left behind a clue about Chae Jinyoon's murderer.

Revealing Kim Hajin's face would ruin their trust, so she only revealed a small piece of evidence. However, it would surely connect the incident to Kim Hajin. Thankfully, Kim Hajin had a special mark on him.

"You can only perfectly possess someone when they have nowhere else to go. That way, he won't betray us like that man."

Jain thought Kim Hajin would be found out when he was hospitalized from the recent magic power explosion. However, an unexpected ally ended up helping him.

"But Droon, didn't you know about this? We thought your rabbit would eat the corpse, but it didn't."

"It's not that it didn't. It couldn't."

A small rabbit shot out from Droon's back. It had red eyes and black fur. Just looking at this terrifying existence would cause anyone to shiver. Jain waved her hand in apology.

"Sorry, Mimyo. I didn't know."

"..."

The rabbit returned to Droon's body.

"Mimyo sure is pretty... Anyways, why couldn't it eat him?"

"I don't know. Mimyo didn't tell me when I asked and we didn't have time to properly investigate."

Dozens of heroes arrived at the scene after demonic energy exploded from Chae Jinyoon's body. Droon and Khalifa barely made it out after cleaning up the area.

Tzzzzzt— The anime Droon was watching suddenly turned off.

"W-What happened!"

An emergency announcement came on the TV.

“Oh, what’s happening now?”

[Emergency! Djinns have simultaneously invaded hero academies all over the world...]

“Aaah, I was just at the good part!”

“So they finally went mad...”

Unlike Droon, Jain had a big smile on her face.

The situation was quickly taken care of after Yoo Jinwoong’s arrival. He ran around the island like lightning and rescued every cadet with the pathfinder orb from Kim Suho. When reporters asked how he arrived so quickly, Yoo Jinwoong responded:

— I learned that Cube wasn’t a trustworthy organization. I have to protect my daughter with my own hands.

—... The United Nations and the Hero Association have condemned djinns for today’s attack and have declared that they can no longer tolerate the djinns’ tyranny. Clouds of war are filling the skies across the globe...

Most news agencies reported the same thing. Djinns attacked various hero academies and provoked an azure dragon, which was considered Korea’s guardian. The aftermath was on a completely different scale compared to previous incidents involving djinns. The president of Korea personally met with the Hero Association.

Many Cube cadets were hospitalized in the Gangnam Severance Hospital.

Kiiik—

Yoo Yeonha carefully opened the door to Chae Nayun's hospital room.

"Um... Nayun, are you feeling better?"

"..."

Chae Nayun silently stared at the window. Her usual lively eyes seemed especially withered today.

"Nayun?"

"...Ah."

Chae Nayun only responded when Yoo Yeonha called her a second time.

"You're here, Yeonha?"

She stared at Yoo Yeonha and feebly spoke.

"Yeah, but why do you sound so weak? You don't sound like the Chae Nayun I know."

Yoo Yeonha sat next to her.

"Weak, huh..."

Chae Nayun muttered and sighed.

"...Yeonha."

"Hm?"

Chae Nayun's hollow gaze lost focus. She fiddled with her fingers and thought about what to say.

"A-About the tattoo I told you about last time..."

Yoo Yeonha suddenly ran out of air when Chae Nayun brought up the tattoo.

“Y-Yeah?”

“Do, do you think it’s real?”

“W-What do you mean?”

Yoo Yeonha wanted to maintain her composure, but her damned voice kept trembling.

“Haa... you see.”

Chae Nayun deeply sighed and murmured, “Do you think... it’s real proof of the culprit? Can I trust it?”

Yoo Yeonha didn’t answer. She could only swallow her saliva and try to calm her heart.

“...Why are you saying this all of a sudden?”

Chae Nayun raised her head. Her gaze seemed to pierce Yoo Yeonha.

“I think I had a strange dream today.”

“Dream?”

“Yeah, but it was so vivid.”

Chae Nayun placed her left hand on her upper right arm. This simple motion caused Yoo Yeonha’s heart to sink.

“Kim Hajin. It’s about Kim Hajin. There was a tattoo on his upper arm...”

Chae Nayun smirked and stopped talking. Almost as if she couldn’t believe what she was saying.

“No, I think I must’ve been confused. I must’ve had a strange dream because of my obsession with it.”

Yoo Yeonha didn’t doubt what Chae Nayun saw. It looked like Chae Nayun was still only suspicious.

“It felt too vivid to be a dream, but it doesn’t make sense. Why would Hajin...”

Chae Nayun mumbled to herself and dug into her blanket. “Yeonha, I’m going to sleep now. I’m tired.”

“Y-Yeah, s-sleep. I’m going outside for a bit.”

“Un.”

Yoo Yeonha walked out of the room in a daze. However, she quickly snapped out of it and moved her legs towards that person’s room.

— Tok, tok.

She knocked on his door. However, he didn’t reply.

“Hello? Are you okay?”

Tok, tok. Yoo Yeonha knocked again. She couldn’t hear anyone inside and suddenly grew apprehensive. Then she barged in.

“Waah?”

No one was inside. A single document envelope lay on the table. Yoo Yeonha quickly grabbed it.

[Dropout Form] Cadet – Kim Hajin

“What!” She immediately ran out.

“E-Excuse me!”

She grabbed a nurse and asked where the patient went. The nurse simply tilted her head as Yoo Yeonha looked for another staff to ask. She clenched her teeth.

No matter what the situation may be, with everything we've gone through together, you can't just disappear without a farewell...

1. Mimyo means beautiful rabbit. 🐰

Chapter 141

Truth (1)

I forced myself to lie down, but I couldn't sleep. My stomach churned and my head spun.

“Haa...”

I opened my eyes in a daze. Vivid memories flashed before me. Kim Hajin held me in his arms with the tattoo shining on his arm. That was... undoubtedly proof of the murderer.

But why did Kim Hajin have that tattoo? And that shining symbol... was it really a tattoo?

“Ah.”

I kicked the blanket and got up. Then I threw the window open. I couldn't sleep when my body felt like burning. I could hardly withstand the pain.

“...?”

An acrid smoke flowed in from the window. The smell of cigarettes came down from the roof. Immediately, my eyes shot open. I recognized this smell. Ever since that day, I constantly smelled it near that person.

I turned around and faced the door. I had to check if what I saw was real or just a hallucination. The only way I would find out was to ask him. Only then would I be able to live.

I climbed up the stairs to the hospital's roof. The door was locked, but

I could easily pick it with Dexterity. I came to simply smoke on the roof. Of course, the hospital had smoking zones inside, but I was a cadet. I didn't want to smoke in front of everybody even though I would drop out soon.

“Huu.”

After a sigh, I lit a cigarette in my mouth. The smoke filled my lungs.

“...Haa.”

Leaning on the guardrail, I exhaled and looked down at the panoramic view of the hospital's entrance. The scene could only be described as chaos. The broken mirror phenomenon had pulled in a total of 3583 people. Of these 3583, 44 were killed, 66 were kidnapped, and our former instructor attacked by Destruction was currently undergoing surgery in critical condition.

“In the original story...”

Chak! I slapped my mouth. Original story, the damned original story! I kept describing it as a story, but what else should I call it? Fate?

“Sigh.”

The djinns kidnapped 66 people like in the original story. However, I hadn't expected Destruction's appearance. He was a boss character who easily ranked in the top 500 strongest in this world. As for Yoo Jinwoong who drove him away... I expected him to come. Speaking of which, I received a message from the helper who called Yoo Jinwoong.

[Hajin! I saw the news! Are you okay?]

[Yeah, thanks to you. The losses were minimal.]

[Hehehe, I got praised for it too!]

I could send messages without any signal since my smartwatch connected to my laptop. I sent my exact coordinates to Kim Hosup when I realized Destruction had appeared. The current Kim Suho wouldn't stand a chance against Destruction. Thankfully, Kim Hosup quickly acted. He even hacked into Yoo Jinwoong's smartwatch and relayed my coordinates to him.

[Thanks again. Message me if you need anything in the future.]

[Got it!]

I turned off my smartwatch. Then I spotted 3 familiar faces talking to each other in the hospital garden. Kim Suho, Rachel, and Shin Jonghak seemed to have grown closer in their short time together rescuing other cadets. They talked about a rather serious topic.

— I couldn't move at all. My body froze when I heard the name Destruction...

Rachel criticized herself. Honestly, Kim Suho and Shin Jonghak were the strange ones for attacking Destruction in that situation.

Tak, tak. I heard the sound of footsteps. Someone was climbing up the stairs. The sound drew nearer as I put out the cigarette and waited. Moonlight touched my shoulders as the footsteps suddenly stopped nearby. She seemed to be hesitating.

“Haa.”

A familiar voice followed the sigh.

“Hey.”

She called me as I turned around. Chae Nayun stared from the door. She didn't look good. Her complexion seemed pale, and I could see her mental exhaustion.

“Kim Hajin.”

She called my name.

“How did you know I was here?”

I didn’t know what else to say.

“The smell of your cigarette came into my room through the window.”

“Oh, sorry.”

“...”

She silently trudged up to me. Then she leaned against the guardrail. I couldn’t see her eyes since her hair fluttered over them.

“Hey.”

“Hm?”

Her voice sounded heavy. She looked up at the night sky and continued, “Remember what I asked you a long time ago?”

“What.”

“I... I asked if you had a tattoo.”

“Did you?”

“Yeah, I vaguely remember. I overheard you talking about it in front of our cabin when we went to Norway.”

I recalled our Norway trip. I vaguely remembered it too.

— So you used to smoke? A real delinquent, huh. Do you also have tattoos?

Chae Nayun overheard me saying that I quit smoking almost when we went to Norway with the hunting club. It seemed Homer’s ring had improved my memory or did the memory remain because it surprised me?

“...Yeah, I remember.”

I bitterly replied. I would do things better if I could go back in time. Once again, I understood why so many main characters in novels went back in time. Things barely ever went my way in the present.

“...So.”

Chae Nayun interrupted my useless thoughts.

“I want to ask again.”

She wasn't looking at me. “I think I'm going to die if I don't.”

I couldn't understand what she was saying.

“I don't think I can live if I don't confirm that it's false.”

Chae Nayun slightly shook her head. Something glistened and scattered in the wind... tears.

“Kim Hajin... do you have a tattoo on your arm?”

“...”

The grave atmosphere and her strange question made me hesitate. I needed more time to analyze the situation.

“Answer me.”

However, Chae Nayun didn't give me any. She looked straight into my eyes.

“Answer me.”

“...”

I couldn't speak when I saw her trembling pupils. My body froze.

“Why won’t you answer me?” she asked again.

“...Why? You just have to say you don’t have one... hic.”

She suddenly sniffled and dropped her head. Tears began to fall onto the concrete.

“...Why, just why.”

“You should explain what’s going on fir— uuuk!”

Chae Nayun suddenly charged into me as I fell on my back and she jumped on top. Then she grabbed the hem of my clothes and tried to rip them apart.

“Ah, hey! What are you doing?”

I felt shocked and wondered if she was having a psychotic breakdown. I tried to get her off, but she easily overwhelmed me since I didn’t have any of stigma’s magic power left.

“H-Hey! Are you crazy?”

“Yeah, I’m crazy, so stay still!”

She shouted and ripped apart my shirt.

“...”

Her gaze immediately fell on my upper arm where stigma was located. I quickly covered it with the torn shirt.

“Ah...”

However, it was too late. Chae Nayun dropped her head with a dazed voice. Then she clutched her head and glared at me with teary eyes.

“...Hey.”

“...”

“What tattoo is that?”

She clenched her teeth. Many words came out of her mouth, but none of them formed a complete sentence.

“Some, some organization tattoo? Secret society? Some, something like that?”

Her eyes fiercely shook when I didn’t answer.

“What is it? I’m asking what that is! What is it!”

I began to grasp what was going on.

“Tell me!”

She shouted. However, I couldn’t say or do anything. My brain stopped working and I could only blankly stare at her.

“...No, no.”

Her face distorted. She grabbed my shoulders with enough strength to crush them and banged my chest with her head.

“Why... why would you kill oppa...”

Immediately, my heart sank. How did she know about stigma? And how did she connect it to the murder?

“Right? It’s not you, right?” Chae Nayun muttered as she cried. I could only listen to her desperate voice.

“...”

It’s not me. I didn’t do it. That’s what she wanted to hear.

“Someone... someone must’ve framed you. You have no motive... why would you...”

However, I couldn’t lie. A lie that could easily be proven wrong, a lie that she already wouldn’t believe, I just couldn’t bring myself to say it.

“But why... why aren’t you saying anything?”

Chae Nayun tightened her grip on my shoulders. Her pupils became empty.

“Just say it. Just say that you didn’t do it!”

A sharp pain filled my shoulders. My shoulders had broken. However, that was the end. Tak. Chae Nayun’s head touched my chest as she fainted from the shock. Her feeble body lay against me. I didn’t move and just remained on the ground like a puppet with severed strings.

“...Kim Hajin.”

The situation only continued to spiral further. Another voice rang out from the rooftop entrance and a familiar face looked down at us.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha slowly walked up to me. I wasn’t sure how to deal with the situation. My hands trembled, my head throbbed, and it all felt like a dream. If possible, I just wanted to faint and escape reality.

“You don’t have to panic.”

Yoo Yeonha calmly took Chae Nayun off of me.

“I already knew.”

“...”

My heart ached. Where? Just where did I go wrong?

“...Sorry.”

Yoo Yeonha slowly picked her up.

“I should have been here first.”

I looked up at Yoo Yeonha in a daze as she bitterly smiled.

“You’ll be long gone after tonight, right?”

“...”

“I’ll make sure Nayun rests well.”

Her voice was full of warmth.

“Honestly, I hoped she wouldn’t find out.”

Her calm voice and sympathetic look pained me even more.

“I didn’t believe it either. No, I couldn’t believe it. That you killed him. How you killed him, whether you had accomplices or did it alone, I just didn’t have any information. And to my knowledge, killing Chae Jinyoon was impossible for just one person to accomplish.”

Yoo Yeonha lightly bit her lip.

“But looking at you now... it must be true.”

A coldness enveloped my body and goosebumps rose on my skin. Yoo Yeonha looked down at me and asked.

“Why did you do it?”

I didn’t answer her. I couldn’t.

“Why did you kill him?”

“...”

“...Was it for revenge?”

Yoo Yeonha seemed frustrated as I sat on the ground in a daze.

“You look really pathetic right now... but unfortunately, I have no right to insult you.”

Yoo Yeonha turned around. Her footsteps seemed slow as if she wanted me to stop her. She walked ever so slowly. I pondered while looking at her. She was someone who treated her allies sincerely. So why couldn't I tell her the truth? Yoo Yeonha opened her mouth first.

“Sunshine Hotel.”

I flinched at her words.

“It's the hotel my guild runs. I'll be waiting on the penthouse floor.”

Yoo Yeonha continued with her back facing me.

“I still think of you as my ally like how you thought of me as yours.”

Her voice sounded soft and gentle.

“Setting aside what happened, I want to believe you. I want to help you.”

“...”

“Because that's all I can...”

However, she didn't finish her sentence.

“Haa. Anyways, I'll be waiting.”

Tak, tak.

Like a fool, I watched her leave.

Chapter 142

Truth (2)

Yoo Yeonha returned Chae Nayun to her hospital bed. Chae Nayun's complexion seemed pale and her body felt cold. The traces of tears around her eyes made her all the more pitiful.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha had an idle thought while looking at her. They weren't even that close a year ago. She might've entirely cut off contact if it wasn't for the relationship between their families. However, things had changed before she realized. So much that her heart ached looking at Chae Nayun's state. It was all because of that person. She barely knew him at the start of last year, but he took an important place in her heart and changed her.

“I'll be back.”

Yoo Yeonha stroked Chae Nayun's hair and left after feeling the cold sweat on her hand.

“Eh?”

She saw two familiar faces when she came out to the hallway. Kim Suho and Rachel peeked into Kim Hajin's room like meerkats.

“Ah, Yeonha. How's Chae Nayun? Is she doing okay?” Kim Suho spotted her and asked.

“Yeah.”

“That's great. Do you know where Hajin went? He's not in his room.”

“...”

Yoo Yeonha shook her head.

“I don’t know. I haven’t seen him either.”

Rachel innocently stared at her. “You really haven’t seen him? I have something to talk to him about.”

“No, sorry.”

“Ah...”

“Anyways, I have to go now.”

“Okay, see you later.”

Yoo Yeonha walked past them and left the hospital. Then she immediately headed to Sunshine Hotel in her limousine. It only took 15 minutes. The hotel owner heard she was coming and waited for her at the back door. Yoo Yeonha showed him a picture of Kim Hajin.

“Let him in if he comes. Don’t forget to keep it a secret from Father.”

“Of course.”

The hotel owner gave her a wink. He seemed to have misunderstood, but Yoo Yeonha didn’t bother to correct him.

“He might not come.”

“Of course, of course. I’ll make sure no one knows.”

“...”

Yoo Yeonha smacked her lips in dissatisfaction and went up the elevator. Ding— It stopped on the 88th floor and opened to the VIP penthouse. A well-decorated bar caught her attention first.

“Does he drink?”

She wondered if he would come. There was a higher chance he wouldn't. Still, Yoo Yeonha considered opening a bottle beforehand. Alcohol shouldn't be a problem since he smoked. Yoo Yeonha went up to the counter and looked at the different types of alcohol. Whiskey, brandy, vodka, scotch...

"But I don't drink..."

Yoo Yeonha took pride in not drinking or smoking. Her mother, Jin Yeojung, detested it.

"Hmm..."

However, that only made her more curious. She picked up a random bottle and opened it. Sniff, sniff. She carefully smelled it. Immediately, the strong smell stabbed her nose.

"Uuk! Ueeek—!"

Yoo Yeonha felt queasy and backed away.

"Uek, ueek... auu, w-what is... ueek."

Dad drinks this every night? Yoo Yeonha pinched her nose. She had a sensitive smell, so her nose hurt even more.

"Hmph, I'll throw all of these away later..."

Then she was notified of a guest.

— Young Miss, the young man you mentioned just arrived.

Yoo Yeonha quickly turned around. She grabbed the bottle of alcohol she was about to throw away and placed it on a nearby table. Then she picked up 2 glasses from the cupboard and headed back to the table.

"L-Let him in— kyak!"

However, she tripped from her high heels. CLANG. Crack. The 2 glasses broke along with one of her heels and the bottle fell off the table and hit her head.

“...”

Her eyes dried up as she looked at the mess.

— Yes, he’s been let in.

“Ah, wa... it.”

However, the elevator was already going up. 1, 2,... 33. It seemed to move faster than normal. Yoo Yeonha quickly unleashed her magic power.

“Thank you.”

I followed the hotel owner and stood in front of the VIP elevator. The interior appeared just as luxurious as the presidential suite I used before. I got on with a deep breath. The hotel owner kindly explained, “You don’t have to press any button.”

“Ah, yes.”

“Did you bring everything you need? If not...”

“No.”

I shook my head. I wasn’t in the mood for any chitchat. The hotel owner made an awkward expression and scratched his neck.

“Well, I hope you enjoy your stay.”

“Thank you.”

Koong. The elevator door closed. Then it moved up at a scary pace.

“W-What?”

Ding— I arrived on the 88th floor by the time I blinked 5 times. The elevator door slowly opened and I didn’t have any time to collect my thoughts. I held back my beating heart and walked out.

“Hm?”

The penthouse floor was empty and silent. A huge swimming pool appeared outside the wall-sized windows with a full view of Seoul.

“Y-You’re here.”

A voice rang out. I turned and saw Yoo Yeonha.

“...?”

However, something seemed strange. First, a broken heel was under the chair and Yoo Yeonha sat barefoot. Next, the table had 2 glasses and a bottle of liquor, but one glass was already filled. Lastly, Yoo Yeonha’s hair was wet and her cheeks were red for some reason. I couldn’t help but ask.

“What were you doing?”

“...”

She observed my expression for a moment.

“Erm...”

She smiled after about 30 seconds and gently swung her glass as she kicked the high heels under the chair.

“A-As you can see, I already had a sip.”

“You drank that?”

“Y-Yes. Anyways, come sit.”

I pretended to ignore her actions and sat in front of her.

“I didn’t think you’d come. I thought you would need a couple of days to collect your thoughts.”

“I took some helpful drugs.”

“Drugs?”

I wasn’t sure how sane I was at the moment.

[Perseverance 7.207 (+ 1.200)]

I forcefully increased my perseverance stat to a whopping 8.4. I used the sedative medicinal effect my body had memorized and used the Random Consolidation System to amplify a cigarette’s perseverance effect by 40%. As a result... I was insanely sane.

“But it won’t last long.”

“...Huu.”

Yoo Yeonha finished cleaning up her high heels.

“Well, I guess it doesn’t matter.”

“So, why aren’t you wearing any shoes?”

“Because we’re indoors.”

She crossed her legs with a well-planned excuse. She looked especially seductive in this posture, but none of it entered my eyes.

“...”

I checked the liquor on the table.

[Alcatraz Booze] [Liquor] — Aesthetics of Alcohol: Will decrease intelligence by 0.5-5 points depending on the amount consumed. Will increase strength and vitality by up to 3 points depending on the amount consumed. However, overconsumption will decrease them by up to 6 points. — Quality Liquor: This alcohol can make superhumans drunk. This alcohol will not cause hangovers.

A liquor with 64% alcohol and 1% mana concentration. It seemed strong and expensive. Yoo Yeonha drank this? I looked at her suspiciously.

“Do you want to try? It’s quite bitter.”

“...”

Yoo Yeonha casually handed me the empty glass. I looked at it for a moment and felt like I could use some. Yoo Yeonha poured the liquor into my glass as naturally as possible.

“Thanks. By the way, do you have any ice?”

“Ice?”

“No, never mind.”

Yoo Yeonha didn’t prepare any ice, but now wasn’t the time to be picky. I gulped down the entire glass and felt a burning sensation. It made me close my eyes and clench my teeth.

“Huu.”

Then I opened my eyes again with a sigh. The first thing I saw was Yoo Yeonha’s shocked expression.

“...”

“What?”

“N-Nothing. I just didn’t think you would chug it.”

Yoo Yeonha looked at the glass in front of her with a complicated expression. She slowly grabbed her glass after peeking at me. However, I wasn't concerned about her and only focused on picking out the countless words that popped up in my head. Yoo Yeonha raised her glass and brought it to her mouth after much hesitation. Slurp. She barely took a sip.

“...”

Slurp. She drank a bit more after glancing at me again.

“Cough, it's good. Cough. Ah, I'm coughing because it's cold.”

“I see.”

“Yes, cough, so, by the way.”

Yoo Yeonha straightened her neck and looked into my eyes with flushed cheeks.

“I have many questions I want to ask.”

“Go ahead. I came here to answer them.”

I leaned against the chair. Yoo Yeonha cut straight to the chase after pondering for a moment.

“...Did you really kill Chae Jinyoon?”

I nodded. Yoo Yeonha's expression immediately darkened.

“And the reason... ah, I guess I shouldn't ask. You probably won't tell me.”

Yoo Yeonha swapped her crossed legs and scoffed at me. I sighed. Until now, I thought about everything on my own. At first, I thought that was my duty. That I had to carry all the burden alone, but now...

“No, I'll tell you.”

“...Yes?”

It must’ve been quite a shock since her nostrils also widened.

“W-Why?”

“Mmm...”

I stared at her. I knew what kind of a person she was as her creator, how she had lived, and how she would change. However, I didn’t come to this decision based on this superficial knowledge. The attitude and sincerity she showed me as a person. That’s what I decided to believe in.

“I just thought I wanted to be with you until the end.”

“...Yes?”

Yoo Yeonha seemingly fell into a daze as though her soul left her body. She blinked repeatedly and stared at me. Then she realized what I meant and made a complicated expression. She looked embarrassed, but her expression turned sad as she recalled something.

“Then—”

“But, I have conditions.”

“Conditions?”

“Yeah.”

I raised my index finger.

“First, don’t ask any questions. To be precise, don’t ask how I found out. I can tell you everything else.”

Yoo Yeonha nodded without complaints. I raised a second finger.

“Second, don’t tell anyone. Not even Chae Nayun.”

“What? But—”

“I know, but it’s already too late.”

The reason I killed Chae Jinyoon. Nothing would change even if Chae Nayun found out and understood why I had to do it.

“No matter the reason, I killed Chae Jinyoon.”

“But still...”

“Plus, it might be better for Chae Nayun not to know.”

I remembered writing this sentence. [Despair, loss, and rage always nourished Chae Nayun.]

“No, it’s definitely better.”

The one thing that Chae Nayun would hold onto after losing everything. That would be her anger towards me. Chae Nayun would only break even if I told her the truth and she believed me. The child that admired her older brother and wanted to become a hero wouldn’t be able to endure the fact that he became a devil.

“It will be better for you too.”

“Then what about you?”

Yoo Yeonha asked, making me speechless. However, I soon shook my head and grinned.

“It doesn’t matter.”

“What do you mean.”

“Never mind that. Now...”

I took a deep breath. Where should I start? I suddenly felt a surge of regret. If I hadn’t already killed Chae Jinyoon. If I had thought more about it or consulted someone who would believe me. Would things be better now? However, regret was late no matter how fast it came.

“I won’t say it twice, so listen carefully.”

Boss thought about the strange message she received from Kim Hajin in the Chameleon Troupe’s hideout covered in webs.

[I was found out.]

She immediately summoned the Chameleon Troupe when she saw his message. To be exact, she summoned the members involved in Chae Jinyoon’s murder.

“Mmm... It must’ve been Yoo Jinhyuk. Looks like he improved.”

Jain spoke, but Boss remained silent. Khalifa took off his sunglasses and looked suspiciously at Jain.

“What? Isn’t that the case? Everyone knows Chae Joochul called Yoo Jinhyuk... ah, was it a mistake to leave Yoo Jinhyuk alive?”

“...”

“Boss?”

Boss glared at Jain, seemingly annoyed by her incessant talking. However, Jain leisurely received her gaze and even smiled.

“Boss, shouldn’t we get revenge now that things have turned out like this?”

“...”

“Yoo Jinhyuk helped us out a lot, but...”

“Shut it.”

Boss interrupted her. Jain shrugged without complaint.

“Well, I think it’s okay for now. It doesn’t look like Chae Joochul has gotten a hold of the news yet.”

“I’ll decide after hearing what Kim Hajin has to say. So Jain...”

Boss’ magic power erupted in every direction and a soul-crushing pressure descended on Jain.

“You better stay shut until then.”

I told her the truth. The concept of devils and the seed that gave birth to one. That this devil’s seed was stuck inside Chae Jinyoon’s head and there was no way to cure him (I couldn’t find anything even with the Book of Truth). I had no choice but to kill him.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha remained silent after listening to the entire story. I picked up my glass. However, it was empty because I kept drinking in the middle of talking. I had already finished the entire bottle Yoo Yeonha prepared.

“T-That...”

Yoo Yeonha finally opened her mouth after 10 minutes.

“You want me to believe that?”

“...”

I shook my head. After all, I had no evidence.

“You don’t have to if you can’t. Just don’t deny it.”

Yoo Yeonha silently dropped her head.

“Haaa...”

She sighed deeply and rubbed her chin. As if that wasn't enough, she began to rumple her hair. Tik, tok. After another 15 minutes...

“Ah!”

Yoo Yeonha suddenly shot up. Then she walked towards the elevator.

“Ah, hey. Where are you going?”

“To Uncle.”

“...Uncle?”

“Yes, he's the one who told me about your tattoo.”

“...Ah.”

So it was Yoo Jinhyuk who found out? Did his gift go through a second awakening?

“Huu...”

I grabbed the back of my neck. This is exactly why I wanted to quit relying on the original story.

“I don't think Yoo Jinhyuk knows what I just told you. There's no way he does, so talking to him won't help—”

“How do you know that without talking to him?”

“...”

“Anyways, I won't be back tonight, so don't wait for me. Also... if you had any strange ideas because we were in a hotel, put that aside too.”

“Do I look that crazy?”

Yoo Yeonha smiled as the elevator door closed. However, it immediately opened again. I looked at her with a curious expression.

“Don’t misunderstand.”

I could see her thin smile through the opened door.

“I’m going to him not because I don’t believe you, but because I want to believe you.”

Chapter 143

Truth (3)

“Go to North Hamgyeong Province.”

Yoo Yeonha spoke as soon as she entered her limousine.

“North Hamgyeong Province?”

“Yes.”

“...”

However, the driver felt uncomfortable. Less than 10% of North Hamgyeong Province was habitable and half of that 10% was an intermediate rank danger zone. Surprisingly, North Hamgyeong Province had a population of 200,000.

“W-Won’t it be dangerous?”

Only mercenaries and hunters looking for a quick way to get rich stayed there. The driver didn’t want to travel to such a dangerous place.

“Don’t worry. I sent in a message.”

Yoo Yeonha had one-sidedly texted her father and uncle. To Yoo Jinhyuk, she wrote: [I’m coming to meet you. I told Father too, so don’t worry about it.] To Yoo Jinwoong, she wrote: [I’m going to meet Uncle.] Yoo Jinhyuk feared Yoo Jinwoong, so he should come out to greet her.

“Step on the gas.”

“Y-Yes.”

The driver stepped on the accelerator as the limousine drove away. Yoo Yeonha fell into deep thought as she looked at the scenery outside. She couldn't organize her worries with mere words. Soon, the urban scenery disappeared and only an empty road to North Hamgyeong Province remained.

Four days passed since then. Chae Nayun still hadn't woken up. She remained asleep in her hospital bed for unknown reasons. Chae Shinhyuk stayed up all night with her as Chae Joochul appeared on TV with a somber expression.

[...Daehyun will continue to fight and march forward despite everything that happened. We will not forget our values and will fight back the lawlessness and violence as we did in the past!]

He put on a show to glorify the name of Daehyun after his family's tragedy and the recent organized attacks by djinns.

"Hmm..."

The world began to turn, but the May sky still seemed peaceful and warm.

"Haa..."

Today, I visited Cube's administrative office to submit my dropout form. The administrative chief glanced at it and deeply sighed.

"You're dropping out after working so hard to reach the top 100? Is there a reason?"

"..."

I silently nodded.

"The Hero Association already prepared a title for you because of your unique gift. The sole gun-using hero, Gunner. You'll be able to live like a celebrity if you graduate."

A hero with the life of a celebrity. I held myself back from laughing.

“Several guilds are already eyeing you. Even Essence of the Strait showed interest. Do you still want to drop out?”

“Yes.”

“...There will be no turning back. Are you sure you won't regret it?”

“Yes.”

I nodded resolutely. I had no reason to stay in Cube anymore. There was nothing left to learn or obtain here.

“I see.”

Koong. The administrative chief stamped a red seal on my dropout form. I briefly stared at it before standing up and could hear a faint prayer as I left.

“May this poor child's future be full of blessings...”

The administrative chief seemed like a good person. I closed the door and left the building. Then I headed towards the Cube portal. Someone blocked my path as I walked past the garden.

“Hajin.”

“...Ah, Rachel.”

Rachel looked sad. She approached and placed a small box in my hand.

“This. It's a present.”

“Ah... thank you.”

“Open it later.”

“Okay.”

I tried to walk past her, but she blocked my path again with a thin smile.

“In England, we hug to say goodbyes.”

“...Gladly.”

With a smile, I hugged her warm body. We separated after about 3 seconds. Rachel spoke first.

“See you later then.”

“Yes.”

“...Oh.” She grabbed my wrist as I started walking past her. “P-Promise.”

“Of course. Next time, we’ll meet in England,” I replied with a smile and pulled away. “I’m going now.”

“...Yes, goodbye.”

I began to walk towards the portal station again. I could feel Rachel’s gaze behind me, but I didn’t turn around.

“Kim Hajin!” Kim Suho suddenly shouted my name and ran up.

“Hey! You bastard!”

I couldn’t help but stop after he shouted a second time. Wasn’t it still class time right now? Oh right, cadets had free periods because of the recent invasion incident.

“What?”

“What do you mean ‘what’?”

Kim Suho seemed angry.

“Why didn’t you tell me you were dropping out?”

“Well, we’ll be seeing each other often, so I didn’t see the need to tell you.”

“Eh?”

“What, you were going to stop seeing me? Are you discriminating against non-heroes?”

“N-No, not at all...”

Kim Suho still didn’t relax.

“Then where are you going? Chae Nayun is still unconscious. Shouldn’t you wait until she wakes up?”

“That’s my business to take care of. Also, Chae Nayun will wake up soon.”

I asked the Book of Truth when she would wake up and it answered, Soon.

“By the way, don’t talk to her about me when she wakes up.”

“...”

Kim Suho frowned. “Did you guys break up?”

We weren’t even in a relationship... Kim Suho was just too dense. I guess you could say it was a basic trait for handsome main characters.

“We never even dated.”

I didn’t know how my relationship with Kim Suho would change if Chae Nayun exposed the truth. I wouldn’t be able to properly stand in front of him anymore.

“Then why—”

“I don’t have time. I’ll see you later.”

I put my hand out. Kim Suho grabbed it, but widened his eyes as though he remembered something.

“Oh right! I used the jar you gave me...”

Kim Suho took off the branch hanging on his back.

“It might not be the best time to ask... but I’m dying to know. Can you appraise it for me?”

“Of course. You can ask me whenever you want.”

“Sorry, I think I fell in love with this sword.”

“I know, I know.”

I gladly appraised Misteltein.

[Greed of Accomplishment] The desire to overcome difficult situations has adhered to Misteltein. — Misteltein will be strengthened each time a difficulty is overcome. — Misteltein will now change form to reflect its user’s character. — Current alignment: [Righteousness 99%]

A smile emerged on my face.

“It suits you perfectly.”

I handed the sword back to him.

“Really?”

“Yeah. Misteltein will grow stronger every time you overcome difficult situations. Also, its form will change depending on your character.”

“Um...”

Kim Suho looked like he didn't quite understand.

“That means it can become a demonic sword or a holy sword depending on how you use it.”

“Ah, then for me—”

“It will become a holy sword.”

Kim Suho and I exchanged glances. Then he burst into laughter.

“Thank you.”

This time, he put out his hand first.

“No, I should be the one thanking you.”

I gladly took his hand. His expression seemed to shine under the warm sunlight.

I went to an empty park in Seoul's Seocho District for an appointment after officially dropping out. I turned on my smartwatch while waiting for Boss.

[Yoo Yeonha – (0)]

She still hadn't contacted me. Did she leave after being disappointed? Or was she still trying to confirm the truth? As I passed the time sighing... Tak, tak. Boss' footsteps woke me up.

“You're here.”

“...Sorry.”

Boss apologized as soon as she saw me. I could see the sincerity on her face.

“Don’t be. It’s too late now anyways and it’s not entirely your fault.”

I would’ve never been able to murder Chae Jinyoon without the Chameleon Troupe’s help.

“...I see.”

Boss still acted sullen. Her usual perky ears drooped and I found this side of her quite cute despite the situation.

“Cheer up. It’s not like I can slap you, right?”

I already decided to join the Chameleon Troupe. I wouldn’t leave even if things didn’t perfectly go my way. I couldn’t return to Cube or become a hero. Joining the Chameleon Troupe would be the best way to interfere with the story.

“...”

However, Boss suddenly turned her face to me.

“What are you doing?”

“Hit me if you want. It’s my fault.”

“Eh?”

“Hit me as much as you want.”

I can take a slap to the face — is what she seemed to say. I scratched my neck and pretended to slap her.

“Uuu.”

Boss shut her eyes and shuddered when my hand touched her.

“I can’t. How could I?”

I decided to ignore what happened. Boss opened her eyes and coughed.

“Good. Your respect for your boss is excellent.”

I actually made fun of her, but Boss excitedly spoke.

“Are you ready?”

“Yes.”

“Then follow me. Khalifa is waiting.”

Boss pointed behind me at the familiar black man who waved.

* * *

We arrived in a dark cave using Khalifa’s portal.

“Where are we?”

“Our hideout in England.”

“Ah.”

It was likely their new main hideout. Currently, I had a grand goal to make the Chameleon my ally.

“No one would think this place was a hideout.”

“Exactly. No one can find this place and there’s nothing here.”

Boss nodded in satisfaction, but I didn’t mean to praise it.

“Mmm...”

This cave didn't seem to be in good condition. I could see bats everywhere and mysterious insects crawling in the crevices. I couldn't even stand properly with so many sharp protrusions on the ground.

"I always sleep here."

"Eh?"

I jumped in surprise at Boss' words.

"Don't you have a large mansion? Why don't you sleep there?"

"The mansion is a place to live in. I only need 5 hours of sleep a week and it's also when I'm most vulnerable. I don't want to let my guard down for even a second."

"I see."

I carefully looked around the cave, but just couldn't see where she could sleep.

"Oh right. Hold on a second."

I turned on my smartwatch and checked the area's description.

[Chameleon Troupe's Hideout] [Disaster] — The Worst Place: You will become tired the longer you stay here. Staying here for more than 8 hours will increase the chance of catching a disease. Staying here for more than 24 hours will decrease your stats by up to 5 points. Staying here for more than 96 hours will increase your chance of death. — Is there a demon here? Humans cannot stay in this place for long. Staying here for more than 8 hours will mentally exhaust you. Staying here for more than 96 hours will cause various mental illnesses.

I recently discovered the new environmental setting description on my laptop. However, I still couldn't change the settings. The laptop would likely learn how to do it in future updates since changing the environment could have great benefits.

"What kind of place is this?"

The Chameleon Troupe's hideout was rotten, to say the least. This hellish place made you weaker the longer you stayed. I got goosebumps from reading its description.

"Oh right!"

I suddenly thought of something. With Dexterity, I had sculpted Shin Jonghak out of bronze. This cave was half the size of a soccer field. Wasn't this the perfect opportunity to raise Dexterity's proficiency? Not to mention, these cave walls even carried mana (although it was more like demonic energy).

"Um, Boss. Do you mind if I refurbish this place a bit?"

"Refurbish?"

Boss tilted her head at me.

"Yes. That way, Boss and other members can rest easily when they're here."

"I don't mind, but how? As you know, outsiders are strictly prohibited from entering this place."

"That's fine. I'll do everything myself. Like this."

I unleashed stigma's magic power. I didn't even need to form a tool. The magic power moved on its own and smoothened the sharp protrusions on the ground. It took 2 streaks of stigma and roughly 3 minutes to smooth out about a tenth of the cave's ground.

"Oh?" Boss exclaimed in surprise. She squatted down and rubbed the floor.

"You refined magic power and... no, you emitted magic power... no, that's not it either. Little apprentice, the property of the ground also changed. How did you do it?"

"I don't know."

I smiled and looked around the large cave. Indeed, it was the perfect place to train Dexterity.

I wasn't an architect or a designer, but all sorts of ideas popped up in my head. Of course, it would take a long time to realize everything. Thankfully, I had a lot of time.

"So is it okay for me to do this?"

"Sure."

Boss agreed. The surroundings suddenly turned noisy and I faced forward with widened eyes. A group of 9 individuals approached us.

"Kim Hajin."

Boss called my name.

"Yes?"

"I said I would tell you about Jeronimo, correct?"

"Ah... yes."

"We are filthier, dirtier, and even more unforgivable than you think."

I nodded. The Chameleon Troupe. I had designed them to be this world's worst lawbreaking organization.

"Is that fine with you?"

However, that was in the original story and it wouldn't be until 3 years later that the world dubbed them as such. In addition, I was certain that I could change them.

"Of course. I'm a murderer too."

I'd already killed and planned to kill even more. Such ideals no longer tied me down.

“...”

Boss nodded and pointed in front of me. I followed her gaze to the other members. They all looked exactly as I described them. Seat of red, Cheok Jungyeong. Seat of yellow, Jain. Seat of blue, Khalifa. Seat of green, Jin Yohan. Seat of violet, Droon. Seat of indigo, Yoo Kyunghwan. Seat of silver, Kaita. Seat of turquoise, Setryn. Seat of brown, Hirano Arashi. And finally... the seat of white, Boss. She dressed in black from top to bottom, but Boss was actually the seat of white. Ah, I guess her skin looks really white.

Cheok Jungyeong’s shout shook the cave walls. Boss stared at me in embarrassment.

“Little apprentice, I heard the two of you have met before.”

“Yes, he tried to kill me.”

“I heard that too. I scolded him for that already.”

“Aha.”

“Huhuhuhu.”

Cheok Jungyeong laughed with his teeth showing. He resembled a small ogre.

“Is he also one of us?”

I pretended to be oblivious.

“Yes.”

Boss replied while glancing at me.

“He’s not all that evil despite how he looks.”

“I know. He just looks stupid.”

“Oh, looks like the newbie has good eyes.”

“What are you talking about?”

The other members came closer. Boss coughed and began her introduction.

“This is our newest member, Kim Hajin.”

I faced the 9 members.

“I’ve seen videos of you. You have quite an interesting gift.”

Setryn, the Egyptian assassin, smiled at me.

“Of course, didn’t I tell you all? This guy didn’t flinch in front of my fist! Uhahaha, he sure has guts.”

Cheok Jungyeong heartily laughed. Then the 9 colors each gave me a look. They all had their own opinions: apathy, interest, and dissatisfaction.

“I heard you use a gun. Take it out!”

“No, why don’t you show us that coin throw again!”

“Coin throw? What’s that?”

I felt like a gazelle stuck between a lion, elephant, hippo, giraffe, and other powerful beasts.

Chapter 144

Chameleon Troupe (1)

Every member of the Chameleon Troupe convened in the desolate cave.

They were all at least high rank and could interfere in any major incident. The cave was filled with their aura and magic power. Most cadets would faint from the pressure because of a phenomenon called magic power resonance, but it didn't affect me since my body didn't contain any magic power.

“Oi! Why don't we have a ranking tournament now that all 11 members have gathered?”

Cheok Jungyeong shouted as he cracked his neck and knuckles. He might not have meant to shout, but was naturally loud.

“I'm down.”

A gentle-looking man spoke. He was the Chameleon Troupe's seat of green, the spear user Jin Yohan. His current weapon should be the serpent spear, a historical artifact used by Zhang Fei of the Three Kingdoms. Its unique ability was limitless weight adjustment.

“Then do it outside. Don't destroy this place.”

“I'm out.”

Setryn and Jain both spoke. Setryn wore all sorts of jewelry since I modeled her after Cleopatra. Her beauty easily ranked in the top 10 of this world.

“Are you joining in, newbie?”

Cheok Jungyeong grinned at me. Immediately, I felt a chill run down my back, but managed to ignore him and spoke to Boss.

“Can I begin refurbishing this place now?”

Boss only blinked her large eyes.

“Shouldn’t we give the newbie more time? He’s still too young.”

However, Jain came to my rescue. Yes, I still needed time. A lot of time... although I would still rank dead last even in 10 years.

“It’s fine. I’ll go easy. Kids are supposed to grow by getting beat up.”

Jin Yohan took out his serpent spear as beads of sweat formed on my forehead.

“What do you think?”

Setryn licked her finger and seductively stared at me.

“Hey! I told you, he might look like a weakling, but he’s actually—!”

“Jungyeong, didn’t I tell you not to shout? Want me to stitch your lips shut?”

“Haha, bitch finally went crazy.”

Thankfully, Cheok Jungyeong and Setryn got into a fight. Only 4 members chatted around. The rest only silently stared or yawned out of boredom.

“I’ll crush your head outside. I won’t go easy just because you’re a woman.”

“Oh, our Jungyeong’s finally going to lose his neck.”

“Haha, why don’t we just do that tournament then?”

“Quiet.”

A single word from Boss cooled the heated atmosphere.

“I need to give you something.”

Boss rummaged through her pocket and took out a piece of crumpled paper. “Take this.”

“...?”

Puzzled, I took the paper. “What is it?”

“A grade 1 magic contract.”

I checked the paper’s description with my smartwatch.

[Grade 1 Magic Contract] [High rank magic item] — Contract Seal: Will recognize each party’s identity. Those tied together by contract seals must abide by the contents of the contract.

It was higher ranked than the ones I usually saw. I checked the contents.

[Contract] Clause 1. Kim Hajin cannot betray me. Clause 2. I will do my duty as his boss as long as Kim Hajin does not betray me. Clause 3. Whoever breaks the contract will suffer from magic power deviation. (Duration – 6 years)

The contract only contained 3 childish clauses.

“Um, Boss.”

“What.”

I thought about how to explain it. Of course, a magic power contract didn’t need to be as detailed as a real contract, but loose wording could always lead to loopholes.

“Hmm.”

However, Boss must’ve misunderstood my hesitation.

“Are you afraid of joining us?”

Immediately, 10 pairs of eyes fell on me. Their gazes sent a chill down my back. Each member simply gave off a terrifying aura.

“Of course not. I just thought these clauses seemed too loose.”

“Ah, you don’t have to worry about that. It’s an expensive contract, so it’s quite intelligent.”

“I see.”

An intelligent contract. I found it quite interesting and infused stigma’s magic power into it. Honestly, this contract probably wouldn’t work on me since stigma’s magic power didn’t reside in my body.

“Will this do?”

Stigma’s magic power seeped into the contract.

“Oh? What’s this? Your magic power is unbelievably pure!” Cheok Jungyeong exclaimed in awe when he saw my magic power.

“Look, Boss. It’s so clear and blue. It’s the first time I’ve seen such a thing.”

As Cheok Jungyeong said, stigma should be the purest form of magic power. I wasn’t exactly sure what it was or how it worked, but it did represent the creator’s authority.

“Wow, this kid sure is a treasure. Argh, I can’t hold back anymore. Come out and spar with me!”

“I’ll watch too.”

“Quiet, both of you.”

Even Jain started to show interest in watching us fight, but Boss thankfully held them back. Then she infused her magic power into the contract.

“There, the contract is done.”

She carefully folded the paper and placed it back in her pocket.

“Little apprentice, here’s a gift.”

Boss handed me an accessory. The jet-black necklace represented the Chameleon Troupe’s seat of black.

[Necklace of Black] [Artifact] [Unawakened] — Will increase all variable stats by 1 point. — Invisibility: This necklace can become invisible. — ??? (Item must be awakened.)

Each member of the Chameleon Troupe carried a symbolic item. The seat of black received a simple yet powerful item that could raise every stat by 1.

“Oh, looks like that thing finally found an owner. Now, let’s go spar to celebrate.”

Cheok Jungyeong suggested once again. Why was this guy so interested in me?

“Sorry, I need to do something now.”

“Do it later.”

No, I couldn’t do it later. I couldn’t win against a single member of the Chameleon Troupe. I wouldn’t last more than 10 seconds against anyone. I turned towards Boss.

“I have a mission.”

Someone suddenly grabbed my sleeve.

“Hyung, hyung. Can you show me your gun?”

A young boy who had yet to reach puberty asked. I turned towards Droon’s cute voice. The Caucasian boy was only around 11 years old. However, he couldn’t be underestimated because of his youth. Frankly, Droon could be considered the world’s strongest. To be exact, that thing stuck to Droon was that strong.

“My real weapon isn’t a gun.”

I made up a half-hearted excuse since I didn’t want to show him my Desert Eagle.

“Eh? Really? You use an even more amazing weapon than that cowardly one?”

Cheok Jungyeong shouted once again. What was I supposed to do with this numbskull?

“Haha, I knew it this whole time.”

“Um, I still want to see it.”

I gave in and took out my gun at Droon’s pleading eyes. I had nothing to lose by being nice to him.

“Do you want to touch it?”

“Yes!”

I gave Droon the Desert Eagle and he began to touch it full of interest. Suddenly, that thing shot out from his back. A fat, shadowy rabbit flashed its crimson eyes and stared at my gun. Soon, a smile emerged on the rabbit’s face. Droon also smiled and handed the gun back to me.

Droon also acted as the Chameleon Troupe's appraiser. I could take pride in my gun since he praised it.

"Thanks."

"If you're done with introductions, focus." Boss gathered everyone's attention.

"The reason I summoned everyone today isn't just to welcome a new member."

Boss put on a serious smile and clenched her fists. "We will begin our activities in 2 weeks."

The atmosphere in the cave suddenly changed. Cheok Jungyeong's expression was particularly noteworthy. He grinned from ear to ear in excitement at Boss' next words.

Sunlight shone through on a beautiful morning.

"Haaa."

Yoo Jinhyuk got up from his couch with a sigh. He didn't feel so good despite the beautiful weather.

"Tsk."

He clicked his tongue and opened the door to his office bedroom. Drnk — Beyond the sliding door lay a girl on his bed like a vampire sleeping in a coffin.

"When is she going to leave?"

Today was the fifth, no, sixth day. Yoo Yeonha declared that she wouldn't go back until he told her the truth.

"Sigh."

He thought she would leave after a day or two at most. However, his stubborn niece refused to give up. She bugged him more and more every day. It would've been one thing if she just holed up in his office, but she constantly looked around town for anything with business value. As a result, Yoo Yeonha became famous in the shanty town.

"Will you finally tell me the truth now?"

Yoo Yeonha's voice suddenly rang out. Startled, Yoo Jinhyuk swallowed his saliva. Yoo Yeonha continued as she lay in bed.

"Tell me."

"No, I really don't know anything."

Yoo Yeonha got up. Her flawless beauty made it hard to believe she just woke up.

"That's fine. I'll just stay until you do."

"You..."

Yoo Jinhyuk asked Yoo Jinwoong to take back his daughter. However, Yoo Jinwoong surprisingly asked him to have her stay, saying that being with him was safer than being at Cube. Of course, he didn't forget to mention that he would kill Yoo Jinhyuk if anything happened to Yoo Yeonha.

"I already know a few things."

"Oh yeah? Like what?" Yoo Yeonha hesitated, then sighed.

"I guess I have no choice. It doesn't look like we'll get anywhere if neither of us says anything, but I can't tell you my source."

"Sure."

Yoo Jinhyuk answered half-heartedly. As far as he was concerned, whatever information she had must be a groundless rumor.

“The information I have is simple. Cough.”

Yoo Yeonha continued, “Chae Jinyoon... became a devil.”

Yoo Yeonha muttered as though it was the truth. Immediately, Yoo Jinhyuk’s hairs stood on end. However, he maintained a commanding appearance and didn’t show any outward agitation.

“Devil? Like Satan and all those devils from the bible?”

“No, you know what I’m talking about. The existences above djinns. The evil gods who give them power.”

“What...”

Yoo Jinhyuk was about to brush it aside, but suddenly recalled a voice he heard with his ability. The medical examiner who spoke in front of Chae Jinyoon’s corpse.

— This is even more elaborate than the djinns’ devil transformation. It’s persisting even after his death.”

Something even more elaborate than the devil transformation... The pieces of the puzzle fell in place.

“So you do know something. Maybe I should’ve told you earlier.”

Yoo Jinhyuk’s expression revealed his brief thought and Yoo Yeonha didn’t forget to point it out. Yoo Jinhyuk had no choice but to sigh.

“Just so you know, I’ve been staying quiet to protect you. If we handle this wrong, even your mom and dad might end up killed.”

“...Eh?”

“So wouldn’t it be better if only I might die?”

Yoo Yeonha silently stared at him. “Are we that weak?”

“What?”

“Are we so weak that our entire family will be killed from defying a single person?”

Yoo Jinhyuk became speechless. He couldn’t think of a response.

“If so, I’ll make us stronger.”

Yoo Yeonha spoke daringly. However, that was impossible to achieve. The Yoo clan was the Chae clan’s hunting dog from birth. It grew by performing the Chae clan’s dirty work and remained at Chae Joochul’s mercy.

“So trust me.”

Her naive words cut off his thoughts. Yoo Jinhyuk could only smile at his niece. A kid who always acted like a grown-up finally became an adult. He couldn’t help but be amazed.

[Mission Commencement. D-10]

Four days have passed since then. With Khalifa’s help, I went back and forth between the Chameleon Troupe’s hideout and my apartment while continuing my [Chameleon Troupe Hideout Renovation and Dexterity Level Up Project]. During the past 4 days, I realized that Dexterity was quite difficult to level up. I couldn’t be more grateful to Master Sharpshooter for helping it become grade 7.

Jiing —

First, I created a small workshop in the cave. Currently, I worked on making a couch. Dexterity’s proficiency increased more when I crafted bigger objects, but I couldn’t make anything bigger than a couch due to stigma’s limited magic power.

I came up with a design with the help of aether’s aesthetic greed. Then I bought expensive materials and crafted the couch’s frame with stigma's magic power. I stuffed it with the highest grade filling and covered everything with monster alligator skin.

The entire process took 9 hours to complete.

“Whew.”

I finally finished and clutched my head as I fell onto a chair.

[Dexterity's proficiency has increased by 1.5%!]

“1.5% for all that work...”

That felt too stingy, but I also had more than enough time.

[Devilish Dexterity has activated through your luck.] [The alligator skin couch has been appraised as high rank furniture. A special effect will be granted to its status.] [Special effect – Significance of Rest] This couch will quickly recover any of your exhaustion. Whoever sleeps on this couch will wake up refreshed.

I couldn't make furniture that gave temporary stat bonuses, but this was more than praiseworthy.

“Hmm.”

I picked up the couch. Lifting heavy objects no longer posed a problem with my superhuman strength.

“Here's a couch.”

I came out of the workshop and announced my creation. Boss was the first to see me.

“You built another one?”

Boss woke up from her sleep (surprisingly, she slept standing) and murmured apathetically. The other pieces of furniture surrounded her: a table, TV drawer, etc.

“Little apprentice, don’t you think you’re changing this place too quickly? I think I need some time to adjust.”

I’ve been slowly changing the Chameleon Troupe’s hideout for the past 4 days. I made a resting place for Boss by turning a 160 square meter space into a modern room and smoothing out all the walls, ceiling, and floor. Then I painted everything white.

“You have to at least live like a person. Also, why don’t you watch TV? There’s a lot of good variety shows.”

“I’m not interested in those.”

“Just try it.”

I placed the couch at an appropriate distance from the TV.

“Try sitting down.”

“...”

However, Boss shook her head.

“I’ve never sat to rest. I like standing.”

“Then I’m going back to the workshop.”

I returned to the workshop. After closing the door, I peered through it to observe Boss.

— Why is it so big?

She glanced at the couch, then poked at it here and there with her foot. It didn’t look like she would sit.

“That’s a bit sad.”

Would she use it if I made a better one? Unfortunately, more than one would be a waste since making furniture expended stigma’s magic power. Now, I went on to train next. I needed a more threatening weapon than just a gun. Not to mention, having more options in battle would always help.

Shoo —

“Start.”

I held up 10 daggers and initiated my training program. Eleven holographic targets shot up 300 meters away, equally spaced around me. I threw my daggers at them. Chweeek— These daggers would undoubtedly strike all the targets. However, I wanted more. I took out the bow hanging on my back the moment I threw the daggers.

“Uwoah!”

My neck got caught on the bowstring and I fell forward.

“Argh, I almost died.”

That would’ve been a deadly mistake in a real fight.

“My neck...”

Dexterity’s low proficiency made simultaneously using daggers, a bow, and a gun quite difficult. Unless I had another arm... Wait. Another arm? Even stigma couldn’t create another arm, but I should be able to utilize it similarly. Of course, I would have to test it later since I already used 2.5 streaks of stigma to build the couch.

“I’ll try it tomorrow.”

I looked outside the workshop without much thought.

“Eh?”

A small grin emerged on my face. Boss sat on the couch and bounced on the cushion as though its softness surprised her.

— Swamp alligator skin? Indeed, their skins are known to be great.

After giving the big couch a review, she turned her attention to the small couch chair I made a couple of days ago. She brought it over after briefly glancing at my workshop and rested her feet on top. She seemed extremely comfortable.

— Mmm.

Boss closed her eyes with a satisfied hum. Then, as though something was missing, she reached out and grabbed the TV remote.

“!@#!@#”

— Hiik!

She quickly lowered the volume.

“How cute.”

Right, that was how people changed. My first goal to make Boss watch TV succeeded.

“I guess I’ll go back to practicing.”

I smiled and picked up the daggers. I couldn’t feel down just because of one failure. I had to give my best in everything, but I needed a cigarette first.

* * *

I went outside after practicing for 3 hours.

“Hm?”

I heard faint breathing when I went out to buy some more cigarettes. I tilted my head in that direction.

“Is she sleeping?”

Boss lay asleep on the couch with her arms out. Not too long ago, she said she preferred to sleep standing up. I grinned and took out my smartwatch. This was the perfect chance for a photo. I muted the sound and took pictures of her sleeping. She still didn't show any signs of waking. Was my couch that good? I suddenly received a message while being satisfied with myself.

[I confirmed the truth. Nayun is also awake.]

Yoo Yeonha finally messaged me after a week of silence. I tried to reply, but...

“...!”

A sudden pain struck my arm as if it was being ripped off. The feeling of another streak of stigma being added. I knew what this meant. However...

“Fuck...”

It's just too painful. I used the painkiller medicinal effect, but the pain only grew clearer. I clenched my teeth and forced my eyes open to confirm the alerts on my smartwatch.

[A fourth streak of stigma has been added.] [Stigma will require more total SP for the fifth.] [Your laptop is now updating.] — Adding New Functionalities...

My consciousness faded away and my vision turned dark.

Chameleon Troupe (2)

Seoul looked cloudy today. The sky filled with grey as though it would rain at any moment.

“Hmm...” Yoo Yeonha sighed at the scenery outside her limousine. “I think Hamgyeong had better air and weather. Don’t you think so?”

“Pardon?”

That surprised her driver. He had also stayed there for a week since he didn’t want to risk any accidents while returning alone.

“Y-Yes, you’re right.”

“Hamgyeong Province would’ve developed a lot if it wasn’t for the shudderwock.”

The mountains there were deep and secluded. Pure magic power filled the atmosphere and the morning air felt especially refreshing due to the mountains’ life energy. Yoo Yeonha would’ve loved to visit more often if it wasn’t for the shudderwock that lived in Hamgyeong Province’s mountains.

“Y-You’re right,” the driver reluctantly agreed.

“Hmm, I’ll have to look into the price of land around there.”

Yoo Yeonha confirmed her desire to buy land in Hamgyeong Province. The driver stepped on the accelerator, afraid that Yoo Yeonha would want to go back.

“We’re here.”

The limousine soon reached the Daehyun Hospital. Chae Nayun had been transferred over from the Gangnam Severance Hospital 4 days ago and finally woke up today.

“You can go ahead. I’ll call you when I leave.”

“Understood.”

Yoo Yeonha got off the limousine with a nervous heart.

“Ah, it’s Yeonha!”

Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, and Yi Yeonghan all stood in front of the VIP entrance.

“You’re here, Yeonha.”

“Un.”

Yoo Yeonha smiled at Shin Jonghak.

“You waited for me?”

“No.”

“...Then why are you standing here?”

“No reason.”

“Whatever, let’s go in.”

Yoo Yeonha entered the hospital with them. They reached Chae Nayun’s room after walking past the beautiful garden and took a deep breath.

“You can go in. She’s fine.”

A nurse softly encouraged them as Kim Suho turned the doorknob.

Kiik. The door slowly opened and a soft breeze greeted them from the opened window. Chae Nayun stood in front of it and silently looked out. They hesitated to enter and Chae Nayun didn't seem to notice them.

"Nayun, your friends are here."

Chae Shinhyuk, who was already in the room, spoke. Only then did Chae Nayun turn around.

"...Hey guys."

Chae Nayun slowly approached them. Yoo Yeonha felt her heart thumping. She couldn't look at her straight in the eyes.

"I heard I slept for a week."

However, she laughed like usual as though nothing happened. Yoo Yeonha worked up the courage to speak.

"Y-Yeah."

"Are you feeling okay?" Kim Suho asked.

"Yeah, I wouldn't be standing otherwise."

Chae Nayun stretched to show that she was fine. Shin Jonghak gave her a warm smile.

"I wouldn't expect anything less from you."

"Kim Suho, Shin Jonghak, do you guys have time today?"

"Hm?"

"I do, but..."

Chae Nayun spoke to both of them, "Help me train. I slept for a week, so I need to regain my dulled senses."

“Shouldn’t you rest for today?”

“No, I don’t have time.”

“Time?”

“Yeah.”

Chae Nayun smiled. “I want to kill someone, so I have to work hard.”

She sounded indifferent, yet resolute and full of hatred. Yoo Yeonha’s heart sank when she heard that.

“K-Kill?” Kim Suho asked in surprise.

“So? Are you going to help me or not? I’ll just train with Shin Jonghak if you’re not available.”

“Um, what about me, Yi Yeonghan? I’m here too, you know.”

“I can help you train, but I don’t think you should... kill someone.”

“Shut it and follow me. Oh, Yeonha, are you coming too?”

Yoo Yeonha shook her head. She couldn’t maintain her composure and left first. She could hear Chae Nayun’s voice behind her, but she couldn’t make out the words.

I opened my eyes and blankly stared at the white ceiling I had painted. The alligator skin couch I made felt quite comfortable. The boundary between dream and reality felt faint, but the sharp pain on my upper arm woke me up.

“Uuu.”

I couldn’t move my arm. The after-effect grew worse compared to when I received the third streak. Did stigma put more burden on my body as its capacity increased? I simply sighed and couldn't move.

"Haa... I have to go home."

Evandel was waiting for me, but she did seem too busy lately playing with her friend. She might even be happy that I wasn't there to nag her.

"..."

Feeling wronged, I clenched my teeth and forced myself up. My eyelids trembled from the intense pain that followed any movement.

"You're up?"

A voice suddenly rang out. It wasn't Boss, but this heavy and deep voice belonged to... Khalifa.

"...?"

"Do you remember my name?"

"Of course, Khalifa."

I remembered everyone on the first day.

"Um, how long was I asleep?"

"At least 24 hours."

Khalifa tapped on the ground with the back of his foot and opened a portal.

"Boss asked me to stay since you wouldn't be able to return without me."

"Ah... thank you."

“You don’t need to thank me, but...”

Khalifa paused for a moment and looked around the cave that significantly changed compared to 5 days ago.

“I’d like to be next.”

“Next? Oh.”

He meant the next room.

“Of course, I don’t intend for it to be free.”

Khalifa tossed me something the size of a baseball.

“It’s a blue rock stone. It looks like you love making things, so you can use it as material.”

I gladly received the expensive gem that contained magic power and put it away.

“Then I’ll make your room next.”

“Thanks. So what do you think about the mission?”

“Oh, that?”

Four days ago, Boss announced to all the members that she would annihilate past traitors who scorned and ridiculed the Chameleon Troupe. She called it, Operation Old Revenge. Most of our targets were djinns in Pandemonium, but also some heroes and businessmen too.

“Are you confident?”

“...”

I looked at stigma on my upper arm. Four streaks. A circle now surrounded the cross.

“I am.”

I returned to Seoul using Khalifa’s portal and quickly ran home to Evandel. BeebeebEEP— I entered the password and tiny footsteps rang out. Evandel and Hayang stood right in front of the door by the time it half-opened.

“Hajin!”

“Meow.”

“Sorry, I’m late.”

I picked them both up. They didn’t blame me for not coming home every once in a while, but I still felt like I should apologize. I found someone else there when I arrived in the living room.

“Hello.”

“Oh, hey.”

Evandel’s friend, Yun Haeyeon, also came today. They seemed to be playing together with all the Lego pieces on the ground. I placed Evandel and Hayang down and patted Haeyeon’s head.

“Hajin Hajin, where were you?”

“Hm? Oh, I just had something to do. Anyways, did you eat dinner yet?”

“Un, we ordered food.”

“Chicken again? Good job. Ah, hold on a second.”

I had to check something. I remembered an alert about a laptop update when I received the fourth streak.

[Laptop Update]... (Currently in progress) Remaining time: 3y 13d...

What? It's still not over? And what's with 3y 13d? Don't tell me it's 3 years and 13 days!

Ding— The doorbell suddenly rang. I turned around and shouted.

“Who is it?”

— Ah, I'm Haeyeon's aunt... I heard she was here, so I came to pick her up.

“Ah, no... I want to stay and play more...”

Haeyeon cutely reacted to the voice outside and hid behind Evandel, who seriously announced, “I'll protect you.”

“Ah, yes. Hold on.”

I opened the door without much thought.

Click—

“Eh?” I doubted my eyes.

“Hm?”

In front of the door stood... Yun Seung-Ah.

Under the dark sky, I came to a nearby park with Yun Seung-Ah at 9 P.M. As expected, a rich neighborhood had all sorts of recreational equipment. However, Yun Seung-Ah and I went straight to the swings as though we had promised to sit and talk there.

“...”

“...”

Neither of us said much. We came out to give the kids more time since we knew each other. I started the conversation after riding the swing for about 5 minutes.

“Cough, I didn’t know the vice leader had a niece.”

“I also didn’t think Cadet Hajin had a... um, she’s not your daughter, right?”

“Of course not. She’s my... niece. Also, you don’t have to talk so politely.”

“Ah, okay.”

Yun Seung-Ah didn’t ask any further. She seemed exhausted because of everything that happened recently.

“Do you live here? I never knew.”

“Me? No, I used to have a mansion elsewhere, but I sold it. I’m living with my older brother right now.”

“...”

I ended up poking her where it hurt. She must’ve sold off her mansion to pay off the class action lawsuit among other things.

“Rather than that, I didn’t know you lived in such a nice place, Hajin.”

“I do stock trading on the side. I made a lot of money with it.”

“I see. I wouldn’t expect any less from someone ranked first in theory.”

That was the end of our first conversation. Yun Seung-Ah looked up at the crescent moon and fell silent. I didn’t say anything either. It just felt too awkward. Should I have just let her leave with Haeyeon?

“Cube’s cadets. Are they disappointed?” Yun Seung-Ah muttered.

“Disappointed? No, not really—”

“I’m thinking of dropping everything and joining the association.”

“The Hero Association?”

“Yeah. The Temple of Justice has an empty seat.”

“Eh?”

The Temple of Justice was the strongest even among the Hero Association’s numerous departments. They functioned similarly to the United Stations’ Peacekeeping Corps. No, I guess they weren’t that similar. After all, the Temple of Justice only had 13 members.

“Aileen is also in that group, right?”

“Yeah.”

Yun Seung-Ah snickered, “You didn’t care much about me, but it seems that’s not the case with Aileen.”

“She’s the human dragon. I’d be an idiot if I didn’t know her.”

Aileen, the hero who used spirit speech, and one of the most overpowered heroes I created.

“Heh, she’s too small to be a dragon. Her official height is 153 cm, but she’s actually shorter.”

“Eh?”

“I’m not kidding. She’s so tiny. All you’ll see is her head if you look down. Ah, but don’t do that. She’ll get mad if you look down at her head even though that’s not something you can control... sigh.”

Yun Seung-Ah mumbled randomly and suddenly drooped her head. It seemed she suffered from depression like me. Maybe I should tell her to also smoke.

“Sorry, I shouldn’t have said that. I haven’t talked to anyone for a while.”

“No, it’s fine.”

The public and media now talked about Cube’s djinns invasion, but the amount of attention Creator’s Sacred Grace received before was astronomical. Yoo Yeonha probably had something to do with it since she always acted mercilessly when it came to exploiting her opponent’s weakness.

“Why don’t you try aiming for the guild leader position?”

“Guild leader?”

“I mean, it’s not your fault that they failed the tower campaign. It was the guild leader’s fault for pushing it. I think this is your best opportunity.”

I tried bringing up the topic. Yun Seung-Ah should be voting to fire the guild leader in the board meeting soon.

“You think like a kid.”

“I am a kid.”

“I guess you are. Well, I’ll think about it.”

“Sure. Honestly, Creator’s Sacred Grace doesn’t feel right without Yun Seung-Ah.”

I grinned and stood up.

“Pft, yeah. I think so too. Are you leaving?”

“Yep. Oh right, Haeyeon said she wanted to sleep over. What should we do?”

“Got it. Good night, vice leader. Oh, also...”

I suddenly recalled something and turned towards her. “Suho is waiting for you to call him.”

Yun Seung-Ah’s face immediately lit up. “H-Hm? W-What are you talking about?”

“You don’t have to feign ignorance. All of our close friends already know.”

“A-About what? I’m too old compared to Suho...”

Yun Seung-Ah was 9-10 years older than Suho on paper, but that wasn’t the case. Suho was 3-4 years older than his official age.

“Don’t worry. He’s into older women.”

“Older women?”

“Yep, only older women.”

“Only... ah, no. I keep telling you, that’s not it!”

I grinned at her girlish side.

“Ah, Hajin! It’s not like that! D-Don’t you spread that rumor!”

I ignored her shouting behind me.

* * *

Ten days quickly passed and the Chameleon Troupe’s mission finally arrived. Currently, I stood on the outskirts of Pandemonium for my first mission as an official Chameleon Troupe member.

— Hyung, can you see that tower in the distance?

Droon's voice sounded in my ears.

“Hold on.”

I took a look around and discovered a tall clock tower. It easily measured 200 meters tall, but I headed towards it without hesitation. With parkour, I reached the peak in 30 seconds.

“Whew.”

I stood on the support fixture and looked into the distance. My clothes fluttered in the breeze mixed with demonic energy and blood. Pandemonium, a city governed by djinns, contained many buildings and a large population.

“Yeah, I see it.”

My target looked particularly eye-catching even in the bustling city.

— Yep, that's the one.

A 10 story tower with a sleek design and the giant obsidian on its rooftop made it look like a magic tower. This building served as their base.

— That building took 50 billion won to make. Let's crush it! Crush, crush!

“Yeah.”

Today's target was one of Pandemonium's private organizations, Hatred's End. My objective was to destroy their new base.

— By the way hyung, your clothes look cool.

“Thanks.”

— Did you make a special effort for your first mission?

“No.”

I wore clothes that I had made myself. I didn't design them with any special care, but they turned out pretty cool thanks to aether. The cape to conceal myself became an assassin's hooded cape, which looked like a main character's equipment, and the mask with a chrome decoration also became the mastermind's mask.

— It must be because of all the black. Can you make me something similar later?

Droon talked quite a lot, but I forgave him since he was a kid. It definitely wasn't because I feared him.

— Hyung, hyung. Will you be fine? That tower looks sturdy.

“I don't have a choice. I'm the only one here.”

— You don't have to do it alone.

“...Really?”

I thought about what I had: the Blessed Bow of Horus, magic amplification medicinal effect, Master Sharpshooter, Random Consolidation System, and 4 streaks of stigma. A small smile emerged on my face. Blowing up a tower should be a piece of cake.

“No, I think I can do it.”

— Ooh, are you going to use a bow?

“Yep.”

I couldn't use guns on the Chameleon Troupe's missions since the entire world knew I was the only gun-using hero.

— Okay, I'll leave the mark after you succeed.

“Mark?”

— Yep. The mark of a new black.

“Do you have to?”

— Of course. We're attacking as a warning to tell them we're back.

“Okay, okay.”

— Un!

I took a deep breath.

“Scan.”

I murmured and pulled out the bow on my back. Its wooden frame pleasantly clacked. Sssss— Aether adhered to Horus' bow and strengthened it. I held it in one hand and concentrated stigma's magic power into the other.

— Take this! Invisible sword!

“...Don't say weird things.”

— Ah, I forgot to turn off the radio. Sorry, hyung.

I refocused on transforming stigma. Form, arrow. Property, explosion. Goal, destruction. Color, black.

I only used 3.6 streaks of stigma just in case. Shooooong— Stigma's magic power danced and compressed into an arrow, forming what looked like a javelin. I added a medicinal effect with external magic power amplification on top of it.

“I'm ready.”

The arrow radiated with a black light as I nocked it.

“I’m shooting.”

— Count down.

Wasn’t he supposed to turn off the radio?

“Three. Two. One.”

Chweeeek—

The arrow shot through the sky in a beautiful, straight line. It hurled towards the target at least 1.5 km away and reached it in the blink of an eye.

KWANG—!

A huge explosion erupted and a fierce gale blew, sucking in air from every direction. Then a thunderous sound roared.

It took a second for total destruction and only dust remained where their tower used to proudly stand. Soon, I could see pieces of the obsidian raining down.

“Is that good enough?”

— Wow! It’s perfect, hyung.

“Then I’m leaving.”

I turned around without hesitation.

— So cool!

I reached into my pocket after hearing Droon’s praise and endured the throbbing pain on my upper right arm. Then I took out a cigarette and lit it in my mouth with stigma. It tasted bitter.

Chapter 146

Chameleon Troupe (3)

Bits and pieces of obsidian and concrete rained from the sky. Koong. Koong. The ground shook and smoke rose as the tower fell apart.

“Haha.”

Cheok Jungyeong and Jin Yohan laughed at the chaos. A tower that stood just 3 seconds ago completely collapsed and it only took a single arrow. The two of them couldn’t be more satisfied.

“Looks like we made the right choice.”

“See, I told you. My eyes are never wrong.”

They had achieved their first goal. Now, it was up to them. Cheok Jungyeong equipped his gauntlets as Jin Yohan held up his spear. Then they walked towards the fallen tower.

“Don’t forget. We’re only killing the executives. Boss is watching.”

“I know. Oh look, there’s one there.”

Cheok Jungyeong quickly found a person to kill. The man had jumped from the crumbling building and lightly landed. Cheok Jungyeong wasn’t sure who he was, but his gut feeling told him this man was an executive, so he gathered his strength and shot forward.

“Huup!”

A small crater appeared as he kicked the ground and leaped away like a cannonball.

“What!”

“Caught you—!”

Cheok Jungyeong grabbed the man’s head and slammed him to the ground. The man’s bones instantly broke and sheer strength crushed his head. Cheok Jungyeong’s eyes flashed after his first kill. He looked like a predator hunting for prey. It didn’t take long before he shot towards someone else running away. KOONG!

“Are you sure you’re not a beast?”

Jin Yohan mumbled as he shook his head. Meanwhile, Cheok Jungyeong already charged at another enemy. He seemed like an agile ogre.

“Fuck! Who is he?”

Jin Yohan heard someone shouting and turned to see a Caucasian man in his early 30s pointing at Cheok Jungyeong.

It was the third executive of Hatred’s End, Slavan.

Slavan also discovered the smiling Jin Yohan, who suddenly shot forward with a spear.

“Dammit!”

Slavan took out the sword from his waist. His sharp blade met Jin Yohan’s seemingly simple spear strikes.

Crack—

It seemed like a light clash, but the result was overwhelmingly one-sided. Jin Yohan’s serpent spear changed its weight to 10 tons and instantly crushed Slavan’s body and sword.

“I got one.”

Jin Yohan reported with a smile.

I contacted Khalifa as soon as I finished. He quickly appeared and opened a portal for me to return.

Our hideout appeared quite different now. Of course, only 2 weeks had passed since I began remodeling it, so I hadn't even finished 10% of the project. However, the cave felt much better now with separate rooms.

I turned it into a dome-like structure with a central lobby. The dome had doors that led to each member's room, a workshop, a research lab, and other facilities.

"I'm back."

"Good work."

Boss sat on the only couch in the lobby.

"You did well. The other members will take care of the rest."

Boss and I smiled at each other. Then she suddenly made a shooing gesture.

"Now move."

"Pardon?"

Droon's video projected behind me. Jin Yohan and Cheok Jungyeong were in the middle of a battle.

"Ah, yes."

It didn't feel right sitting next to Boss, so I stood behind the couch. I could see Boss' head right in front of me.

"..."

I noticed her hair looked quite disheveled. She had a few split ends as well. An unbearable urge rose in my heart, a side effect from aether's aesthetic greed.

"B-Boss, do you want me to comb your hair?"

"Hmm?"

Boss tilted her head and turned around.

"Hair?"

"Yes."

"...No."

"It'll feel good."

"I'm fine."

"...But I'm not."

I transformed aether into a comb and pulled Boss' long black hair. I began combing her hair before she could resist.

"Didn't I tell you... I don't... need... nyaa."

She stopped talking and joyfully hummed. She couldn't resist the pleasure. Not only was the aether comb a hundred times better than most, but my Dexterity also made me an expert.

"Mmm."

Soon, she relaxed and her eyelids twitched whenever she felt strong pleasure. I tied up her hair into a ponytail after combing it for about 5 minutes.

"There."

“...”

Boss opened her eyes and looked somewhat unsatisfied.

“Cough, you don’t have to do this to show your loyalty.”

“No, I’m doing this because I want to.”

“...”

Boss silently caressed her hair.

“What is this?”

“Oh, I thought you’d look good in it. Do you want a mirror?”

“No.”

Knowing Boss, I still formed a mirror with aether. She carefully looked at her reflection, turning here and there as though she found her wagging pony tail interesting. Then she suddenly twisted her head back.

“Oh, little apprentice. When will you officially enter Jeronimo Mercenary?”

“Oh right.”

For my disguise, I requested to join as a member of Jeronimo Mercenary. The official reason I dropped out of Cube was to become a mercenary. Plus, doing missions for Jeronimo Mercenary would help me gain SP.

“Mmm... let’s set the date to March of next year.”

“Alright, I’ll let Jain know.”

“Thank you.”

Soon, Fenrir would join Jeronimo. He would be a gunner and his specialty would be djinn assassination and monster slaughter. Jain would surely take care of everything else.

The Hero Association resided at the Hero Tower in Gwanghwamun, Seoul, the tallest building in the world at 900 meters.

[Temple of Justice Meeting Room]

It was also known as the foundation of modern civilization and consisted of 15 departments. Among them, the one tasked with the most dangerous and important duties was the Temple of Justice.

“I’m here, geez.”

Naturally, it only included the most elite members. Today, the group met for a round table discussion.

“Where is everyone?”

Aileen, one of the members, grumbled with her arms crossed. No one could blame her. Only 4 other members had shown up. The other 8 were busy with their respective missions.

“Good morning, Aileen.”

The 31 year old Yi Yongha greeted her. He was a high rank hero and also their youngest member.

“Good morning? Where is everyone!”

“Didn’t you hear what happened in Southwest Asia? They’re busy running around and putting out the fire.”

The chairman, Park Hanho, tried to calm her down with a tired expression.

“But shouldn’t they at least attend the meeting!”

“Give them a break. They’ll be notified of what we talk about anyways.”

“Hmph, they live in Seoul too. Also... why couldn’t they send me there instead? I’d only need a week to solve everything!”

Aileen had a lot to complain about since she felt displeased with her job as a hero. They kept her out of moderately dangerous incidents as a trump card. They also kept her out of not-so-dangerous situations and told her a guillotine couldn’t be used to behead a chicken. Everyone agreed she was one of the strongest members, but she had only been deployed 5 times in the past 5 years.

“Like we always say, you’re our ultimate weapon... Wait, Aileen. Did you get taller?”

“E-Eh?”

Park Hanho tried to appease her with sweet talk.

“...You’re doing this again! I’m 31 years old now, you know?”

“No, no, I’m not making it up. Maybe your bones grew longer.”

“B-Bones? Mmm... Maybe...? N-No!”

Park Hanho tensed up with nervousness. So the day finally came when telling her that she grew taller didn’t work!

“Maybe it’s because it’s morning. You know, they say you’re 2-3 centimeters taller in the morning.”

However, Aileen’s trembling lips declared that she felt extremely pleased.

“No, I think your bones did grow longer. Didn’t you say you stopped wearing high heels recently? Maybe that’s why.”

“Do you think I’m stupid?”

“Haha, I’m pretty sure you did, so get it checked out later.”

Clearly appeased, Aileen sat without complaining.

“Now, let’s start the meeting.”

“Yes!”

“Uun.”

Hearing Yi Yongha’s enthusiastic shout, Nicholas, the fourth hero woke up from his nap.

“Why are you always sleeping?”

Aileen blurted in disappointment, but Nicholas only leisurely laughed.

“Maybe that’s why I’m tall.”

“...”

Aileen gritted her teeth without replying.

“Now, now, quiet down. Terrorist attacks simultaneously occurred in Pandemonium yesterday at around 8 P.M.”

Holographic pictures shot up from the round table, showing destroyed buildings and corpses.

“As you can see, an entire tower was obliterated and a hideout was destroyed.”

“Isn’t it good that they’re fighting among themselves?”

“No.”

Park Hanho shook his head at Aileen's words. Then he played a video taken last night in Pandemonium.

Shooooong—

An arrow flew across the sky like a shooting star. The sheer strength of it warped the atmosphere.

KWANG—!

A single shot obliterated the tower. Yi Yonghan dropped his jaw and Nicholas slightly widened his eyes.

“Wow! Amazing, amazing!”

Aileen sarcastically applauded. She could obliterate a building with her eyes closed.

“That isn't the important part. Look at this picture.”

A man stood on top of the Pandemonium clocktower.

“Is he an assassin?”

He wore all black with a hooded cape that resembled an eagle and a mask that covered his mouth. He also held an elegant, black bow.

“It looks like he's a new member of that group.”

Aileen's face stiffened. Even the Hero Association only knew this mysterious group as that group. Park Sangho, the Temple of Justice's chairman, had been chasing them since he was 20 years old and even Aileen had a history with them.

“A new member?”

Park Hanho displayed another picture of a black symbol engraved on the ground. Indeed, Aileen recognized the lotus symbol.

“Yeah, 7 years ago, but I don’t think they’re the same person.”

The person Aileen met back then didn’t use a bow.

“That’s why he’s a new member.”

“Mmm...”

Click. Aileen snapped her fingers.

“Okay, leave the investigation to me. I’ll look into them.”

“Hm? No, you don’t need to do it yourself.”

“No, I have to. We fought to a draw last time.”

“What?”

“I met him before. About 8-9 years ago.”

“What?”

Park Hanho pressed his forehead and sighed.

“Why haven’t you said anything until now. Well, it looks like that’s a different person.”

“Even if he’s not the same person, he should be just as strong if he’s the old one’s replacement, right?”

Aileen grinned and infused magic power into her voice.

“So give me those files.”

“Didn’t I tell you not to use that on me?”

Aileen's spirit speech moved Park Hanho's arm. However, he didn't resist since that would only make things more exhausting.

"Thank you."

"Sigh. Whatever... Ah, wait! Where are you going? The meeting isn't over yet!"

Aileen scurried out while whistling after she got what she wanted.

July came around in the blink of an eye. Springtime long disappeared under the blazing sun. Chirp— chirp— Birds sang and the hot breeze signaled the start of summer. Cube finished its first semester and cadets regained their energy after the finals. Many things had happened in the past few months. First, most of Cube's executives resigned after the previous djinn invasion and a few even went on trial. Second, active heroes began to patrol Cube for security measures. They also abolished midterms, which left only the character assessment and final exam to determine cadet rankings.

Ding—

Chae Nayun entered Cube's most popular coffee shop, Angel on Earth.

"Yo, Chae Nayun."

Yi Yeonghan called her. She thoughtlessly approached, but soon recognized an unusual face present. Kim Suho, Yi Yeonghan, Yoo Yeonha, and Rachel. Rachel? For now, Chae Nayun simply sat.

"How'd you do on your exam?" Yi Yeonghan asked.

"So-so."

She replied half-heartedly while staring at Rachel, who sat next to Yoo Yeonha. Chae Nayun couldn't understand why Rachel was there.

“Oh, we’re in the same class. We got close while talking about our guilds.”

Yoo Yeonha noticed her curious gaze and explained.

“Yep.” Rachel smiled and nodded.

“I see.”

Chae Nayun slurped the coffee in front of her without saying much. Sniff, sniff. Then Yi Yeonghan began to suddenly sniff.

“Mmm, I smell something weird. Chae Nayun, did you—”

“What.”

She glared at Yi Yeonghan with killing intent and he couldn’t finish his sentence.

“N-No, nothing.”

“You better not mess with me. Oh right.”

Chae Nayun set her coffee mug down and spoke, “I’m going to Baekdu Mountain over break. Do you want to come with me, Kim Suho?”

“Hmm?”

Kim Suho widened his eyes.

“That’s pretty sudden.”

“Shin Jonghak’s coming too.”

“Aah, no. Suho can’t go.” Yi Yeonghan bravely interrupted, “Suho has a little something-something going on with that person. He has to spend time with her.”

“W-What are you talking about?”

Kim Suho quickly covered Yi Yeonghan’s snickering mouth. However, Chae Nayun only stared at them emotionlessly, causing them to awkwardly scratch their necks.

“W-What?”

“Having fun?”

“...”

“So? Are you coming or not?”

“I...”

Kim Suho hesitated. Yun Seung-Ah had called him last week and they had been frequently talking since...

“If I can, then I will. It’s a good opportunity.”

“Okay, good.”

That was all Chae Nayun had to say. She gulped down her coffee and shot up. Yoo Yeonha quickly held her back.

“Are you leaving already, Nayun?”

“Yeah, I have a sparring appointment with some guy named Yohei. I’ll see you later.”

“You should stay a bit more...”

Yoo Yeonha meekly murmured and sadly watched her leave. Tiriring— Then she suddenly received a message. Yoo Yeonha’s gaze fell on her watch.

[Jeronimo's apprentice will become an official member in March.]

“Oh?”

She received some interesting news. Yoo Yeonha also saw Rachel reading the text when she turned off her watch and looked up.

“Oho.”

Like Yoo Yeonha, she also exclaimed with interest and raised her head.

Chapter 147

Three Years (1)

“Auu.”

Thud. I sat in my handcrafted chair drenched in sweat and my fingers felt numb from firing too many arrows.

“Hm? Are you tired already?”

We were currently in Chameleon Troupe’s training room, which was only 10% complete. Boss’ voice rang out from about 300 meters away. I grinned at her.

“No, not yet.”

Boss was helping me train. Well, it might be more accurate to say she was helping me grind Master Sharpshooter to grade 4. Trying to raise a growth-type gift felt like hell.

“You look tired.”

“I just have to change weapons.”

I placed the bow down since it required more strength.

“To a gun?”

“Yes.”

However, all I had to do was pull a gun’s trigger. I took out the Desert Eagle and transformed it into an assault rifle.

“Try to dodge it if you can.”

“Sounds fun.”

Boss leisurely stretched. I checked my proficiency EXP as I prepared the magazines.

[Master Sharpshooter – Proficiency EXP: 90%]

I was only 10% away from leveling up. I should reach grade 4 in a few weeks, especially with Boss as my practice target.

“I’m starting.”

“Okay.”

I pulled the trigger as Boss laughed. Blue magic power shot out from my gun and I emptied the 45 round clip in just a second as every bullet hurled towards a single target.

I couldn’t predict Boss’ movements, so I fired at different places with the highest chances of hitting her. However, she moved faster than the bullets. Her body weaved through them like the wind. I fired up to 400 bullets, but only 4 managed to graze her clothes.

“Haha, well done.”

Boss seemed satisfied with my performance and praised me with a hearty laugh. I sat back in the chair. Pulling a trigger wasn’t difficult, but I felt dizzy from using bullet time.

“I’ll rest for a bit.”

“We should stop here for today.”

“No, I’m almost at grade 4.”

“I don’t have time.”

“Ah, yes.”

I nodded and checked my smartwatch. I hadn't replied to several messages.

[It's been a month since summer break started ^_^ Oh right, I met the elemental, Shin Yeohwa. You've heard of her too, right? She said she would take me as her disciple!] [Come visit England later.] [Hajin?]

Rachel sent these messages about a week ago.

[Kim Hajin, I'm going to Baekdu Mountain, so you won't be able to contact me during summer break.]

Kim Suho also sent me a message. I didn't reply because I felt afraid. I didn't know if I would become their enemy one day.

"Huuu."

I took out a cigarette in frustration. Tzzz. Boss looked at me with interest as I lit it with a lighter since I used up all of stigma's magic power.

"Why do you keep smoking?"

"Pardon?"

"That. Cigarette."

"Uh... am I the only member who smokes?"

Boss nodded. That made sense. They probably enjoyed drinking more than smoking.

"One person used to smoke."

"Oh?"

I tilted my head.

Used to smoke.

Honestly, I didn't know much about the Chameleon Troupe. I only listed their members, but didn't know their history.

"Is he a former member?"

"Yeah, he said it was a habit from before he got strong."

"Ah, it's the same for me."

I went with the same explanation. Then she briefly looked at me and murmured.

— You share many similarities.

She deeply sighed.

"Pardon?"

"Nothing. I'm going back to my mansion now."

"Ah, yes, take care. Oh right, Boss."

I suddenly recalled the furniture I made yesterday.

"What is it?"

"I put a bed in your room."

"...I don't need it. I'm not fond of beds."

However, Boss firmly declined and left.

Koong—

The door shut behind her.

"Hm, let's see..."

I peered through the door as Boss headed to the portal, but she gradually stopped in front of it. Then she stealthily changed course after glancing back at the training room and headed towards her room. She made it look like she went through the portal, but... Shashashak— She entered her room and jumped on the bed before rolling around on the soft bedsheet with a satisfied expression.

“Pft.”

I retracted my thousand-mile eyes and turned on my smartwatch to check the news around the world.

[Trending] 1. Kim Hwanho. 2. Yi Hyojin. 3. Yun Seung-Ah.

“Yun Seung-Ah?”

Her name caught my attention.

[Yun Seung-Ah has been appointed as the new guild leader of Creator’s Sacred Grace. “I will give my all for the benefit of the guild and the world”.]

“Mmm.”

As expected, she chose to directly charge through the obstacle. I read the article about her appointment with a smile.

* * *

August 21, 2026. Even at night, numerous stars lit up Baekdu Mountain. Thousands of magic spheres also lit up the surroundings like fireflies.

“Auu, that felt great...”

Kim Suho walked out to the picturesque scenery after taking a bath. He looked at his wrist out of habit, but smartwatches didn’t function here. Kim Suho smacked his lips and headed back to his room.

“...?”

Suddenly, a strange odor came over his head. He slowly followed the acrid, grey smoke.

“Huh?”

Chae Nayun was smoking a cigarette on the balcony of the girls' lodging. She looked at the sky with melancholic eyes while puffing out smoke. This unexpected sight caught Kim Suho off guard as he simply stared at her in a daze. Then their eyes met as Chae Nayun flicked the ashes off her cigarette.

“What are you doing here, Kim Suho?”

“Me? Uh, well... since when have you been smoking?”

“Ah? You don't need to know that.”

“It's not good for you. It doesn't look good either.”

“I only smoke 3 a day.”

“Then why don't you just quit?”

Chae Nayun suddenly frowned.

“Shut up if you don't know anything.”

“What? Is that something you should say to a caring friend?”

“Shut up. I'm angry that you beat me today.”

“...”

Kim Suho scratched his head. He thoroughly crushed Chae Nayun in today's duel since he thought that would be best for her.

“How the hell am I supposed to beat you... huu.”

Chae Nayun deeply sighed and put out her cigarette on the ashtray. At least she doesn't litter. Kim Suho smirked, but she continued to glare at him.

“Hey.”

“What?”

“Fight me tomorrow too.”

“Sure.”

“Don't go easy either.”

“Of course.”

Chae Nayun smiled in satisfaction.

“Then I'm heading back.”

“Yeah, good night.”

“Yeah.”

She waved and returned to her room as Kim Suho stood in the same spot.

“...Sigh.”

Eventually, he also sighed. He felt frustrated as looked at the sky full of stars on Baekdu Mountain.

“They must've broken up for real...”

That was Kim Suho's best guess.

December 17, 2026. Time flew by and the final day of Cube's second year arrived. Every cadet gathered in the auditorium for the closing ceremony. The second year was the last year that cadets received training. They would participate in real-life field training starting in March once their rankings were finalized today.

"Whew, I made it into the top 10."

Yoo Yeonha sighed in relief. She had already received her ranking, which would soon be announced with the rest.

"Huaa."

She no longer worried about anything as she stretched and glanced next to her. Beep, beep— Chae Nayun busily played a mobile game. Yoo Yeonha strained her ears to eavesdrop on nearby cadets since Chae Nayun wasn't interested in talking.

"Ah, I'm so jealous. You're going to Desolate Moon?"

"Yep, I'm going to work my ass off."

For field training, guilds from across the world would select up to 10 cadets (excluding magicians). Then cadets would choose a guild that selected them. This field training would continue for 6 months, giving cadets a chance to experience 2 guilds. After a year, the Hero Association would appoint them as official heroes in guilds or other groups.

"Jiyeon, didn't Essence of the Strait contact you?"

Yoo Yeonha's ears perked up. With the downfall of Creator's Sacred Grace, Essence of the Strait became the unrivaled... well, perhaps not yet. Essence of the Strait still competed for first place against Desolate Moon and Cradle of Glory.

"Yeah, I'm glad. Essence of the Strait was always my first choice."

“Oh right, I heard Kim Suho is going to Creator’s Sacred Grace.”

“Tsk.”

Hearing this, Yoo Yeonha suddenly felt displeased. Kim Suho chose Creator’s Sacred Grace most likely because of his relationship with their guild leader, Yun Seung-Ah. However, Yoo Yeonha didn’t feel too upset. She wanted Kim Suho, but he was also quite a tiring person to deal with.

“Oh right, why did you choose Essence of the Strait?” Yoo Yeonha asked Rachel sitting next to her.

“Huh?”

“Why didn’t you choose the English Royal Court guild?”

“Oh, it’s to learn. Guilds in Korea are more advanced, so I’m hoping to learn a thing or two for the English Royal Court guild to adopt.”

Rachel simply explained.

“I see. Well, there is a lot to learn from our guild.”

Rachel wouldn’t stick around after graduation, but Yoo Yeonha didn’t mind. She became a lot more generous compared to the start of freshman year. Suddenly, a deep voice rang out from the speaker.

— Cough. We will now announce the final rankings and commence the closing ceremony.

Every cadet faced the stage as a huge projector displayed the cadet rankings.

[Rank 1. Kim Suho] [Rank 2. Shin Jonghak] [Rank 3. Rachel] [Rank 4. Chae Nayun] [Rank 5. Yohei] [Rank 6. Shen Yu’an] [Rank 7. Yoo Yeonha] [Rank 8. Yi Yeonghan]... [Rank 13. Yi Jiyeon] [Rank 14. Kim Horak]... [Rank 33. Hazuki] [Rank 48. Jin Hoseung]...

“Dammit, I’m rank 4 again because of theory.”

Chae Nayun immediately grumbled. Rachel still ranked above her, but Chae Nayun showed tremendous growth in the second semester. She rivaled Kim Suho in combat training results. Yoo Yeonha stared at her and carefully asked.

“Nayun, I heard you’re going to Baekdu Mountain again.”

“Huh? Oh, yeah, sorry. I won’t be going to Essence of the Strait.”

Chae Nayun decided to go to Baekdu Mountain instead of participating in the practical field training. A special exception had been made thanks to Yoo Sihyuk’s recommendation letter.

“Don’t overwork yourself.”

“I won’t. Once I leave, I won’t come down for 2, maybe 3 years, so save me a seat.”

“You’re coming to our guild?”

Yoo Yeonha should’ve been happy, but she couldn’t smile because she thought of that person every time she looked at Chae Nayun and the truth about Chae Jinyoon tormented her.

“Okay.”

That’s all Yoo Yeonha could say.

March 1, 2027. Cube’s third year cadets would now work as apprentice heroes. Yoo Yeonha stood in front of Essence of the Strait’s building with Rachel, Yi Jiyeon, Yohei, Hazuki, and Rose. She felt proud of their guild building, which had grown a lot fancier than 2 years ago.

“Young Miss, Essence of the Strait only chose the 5 of us?”

Yohei kept asking stupid questions, so Yoo Yeonha frowned at him.

“There are three other magicians and stop calling me Young Miss.”

“Haha, I apologize.”

“Tsk. Let’s go in first.”

Yoo Yeonha entered the building with everyone.

“Oh, welcome!”

Essence of the Strait’s new vice leader, Yi Jin-Ah, greeted them in the lobby and exchanged a smile with Yoo Yeonha.

“I’m sure you all know me. I also looked over your profiles, so let’s skip the introductions. I’ll give you a tour since it’s the first day. Follow me.”

Yi Jin-Ah walked to the elevator as the apprentice heroes followed her like ducklings.

[Lounge]

First, they stopped at the second floor lounge. It contained 30 of the most recent virtual reality gaming capsules, 50 supercomputers, over 100 tablets containing thousands of books, and all sorts of training and sports equipment. Yi Jin-Ah proudly opened the door to this world class lounge.

“This is the lounge we’re so proud of... erm, why are there so many people here?”

However, more people bustled inside than usual. At least 50 people crowded around a single computer monitor.

“Hey! It’s working hours, you know...”

“Ah, vice leader! Come here, a new mercenary joined Jeronimo.”

“Jeronimo? Really?”

Yi Jin-Ah’s eyes widened and she quickly joined the crowd. Even top guilds showed interest in Jeronimo Mercenary.

“...Mmm.”

“What do we do?”

Having lost their guide, the apprentices exchanged worried glances and stealthily moved closer to Yoo Yeonha.

“...Sigh.”

Yoo Yeonha led the ducklings to Yi Jin-Ah. Then she looked at the monitor with everyone else.

[Jeronimo’s New Mercenary] — Are you troubled by a large number of monsters? Then call this mercenary. He will slaughter monsters with satisfactory speed and power. Code name – Fenrir, a wolf that devours monsters.

“Fenrir? Is this the Fenrir that I know?”

“I think so, but vice leader, why can’t we see anything with our guild IP?”

“Huh? Oh, that’s because we aren’t partnered. Pay for it yourself if you want to see the extended introduction.”

“You know that costs 100 million won.”

Jeronimo’s special website required money for even the tiniest information. One couldn’t access their website without a membership and that wasn’t something that could be bought with just money. Even with a membership, one had to pay more to view details on individual mercenaries. Essence of the Strait had purchased a membership, but hadn't paid for the individual member yet.

"Hmm."

Yoo Yeonha sneaked away to the back and turned on her smartwatch to quickly pay the 100 million won. The cinematic trailer began to show the new mercenary's specialty.

"...Eh?"

The video displayed a beautiful rain of bullets. Yoo Yeonha's eyes widened as she had seen it before. Then she suddenly received a message.

[Hit me up if you want to employ me.]

It came from Kim Hajin.

Chapter 148

Three Years (2)

The introductory cinematic trailer felt quite simple and direct. It featured imposing background music in a desolate wasteland. Tap, tap. Footsteps resounded as a man stood on top of a desert hill. His face was covered, but his jet-black armor and cigarette left a strong impression. The man spat out his cigarette and held up an assault rifle as the camera shifted to show several hundred monsters rushing towards him.

Click—

A magazine clicked into his assault rifle and the man aimed forward. Hundreds of monsters charged like a tidal wave from the horizon. However, he faced them with a single gun.

Tudududu—

Light flashed from the assault rifle and the bullets he fired took a mysterious course. They curved in every direction despite being fired in a straight line. He fired mercilessly as the metallic sound from all the bullet casings rang out against the ground. It didn't even take a second for him to empty and reload the clip and the thunderous gunshots never ceased.

Tudududu—

Hundreds of bullets left behind white trails of light like shooting stars. This barrage completely decimated the tidal wave of roaring monsters.

Soon, the desert turned silent and the video ended with the man sighing at the camera. A mountain of corpses stood behind him.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha got goosebumps from the video's powerful ending. As expected, the world's greatest mercenary group had spectacular marketing. Of course, she had to admit it felt a bit cringy, but that was better than lacking when it came to PR videos.

[I just saw the cinematic trailer. It gave me chills.]

He completely covered his face, but Yoo Yeonha could tell that was Kim Hajin. He quickly replied.

[I just did what I was told. By the way, that's not scripted. We actually took it in Africa.]

[Africa?]

[Yep.]

Monsters dominated more than half of Africa. Humanity still controlled Northern Sahara countries like Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, Libya, and Egypt, but Southern Sahara Africa was considered a human extinction zone. The lands there belonged to monsters and only the law of the jungle prevailed.

[Was it the Northern or Southern Sahara Desert?]

[Northern, obviously. Monsters in the south are all too strong.]

[I guess you're right. Ah, have you met the monster king?]

Yoo Yeonha jokingly asked. All sorts of monster tales came from Southern Sahara Africa. The most famous was about a monster king. According to tales, the monster king possessed intelligence rivaling that of humans and also had subordinates with equal intelligence. They gathered Africa's monsters to attack humanity.

[No, but you'll meet the monster king yourself in 10 years.] [By the way, how did you know about the monster king?]

"Pft."

Yoo Yeonha laughed. Kim Hajin sounded serious, but he had to be kidding, right? She changed the subject without much thought.

[Oh right, thanks for the ginseng you recently sent.]

[Sent? You mean sold.]

[It's the same thing. Thanks to you, we're almost ready to announce our new potion. It'll be Essential Pharmacy's official debut item. I'm sure it'll turn the field upside down.]

[Congrats, that means the stocks will go up. Oh right, call me when you're conducting the tests for that potion. I'll do it for free.]

[Hm? No, it's fine...]

Yi Jin-Ah returned as Yoo Yeonha excitedly texted to the point that the other apprentices grew suspicious.

“Ah, sorry. I got distracted for a moment.”

She bitterly smiled as Yoo Yeonha wrapped up her conversation and turned off her smartwatch.

“So uh... where were we? Oh yeah, everyone! Say hi to our new apprentices.”

Yi Jin-Ah turned around and yelled at the heroes staring at the computer.

“Oh? They're pretty cute. Good luck, kids.”

“Hit us up if you need any help.”

“You know that we're rank 1, right? You have to work hard if you want to survive here.”

They each encouraged the apprentices. Of course, they didn't forget to secretly bow to Yoo Yeonha.

“Alright, let’s leave. It looks like the lounge is going to be packed today. Let’s see... ah, let’s go to my office.”

Yi Jin-Ah led the apprentices out.

Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan stood in front of Creator’s Sacred Grace. Whish— A cold wind blew dry leaves across the entrance.

“You should treat me better.”

Yi Yeonghan spoke as he nudged Kim Suho. They were the only cadets that chose Creator’s Sacred Grace. Yi Yeonghan would’ve chosen Essence of the Strait if Kim Suho hadn’t persuaded him.

“When did I ever not treat you well? You got rank 8 thanks to me since I helped you train.”

“Oh please, you ran away to Baekdu Mountain for summer break.”

“...Still.”

At one point, Creator’s Sacred Grace had fallen all the way to rank 20, but they had climbed back to rank 13 with Yun Seung-Ah as the new leader and their successful dungeon campaigns.

Cadets still didn’t choose Creator’s Sacred Grace even though the guild threw away its pride and selected cadets under rank 100. None of the cadets chose them and no one could blame them. They simply had no reason to choose Creator’s Sacred Grace, which was still under public scrutiny, when better choices existed.

“Let’s go in.”

“Ah, my future is going to be ruined because of you.”

“Oh please, what matters is what kind of a hero you become. Is what guild you’re in that important?”

“Of course it is, you bastard...”

While Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan argued...

“Kim Suho, Yi Yeonghan.”

A soft voice entered their ears. They immediately stopped and turned to see guild leader Yun Seung-Ah.

“Thank you for choosing Creator’s Sacred Grace.”

She came out to greet the apprentice heroes despite her status. Ssss— A gentle breeze blew and Yun Seung-Ah’s long hair fluttered in the wind. Her sweet scent drifted towards them and she smiled. Both of them froze at her beauty.

“To think the guild leader would come to greet us. This feels quite nice.”

Yi Yeonghan murmured and ran up to Yun Seung-Ah.

“Guild leader Yun Seung-Ah! I’m such a big fan of yours—!”

August 10, 2027. I was 30% finished with remodeling the Chameleon Troupe’s hideout. I came out to the lobby and wiped away my sweat after finishing today’s work.

“Oh, newbie. What did you make today?”

The friendly voice belonged to Setryn, the seat of turquoise. I smiled back at her.

“Who knows?”

The hideout became fancier after more than a year of remodeling and the members often came by to hang out now after hearing the news.

“Anything interesting?”

“No, I wouldn’t say interesting.”

Currently, I had only finished Boss, Khalifa, Jain, and Setryn’s rooms. I also made a workshop, a training room (in progress), a gaming room, and a bathroom.

I received sufficient payment from each member for their rooms. Khalifa gave me a blue rock stone, Jain gifted me a bracelet for improving energy circulation, and Setryn handed me medicine that improved... stamina.

“I’m working on a hot spring.”

“Hot spring?”

Setryn smiled. “How did you know I love hot springs?”

I didn’t plan on making one, but I found an underground water reservoir.

“Um, it’s not ready yet. It won’t be finished for at least a week.”

“Is it mixed bathing?”

She licked her lips, a rather seductive habit of hers. I shook my head.

“No, it’s separated.”

“...But we can still go in together, right?”

Kiik—

The door to the cave’s biggest room suddenly opened and Boss came out. She seemed to have just woken up and looked drowsy.

“Boss is up. I’ll leave then. Tell me when the hot spring is done.”

Setryn smiled and returned to her room.

“Haam.”

Boss rubbed her eyes and trudged to the couch before lying down with disheveled hair. For the record, she wore black pajamas made from silk. No one had gifted them to her, but she began wearing them about 2 months ago. When I asked about it, she called them precious items for a wonderful sleep.

“What happened to only needing 5 hours of sleep per week?”

“...”

Boss suddenly raised her head and looked at me.

“Was that directed at me?”

“No.”

“I see... huaam.”

She yawned and buried herself in the couch. Boss was obsessed with my furniture now. I couldn’t blame her since they also turned out better than I anticipated.

[Boss’ Bed] [Superior grade] [Contains 3% magic power] — Magic Power Allure: Mental and physical exhaustion will be washed away while resting in this bed. Waking up in the morning on this bed will increase your perseverance by 0.3 points. — Artistic Design: This bed’s beauty will make you want to lie down.

[Creator: Kim Hajin]

I could now make furniture that contained magic power. It felt natural since I could transform stigma’s magic power into tools and refine magic power itself into furniture. The furniture I made became masterpieces. Look at those brilliant effects! Sleeping in that bed for just a day would wash away a week’s worth of exhaustion.

The most important detail was the final line, [Creator: Kim Hajin]. This meant the world acknowledged my furniture-making skills. If I continued, my name itself could add beneficial effects to items. Of course, I would have to keep working hard for at least 3 years.

“Newbie.”

Boss called me with her eyes still closed.

“Yes?”

“My hair feels itchy.”

She expressed her desire for me to comb her hair.

“You should wash your hair first—”

Boss bobbed her head up and down.

She began to throw a tantrum and bounced up and down on the couch.

“...Alright.”

I began to comb her hair. It was cleaner than I expected. I wouldn’t have believed that she just woke up if I hadn’t just seen her.

“Hm? You’re combing her hair again?”

Jain walked out of her room. It seemed she just finished reading as she wore a pair of round glasses.

“Ah, yes. She asked for it.”

“Pft, look at Boss slumping on the couch. So cute. Oh yeah, newbie. Have you read the Violet Times?”

“Violet Times? The newspaper?”

“Yep, you’re in it as part of their top 10 rookies to watch out for. It doesn’t matter whether you’re a djinn or a hero as long as you debuted within the past 3 years.”

Jain showed me a copy of the Violet Times.

[Top 10 Rookies To Watch] 1. Pandemonium Arena’s Rising Star, Red Death — 2. Korea’s hero, Kim Suho — 3. Jeronimo Mercenary’s Black Wolf, Fenrir — 4. Descendant of the Past Era’s Savior, Shin Jonghak...

“Congrats, you’re third place.”

“Oh, this is the newspaper Violet Banquet puts out.”

“Yep. Wait, don’t tell me... you still don’t have a Violet Banquet ID?”

“No, I do. It’s just you have to be above a certain rank to receive these. It’s expensive too.”

Violet Banquet published their newspaper every week. You had to be at least red ruby rank to subscribe and I also heard it cost 3 million points per month.

“Still, take a look. It’s fun. Lots of countries have been asking for you recently, especially America and China.”

“Mmm... those two countries are huge, so they naturally have more monsters to worry about.”

My specialty was slaughtering monsters. Under the right conditions, I could decimate over a thousand monsters under intermediate rank, grade 1 without any help. No friendly fire would occur either with my extreme accuracy. Just a month ago, I went to China's Guangdong Province and slaughtered hundreds of invading monsters in a single day. They treated me like a hero afterwards.

The most important aspect was time. The source of my fame came from the fact that I cleaned up the region in just a day without any civilian casualties.

"I'm going to rest this month. I've been out too much this past month."

"Sure, just make sure you accept at least one mission a month."

Jain placed a stack of documents on the couch.

"Pick one from here and tell me."

"Got it."

"I have something to do, so I'm leaving. Take care of Boss. Bye-bye."

Jain disappeared into the portal. I picked up the documents in one hand while combing Boss' hair with the other.

"Mmm."

I ignored Boss' joyful humming and turned the page with stigma's magic power.

"Eh?"

One document caught my attention and I stopped combing Boss' hair.

"...Newbie?"

"..."

"Newbie?"

Kong, kong, kong. Boss unhappily bounced up and down because I stopped for too long. Kong, kong, kong.

“Alright, alright, stop bouncing. Your hair is going to get messy again.”

I placed the documents down and began combing Boss’ hair again.

“Like always, I’ll only do it for 15 minutes a day,” I firmly spoke.

“Just 5 more minutes.”

“No.”

“Hmph.”

August 14, 2027. Essence of the Strait’s apprentice heroes went out on a dispatch mission on a blazing summer afternoon. Dispatch missions came from local governments, but guilds also had to perform them by the central government’s directive.

“Dispatch missions are rare. Guilds are only required to perform 6 a year, so we take one every other month.”

A total of 8 guild members took part in today’s dispatch mission. Three were apprentices and five were active heroes.

“Today’s mission is quite easy.”

The local government wanted them to destroy a goblin settlement. Goblins weren’t necessarily the easiest targets and apprentices also participated, so a high-intermediate rank, grade 6 hero led the team.

“Don’t underestimate them just because they’re goblins.”

The team leader, Im Joongjin, spoke. Rachel, Yohei, and Rose nodded with serious faces.

“But don’t be too tense either.”

“The most important thing in urban battles is to prevent civilian casualties. Be careful that your magic power doesn’t fly off somewhere.”

The vice leader of the team, Jeon Yohwa, also added. The goblins built their base in a run-down building on Incheon’s outskirts. These goblins boldly encroached on human territory.

“Alright, let’s wait 30 minutes for the police to finish blocking the roads. Then active heroes will go in first. Apprentices can slowly follow.”

“Understood!”

Rachel firmly replied with a straight back.

Chapter 149

Three Years (3)

Essence of the Strait's dispatch team slowly entered the building that became a goblin settlement. Cough, cough. The acrid fog inside the abandoned building stung Rachel's throat whenever she breathed, so she covered her face with magic power.

"How long has this building been abandoned to be in such a poor state?"

Yohei asked as he cut apart the fog with his katana. His archaic manner of speech sounded a bit annoying, but Rachel wondered the same. They were still in Incheon, even if only on the outskirts. Residential and shopping districts existed only 2 km away. How could goblins have settled in this building?

"The settlement was reported 2 weeks ago. By the looks of it, someone's been doing goblin business here. It must've been easy for the culprit to avoid any eyes since the military is concentrated around the coastal area.

Im Joongjin murmured with a sigh. He didn't seem happy with how things looked.

"Goblin business?"

"Yeah. Goblins specialize in crafting. They can be used to obtain all sorts of items and materials if properly managed, but by the looks of it..."

Im Joongjin brushed his hair back and kicked a human corpse on the ground. Mushrooms and spores already infested the body.

"They must not have thought the goblins would trick them instead. What a bunch of fools."

Rachel finally understood what happened. The human corpses inside the building must've belonged to those who reared the goblins, but ended up being killed by them instead. Cube's textbooks recorded many such incidents. Human greed had no bounds.

— Air, here, bad.

Rachel's elemental whispered to her. She glanced to her shoulder at the winged, slime-like elemental that coughed.

— I want to leave.

“...”

Rachel finally learned how to talk to elementals after painstaking efforts. She even named this cute wind elemental, Sunday. She only had one complaint. Sunday spoke in Korean. It didn't make much sense to Rachel who natively spoke English.

“Hang in there.”

Rachel spoke in English.

— What, was, that?

However, the elemental couldn't understand her. Was it because Rachel's master, Shin Yeohwa, was Korean?

“Just hang in there.”

“The local patrol force estimated about 200-300 goblins in this building.”

Im Joongjin stopped in front of the abandoned building's entrance and gave a quick briefing. A goblin settlement with a population of 200-300 was similar to naturally occurring ones in the wild.

“Mercenaries are waiting outside, but it'll be troublesome if goblins escape to the city. Like I said before, we'll split into two teams with Team 1 to the right and Team 2 to the left. Don't forget, our priority is to prevent goblins from escaping."

The 8 members divided into their respective teams. Rachel and Rose went with Im Joongjin's Team 1 while Yohei joined vice leader Jeon Yohwa's Team 2.

"Immediately send a signal if you encounter an emergency."

"Yes, sir."

The teams wished each other luck and split off. Rachel headed to the right with Im Joongjin. They easily took care of the first floor goblins with light attacks, but encountered a problem as soon as they entered the second floor.

— Krrk.

— Keeek.

Dozens of goblins rushed and surrounded them.

"Front and flank! I'll handle the front!"

Im Joongjin quickly ordered as the battle began. He took out his greatsword and sent sword waves flying. His attack instantly slashed apart 10 or so goblins. However, trouble lay on the other side with a group of goblins using poisonous darts.

"Sunday."

Rachel remained calm. No matter how threatening, they were only blow darts.

— Un.

Sunday unleashed a blast of wind that changed the darts' course. The goblins panicked as the darts flew back to them. Rachel stormed forward without missing this opening.

Rose smiled at Rachel. They became close friends perhaps because they both came from England.

“Good, well done.”

Im Joongjin praised them after their first battle. They continued to sweep through the goblins on the second floor. The building had all sorts of traps, but Rachel’s earth elemental, Okja, easily took care of them. The group smoothly proceeded to the third floor.

“Eh?”

The ground suddenly rumbled and Rachel’s earth elemental conveyed its thoughts to her. A huge explosion was rising from the basement. Rachel could feel it as well.

“Everyone, jump outside!”

Rachel quickly alerted them and telepathically ordered her elementals to fly towards the other members and form barriers.

KWANG—!

A huge explosion occurred and the concrete floor crumbled. The entire building began to collapse. Everyone jumped out before the explosion erupted and safely landed on the ground.

“Team leader!”

Team 2 seemed to have escaped as well.

“Are you all okay?”

“Yes, thanks to Yohei’s sixth sense.”

“Haha, thank you for compli... eh?”

“W-What is that?”

Destroying the entire building was plan b, so they weren't as surprised when the building suddenly collapsed. However, an unbelievable scene took place in front of them. The dispatch team simply stared.

“Well, I'll be damned.”

Im Joongjin smirked as goblins climbed out of the rubble and dug through the solid ground. An army of goblins appeared with too many to count.

“Would you look at that. They even have a goblin warrior.”

— Krrr...

One particular goblin stood out from the rest. He held a vicious club in one hand and puffed out smoke from his nose. Even among various goblin species, a goblin warrior boasted the greatest strength with an intermediate rank, grade 3 rating. To make matters worse, a total of 15 goblin warriors stood in front of the army, leading the smaller groups like centurions. Koong, koong, koong. Their tiny footsteps caused a huge rumble.

“Team leader, it looks like this settlement was made a long time ago.”

“I already sent a request for reinforcement. Don't be afraid and just prevent them from reaching the city. We'll only have to hold out for 5 minutes, or 10 at most.”

— Krrrk!

— Kueeeek!

There had to be thousands. The sheer number completely overwhelmed the dispatch team. However, they didn't give up and got into the most efficient formation to take on multiple enemies. They stood a decent distance between each other to prevent any goblin from heading to the city.

— Kueeeek!

As expected, the goblin warriors led the charge. An especially strong one charged at Rachel. The troll-sized goblin emanated a red aura as Rachel's rapier clashed with its club. KWANG! She felt the difference in power as soon as they made contact.

“Be careful!”

Im Joongjin shouted before it was too late. He fought 4 goblin warriors by himself.

“The warriors are using drugs!”

Their red aura proved that they had used potions.

— Kuoooo!

The goblin warrior fighting Rachel swung its club again.

“Kuuk!”

Several dozen tons pressed down on Rachel's rapier. She leaped back since close combat didn't seem like a good idea. Goblins had no attributes, so she planned to unleash the power of her elementals using her weapon, Galatyn. However, she didn't have enough time.

The goblins practically threw their bodies at her. Tiny goblins jumped on her legs and hindered her movements. Archer goblins also shot poisonous darts from the back. Rachel could tell these goblins were well-organized for battle.

“Huup!”

She unleashed her magic power in every direction to blow off the goblins sticking to her.

— Kuoooo!

The goblin warrior didn't miss this opening and swung its club at her. Rachel held up Galatyn. However, the impact she expected never arrived.

“...?”

Instead, she could see strange flashes of light from the sky. A blue streak struck the goblin warrior's head.

KOONG!

The goblin warrior froze and bled from its orifices, but it glared at Rachel without dying. It tried to swing its club again even as its hands trembled, but she beheaded the goblin warrior with Galatyn. Then she turned to help the others.

— Kueek!

— Krrrk!

— Kuoooo!

However, the other goblins fell from the streaks of light that also struck the goblin warrior. Rachel lowered her weapon and fell into a daze.

Ssss— Blue raindrops fell from the sky. They left behind a trail like shooting stars as they struck thousands of goblins. The goblins' dull weapons couldn't block them.

“Oh?”

“Wow.”

The dispatch team stopped fighting after seeing the mysterious reinforcement. They all turned around at the same time and became speechless.

“Haa.”

Hundreds of blue streaks fell from the sky like stars or heavy rain. They only targeted the goblins and none could escape their reach.

“Um, team leader. This is...”

“It must be magic. So pretty...”

The beautiful shooting stars didn’t suit the situation and felt like they came out of a fairytale.

“It must be the reinforcement team. Let’s go. We can’t just sit around. Looks like goblin warriors can withstand the attack. We have to deal the finishing blow.”

The group regained their smiles after the reinforcements’ overwhelming firepower. Only Rachel kept a serious expression. She had an idea as to who had helped them and turned in the direction of the shooting stars with a sense of nostalgia.

“A helicopter?”

Chuf, chuf, chuf— The propeller roared and my clothes fluttered from the wind. I sat on the edge of the helicopter 2000 ft in the air and aimed my anti-material sniper rifle at the goblin warrior in front of Rachel. Click. I immediately pulled the trigger. The recoil pushed my shoulder as the bullet pierced the goblin warrior’s head. However, it didn’t instantly die as Rachel dealt the finishing blow.

“Mm, I guess not all goblins are weak.”

A 6 year old settlement would surely produce some monstrosities. Goblin settlements rarely lasted more than a year before guilds or other monsters destroyed them. However, this one managed to grow with the help of humans.

[We were rearing goblins and screwed up!] — I've been rearing goblins in an abandoned building in Incheon's outskirts. I must've been in this line of work for 7 years. At first, I was wary of everyone and cautious about everything, but I grew careless as I gained experience. I made over a billion won, which only hindered my judgment... The damned goblins were too clever. They dug a tunnel underground and expanded their settlement without any of us noticing! My employees and I found out about a month ago, but the goblins immediately killed everyone. I was the only one who escaped. I'm afraid of dying to goblins, but I was even more afraid of being arrested. In the end, I ran away without reporting it to the police... I'm writing this request with what little conscience I have left and am offering 3 million Violet Banquet points. Please destroy the goblin settlement in Yotongho's abandoned building.

I recently received this request. Honestly, this was one of the episodes I quickly glossed over without detail.

“I didn't expect this...”

I changed the Desert Eagle into an assault rifle. I didn't feel anything in particular from the goblin army. I simply pulled the trigger while looking at the ground with my thousand-mile eyes. Hundreds of bullets shot forward in the sunset.

Tudududu—

My firing speed exceeded even the standard for superhumans.

[Rapid Fire] The ability to quickly shoot something. Will use a portion of stigma's magic power to exceed your weapon's structural and mechanical limits.

This was one of the low rank gifts I obtained from Master Sharpshooter and Dexterity linking. It only possessed the first effect when I received it, but I added the second line with quite a bit of SP. As a result, I could now empty 2 clips in 1-2 seconds.

“There.”

I had cleaned up the army by the time I snapped out of my daze.
Elapsed time: 4 minutes. Used magazines: 48. I thoroughly slaughtered every goblin, even the ones trying to escape. The other heroes finished off the goblin warriors that the assault rifle couldn't kill.

“About 1300 bullets.”

I didn't gain anything from this mission in terms of profit. I hadn't used the machine gun because of costs. It took 1320 bullets to kill about 4000 goblins. Assuming that each bullet was worth 100,000 won, that still added up to 132 million won. I wouldn't be surprised if Yoo Yeonha regretted giving me a black card. After all, I spent close to 500 million won per month for just bullets.

— Oi, Hajin. Is this stone tablet the item you wanted?

Khalifa's voice sounded from the transceiver in my ear.

“Stone tablet? Can you video call me?”

Khalifa offered to help today in exchange for expanding his room and setting up a pool table.

— Okay, take a look.

I placed the Desert Eagle down and looked at my smartwatch.

“Ah, yes. That must be it.”

— There are other things too. I'm grabbing whatever I can get my hands on.

“Just make sure you leave some behind. It'll be weird if nothing's left in the settlement.”

— Ok.

A portal appeared behind me and Khalifa walked out with the stone tablet along with a cane, urn, potions, a magician's hat, and other loot.

“So what does this do? I understand what the other items are for, but I can’t quite grasp this one.”

Khalifa muttered as he examined the stone tablet.

“You know how goblins like to do ceremonies and rituals? This is a ritual item they created.”

The goblins in this settlement dreamed of rebellion. Humans had reared them in the beginning, but they secretly dug an underground tunnel and almost achieved an impossible dream. This stone tablet contained their grand dream that should’ve been... the conquest of Incheon. They were too ambitious and their opponent was none other than the Korean government. They simply stood no chance. In any case, I felt happy since I obtained this unique item.

“I see.”

Khalifa handed me the stone tablet without further questions.

“Anyways...”

He stared at me with interest.

“You sure took care of them quickly. I can see why you specialize in mass slaughter.”

“You don’t need to praise me. Those high-intermediate rank heroes would’ve been fine even without me.”

They might’ve taken more time and some goblins may have escaped to the city. However, I slaughtered every single one. That was what I excelled at.

“Don’t forget your promise.”

“Of course not.”

“Great.”

Khalifa smiled and waved before disappearing. I looked at the ground once again and made eye contact with Rachel. No, only I could see her. Rachel shouldn't be able to see me from this distance. My heart slightly thumped from seeing her after such a long time.

“...Haaa.”

Was this caused by luck too? Something came up and I had to come here in a helicopter. I originally planned to quietly take care of it with just Khalifa.

“Hmm.”

I had no reason to stay now that things had been settled. I should go home and check the items I obtained today. I sat in the driver's seat of my super helicopter, which had a 43% boost from the Random Consolidation System. For the record, piloting a helicopter felt quite natural.

[Horse Saddle] [Antique] A horse saddle used by a nameless cavalryman 500 years ago. You will be able to ride better if you sit on this saddle.

The saddle I bought in Clancy Islet applied to every rideable object. Of course, that included helicopters.

Chapter 150

Three Years (4)

I went home after returning my helicopter to Essential Armory. Once again, I checked my dimensional pouch as I stood in front of the door. I chose to keep some of the useful items Khalifa brought back.

[Ceremonial Magic Hat] [Low-intermediate rank] Will improve spirit-wielding abilities, including rituals and ceremonies.

[Ceremonial Ritual Wand] [Low-intermediate rank] Will improve spirit-wielding abilities, including rituals and ceremonies.

Not many items related to spirits existed. However, these items didn't suit me. I planned to give them to a cute girl much better at wielding spirits and she would look even cuter with them. BeebeebEEP— I entered the password and opened the door.

— Four apples grow on a tree and there are 8 trees. Suppose these apples are distributed among 16 people...

I heard an internet lecture as I walked in. She didn't come to greet me, but I still smiled. Then I sneaked into the living room and glanced at the desk.

"Four apples and 8 trees... so then you multiply 4 by 8..."

Evandel wriggled her fingers as she worked on a math problem. Hayang sprawled next to her and slept like a human. I sneaked behind Evandel as she glanced back and forth between the lecture and the problem set.

"...Evandel?"

I whispered her name. Startled, she slightly jumped and turned around. She smiled when she saw me. — I'm studying. She proudly whispered and shrugged. Was she talking quietly because she was still in class? I decided to wait for now.

Tiring—

I received a message.

[Hajin, payment from China just came. Take a look.]

It came from Park Soohyuk, the CEO of SH Agency.

[Got it.]

Park Soohyuk probably grew the most in recent years. The SH Agency he founded 4 years ago rapidly expanded. His company motto, clear-headed honesty, attracted many hunters and mercenaries. The way his company operated earned everyone's trust. SH Agency rose into the top 20 of its field with Yoo Yeonha's full support and the monsters I killed.

[Oh right, have you tried contacting Kim Suho?]

[I did, but it's not easy to persuade him.]

SH Agency should continue to grow even without Kim Suho. However, it didn't feel right without Kim Suho. I wasn't too worried about Yun Seung-Ah next to him.

[Tell Creator's Sacred Grace that you'll provide them with information on dungeons.]

Park Soohyuk also had a gift called, Search. He could discover 4-5 dungeons a year.

[Yeah, good idea.]

— Well done. Now it's time for more practice.

Evandel's online lecture finally ended.

"Aang."

She stretched and jumped into my arms.

"Hajin."

Evandel rubbed her face in my chest like usual as I stroked her hair.

"I brought you presents."

"Presents?"

Her eyes widened.

"Yep, here you go."

Tada— I handed her the magician's hat and wand. Her mouth opened wide.

"Oooh, what's this?"

"Try wearing it. It will help you use your um... powers better."

I placed the magician's hat on her small head and made her hold the wand. She looked like a little witch. Now she only needed a cape.

"Wow, you're so cute."

"Hehe, really?"

Evandel jumped out of my arms and ran to a mirror.

"Hmm."

I fell in thought while looking at her. Soon, I would finish a space for Evandel to practice spirit magic. I wanted her to train for at least 3 hours a day.

“Hayang, look. It’s so pretty.”

She wouldn’t hate it, right? For Evandel, spirit magic should be like playing with Legos. I should ask her later.

October 3, 2027. I installed the stone tablet into Chameleon Troupe’s hideout as the autumn trees changed colors.

“What’s that?” Boss asked after watching me with interest.

“Our new employees.”

“Employees?”

This was the main item I wanted from Incheon’s goblin settlement.

[Goblin Tablet] [Magic Vessel] [Flame attribute] A stone tablet that contains the life-long wish of goblins. Can permanently summon goblins. — Summonable Count: Goblin Shaman – 1, Goblin (normal) – 3 — Growth: Goblins can rank up and specialize after gaining experience. The number of goblins you can summon will also increase.

I couldn’t recall if it was Aileen or Nicholas, but an extremely lazy high rank hero had used the goblin tablet in the original story. This item was extremely practical, but didn’t have much use at home, so I brought it to the Chameleon Troupe’s hideout.

“Employees? This thing?”

Boss curiously stared at the stone tablet.

“Hmm, my only flaw is with appraisal... to me, this just looks like a stone tablet with a goblin drawn on it.”

“You’re not wrong. I got it from the goblin settlement in Incheon.”

“Mn, I saw the news too.”

“I see.”

I scratched my head. The goblin settlement from a month ago had been reported worldwide. It caught everyone’s attention since it happened in Korea. The videos taken by the mercenaries who ran away only made the matter worse. The name of Jeronimo’s Fenrir rapidly spread and netted me a decent amount of SP.

“Boss, you like coffee, right?”

“What do you mean?”

She slowly shook her head.

“I don’t like anything, especially when it comes to food.”

“You’re lying again.”

“Lying? Ehem, you’re doubting your boss too much recently.”

Boss frowned and glared at me. I had no choice but to nod.

“Alright, if you say so. I’m planning on making a mini coffee shop.”

“Coffee shop?”

“Yep, one of these guys will operate it. They’ll be in charge of the hot spring too.”

“...”

Boss tilted her head, unable to understand.

“I’ll just show you.”

I infused magic power into the stone tablet. Then it shone and spat out 4 lumps of light that transformed into goblins.

“Oho?”

Boss’ eyes widened.

— Krrk.

— Krrr.

“Nice to meet you. I’m your owner.”

— Krrk?

— Krr?

“Be quiet. I’m going to assign you jobs.”

I pointed at the smallest and seemingly quickest goblin.

“You’re in charge of cleaning.”

Then I pointed at the goblin with the prettiest hands.

“You’re the barista.”

— Krrk.

“You’ll be making coffee. I’ll show you how to do it later.”

I brewed better coffee with Dexterity, but I would find it annoying and tiresome. Boss would also grow addicted once she tasted my coffee.

“Next, you’re in charge of the hot spring.”

I assigned the third goblin its job.

“And you’re... a shaman.”

— Keruru.

The last goblin held a wand, unlike the others.

“Alright, you’ll watch over the other goblins.”

They couldn’t rebel or go against my orders. Still, it didn’t feel right to give a shaman the same level of work as normal goblins.

— Kererere.

The goblin shaman seemed happy as it laughed.

“Oh right, if a magician comes by, help him.”

— Keru.

Chameleon Troupe also had a magician. Hirano Arashi, the seat of brown, was a master of destruction magic and stronghold creation.

“Oho, this is interesting.”

Boss muttered while watching the scene.

“Can I order them around too?”

“Of course. I’m their owner, but they should listen to Boss as well.”

Tirring — I got a call from Yoo Yeonha.

“Um, let me take this.”

“Sure. Oi, you come here.”

— Krrrk.

“Mm, this is fun.”

I left Boss with the goblins and entered my room.

“Hello?”

— Hello?

Yoo Yeonha sounded a bit thorny.

“Ah, what’s up?”

— Well, you see... I just saw your statement for this month.

I felt a pang of guilt.

— 6000 bullets and 3 drones... You used close to a billion won this month.

That was more than I thought, but I had no choice. Creating magic bullets required an expensive material called mana crystals. The cost would only be astronomical since I used hundreds of bullets per day on average.

“I thought you said I could use however much I wanted.”

— Well... that’s true. Honestly, I don’t mind too much.

“Then why did you call me?”

— I just had a good idea. Do you mind if I use Fenrir’s name for marketing?

“Marketing?”

— Yep.

“Quite greedy, aren’t you? How big are you trying to get? Isn’t your pharmaceutical company going public soon?”

— I’m still far from being satisfied.

Essence of the Strait grew bigger by the day. No, Yoo Yeonha grew bigger by the day and not in the bad sense. Essential Pharmacy’s debut potion blew up and the other businesses she had also showed great promise.

“So, what marketing?”

— Nothing much. We’ll just use your name for advertisement. You know, like ‘Bullets Used By Fenrir’ and so on.

“Will that be effective?”

— Of course! Mercenaries surprisingly have role models. Once they pick someone as their idol, they tend to use everything he does.

“I see... have your sales been bad recently?”

— No, it’s the opposite. Our bullet-making technology is improving by the day and the gun business is always profitable.

Ordinary people could only use guns to fight monsters. Of course, no one could reach my firepower. I had aether and my settings intervention had amplified my Desert Eagle with several effects.

“Well, go ahead.”

— Thank you.

“No problem.”

I almost hung up when Yoo Yeonha quickly added.

— Oh right, I saw the video of you fighting in Incheon. You were awesome.

“...I’m hanging up.”

I felt uncomfortable being a hot topic even though it earned me SP.

— Don’t worry. Nayun is on Baekdu Mountain, so she won’t see it.

I flinched.

“No, it’s not that...”

— Ah, I’m hanging up now. I have to go somewhere.

“Alright, have fun.”

— You too.

Tk. Yoo Yeonha hung up first. I briefly stared at my smartwatch before jumping into bed.

January 1, 2028. A new year dawned on us. Everyone hosted all sorts of celebrations across the globe. Pandemonium also held an exciting event called, Fight Club. They opened their famous Ten Thousand Demon Arena to the public.

“I’m surprised you’re sitting here so peacefully.”

The demon rank warrior’s waiting room remained peaceful despite the violence outside.

“Hello? Are you going to just ignore me?” Bell asked Jin Sahyuk lying in bed and reading a newspaper.

“What point is there in going down anyways. They’re all trash,” Jin Sahyuk muttered apathetically.

“Sigh.”

Bell scratched his head and sat on the couch. He suddenly thought back to a year ago when Jin Sahyuk announced her debut in the arena. At the time, Bell hoped she would get crushed. He wanted her to learn humility and modesty. However, his wish didn't come true. It turned out to be the opposite. Jin Sahyuk crushed her way through the arena until she gained over 40 victories and obtained a personal waiting room with the title, Demon.

“Wait, you're reading a newspaper?”

Bell grew curious. Jin Sahyuk liked reading books, but she never read newspapers.

“Take a look if you're curious.”

Jin Sahyuk opened this week's issue of the Violet Times. Bell widened his eyes and read the contents.

[Top 10 Rookies To Watch (New Year vers.)] 1. Demon of the Arena, Red Death — 2. Follower of Michael, Kim Suho — 3. Slaughter Wolf, Fenrir...

Violet Banquet strictly judged all the candidates and renewed the rankings monthly. The list meant quite a lot.

“Top 10 Rookies. You've been first ever since you debuted.”

Jin Sahyuk smiled as she stared at the newspaper.

“Kim Suho's second.”

Her face contorted with rage when Bell mentioned the second ranked rookie.

“Kim Suho, Kim Suho...”

She began to murmur his name.

“By the way, can’t you see the name below that?”

“What.”

“Below Kim Suho.”

Bell pointed at the name below Kim Suho. 3. Slaughter Wolf, Fenrir...

“Fenrir? Is he a werewolf?” Jin Sahyuk tilted her head.

“No.”

Bell couldn’t blame her.

“This is him. The coin dude.”

“It’s him?”

Immediately, her face distorted and she stared at the name. “Coin, coin...”

She didn’t know his real name and began to mutter something about coins. Her voice contained the same level of rage as when she muttered Kim Suho’s name.

“What an idiot.”

Bell sighed. However, he didn’t mind Jin Sahyuk gritting her teeth. Her rage would surely serve as a foundation for further growth.

“I think he’ll come find me.”

Jin Sahyuk spoke with a somewhat serious expression. Bell sneered.

“Pft, and why do you think that?”

“I heard there’s going to be a huge event in the arena next year. I think we’ll meet then.”

Bell had also heard about that as well. The Pandemonium Arena owner announced that he would host a huge competition for an item in 2029.

“I see, then you might be right.”

Bell grinned.

“Do you always sound like an ass? Screw off before I kick you out.”

Jin Sahyuk hadn’t changed a bit.

March 1, 2028. The third year cadets finally completed their apprenticeships. Rachel stood in front of Essence of the Strait’s entrance to say goodbye to the comrades who had laughed, cried, and sweated together with her for the past year.

“Haa...”

She had steeled her heart before the day began. So many people she had grown close with stood in front of her. Team leader Im Joongjin and vice leader Jeon Yohwa had guided her for the past year. Her former classmates: Rose, Yi Jiyeon, and Yohei were now official members of Essence of the Strait. And finally... Yoo Yeonha.

Rachel felt sadness and regret. She smiled bitterly and straightened her posture as she came to terms with their parting.

“Thank you for everything.”

She bowed respectfully as the royal court had taught her.

“Goodbye.”

“See you.”

“I’ll come visit.”

Yoo Yeonha and everyone else waved at her. Rachel smiled and turned around. A limousine arrived to pick her up. She quickly got into it feeling like she would burst into tears if she hesitated any longer.

“Where should we go, Princess?”

Jeremy Bond, the agent who watched over her from the shadows, asked in her mother tongue. She replied with a trembling voice.

“To the English Royal Court guild, obviously.”

“Yes, Your Highness.”

The limousine drove off as she looked outside to capture the moving scenery.

I'm finally leaving Korea.

She felt sentimental and took out her smartwatch to distract herself.

“Eh?”

However, a mercenary's trending name caught her attention.
Jeronimo's Fenrir has defeated another army of monsters.

“I'm hearing a lot about him recently.”

Rachel whispered to herself. Kim Hajin had chosen to become a mercenary. He displayed shocking results and already become famous throughout the world. Of course, most people knew him by his title, Fenrir, since his real name hadn't been officially revealed.

“He never contacted me.”

He said we would meet often. That he'd come visit me in England. Was everything a lie? Rachel pouted, but soon let it go.

He must've been busy. Unlike me who was an apprentice, he must've been fighting much more difficult enemies in tougher places. He must be sleeping where his life is constantly in danger. That must be the life of a high rank mercenary... probably.

“Huu...”

Rachel tapped on her smartwatch and left a positive comment on an article about Fenrir.

Chapter 151

Three Years (5)

Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan sat in front of Yun Seung-Ah. All three had their own worries and their expressions didn't look good.

“Here, it's the official application form.”

Yun Seung-Ah initiated the conversation as she placed two forms on the table. Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan each picked one up.

[Creator's Sacred Grace Application Form]

It offered a starting salary of 400 million won plus performance-based benefits. That was quite the sum compared to the 150-200 million won average that Cube graduates received, especially considering the guild's current situation.

“Oh?”

Yi Yeonghan's expression brightened. His worries seemed to have been monetary. However, Kim Suho felt the opposite. He looked worried at the high salary since Creator's Sacred Grace had been in the red for a while now. Everyone knew because of the daily articles. Creator's Sacred Grace had suffered astronomical damage in lawsuits and settlements to the wounded or deceased of their failed tower campaign. They had to conquer at least 30 small dungeons to make up for their losses.

“It might not be enough, but this is the best we can offer.”

Yun Seung-Ah misunderstood Kim Suho's expression. Honestly, the guild's budget was at its limit. They couldn't afford to give anymore and some of it had even come out of Yun Seung-Ah's pocket.

“No, it’s fine.”

“I’m happy with this amount too.”

Kim Suho didn’t say anything for the sake of Yun Seung-Ah’s pride and Yi Yeonghan signed the form in satisfaction.

“Great, then you can take a look at your offices.”

“Yes!”

“...Yes.”

Kim Suho and Yi Yeonghan left as Yun Seung-Ah remained alone.

“Haa.”

She deeply sighed. Money. Money. Money. This word continued to haunt her. She never thought money would be a problem, but she had incurred a 5 billion won debt in the past 2 years.

“My net worth used to be 5 billion won...”

Yun Seung-Ah laughed at herself and picked up her phone. She no longer hesitated to borrow money. Her pride had long disappeared after all the bank trips. Rather than worrying about today, she had to figure out how to survive tomorrow.

Tirring—

— Hello?

“...Hello? Unni?”

— Oh, what’s up?

“It’s me, Yun Seung-Ah.”

— I know.

“Ha, haha, right.”

Yun Seung-Ah awkwardly laughed. She chose the easy way out after hesitating.

“How have you been lately?”

— Hah? Do you want to reconsider? We still have seats open.

Aileen quickly made a counteroffer. Yun Seung-Ah became speechless.

— Why do you care so much about that guild? Do you want to be a guild leader that much? Even when you have to go through so much? Last time I checked, your guild still ranked 20.

“It’s rank 13 now. We recovered a bit. Plus, it’s always been my dream to become the guild leader of Creator’s Sacred Grace ever since I was young. I achieved my dream, so um... unni.”

— What.

Aileen’s words seemed to have loosened her tension. She decided to act a bit more shameless.

“Can you lend me some money?”

June 2028. Monsters all over the world went wild because of the silver moon phenomenon. Governments issued a state of emergency and ordered guilds to destroy the monster habitats. Kim Suho displayed fantastic results for Creator’s Sacred Grace. He destroyed a settlement of blood bears located in Suwon’s mountain range and became the youngest intermediate rank hero. Soon afterwards, Shin Jonghak also achieved similar results and became an intermediate rank hero.

August 2028. Essence of the Strait founded its monster corpse refinement business along with its mana crystal refinery. Even in Korea, these two factories boasted state-of-the-art mana technology.

They held a grand opening to celebrate. Essence of the Strait’s guild leader Yoo Jinwoong, vice leader Yi Jin-Ah, SH Agency’s CEO Park Soohyuk, the mayor of Uijeongbu, and Yoo Yeonha all attended.

Clap, clap, clap— The ribbon-cutting ceremony ended with roaring applause.

“Good work.”

Yoo Yeonha shook hands with Park Soohyuk. These two factories were only possible thanks to Essence of the Strait’s partnership with SH Agency. Their numerous hunters provided the monster corpses and made the cost of production much cheaper.

“So from now on, we should transfer all the monsters that Fenrir kills to this place?”

“Yes, but you can just call him Kim Hajin in front of me.”

“Ah... yes, understood.”

“Then I’ll take my leave.”

“Yes, see you later.”

She bid farewell to Park Soohyuk with a smile and approached her father at the limousine.

October 2028. The number of aerial and oceanic monsters exploded. This sudden increase greatly impacted island countries like Japan and England. A portion of England’s islands and Japan’s Kyushu island had been immediately designated as intermediate rank danger zones.

December 2028. Japan requested assistance from Korea and the Hero Association while England recruited mercenaries to deal with the situation themselves. The rest of the world ridiculed their decision.

February 2029...

A fierce wind blew on the summit of Baekdu Mountain.

“Ready.”

A battle was about to take place. Even the spectators guarded themselves with qi reinforcement because of Baekdu Mountain’s wind. It felt no different than knives that could cut your skin.

“...”

Chae Nayun glared at a man amidst this iron wind. She felt slightly tense and nervous.

“Start.”

Chae Nayun immediately pulled out a 1.8 meter longsword. Chae Shinhyuk had gifted her this historical grade artifact, Highlander’s Claymore. Her opponent only held an ordinary saber.

“Come.”

Chae Nayun didn’t rush. Instead, she swung her sword from a distance. Her longsword instantly transformed into a 20 meter beam. However, her opponent calmly blocked and rushed towards her. Woong— As the man’s saber approached, Chae Nayun jumped high enough to touch the clouds. She reversed her grip in the sky and struck down with the ultimate technique she secretly developed.

“Haaaaap—!”

She descended with a roar. Objectively speaking, Chae Nayun simply jumped and attacked. Her opponent easily dodged it, but the simple attack made him suspicious. The real attack came next. Chae Nayun twisted her sword, which stabbed into the ground, and magic power erupted from underneath.

“What?”

The man couldn't react as a thunderous roar rang out. Cracks appeared throughout the arena as though a volcano erupted and terrifying pillars of magic power shot out. One could see that the pillars all resembled swords if they looked closely. The man helplessly flew back as the wave of giant sword pillars swept him.

“...”

Their battle ended in just 3 breaths.

“Chae Nayun wins.”

The judge pronounced her victory.

“Thank you for the lesson.”

Chae Nayun sheathed her sword and bowed. The man she sent flying raised his body and gave her a thumbs up. The spectators watching also cheered and applauded.

“Heh.”

Yoo Sihyuk smiled at Chae Nayun as she wiped her sweat and bowed to him.

“You’ve grown a lot.”

Yoo Sihyuk felt genuinely impressed. Chae Nayun was only 21. Only 2 years had passed since she arrived on Baekdu Mountain. However, she grew faster than anyone else and poured every second into practice, allowing her to defeat the instructor who taught her for the past 2 years. Yoo Sihyuk felt a bit sad at the same time.

“As you said, you’re more than ready to return to the secular world.”

Chae Nayun would leave Baekdu Mountain today. She still had a grudge to resolve and debts to repay. Yoo Sihyuk wanted to hold her back as her master. She might've grown in might, but he knew her heart still wavered.

However, Chae Nayun stood firm in her conviction. KWANG! She set down her sheathed sword and bowed.

“Thank you for everything.”

Yoo Sihyuk stared at her somewhat dissatisfied. He decided to ask her one last question.

“Do you really plan on joining a guild?”

Chae Nayun became a hero without going through an apprenticeship with Yoo Sihyuk's recommendation. However, he knew her well. Being a mercenary suited her better for what she wanted to accomplish.

“Yes.”

Even so, Chae Nayun nodded. The twisted smile on her face slightly bothered him.

“If you want, I can introduce you to the Vast Expanse.”

“I will have to decline that offer.”

“Why?”

“You sure have a lot of questions.”

“What'd you say?”

Heh. Chae Nayun smirked.

“It's always been my dream to become a hero, so it's only obvious. I don't want to give up on it because of lame excuses.”

She remembered what someone once told her, that it was foolish to give up her dream because of a man. She agreed 100%. She became a hero out of spite and refused to lose.

“Fine, then pack your belongings and leave. I assume you can go down by yourself.”

“Of course.”

“...”

Yoo Sihyuk turned around to hide his hurt expression. Chae Nayun continued bowing as he walked away. Koong. She didn't raise her head until her master's door closed.

“You're the best, unni!”

“That was amazing!”

She waved at the younger disciples who treated her like an idol and returned to her room. She had grown quite accustomed to living in this place for the past 2 years.

“Let's see, what do I need to pack...”

She looked around after opening her suitcase. She didn't bring much in the first place. Then she spotted the pack of cigarettes on her desk.

“How many did I smoke today?”

She tilted her head and placed one in her mouth. The smoke entered her lungs as she lit it.

“Cough. Auu, so bitter.”

She couldn't get used to this acrid smell no matter how many times she smoked. It just didn't suit her. Even so, she still smoked 3 times a day. She felt it was her duty, so she wouldn't forget. It wouldn't weather away with time and she wouldn't forgive. For these reasons, she took on this hated smell every day.

“Eh?”

She caught sight of a gaming helmet in the corner of her drawer and bitterly laughed. She remembered playing with it often 4 years ago and picked it up to reminisce.

“Hmm.”

Chae Nayun put out the cigarette and lay in bed. Tok, tok. She pressed the button on the helmet and found that it still worked.

“Should I give it a try?”

This was her first time in years. The helmet’s iris scanner activated and the world around her turned dark.

[Iris scan has been completed.] [Nayunjajangman, welcome back.]

“Yeah, hi.”

She didn’t plan on playing anything. She only wanted to reminisce, but an alert popped up when she logged in.

[Today is the last day of service for Gladiator of the Century. We would like to warmly thank everyone for all the support throughout the years.]

“Eh?”

The game she used to enjoy that once dominated the gaming scene would end today. It couldn’t withstand the test of time. She felt somewhat bitter and logged in to Gladiator of the Century.

— I logged in one last time T.T

— Me too. I used to love this game.

— Is anyone from the hero clan?

People also came to reminisce like her in the lobby.

“Should I play one last time?”

Chae Nayun looked through her friend list.

“Ah.”

She found someone who felt more like a memory than a friend.

[Extra7 (currently online)]

A smile emerged on her face. She opened the private message window, but her face stiffened at the private conversation she had with him before. It embarrassed and annoyed her.

“Auu, you crazy idiot loser.”

She almost deleted the message log, but stopped. She couldn't bear to watch her younger self's immature conversation, but knew it would disappear once the service ended anyways.

It'll disappear even if I don't erase it. She told herself and slowly typed a message.

[Um, hyung. Are you... awake?]

I lay in bed without much to do recently. The laptop continued to update and the next episode wouldn't start for a while. As a result, I'd only been training and playing around lately. I grew quite used to this lifestyle thanks to a few dramas and variety shows.

“...Sigh.”

I had trouble falling asleep with all sorts of thoughts constantly plaguing me and suffered from chronic insomnia.

“Oh right.”

The VR helmet by my bed suddenly caught my attention. I put it on thinking I might play a sleep-inducing video, but an alert popped up when I entered the lobby.

[Today is the last day of service for Gladiator of the Century. We would like to warmly thank everyone for all the support throughout the years.]

“Ah, so this is ending.”

I suddenly realized how much time went by. I remembered playing this game a lot in the past. I even made a friend, but never said goodbye as I naturally stopped after I grew busy. I logged in out of curiosity.

“A lot has changed, huh.”

I entered a waiting room that didn’t exist in the past. The game developers did everything they could to not fall behind.

“Hmm.”

I looked around and reminisced about the old features and observed the new ones.

[Um, hyung. Are you... awake?]

Ding— I suddenly received a message from Nayunjajangman and recalled the past. Honestly, I felt so happy my drowsiness disappeared.

[Yeah, I’m awake. It’s been a while, man.]

[I think so too.]

“Oh?”

The way he talked seemed to have changed after 4 years. He sounded more... mature. It made sense. After all, he had to be an adult now.

[Do you want to play a match?]

Nayunjajangman asked.

[Match?]

[Yep.]

[Sure.]

I felt more than happy to play one last time since the game would close soon. I suddenly stopped in the middle of pressing buttons to host a room. I used to be his master, so I didn't want to lose.

[Let me relog real quick.]

I took off my helmet.

— Scan.

Then I logged back in after consolidating it.

Extra7: [Go?]

[Go.]

The match began after a brief exchange. I used a saber and a shield while my old master, Extra7, used an axe and shield. The controls felt a bit weird since I hadn't played for a while, but my sharper senses and experience made up for it. At least, that's what I thought.

“Uuk!”

Boom. Extra7's axe struck my shield and pushed my character against the wall. I quickly rolled to the side and dodged his follow-up attack.

“Ik!”

Koong. This time, he attacked my face with his shield.

“Ah, dammit!”

I tried to counterattack after barely dodging. Whoosh— However, my character shot up into the air from his sudden summersault. That was it. He killed me with a 108 hit aerial combo. I completely lost the first set.

“Ha, what the hell was that combo? Jesus.”

I laughed out loud. It seemed my old master was still worthy of being my master.

“He’s so good.”

The second set began. This time, I took the fight more seriously and changed my weapon to a longsword.

[Victory]

“I almost lost.”

Nayunjajangman fought much better than before. Or maybe I got worse. His sharp and reckless counterattacks gave me a hard time.

[Thank you for the match. I see you’re just as good as before.]

Nayunjajangman messaged me as soon as the match ended.

[You improved a lot. Did you continue playing?]

[No, what about you?]

[I didn't play either. I just logged in after hearing that the service was ending today.]

[Wow, then you must be super talented. I'm impressed, hyung.]

"Pft."

The way he talked made me laugh. The kid who used to ask for dating advice had grown into a full-fledged adult.

[Ah, hyung, you're currently active, right?]

Jajangman suddenly asked a strange question. Active? This word meant multiple things in this world.

[Well, I guess you could say that. What about you?]

Did he also become a mercenary?

[I'm not active yet, but I will be soon.]

[Oh? Are you a trainee?]

[Something like that.]

I see, so that's why he became so serious.

[Good luck.]

[Thank you. Ah, don't you think we'll meet one day?]

I smiled. Regardless of whether you're an apprentice hero or an apprentice mercenary, I'm no longer someone you can meet so easily.

[Maybe, if you continue to work hard.]

[I see. Ah, the service is ending soon.]

[kk.]

I received an alert too.

— The service will end in 30 seconds. I smiled bitterly and slowly typed my goodbye.

[Good luck. Be happy.]

Jajangman's instantly replied.

[It's too late for me, but be happy too, hyung.]

I wanted to reply. I didn't know what happened, but I couldn't bear to watch a kid act so hopeless. However, my surroundings had changed before I could type anything.

[The service has ended.] [We offer our greatest gratitude to all the users who have supported Gladiator of the Century.] [Goodbye.]

Only the developers' final messages remained.

Chapter 152

Three Years (6)

April 3, 2029. I read a newspaper in our hideout by England's Bristol Channel while Boss played a game next to me.

[The English Royal Court guild partners with mercenary groups...] [The English Channel's high-intermediate rank monster, megalodon, has been defeated by the English Royal Court guild's Team 1. Rachel, the guild's youngest team leader, showed exceptional skills...] [Princess Rachel has been appointed as the Royal Court guild's youngest vice leader.] [Trust in England at an all-time low.]

The popularity of England's leadership steadily declined. Ordinary newspapers and even the Violet Times predicted a grim future for the country.

"Hmm..."

I sighed and put down the newspaper. I couldn't find what I wanted about entrance tickets that should be popping up soon. How much longer did I have to wait?

"Knnng."

I felt a bit sore and stood up to stretch. Then I looked around the hideout, which was about 65% complete. A lot had changed in the past 3 years. Honestly, I felt proud of the changes I made.

The dome ceiling featured crystal chandeliers and gem lights that beautifully hung down. The red vintage walls displayed art that Boss brought from her secret stash. The hideout also had many convenient facilities now. The goblin coffee shop provided the highest grade coffee. Many of my magical furniture also decorated the hideout. In the center... what was that again? An enormous mana crystal the size of Cheok Jungyeong's thigh purified the air inside the cave. For the record, I took that almond-shaped crystal from Boss' secret vault. She threw a tantrum about not wanting to keep it and reluctantly agreed when I threatened that I wouldn't comb her hair ever again.

However, that was only the tip of the iceberg. Outside also had a hot spring, shooting range, training room, library, game room, cafeteria, etc.

“Kuhaha—!”

The door to the lobby suddenly shot open and a giant stormed in. Boss looked up with a frown while playing her game on the couch.

“It's crazy out there, Boss!”

“Did something happen outside?”

“Oh, newbie! You're here too?”

Cheok Jungyeong smiled as he held up a sea monster twice his size.

“Monsters underwater are going crazy!”

“Gyeong, what is that.”

“A sea monster. This blind bastard kept bumping into me, so I hooked it up. It's a blue ocean fish.”

It was a delicious species classified as a fish rather than a monster. Boss smacked her lips. Then she glanced up at me. Clearly, she wanted me to cook it for her.

“Blue ocean fish, huh.”

I started cooking for Boss three months ago because controlling her by combing her hair could get difficult. I wanted Boss to slowly grow addicted to everything I provided until she couldn't live without me.

“You know about it?”

Cheok Jungyeong laughed and threw down the blue ocean fish. For the record, other members didn't know I could cook. I only revealed it to Boss and felt too lazy to cook for everyone. She enjoyed the special treatment.

"You can keep it in the fridge and eat it later."

I took his kind offer and looked at the blue ocean fish. I wasn't sure if it was still alive or spasming after death, but it violently flopped around.

"Boss, come out if you're bored. It's really fun."

"I'm fine. You can enjoy it alone."

"Hehe, don't regret it later."

Cheok Jungyeong's latest hobby was fishing. I created a secret pathway connecting the hideout to the ocean since using a portal all the time felt quite troublesome. Obviously, we covered the path with illusion magic and a fortress grade seal to prevent outsiders from recognizing it. Cheok Jungyeon used it once a week to fight sea monsters. I recalled him saying something about wanting to overcome the ocean's restraint.

"I'm going back out!"

"Oh right—!"

He quickly came back in.

"I almost forgot. Oi, Bling, give me an Americano."

The barista goblin quickly followed his command. As expected, the goblin named Bling instantly made Americano after a year of experience.

“Perfect.”

Gulp, gulp— Cheok Jungyeong emptied the 2 liter cup in just 3 seconds before leaving.

“Guys.”

When I clapped, the 6 normal goblins gathered around the blue ocean fish.

— Krrk.

— Kururu.

The goblins discussed which part of the fish to grab and ended up equally putting it on their shoulders.

“Newbie?”

Boss silently watched from the couch and asked. She was already drooling.

“Yes?”

“When is breakfast?”

She honestly expressed herself when it came to food. Most strong people acted like that. They could control their desire for sex or sleep, but couldn't withstand hunger because of their bodies' high metabolism.

“Give me 30 minutes.”

“I see, ssp.”

Boss nodded with anticipation. I grinned and turned on my smartwatch. Just in case, I checked Violet Banquet for any news on entrance tickets, but only amusement park tickets popped up. Disappointed, I checked the trending topics.

[Fenrir unseen for 6 months! Was he just another seasonal mercenary?]

Another article came up about me. They criticized me for using my gift for money, but now berated me for another reason. I skipped the article and checked the comments.

[Rachel0418] You expect a mercenary to work for free? -. I'm sure Fenrir is taking a rest because people like you keep bothering him. -.

“Pft.”

As expected, Rachel commented again on another article. Did she look at online articles all the time? Click. I liked the comment without much thought. Then a lightbulb suddenly went off in my head.

“Oh right.”

The Royal Court guild would obtain entrance tickets before other guilds. Rank mattered most when it came to entrance tickets. Still, it would be nice to have some extra tickets. I also worried about England's situation, which was worse than I predicted.

“Boss.”

“Mm?”

“I have an idea.”

I began to choose my words for a negotiation. Boss would likely agree to anything with the blue ocean fish as leverage.

* * *

The Royal Court guild greeted its new apprentice heroes in April. In any other year, England would be booming with tourists who came to enjoy its beautiful spring.

“Haaa.”

The weather felt great, but Rachel sighed as the Royal Court guild's vice leader.

"I didn't learn any of this in Cube."

She became the youngest vice leader because a guild in Korea had scouted away the previous one. They practically pushed the position onto her and she didn't know how to handle the heavy responsibility. England and the Royal Court guild's situation was that bad. Rachel didn't blame the vice leader who ran away either.

"...Sigh."

She scrolled through the emails on her computer.

[Thank you for contacting Desolate Moon. We have received the Royal Court guild's request for aid, but military negotiations should be done through the association...]

Everyone declined the their request for help. Most had advised them to ask the Hero Association like the above example. However, Rachel knew all too well what that meant. The Royal Court guild would lose too much influence and control once the association intervened. Like how Roton Corporation schemed to take control of Clancy Islet, the association would likely ask for something similar. England couldn't afford to set its house on fire to catch a flea. Although the flea was absurdly big.

"Sylvie, how many representatives are we scheduled to meet today?"

Rachel called her secretary.

— Thirteen in total. Eleven are already waiting in the building.

The Royal Court guild decided to partner with mercenary groups after the number of monsters increased. It made sense since mercenaries operated separately from the association.

"So most of them are here."

Of course, the Royal Court guild and its heroes would also gain more experience against these monsters. Their guild ranking would naturally increase and they would obtain more monster corpses for research and development. However, the question was whether England could overcome the odds.

— Shall I send them in?

“Yes, one at a time.”

* * *

Ordinary citizens walked with tension in the streets of London. Nowadays, they didn’t feel safe even in the capital. The monsters living in River Thames threatened the public.

“I’m going to leave the country for a while.”

“Where are you going?”

“Korea. My older brother has residency there. He’s not in Seoul, but it should still be safer than here.”

“Ah, I’m jealous.”

They didn’t sound too hopeful as they worried about the country’s future and their loved ones’ safety. Almost as if to confirm their worries...

Wiing— Wiing—

The sirens suddenly went off that monsters had invaded. A manhole in the street shot open and monsters climbed up. Sea moles, greed toads, giant catfish, etc. They were all low to low-intermediate rank monsters, but there were just too many and ordinary civilians couldn’t deal with them.

“Uu, uwaak!”

The monsters quickly took over the streets. They flashed their bloodthirsty eyes and chased the people who ran away. Civilians did all they could to avoid being devoured.

— Ribbit!

A greed toad jumped on top of a woman.

“L-Let me go!”

She punched its face, but that was futile. The toad opened its mouth with a cheeky smile. BOOM! Its head suddenly exploded.

“Uu, uuu...”

A mysterious attack saved the woman. She couldn’t properly assess the situation after being covered by monster fluids, but knew someone had saved her and began to run again. Then a sea mole jumped towards her.

— Grrr...

“Ah...”

However, the sea mole’s head exploded before it could even touch her. The woman finally realized something was off. Other people running away also stopped to stare behind her. The woman followed their gazes and turned around.

“...”

Streaks of light rained down from the sky. She had seen a similar scene in a YouTube video.

Tudududu— Bullets obliterated monsters. This terrifying barrage lit up the sky and annihilated hundreds of monsters. Only 3 minutes had passed from beginning to end. The screams from the streets had long disappeared.

“Wow.”

“My god.”

The civilians all stared at a single man on a bike. No one could see his face because of his helmet.

Vroom— His bike roared and he quickly disappeared as everyone stared in awe.

“T-That, that must’ve been Fen, Fenrir!”

A motorcycle-enthusiast who loved to slaughter monsters with a mystical gun. Even ordinary people knew the famous mercenary.

* * *

Rachel currently met with different representatives of mercenary groups in her office.

“As you know, we achieved rank 10 in the most recent mercenary rankings.”

She first met with the Skid Row Mercenary Group. The group’s leader initiated the negotiation with a haughty attitude. Rachel could accept it, albeit reluctantly. However, she instantly rejected their offer because he asked for too much.

“Ha, I’m speechless.”

“You can speak.”

“How can you be so beautiful?”

“...Pardon?”

Next, she met with the Great Tiger Mercenary Group, which ranked 14. Their leader was in his mid-30s and showed too much interest in Rachel’s appearance. The conditions he offered seemed reasonable, but he made the meeting feel like a blind date.

“England is in a bad spot, right? Sea monsters are the most difficult compared to aerial and land monsters. Why don’t you just ask the association for help?”

“That’s our business.”

“Are you looking down on mercenaries? You think we wouldn’t understand just because we’re uneducated?”

“No.”

Like that, Rachel continued her meetings. Most of the leaders acted arrogant or stupid, especially the ones from higher ranked groups. The leader of the world’s rank 5 mercenary group acted particularly distasteful. The way he ogled her with his lustful eyes made her want to pull out her weapon.

“Huu.”

All 13 meetings finally came to an end. She didn’t feel it was a waste of time. Rank 14 and rank 9 seemed reasonable.

— Um, vice leader.

Her secretary suddenly called her.

“Yes, what is it?”

— Um, someone from another mercenary group just showed up.

“Weren’t we done?”

— We were, but this one claimed to be a mercenary and asked to meet the vice leader.

Then why don’t you just kick him out? Rachel pressed her forehead.

— I wanted to send him back, but he seems to be someone famous.

“Oh... I see.”

Do mercenaries act more arrogant with fame? I didn't want to be biased for the sake of that person...

“If he didn't contact us before... sigh, just let him in.”

It's not like I'll lose anything by seeing another person.

— Understood.

The secretary replied as Rachel deeply sighed and tapped on her desk. After about 5 minutes... Tok, tok— Someone knocked on her door.

“Come in.”

Rachel spoke with an exhausted voice. Kiik— The door slowly opened and heavy footsteps resounded. She slowly raised her head and spotted the mercenary entirely in black. His hair was styled in a clean pomade and his well-kempt beard made him particularly handsome. Her eyes widened as soon as she saw him. It was only natural. Rachel knew him all too well despite his slightly different aura.

“It's nice to meet you.”

The man casually greeted her with a charming baritone voice. Then he naturally sat in front of her with a pleasant scent.

“Ah...”

Rachel became speechless at their sudden reunion. Her voice wouldn't come out and it felt as if her five senses had frozen.

“I'm Jeronimo's Fenrir.”

She couldn't tell if he knew about their situation. However, she could see his warm smile.

Chapter 153

Three Years (7)

On the Tower of Hero's 101st floor, the office workers stared at a pile of documents in Aileen's office.

"Hnnng..."

After painstaking effort, they summarized countless documents into 30 pages. These documents all had to do with the mysterious entity known as Black Lotus.

"This is all we have on him?"

Aileen asked as she glanced at their report. Black Lotus, the new black of that group. He was responsible for 11 recent terror incidents in Pandemonium.

"Yes, we compiled the most important details from our informants in Pandemonium."

"Ah, really. It sure is flawless."

Aileen tried her best to sound sarcastic, but no one blamed her. None of the documents included anything that might help identify Black Lotus and only boasted of his achievements. Aileen already knew everything such as the [base destruction with a single arrow], [black lotus symbol engraved on the ground], etc.

"He always immediately disappears, so there's hardly any information. He might have a gift related to teleportation..."

"Yeah, yeah."

Aileen ignored their excuses.

“It’s my fault for expecting anything use... huh? Wait a minute.”

A lightbulb suddenly went off in her head that gave her goosebumps. She widened her eyes and stared at her employees.

“He always leaves after a single arrow... Then... could he... no, could she be the Divine Archer?”

“Pardon?”

“Divine Archer. You know, Jin Seyeon the Divine Archer.”

The office workers couldn’t tell if Aileen was serious or not. They shook their heads.

“There’s no way it’s Jin Seyeon.”

“She should be busy doing volunteer work.”

“Right? I was kidding too.”

Aileen quickly changed her tone. Jin Seyeon the Divine Archer was a master rank hero known as the god of the bow. She was only rank 70, putting her on the edge of master rank. Furthermore, she had retired from active duty and only appeared every once in a while in North Africa.

“By the way, why is she even doing volunteer work?”

“...”

“...”

The office workers saved their breath. People in their early 20s and 30s idolized Jin Seyeon. Her kind heart and righteous deeds melted everyone’s hearts and her upright personality made her a popular master rank hero.

“I just don’t understand. Why did the association place her in master rank?”

Aileen expressed her displeasure. The association excluded Temple of Justice members from its ranking system. Aileen acknowledged Jin Seyeon as the best archer, but wondered why Jin Seyeon was a master rank hero instead of someone like Yoo Jinwoong.

“I’d win If I fought her too,” Aileen grumbled unhappily.

“Hmm...”

She naturally grew curious about who would win between Jin Seyeon and Black Lotus? Aileen turned to her workers after mulling over the question.

“Girls, how strong do you think he is?”

“I’m not sure. Can you elaborate?”

“You know, try estimating his rank. How do you think he fares compared to Jin Seyeon?”

The 4 office workers fell in thought. They all graduated from top universities and passed the association’s difficult tests, but still couldn’t answer whether a lion or a tiger would win in a fight.

“Um, Black Lotus probably didn’t use 100% of his strength, right?”

The youngest worker asked. Aileen rubbed her chin in thought. Black Lotus’ arrow was undoubtedly powerful. He could destroy any target with a single arrow.

“Let me think...”

In reality, archers had difficulty amplifying the power of a single arrow. Every archer wanted to finish off their enemies in one blow. Otherwise, their location would be found out and they would be in great danger without a warrior to protect them.

Pouring too much magic power into a magic arrow made its form unstable and harder to control, so archers always limited their power to control their magic arrows properly.

“40%...”

However, Black Lotus always obliterated his targets with a single arrow. This meant his magic power control was superb, which also meant he didn't use his full power.

“Maybe it's only 20-30%.”

“Eh? That small?”

The surprised worker expressed her doubt. With only 20-30%, he destroyed a tower that could've withstood most explosions and a hideout with a high rank barrier? He even assassinated an executive of Pandemonium's rank 10 organization.

“Don't ask if you're going to doubt me.”

Aileen only considered them as bookworms who hadn't experienced the world.

“Cough, no. I apologize. Hey, you! Continue what you were saying before!”

The flustered worker quickly retracted her words and yelled at the youngest who spoke earlier.

“Ah, yes. So assuming that we've only seen 25% of Black Lotus' full strength...”

The youngest worker furiously typed on her laptop and performed some complex calculations. Her expression turned pale as she finished.

“This...”

“What? Hurry up and say it.”

“Well... in terms of numbers... he’s at the level of a master rank hero.”

“Eh? Really?”

Everyone in the office felt surprised.

“Yes, the estimated value of the magic power explosion he caused is similar to Divine Archer Jin Seyeon’s crystal arrow, which she used to defeat the basilisk 3 years ago.”

“Oooh.”

Where did she learn how to do this? Aileen smiled.

“That’s interesting.”

“This is only a theory.”

“Still, it’s interesting.”

Aileen was suddenly filled with anticipation. Two archers aiming at each other, releasing their bowstrings in tension, two arrows with different colors flying towards each other, and the final clash... Frankly, she hoped Jin Seyeon would lose. Aileen didn’t like women who always acted kind, noble, and refined.

“Alright, that’s it for today. You can all go home.”

“Thank you.”

“See you tomorrow!”

The office workers smiled and bowed.

“Yeah, yeah. See ya.”

Aileen was certainly a boss with many complaints and outbursts. However, she remained popular among her subordinates because she always let them go home early.

* * *

Rachel had changed a lot in 3 years. She now had a perfect jawline after losing all her baby fat and her innocent eyes seemed more mature. Was it because of all the troubles she faced? She also carried thin dark circles under her eyes, but even that looked charming on her.

“It... it’s been a while.”

Rachel stuttered. Her voice still sounded the same.

“Yeah.”

I simply replied. Then I purposely remained silent to see how she would react.

“Mm, mmn.”

Her hands fidgeted around with the computer mouse. I couldn’t help but laugh at her awkwardness.

“Why aren’t you talking? Is it because I came too late?”

“Y-Yes? Ah, no, that’s not it.”

We stared at each other as I waited for her to continue.

“Your beard... you grew it out.”

I didn’t expect that.

“Oh, this?”

I rubbed my chin. I had a cool nickname like Fenrir, but aether kept making me look younger, so I grew out my beard. I looked like a Western movie star now. For the record, it wasn't a goatee.

"A famous barber trimmed it for me. Does it look weird?"

I found the son of the master barber I met in the past. He wasn't as skilled as his father, but also worked as a barber.

"No, it looks great."

"That's nice to hear."

Thanks to him, I received a 0.4 charm buff. I put in some extra effort since this would be my first meeting with Rachel in years.

"But I'll shave it off soon."

"Eh? N-No, it looks nice on you."

She waved her hands as I smiled. Sometimes, I arrogantly thought I looked like Jake Gyllenhaal when I saw myself in the mirror. However, I planned to shave it soon since Evandel didn't like it.

"I heard you were taking a break from mercenary work."

Rachel carefully changed the subject.

"I've been busy with other things."

For the past 6 months, I focused on Chameleon Troupe missions. Robbing a rich djinn, hunting a jewel whale in the deep Pacific, destroying hideouts of Pandemonium organizations, etc. I tried to make the Chameleon Troupe attack djinns as much as possible.

"Well, we can catch up on personal matters later. For now, let's talk about our partnership."

"Ah, yes... wait, partnership?"

Rachel's eyes widened.

"Of course. That's why I'm here."

I smiled.

"Don't you remember? I said we'd probably work together through a mercenary partnership."

"Ah, r-right. I remember."

It didn't look like she remembered, but she nodded excitedly anyways.

"It's coming back to me. It was... really sunny that day."

"It was raining."

I narrowed my eyes at her.

"R-Right, it was raining. I got confused for a moment..."

"I'm kidding, it was sunny."

"Sunny—"

"Or maybe I'm remembering wrong."

"..."

Rachel closed her mouth and pouted at me.

"Haha, I'm just joking. Here are our conditions. Take a look."

I took out the contract and handed it to her. Rachel respectfully received it. Jeronimo Mercenary's conditions were as follows:

1. The Royal Court guild is not to interfere in Jeronimo's business. 2. England is to provide information on all dungeons within its territory. If the Royal Court guild conquers a dungeon, all acquired loot is to be revealed to Jeronimo Mercenary. 3. Jeronimo Mercenary is to have first priority in purchasing loot acquired from dungeons. 4...

It only stated 6 clauses. Rachel looked up after carefully reading each clause.

“If you agree to these terms, we can help England deal with its monster crisis. We’ll be forming an official partnership.”

Rachel’s eyes immediately lit up.

[Royal Court guild forms partnership with Jeronimo Mercenary!] [How did England move Jeronimo?] [Fenrir slaughters thousands of sea monsters in 1 hour.]

The international community blew up as soon as news spread that the Royal Court guild partnered with Jeronimo. Headlines appeared all over the world and the Royal Court guild’s stocks skyrocketed. The prime minister even invited Jeronimo Mercenary’s leader (Jain in disguise) to a banquet. Additionally, they appointed Rachel as the successor to the guild leader for her achievement in this negotiation. A fair amount of negative rumors also floated around regarding sexual favors.

A month flew by.

England’s situation had mostly calmed. Jeronimo only had 24 members, but most were fake identities with only 5-6 active members.

The goal of their partnership was to destroy the monsters’ habitats. Monsters would naturally stop reproducing and their numbers would dwindle.

In only a month, Jeronimo destroyed 6 habitats of sea monsters, a feat Cheok Jungyeong achieved alone. I only had to tell him where and Cheok Jungyeong would run over to destroy everything in sight. As an ally, he couldn't be more reliable.

"I'm glad it was resolved without any civilian casualties."

I walked with Rachel along the English Channel's beach.

"I agree."

We arrived 10 minutes ago after a report about a large number of carnivorous tunas.

"By the way, I'm going to make you pay for my bullets."

I took care of everything in just 7 minutes with my heavy machine gun. We strolled along the beach with some time left.

"..."

Rachel remained quiet. She watched the waves glistening under the sun with a relaxed smile. I felt a bit bored and raised a finger to my face. Then...

"Oh right."

Poke. Rachel suddenly turned around and my finger poke her cheek.

"..."

She froze and stared at me for an explanation.

"Er, anyways, Rachel or rather, vice leader."

I pulled my finger back and asked as if nothing happened.

"The Royal Court guild conquered several dungeons in the past few months. Have you obtained any paper as loot?"

“Paper?”

“Yes, something that looks like an entrance ticket.”

It shone in different colors and should be an entrance ticket to the Tower of Wish, the next major episode.

“Mm... I don’t think so.”

Rachel replied after mulling it over. I shook my head in regret. Then we went back to strolling around the beach.

Vrrr— My smartwatch suddenly rang and Rachel heard the loud noise as well. I quickly looked down at it.

[The laptop update has been completed.]

The information I'd been dying to know finally popped up. For 3 years, I could still modify the settings of objects and see their information, but I couldn't view my status (other than my gifts). I was seeing my stats for the first time in 3 years.

"The heck."

My charm stat was only 5.535? Aesthetic greed raised my charm by 0.002 points every 24 hours up to a maximum of 1. I also used the Random Consolidation System on aether every day, so my charm should've increased much higher. Well, I guess that's how it reached 5.535. For the record, I spent 1500 SP a year ago to raise the Random Consolidation System's maximum to 54%. Even with the charm buff from the barber, my charm stat only reached 5.935.

"Mmm."

I felt a bit bitter for some reason. Jake Gyllenhaal... you're too far away! Of course, I didn't take it too seriously. Everyone evaluated themselves like this at least once in their lifetime.

"What's wrong?"

Rachel asked as I stared at my smartwatch. I simply smiled.

"Let's head back for now."

Rachel tilted her head, not knowing what happened. Meanwhile, I tried using one of the laptop's new functions. I clicked on the device link button that appeared on my smartwatch. Then I clicked on the motorcycle icon after scrolling through the list of available devices.

[Kim Hajin's Agusta Vigilante has been found.] [Device Link completed.]
[Agusta Vigilante will now move according to Kim Hajin's will.]

I tried to send a thought. Come to me. Come to me. After about a minute, the motorcycle drove up. Interesting. I got on without much thought.

“Wait!”

A hand suddenly grabbed me.

“...?”

Obviously, it was Rachel.

“What’s wrong?”

“Hajin, wait a minute.”

“Huh?”

Rachel pointed at my bike as she slightly shuddered.

“Didn’t you park your motorcycle by the road?”

“Uh, I did, but...”

“Who is it—!”

Rachel pulled out Galatyn as soon as I said a few words.

“Hello?”

“Shh, I think it’s an assassin. That motorcycle just drove here on its own.”

She murmured in shock as she raised her sword, which shone with a golden light.

“Show yourself.”

Her voice carried a hint of killing intent, but no one answered. Then she repeated the same words in English.

“Show yourself.”

“...”

“Stop hiding like a coward.”

She spoke out against an invisible enemy, but sounded sure of her suspicion. From the looks of it, she must’ve experienced similar situations before. Just how many assassination attempts did she experience to react like this? I couldn’t help but feel sorry. However, I just continued on to my motorcycle.

“Hajin! That motorcycle is dangerous!”

“Don’t worry, it’s a self-driving vehicle.”

“...?”

“Look.”

I willed the motorcycle to move and voiced my command.

“Make a circle around us.”

Vroom, vroom. The motorcycle ran through the sand at a frightening speed as Rachel stared in a daze.

“Ah...”

“Technology has improved a lot in recent years. Try not to fall behind.”

“Ah, uaah.”

Rachel became speechless from embarrassment. She covered her face and simply shook her head. A sudden call saved her. Tiriri—

“W-Wait one moment. I need to take this. Hello?”

She walked away with the call as an excuse. It didn’t last long and she quickly returned with a serious face.

“Hajin.”

“Yes?”

“Some strange papers came out of a dungeon we just conquered.”

One week later.

[May Guild Rankings... The English Royal Court guild entered the top 20 with the help of Jeronimo, but Yoo Yeonha had wanted the same partnership for Essence of the Strait. She just never had the chance to bring it up to Kim Hajin.]

Yoo Yeonha read the Violet Times along with an ordinary newspaper inside her luxury limousine.

“Hnn.”

She pouted out of envy. The English Royal Court guild entered the top 20 with the help of Jeronimo, but Yoo Yeonha had wanted the same partnership for Essence of the Strait. She just never had the chance to bring it up to Kim Hajin.

“We’re here.”

The limousine stopped as she glanced out the window. She could see a luxury cruise ship anchored to the Han River’s dock. Today, she had planned a gathering for Noble Society.

“Thank you.”

She had started it as a fun project before entering Cube, but it expanded proactively in her second year. First, she invited high ranking officials with the help of her father. Then she donated to universities and charities under Noble Society’s name. Afterwards, she began to snatch up promising cadets with good family backgrounds. Now, Noble Society boasted over 200 members who would all undoubtedly become Korea’s future leaders.

“I will be waiting nearby.”

“Alright.”

Yoo Yeonha got off. Tak, tak. She had grown accustomed to high heels and arrived at the cruise ship’s entrance. The guards immediately recognized her and gave way as she walked onboard.

“Hm?”

She scanned the deck and quickly noticed a guest who arrived early, leaning on the railing and staring intently at something. Yoo Yeonha slowly walked up to her with a bitter heart.

“Nayun?”

“Uwaah!”

Startled, Chae Nayun quickly turned off her smartwatch.

“O-Oh, hi.”

“What were you doing?”

Yoo Yeonha glanced at Chae Nayun’s smartwatch.

“N-Nothing.”

Yoo Yeonha quickly found out through her own smartwatch.

[Master, a user by the nickname, imgosu, requested a background check on Kim Hajin as well as his current whereabouts.] [For now, we've put the request on hold.]

Yoo Yeonha read the message and looked back at Chae Nayun.

“...hui, hui.”

Chae Nayun was whistling in cold sweat. Yoo Yeonha forced herself to smile. She had already heard rumors that Chae Nayun was looking into Kim Hajin. She also knew Chae Nayun was scammed a dozen times because of her low Violet Banquet rank.

“Do you want to come inside? I prepared a private room.”

“Y-Yeah.”

Yoo Yeonha led her to a private room for close friends.

“What is this place for?”

“We can hang out here. You don't like parties, right? The others will arrive soon.”

“I see.”

Pool, VR, bowling, darts. The room was full of games. Chae Nayun sat on the couch without much thought.

“Oh right, what's this on my name tag?” she asked Yoo Yeonha.

“Name tag?”

“Yeah. Over here, it says executor. Shouldn't it say low-intermediate rank hero?”

[Essence of the Strait's hero, Chae Nayun] [Executor]

“Oh, that?”

Yoo Yeonha had created the title just for her. Chae Nayun easily surpassed low-intermediate rank heroes in power, but couldn't be promoted yet due to a lack of results.

“The association classifies heroes based on a rank and grade, but I don't plan on following their system forever.”

The association's rank and grade system didn't satisfy most people, so Yoo Yeonha created new titles to match a hero's diverse characteristics. For now, she had 5 titles: Executor, Destroyer, Guardian, etc. Of these, Executor ranked the highest.

“Oh? That's surprisingly good.”

Tok, tok— A knock suddenly came from the door.

— Guests have arrived.

“Looks like they're here.” Yoo Yeonha smiled at Chae Nayun.

“Yeah.” Chae Nayun nonchalantly nodded.

“Come in.”

Yoo Yeonha invited the guests and 3 familiar faces walked in. Shin Jonghak, Kim Suho, and Yi Yeonghan. All 3 superstars had risen to fame at only 21 years old.

“Hey, it's been a while.”

Kim Suho waved with a bright smile.

“Move it.”

“Whoa!”

Shin Jonghak pushed him aside and stood in front of Chae Nayun.

“How have you been?”

His voice sounded wistful and emotional. Yoo Yeonha shook her head as she watched him.

“So-so. What about you? You look even creepier now.”

“Hahaha, that’s a funny way of saying I’m handsome.”

“Are you crazy?”

“Ah, I’m so tired.”

Yi Yeonghan ignored them and trudged to the couch. He wriggled on his back like a giant cockroach.

“Ah, Creator’s Sacred Grace is too cutthroat. They’re sending me to 3 dungeons a month.”

“Didn’t you say you wanted to go? You said you wanted to buy that Lambo or something.”

Feeling guilty, Kim Suho poked Yi Yeonghan’s back.

“It’s Lamborghini. Oi, Team Leader Kim, you think you’ll be safe if I report you to the association for overworking me?”

“Oh please, you got what you wanted, right?”

“I did put in an order.”

Kim Suho had already become a team leader with Yi Yeonghan as one of his members. A big difference in rank between individuals who joined at the same time usually led to minor conflicts. However, nothing of the sort ever occurred between them.

“Chae Nayun, do you want to spar later?”

“Sure, but you might lose.”

“We’ll see.”

Yi Yeonghan turned on the huge flat-screen TV as Chae Nayun and Shin Jonghak planned a spar.

— Emergency report.

“Hm?”

“What’s up?”

“There’s an emergency.”

The sudden news grabbed their attention.

— A mysterious tower has appeared in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean. This tower of unprecedented size seems to have arisen from the depths of the ocean. Nearby sea monsters have begun to act more violently...

* * *

Yun Seung-Ah quickly turned on the TV after hearing about the emergency report.

— A mysterious tower has appeared in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean...

A newly discovered tower appeared on TV.

“What the hell?”

Yun Seung-Ah almost fainted from shock. Just 10 minutes ago, Violet Banquet had no reports about a new tower. This meant the event had been completely unexpected.

— There is currently nothing known about this tower. It seems to have arisen from the deep sea earthquake that occurred 8 minutes ago.

“...”

Yun Seung-Ah stared at the tower in a daze. She could only think about one thing. This was the perfect opportunity for Creator's Sacred Grace to reclaim their rank 1 spot.

[Chameleon Troupe's Hideout] [Comfortable] — A Comfortable Space: You will become rejuvenated the more you stay in this area. Staying here for more than 8 hours will cleanse your mind. Staying here for more than 24 hours will make you happy. Staying here for more than 96 hours will increase all stats up to 0.5 points. — What Great Air: The area's high mana density keeps the air fresh. Staying here for more than 8 hours will cure light illnesses.

The Chameleon Troupe's hideout transformed from hell to heaven. Four members of the troupe, Setryn, Jain, Boss, and Cheok Jungyeong, now lived here as well. They sat on the couch I made and watched TV.

— There is currently nothing known about this tower. It seems to have arisen from the deep sea earthquake that occurred 8 minutes ago. The Hero Association has already deployed investigators, but it is currently impossible to enter the tower because of how deep it reaches.

The Tower of Wish's enormous size seemed to contain all of humanity's hopes and fears.

“Oh? What's that?” Setryn asked as she received a back massage from the goblins.

“Newbie, is that the entrance ticket you mentioned?”

Jain turned to me with wide eyes. As expected, she had sharp senses.

“Yep.”

I nodded. Currently, I had obtained 1 entrance ticket into the Tower of Wish. It was an orange tier ticket.

“Let me see.”

Jain took the ticket.

“What is it? Let me take a look too.”

Boss woke up from her nap and glanced at it. Jain read the words written on the back.

“You may enter a designated place on the scheduled date with this ticket. The scheduled date is...”

July 1. All entrance tickets will disappear after July 1 and new tickets will be issued. The next date will be September 1. Note: Participants will undergo small changes to even the playing field.

“Oh? This sounds fun. Little apprentice, are you going to use this?”

“No.”

Entrance tickets had different tiers. Orange was above average, but I didn’t want it.

“Why not?”

“This color isn’t the one I want.”

“Color?”

“Yep.”

Entrance tickets had the following tiers.

White, which had no benefits and were even rarer than red tickets.

Green, which allowed its owner to choose the tower tutorial’s difficulty.

Yellow, which included the green ticket's benefits in addition to a tutorial-only food supply.

Orange, which included the yellow ticket's benefits in addition to a basic weapon.

Red, which included the orange ticket's benefits in addition to entering together with one other companion. Of course, they could enter alone if they wished.

"I'm looking for a black ticket."

Without the black ticket, I had no reason to enter the tower early.

"Black?" Boss asked.

"Yes, black."

The black ticket worked differently from the other tickets. Black ticket owners didn't receive benefits like the previous tiers. They could only choose the highest difficulty tutorial. In this sense, they were at a disadvantage. However, the black ticket had a benefit that far outweighed its disadvantages.

The concept of skills didn't exist in this world. However, it existed in the Tower of Wish. If used properly, you could win against someone you would normally never beat and achieve impossible goals. That was why it was called the Tower of Wish. This tower gave those abandoned by heaven a chance to shine.

The black ticket could be considered a VVIP ticket. I would obtain a bonus skill at no cost with a black ticket.

"Black ticket?"

"Yep."

"Do colors matter? How do you even know in the first place?"

“I have a good source of information. That said, I don’t know too much either.”

The distribution of tickets had already begun. They could appear anywhere: sandboxes where children played in, monster corpses killed by hunters, treasure chests found in dungeons. On the scheduled date, these tickets would become portals linked to the Tower of Wish.

“Even if you have a good source of information, it’s only been... no, never mind, I won’t nitpick.”

“Thank you.”

“It’s my policy not to nag.”

“I see... so, did we hear anything from Pandemonium?”

Many Pandemonium organizations now feared the Chameleon Troupe because of all the terror incidents. I used this to my advantage and openly declared that I would reconsider attacking them if they offered up any entrance tickets.

“Nothing so far.”

The moment Jain shook her head... Woong— Her smartwatch suddenly rang. Jain looked down without a change in expression.

“Hm?”

I could tell my luck had fully activated.

“I just received a message that these guys found a ticket...”

Jiing— Jain projected the picture of an entrance ticket that someone sent.

“Haha.”

A smile emerged on my face. The hologram of the black ticket looked as beautiful as I had imagined.

Entrance Ticket (2)

Pandemonium's 30th ranked organization, Hounds of the Demon Realm. Its executive, Kim Goohwan, walked in stifling nervousness. He didn't know where he was and only focused on following the puppet.

After about 30 minutes... Clunk. The puppet stopped and pointed into a desolate alleyway. Kim Goohwan nodded and took a deep breath. He entered the alleyway after the puppet disappeared and found a portal.

"Gulp."

They waited for him beyond this portal. The ones who shook Pandemonium. His stomach churned and he began to regret coming forward. However, Kim Goohwan clenched his fists and courageously stepped into the portal.

He could feel himself traveling through space.

Chwaaa... Was it the sound of leaves rustling? Or was it the sound of waves crashing? He opened his eyes in an unknown place.

"You're here?"

In a completely dark space, an excited voice rang out from a dilapidated staircase. Kim Goohwan looked up and saw an Eastern woman with white hair. The mysterious woman greeted him.

"Hi."

"Y-Yes, it's an honor to meet you. My name is Kim Goohwan."

He tried to maintain his composure. However, he sweated profusely and his breathing became rough.

“Where’s the item?”

“H-Here.”

He felt dizzy as though he would faint at any moment. Thankfully, he practiced what to say and do over a hundred times. Kim Goohwan reached into his pocket and took out a ticket. He maintained respect without showing any weakness or submissiveness.

“No.”

“Pardon?”

However, the woman didn’t take the ticket.

“I won’t be taking it. Someone else wants it.”

Kim Goohwan didn’t expect this situation, but quickly adapted.

“Yes, understood.” He backed off and waited.

“Oh, there he is.”

Tap, tap. Footsteps echoed as Kim Goohwan turned. At first, he thought a shadow was walking towards him, but soon realized it was a man dressed entirely in black. Kim Goohwan calmly stared at him. Unlike the woman, he didn’t give off any imposing aura or pressure. However...

“I heard you guys call him Lotus.”

The woman’s next sentence caused him to freeze. Kim Goohwan stared at the man and couldn’t breathe as if he was being choked. A ghastly aura seemed to emanate from the man. Of course, Kim Goohwan had only imagined it.

Black Lotus. The man who destroyed several towers and hideouts with a single attack. He even assassinated an executive of Blood Poison, Pandemonium's rank 10 organization.

This man currently stood only a foot away. Kim Goohwan felt a chill throughout his body. He wanted to introduce himself, but his mouth refused to move. The man wore a black mask and hood, but his eyes seemed to pierce through everything.

"What's wrong? He's waiting."

"Ah, y-yes, here. Here you go."

Kim Goohwan snapped out of his daze and presented the item. The man stared at the ticket before taking it. Kim Goohwan gulped and waited to see what would happen next. Suddenly, the man raised his hand.

Was he unhappy about something? Kim Goohwan couldn't bring himself to close his eyes. He simply stood in terror, waiting for the man to behead him... Tak. However, the man simply placed his hand on Kim Goohwan's shoulder. Tak, tak. And lightly hit him a couple of times as though to compliment him. Kim Goohwan briefly forgot who he was, where he was, and what he was doing. After barely holding onto his consciousness for a long time... Thud. Kim Goohwan fainted and fell to the ground.

"What, what happened?"

The person most confused by this was the man who praised Kim Goohwan, Kim Hajin.

* * *

After the exchange, I returned to the Chameleon Troupe's hideout.

"Is that what you wanted?" Jain canceled her disguise and asked.

"Yes, but..."

I thought about the man who fainted from a single praise. Jain seemed to understand and playfully smiled.

“You can add that to your resume.”

“...”

Honestly, my notoriety in Pandemonium felt too extreme. People began to fear me after I killed Blood Poison’s executive, but that djinn wasn’t physically strong at all. He seemed decent with magic, but only became an executive because of his craftiness.

“Oh, by the way, can I enter the tower if I have a ticket too?” Jain sounded interested.

“Yep. You can use the orange ticket.”

It didn’t hurt to have extra tickets since they could be used in several ways. The most obvious was to sell them. You could also give them to someone who would become an ally inside the tower. The scarce amount of tickets made them quite valuable.

Only 200 whites, 1000 greens, 800 yellows, 500 oranges, 300 reds, and 5 blacks existed. The total number who could enter was at most 3105 people every 2 months (each red ticket counted as 2 people). Considering the size of the tower, 3105 felt quite small.

“Will we see each other once we’re inside?”

“Probably. I don’t know for sure.”

“This sounds fun.”

Jain seemed interested in going. I took off my hood and placed the black ticket in my pocket.

“Then I’m leaving.”

“You’re going home?”

“Yes.”

“Alright, I’ll take a nap then.”

Jain returned to her room as I went back to Seoul through Khalifa’s portal. However, I didn’t go home right away. Instead, I headed to an underground facility located in the Seocho District. I had created this huge, 650 square meter space with high rank mana density as a training room for Evandel. It was originally an underground bunker that I had purchased from some rich guy.

“Let’s see... ah, there she is.”

Evandel looked so small in the huge space.

“Hiyaap, hiyaap!”

She wore a magician’s hat and held a wand while performing a rhythmical dance routine. A small army of ghosts followed her. A horse, a tiger, a crocodile... wait, is that a unicorn? And that’s... a velociraptor!

“Yep, that’s talent alright.”

I planned on bringing her home, but she made a new friend every time I visited. Perhaps this was why children should be exposed to movies and fairytales.

“Wave of Honor!”

Evandel worked hard in her own right. She had added names to her moves ever since she started watching PreCure.

“Spinning Swirl!”

“...”

“Shooooot—!”

I wanted to ask exactly what she watched.

“Evandel?”

I called her as I approached. She stopped training and turned towards me. Then she smiled and hopped over.

“Hajin!”

“Did you have fun?”

“Un!”

“Then you must be tired.”

“I’m fine.”

“Really?”

“Un!”

Evandel smiled brightly and nodded. She liked training more than I expected, but I didn’t have too much time. Then I recalled the wolf sleeping in my chest.

“You can play with Fenrir for 10 more minutes. We’ll leave afterwards.”

I summoned Fenrir.

“Grrrr—”

Fenrir ran out excitedly and licked Evandel.

“My wolf!”

As expected of Evandel’s first servant, Fenrir grew a lot over the past 3 years.

[Ghost Wolf] [Servant] [High-intermediate rank] — The first servant created by Evandel the witch.

▷Basic Stats [Strength 9.950] [Bite 10.850] [Stamina 6.535] [Speed 11.550] [Perception 11.605] [Vitality 6.750] [Magic power 7.850]

His incredible stats didn't lose to most low-intermediate and intermediate rank heroes.

"Ebebebe, ebebebe."

"Krrrr, rrrrr."

Fenrir acted like a gentle puppy in front of Evandel. I bitterly laughed while watching them play. I wouldn't be able to see Evandel for at least a month and a half once I entered the Tower of Wish. However, I should be able to come back for 2-3 days after the tutorial.

"Evandel."

I called her in a slightly more serious tone.

"Hnn?"

"I need to tell you something."

I already asked Haeyeon's parents if they could take care of her for 1-2 months and they happily agreed.

"I'm going to be away for a month starting in July."

"..."

Evandel froze.

"It's nothing dangerous and I'll be back soon."

"..."

She remained quiet. I worried if she would cry for the first time in 4 years. After a long period of silence, Evandel asked instead of crying.

“A month? 30 days?”

“Yeah.”

“I can’t go?”

I shook my head.

“...”

Evandel bit her lips. Her eyes watered and her lips trembled, but she still didn’t cry.

“I’ll come back soon. You can think of it as a month-long vacation and play with Hayang and Haeyeon or sleep in and watch TV late at night.”

I consoled her and even picked her up to give her a peck on the cheek. Or at least I tried.

“No beard!”

“...”

Evandel rejected me and turned away with a pout. She refused to look at me.

“I’ll shave tomorrow, no, today.”

“...”

Evandel looked back with watery eyes. I could only smile.

2029, middle of May.

The biggest tower in history became known as the Tower of Wish and information about entrance tickets quickly spread. Many ordinary people commented online that they had picked up a ticket.

The association wanted to establish a system to control the tickets ordinary people found, but it was too late. Everyone soon found out about the tickets' values and began to sell them online.

“Hmm.”

Yoo Yeonha stared at a computer monitor inside Essence of the Strait's team leader office. Entrance ticket. She wasn't sure how it worked, but she knew she had to obtain as many as possible.

“Why do something so risky?”

She muttered in frustration. Many people who posted online about tickets had gone missing. Most likely, djinns had attacked them.

“Having 13 might be enough...”

She had already purchased 13 entrance tickets thanks to the Falling Blossom guild. Now she wanted information about the tower to avoid losing any precious guild members in an unknown tower.

—Tok, tok.

Someone knocked on the door.

“Who is it?”

— Team Leader Yoo Yeonha, a package arrived.

“Come in.”

A guild employee entered with a mysterious piece of furniture.

“What’s this?”

“Um, a chair.”

Indeed, it looked like a chair with a strange futuristic design. First, it had two legs instead of four and the back looked like a tidal wave.

“Who sent this?”

“Kim Hajin? Oh right, it’s my birthday present.”

“Ah, yes. That’s what it says here.”

A week ago, Yoo Yeonha received a text from Kim Hajin that he would send her a birthday present.

“He sent a chair as a birthday present?”

A bit weird, not that I have any problems with it.

“Thank you. You can go back.”

“Yes.”

Yoo Yeonha tried sitting in it.

“It’s not like I’m lacking chairs in my...”

She paused in the middle of talking. No, she couldn’t speak. She felt a strange sensation and leaned against the chair. An indescribable comfort wrapped around her as if the chair hugged her.

Kwang, Kwang!

“Hey!”

Someone suddenly kicked open the door.

“Hey, Yoo Yeonha!”

Chae Nayun startled her and she shot up.

“A-Ah, geez. I’m a team leader, you know!” Yoo Yeonha shouted at Chae Nayun who didn’t give her any face as a team leader.

“Oh, sorry. I was just in a hurry.” Chae Nayun smiled and scratched her head.

“Geez... huu. So, what’s up?”

“Send me there!”

“Where?”

“The tower! The Tower of Wish. I heard you have tickets. The guild can keep whatever I bring back, so just let me go.”

“Oh, it’s about that.” Yoo Yeonha knew she would want to go.

“Let’s talk about it.”

“Oh, what’s up with this chair? It looks weird.”

Chae Nayun sat on the chair Yoo Yeonha just received as a birthday present. Yoo Yeonha could only blink a few times and stare at her.

“It looks... weird... but, wow... this feels... amazing...”

She felt an unknown sense of anxiety watching Chae Nayun feel comfortable and happy.

“Hey, get up. That’s mine.”

“Eh? It’s not for guests?”

“N-No. It’s a super precious chair I got for my birthday.”

“Oh.”

“Can’t you tell just by looking at it? Now, get up.”

“Alright, alright.”

As soon as Chae Nayun stood up, Yoo Yeonha exchanged the chair she had been using for the one Kim Hajin made. She didn’t want to put it off since Chae Nayun might ask for it.

2029, early June. Guilds like Essence of the Strait, Desolate Moon, Frost Sanctuary, and Creator’s Sacred Grace managed to obtain entrance tickets and met for discussions. Meanwhile, the English Royal Court guild also held its own meeting to discuss the newly discovered tower.

“We have a total of 7 tickets.”

The English Royal Court guild had luckily obtained 10 tickets: 8 greens, 1 orange, and 1 red. However, they sold their only orange and red along with 1 green to Jeronimo Mercenary, leaving them with only 7 green tickets left.

They met today to decide who would use the entrance tickets.

No one actively came forward since everyone secretly feared what might be inside such a giant tower. The entrance ticket stated, Participants may freely exit after the tutorial, but no one knew anything about this tutorial.

“I’ll go.”

Someone volunteered and everyone in the room immediately stood up.

“N-No!”

“If something happens to vice leader...”

“The guild master won’t agree.”

However, Rachel had made her decision as the vice leader.

“No, I’m going. And you don’t need to worry...”

She slightly hesitated before continuing, “Um, Jeronimo’s Fenrir will be entering as well.”

“Ah.”

“In that case, I’m sure it’s fine.”

The atmosphere instantly changed since everyone loved Fenrir in England. No one knew, but Cheok Jungyeong’s achievements had all been credited to Fenrir.

“Ah, could it be? Did Fenrir say he would protect you!?”

“Pardon?”

“I’m curious too. Did he say he’d protect you?”

The meeting suddenly transformed into a press conference.

“I can see that you’re flustered.”

“F-Flustered? N-No! Everyone be quiet!”

“Now you’re angry.”

“No, I’m not! We need to proceed with the meeting...”

The young, 21 year old vice leader served as an easy target for the more experienced members in the room. Many of them knew Rachel since she was young and the English Royal Court guild felt like a family.

July 1, 2029. The scheduled date finally arrived. Currently, I waited for the portal to open in the Chameleon Troupe hideout.

“Yaawn, I’m so bored. Newbie, when is the portal opening?” Cheok Jungyeong asked.

“Just wait a bit.”

Other than me, Jain, Cheok Jungyeong, and Boss also had tickets. Other members showed interest, but were either too busy or didn’t mind waiting for the second round.

“Ah, I’m itching with excitement. Jain, you’re following as my companion, right?”

“...You’re my companion, idiot.”

Jain glared at Cheok Jungyeong uncomfortably. She had obtained a red ticket, but Cheok Jungyeong kept annoying her until she agreed to let him follow her.

“Everyone be quiet and wait.” Boss spoke. At that moment...

Ssssss—

Our entrance tickets glowed and we threw them on the ground. Immediately, the tickets sucked in the nearby magic power and formed 3 pillars of light. They all had different colors: orange, red, and black.

“So we just walk in?” Cheok Jungyeong asked as he smacked his lips.

“Yes.”

“Alright, I’ll see you inside, newbie.”

“Ah, before you go, you should choose the lowest difficulty for the tutorial. We want to meet up as soon as possible.”

“I don’t mind, but I doubt this idiot will do that.”

Jain smiled wryly while Cheok Jungyeong agreed.

“Obviously, I’m going for the highest difficulty.”

“Then Boss, at least you should—” I turned to Boss.

“Hm?”

Recently, Boss’ trust in me had greatly increased.

“Oh, o-okay, then I will go with the, um, lowest difficulty.”

By the looks of it, she planned on doing whatever she wanted.

“Alright, I’m going in.” Without hesitation, I walked into the black portal. Immediately...

“Uwoah!”

The world flipped upside down and I landed on my back.

“Uuu... what the heck.”

The cold ground, a chilly wind, an unusual sensation. Even my voice sounded like static from a broken television. I had described it the same way in my novel, but it still felt strange experiencing it firsthand. I quickly got up and looked around. It seemed to be pitch black.

“I wonder when it’s going to start.”

Blue words popped up in front of me after about 5 minutes.

[Welcome to the tower.]

The 3D text looked more realistic than in VR games.

[Please choose a nickname before you start.]

The tower seemed to have the same setting as the one I created.

“Nickname, huh...”

I already knew the nicknames of everyone. Kim Suho would be MasterHolysword, Shin Jonghak would be YoungFly, Jin Sahyuk would be StrongestWill, and Chae Nayun would be ImGosu. After thinking for a moment...

“I guess I’ll go with this.”

[Extra7]

I decided on my nickname.

[Welcome Extra7.] [Your nickname will serve as your ID in the tower community.]

Chapter 156

Tutorial (1)

— Members of Essence of the Strait, Desolate Moon, Frost Sanctuary, and other top guilds have entered the Tower of Wish. The Hero Association is worried the tower campaign will become a free-for-all, but they acknowledged that what happens is out of their control.

“...”

Jin Sahyuk stared at the TV with sunken eyes inside Pandemonium Arena’s demon rank waiting room.

— Entrance tickets will transform into portals on the specified dates. This mechanism, which cannot be explained, has shocked researchers all over the world.

On TV, heroes walked into the portals that spawned from the entrance tickets. Seeing this, Jin Sahyuk’s eyes filled with regret and rage.

“That son of a bitch...”

She gritted her teeth and spat out resentment. She should’ve already been inside the Tower of Wish instead of sitting in this empty room and watching TV.

“I’ll kill him. I’ll tear his limbs apart and grind them into bits!”

Her anger drove her insane. She had obtained a ticket (given to her by a fan) and leisurely waited for July. She even bragged about it to Bell and others who couldn’t find any. She thought she would be the one having fun while they sat at home, bored.

Yesterday, she noticed her entrance ticket had disappeared while excitedly packing her stuff. She ransacked the room, but couldn’t find it anywhere. After about 6 hours, she suddenly thought of Bell and noticed she hadn't heard from that son of a bitch in a while. As she expected, he didn't pick up when she called with trembling hands. Clearly, he had run off with her ticket.

— The public is now focused on the first wave of challengers...

“Just wait 2 months, you motherfucker...”

Jin Sahyuk mumbled in blood-boiling rage.

Tower of Wish, tutorial waiting room.

[Please put on the tutorial uniform after taking off all your clothes and equipment.]

“Got it.”

I followed the instructions and changed into the tutorial uniform. The leather armor looked rather shabby, but felt tightly woven.

“Done.”

[Confirmed. Please place all your belongings inside the storage. Items from outside cannot be taken into the tower.]

A black storage box appeared in front of me. I placed everything inside. Of course, I hid my smartwatch, the Desert Eagle, and aether inside stigma.

“Done.”

[Please place all your belongings inside the storage. Items from outside cannot be taken into the tower.]

“I did.”

[Please place all your belongings inside the storage. Items from outside cannot be taken into the tower.]

“...”

It seemed I couldn't avoid the eyes of that existence. I took out the items inside stigma and placed them in the storage.

“Will they be given back?”

[The black entrance ticket has been confirmed. You may retrieve some of them after the tutorial.]

“That's good.”

The Desert Eagle was one thing, but I definitely needed aether.

[Player scanning will now commence.]

A handprint scanner appeared in front of me and I placed my hand on top.

[Scanning in progress... 33%]

I felt a strange sensation of magic power running through my body.

“Auu.”

[66%... 99%... completed.] [Player Kim Hajin has been confirmed.]

[Kim Hajin]

▷Variable Stats... ▷Invariable Stats... ▷Traits [Master Sharpshooter]
[Intermediate rank] [Spirit attribute] [Evolving] [Grade 4 – Proficiency

[Spirit attribute] [3 stage consolidation] [Dexterity] [Low-intermediate rank] [Null attribute] [Evolving] [Grade 5 – Proficiency EXP: 55%]
[Magic Dysfunction Physique] [Medicinal Memory Physique]

[During the tutorial, your variable stats will decrease by 65%.] [5 traits have been detected.] [All traits have been sealed inside the tower. As a player, you may choose 1 trait to use.] [Please choose.]

“Huu.”

I finally experienced the balance patch. In this tower, traits included both gifts and physiques. I could only choose 1 of my 5 traits (excluding arts, which were considered acquired abilities). However, I didn't find this too disadvantageous. The same restrictions also applied to every other challenger and I knew a secret no one else did.

“I'll go with Master Sharpshooter.”

This secret would allow me to acquire a second trait later. I didn't need to think about what to select since Master Sharpshooter was practically my identity.

[Will you choose the trait, Master Sharpshooter?]

“Yes.”

[Master Sharpshooter has decreased to grade 7 for the sake of balance.]

“Understood.”

I didn't feel happy about it, but I should treat the system politely.

[The black entrance ticket has been confirmed.] [You have been assigned the highest difficulty.] [In exchange, you will receive a bonus skill.]

“Thank you very much.”

This bonus was practically a cheat code. The number of skills you could acquire from the tower was limited to 1 unique skill, 3 normal skills, 2 special skills, and 1 ultimate skill. Players could only learn 7 skills in total. An extra skill would give a huge advantage.

[You may choose one bonus skill from this catalog.]

“Thank you.”

Players who performed well could return to the outside world with half the skills they acquired. However, I had a grander goal to keep all 8 skills. Recently, my stats had stopped rising and I planned to use this tower to forcefully grow.

▷Vitality Recovery: Instantly recover 30% of your lost vitality. One charge is restored every 24 hours. Can be used twice a day. ▷Rage Gauge: Rage builds up as you strike and destroy. This rage...

I scrolled through the list with nothing catching my eye. Then I found one.

▷Blink: Teleport to a point within a 15 meter radius. One charge is restored every 8 hours. Can be used 3 times a day.

Kim Suho would choose this skill in 2 months when he entered the Tower of Wish with a black ticket. It seemed like an excellent skill, but didn't suit me.

“Pass.”

After scrolling some more...

▷Random Dice: Obtain 1 dice every 9 hours. Random dice will transform into raw material or a completed item once rolled. The chance of obtaining a completed item is much lower. You may select a category as you roll the dice.

“This is it. Um, I'll take this.”

A bonus skill that utilized my luck and synergized with Dexterity. I chose it without hesitation.

[Random Dice has been chosen as a bonus skill.] [You may view your status by saying, status window.] [The tutorial will begin in 1 minute.] [You will enter the highest difficulty.]

One minute later. I teleported to an unknown place after a burst of light and found myself in an open field dyed in sunset. Dirt, rocks, leaves, and weeds filled the area.

[This tutorial will allow you to estimate your basic battle prowess.]

Like most tutorials, you simply had to defeat monsters.

“Damn.”

However, these goblins didn’t seem like ordinary ones.

“How am I supposed to kill them without a weapon?”

— Kerrek.

— Krrrrk.

The goblin shaman sat on the goblin warrior’s shoulder.

“Sigh.”

I felt confident before coming in, but my future seemed bleak now that I couldn’t use my Desert Eagle.

[You have spotted a goblin warrior and a goblin shaman.] [Their information has been recorded in the player encyclopedia.]

The player encyclopedia served as one of the Tower of Wish’s support systems and stored all information discovered or experienced by players.

“Open player encyclopedia.”

Information could be vital in situations like these. I decided to read up on the 2 goblins.

*Monster Encyclopedia [Goblin Warrior] [Intermediate rank Grade 7]
[Goblin Shaman] [Intermediate rank Grade 8]*

“That’s it?”

Well, it’s true the encyclopedia only held cursory information. At least I found out they were weaker than the ones I fought in Incheon.

“Hmm...”

For now, I should recall how Kim Suho got through this situation in the original story.

Right, he simply slaughtered them with the metal attribute of a Sword Saint. Being able to bring one gift was enough for Kim Suho.

Let’s think again since I’m different from Kim Suho.

— Krrk.

Thankfully, the goblins spoke among themselves and hadn’t noticed me yet.

“...”

In that case, I should probably search for the stage’s hidden secret first. I narrowed my eyes and used stigma’s magic power.

[Warning! The activation of an unnatural power has been detected. This power may not be used in the tutorial!] [Ignoring this warning may result in grave consequences!]

Seems like I would have to search for it directly.

I lowered my body and silently sneaked around. Sneaking became natural thanks to my mercenary work over the past 3 years. I reached the closest boulder and flipped it over. Thud. It had nothing under it and only felt like bait. I began to walk again. Crack.

“Huup.”

I accidentally stepped on a branch and anxiously turned around.

— Krrrk.

— Guoooo.

Thankfully, they seemed busy arguing about something.

“Whew.”

I sighed in relief and continued onward. Searching half the length of a soccer field took about 1-2 hours because of how carefully I moved.

“...!”

Then I found a leaf on the ground. Of course, the ground had other leaves, but this one glowed and practically shouted special. A window popped up as soon as I picked it up.

[Yggdrasil leaf]

I found it! I held my breath to prevent my excitement from leaking.

[The Yggdrasil leaf has blessed you with calmness and adventurous courage.] [Hidden Secret — You may select 1 of the following 3 blessings.]

— Acquire an additional trait. — Restore 10% of lost stats. — Cradle of Wisdom.

I had to choose the first option. The second option was only for stat monsters like Boss and Kim Suho. The Cradle of Wisdom was useless. I created the Tower of Wish in detail, so I knew exactly what to pick.

— You may acquire an additional trait.

I hesitated to choose between my Medicinal Memory Physique or Dexterity. The tower should have all sorts of precious medicine I'd never seen before. My future would become much easier if Medicinal Memory Physique remembered just one of them.

“Medicinal... no.”

However, choosing the Medicinal Memory Physique involved too much risk. I didn't know how much medicine I would have to consume to remember it.

“Dexterity, I'll go with Dexterity.”

With Dexterity, I could make items without having to buy them. Since I knew another way to acquire an additional trait (it would be a lot more difficult), going with Dexterity seemed to be the right choice.

[Yggdrasil's blessing has unsealed your trait, Dexterity.]

“Whew.”

Now, I could finally fight. I turned to the goblin warrior and shaman. Then I suddenly received a system message.

[You may store the Yggdrasil leaf inside your inventory.]

I almost forgot.

“Ah, thank you. Inventory!”

Players could access the highest quality extradimensional space inside the tower. I stored the Yggdrasil leaf inside and took out the random dice.

“Huuu.”

I held the dice, which had a question mark on each side. An unbelievable nervousness filled me. I needed these dice to turn into a weapon or I wouldn't be able to defeat these goblins.

“Blade. Give me something with a blade, please.”

I rolled the dice as I prayed. Drrr— The dice transformed into a primitive dagger.

“YES!”

I thought of my next move while holding the precious dagger. This dagger seemed too dull to kill the goblin warrior. However, it should be possible to kill the goblin shaman as long as I struck it in the head.

“Wait a minute.”

I suddenly thought of a different plan. A method to kill both of them at the same time.

“...”

I began to dig a hole with the dagger. It had to be deep enough to trap the 2.5 meter goblin warrior. I quietly dug the trap like a mole.

[Warning! You have 2 hours remaining.]

I was covered in sweat after digging for dozens of minutes. The goblin shaman and warrior had separated.

“Done.”

I finished digging a huge hole large enough for the goblin warrior to have no way out. I covered it with leaves and branches before getting up with my dagger.

— Kieek!

Immediately, I caught their attention. Then I threw my dagger at the shaman, instantly piercing its head and killing it.

— Kieek...

The shaman staggered for a moment before collapsing. Its defense couldn't even compare to a low rank monster.

—...

Now I only had to deal with the goblin warrior. It only blankly stared at the shaman's corpse.

“You’re not gonna move?”

— Kuooo!

Suddenly, it roared and angrily charged. I simply stood without moving. The clever shaman would’ve noticed something, but the warrior only threw a fit.

— Kerek?

Soon, the goblin warrior stepped on the trap and fell into the hole.

— Guooo!

I quickly ran to retrieve my dagger as it struggled inside the hole. Then I stabbed down at it stuck in the hole. Die, please just die. An alert finally popped up after about 2 hours.

[You have cleared the first stage, Basic Battle Prowess Assessment.] [You will be transferred to your private waiting room.] [After 12 hours of rest, you will be sent to the second stage, Way of Survival.]

“Argh, I’m exhausted.”

[Rest well.]

“Thank you.”

I told myself to treat the system politely no matter the difficulties. Only I knew about this ironclad rule in the Tower of Wish. Honestly, I had designed it with Kim Suho’s righteous personality in mind. After all, who else other than Kim Suho would talk to a system so politely?

* * *

Every player in the Tower of Wish possessed a private waiting room.

[Player Extra7’s waiting room]

Waiting rooms could be modified or decorated however their owner wished. Once the tutorial ended, players could invite others to their waiting room as well. Using points, they could expand the size of their room and also purchase furniture.

“It’s so empty.”

Of course, it only contained a single wooden board for now. I didn’t think the waiting room mattered all that much in the past, but it felt quite important now. Players could return to their waiting room once every 4 days to escape enemies or even death.

“Let’s sleep for now.”

I felt too tired to properly think and decided to rest until I gained another random dice.

“Huuu.”

I lay on the hard wooden board. Just like that, 7 hours went by.

“Argh, my back.”

My body felt sore after sleeping on such a hard surface. I hadn’t felt such a sensation for a long time due to my high stats. I frowned and checked my inventory.

[Random Dice] [Yggdrasil leaf]

“Haa.”

I took out the dice and immediately rolled it. Ore, ore, give me an ore so I can make a fishing rod and a weapon.

Plop!

The dice stopped and transformed into an ore.

“Oh?”

I became speechless at the translucent, red ore.

“This is...”

[Red Crystal] A crystal formed from compressed fire magic. A crystal specialized for crafting equipment.

This low-intermediate to intermediate rank crystal sold for a hefty price in the real world and was worth even more in a situation like this.

“Ooh...”

Raising my luck to 9.1 was one of the best things I ever did after being sent to this world.

“Ah, I should get to work now.”

Private waiting rooms didn’t count as part of the tutorial, so I should be able to use stigma’s magic power to craft items.

“Huhu.”

Even the tower’s system couldn’t have known I would craft items in the waiting room.

[An administrator has detected the activation of unnatural power.]

Unfortunately, the administrators’ eyes were better than I expected. One of them, most likely the mythical divinity in charge of the third floor that could see everything, Heimdall.

“I’ll just use a little bit.”

I tried to bargain. After all, the waiting room wasn’t the tutorial.

“Hello?”

The system didn’t reply, but I didn’t receive any more messages to stop.

I used a bit of stigma's magic power to form crafting tools. Ssk, ssk.
Then I began to handle the red crystal like eggshells.

Chapter 157

Tutorial (2)

I worked on crafting equipment for the next tutorial and separated the red crystal into 3 equal parts using stigma's magic power. I would use the sharp part for a spear, the wide part for an axe, and the remainder for a fishing line.

The spear, axe, and fishing rod seemed quite simple. I just had to take apart the waiting room's wooden board, trim it, and fix the crystal pieces onto the tips. I wasn't sure what to do about the fishing line, but stigma's magic power had solved it for me. The crystal transformed into a squishy, semisolid substance when I infused it with stigma. After some tinkering, the substance became a long, sturdy fishing line.

"Hmm."

I looked over the items. They didn't look too aesthetically pleasing since Dexterity's proficiency had decreased and I didn't have aether. Still, they should be better than most mass-produced goods and should serve me well enough for the tutorial. A system window suddenly popped up.

[You have obtained the technique, Lv.1 Crafting.]

"Oh right."

The tower had a technique system as well.

[Crafting Lv.1] You can easily craft Lv.0 items.

The Tower of Wish functioned like an RPG game. Performing certain actions awarded players with unrealistic bonuses. The crafting technique would allow me to instantly craft items, skipping intermediate steps. It also included a leveling system like most RPGs.

[The second tutorial will begin in 10 minutes.] [You may access the community.]

The system gave me another recommendation as I practiced swinging my spear and axe. The community was one of the tower's most important systems.

[Tower Community] [Public Forum] [Auction House] [Group Creation]... [Messenger] [Player Profile]

As expected, the community featured several functions. The auction house was self-explanatory and players could form parties with group creation. The player profile resembled a social media page with additional functions.

[Player Profile]

Players could create 2 profile pages, one with their nickname and one anonymously. Each player could fully decorate their profiles and turn it into a shop to sell items or buy and sell information.

I tried clicking on each function.

[Player Profile will be unlocked after the tutorial.] [Auction House will be unlocked after the tutorial.] [Messenger will be unlocked...]

As I thought, only the public forum was currently available.

[Public Forum]

[Am I the first poster?]

[Wow, this is interesting. Someone comment on this thread! I need to know if anyone else is alive.]

[Has anyone cleared the tutorial yet?]

Only 3 posts existed so far. It seemed everyone was busy trying to clear the tutorial. I created a post as well.

[Let's share information.]

The view count went up as soon as I posted and someone commented.

— Extra7? Why are you here? Wait, are you the Extra7 I know?

“How does this guy know me?”

I tilted my head and checked the commenter's nickname. It was... Nayunjajangman. The Nayun part made me a bit uncomfortable, but the familiar nickname surprised me.

“He's here too?”

[The second tutorial stage, Way of Survival, will now begin.] [Please get ready.]

I tried to comment, but another system alert popped up. I turned the community off and stood up with all my equipment.

“I'm ready.”

[You will now be transferred to the second tutorial stage.]

“Yes.”

A white light surrounded me after the system alert. I closed my eyes and felt the warmth. It felt strange like I was floating in the air. Tssss. Soon, I landed on a soft surface and opened my eyes.

“I'm here.”

Chwaaa... I could hear the calm waves and a boundless ocean spread across the horizon. I stood on a sandy beach with a dense forest of palm trees behind me. This place appeared to be a tiny uninhabited island.

[Tutorial Goal – Survive for 14 days.] [From the second tutorial, you will be ranked based on your performance and will be rewarded accordingly.]

I simply had to survive in this boundless area for 14 days. However, the performance-based reward would be worth the risks.

[Try viewing your status window.]

Another system alert popped up.

“Status window.”

[Nickname – Extra7] Vitality 43/100 — Magic Power 30/30 — Skill Count ^[1] Bonus Skill [Random Dice]

My vitality and magic power basically represented my HP and MP. My magic power probably wasn't 0 because I had lost my magic dysfunction physique. Why did the system want me to see this?

*[Vitality is affected not only by damage, but also hunger and fatigue.]
[When your vitality reaches 0, Player Extra7 will die. Players who die in the tutorial cannot revive.]*

I see, so it wanted to tell me to eat. It must've been worried about me, a kind, polite... cough.

“Thank you.”

I answered energetically and looked around. There didn't seem to be anything edible on land. I would have to forage from the ocean. I had already prepared a fishing rod and axe to fish and build a boat.

Growl—

I started to grow hungry and took out the fishing rod from my inventory. I should prioritize finding food since I could drink the coconuts from the palm trees.

“Let me think...”

I stared at the fishing rod in my hands. I had practiced fishing for this exact purpose before coming into the tower.

“Huup!”

I swung the rod in a big motion. Whish— The line drew an arc and felt more natural than I thought, probably because of Dexterity and Master Sharpshooter.

Plop!

The hook sank into the ocean and time passed in silence. I grew hungrier as the fishing rod remained still. I didn't use any bait, but the red crystal hook didn't need any. Sea monsters should smell the scent of magic power.

“Yaawn.”

I continued to wait and firmly believed in my luck. Finally, the water's surface showed a hint of change after about 30 minutes.

“Ah!”

The fishing line tensed up with something clearly biting it. Whatever it was, it felt incredibly powerful and bent the wooden rod.

“...”

I picked up my spear after repeatedly trying to reel it in. It felt like a waste of time as my vitality decreased. Killing it and reeling it in would be the same as reeling it in and killing it. I held the spear and calmly observed the fish underwater. Chweek! I threw with all my strength, which should still be above 2 even though it was 65% sealed. The fish stopped moving and I easily reeled it in.

[You have obtained the technique, Lv1. Fishing.] You have an increased chance of fish biting your hook. [You have spotted a glossy seafish. Its information has been recorded in the player encyclopedia.]

“A sea monster.”

Monster Encyclopedia [Glossy Seafish] [Low rank grade 7] — A sea monster that tastes like a mackerel.

I retrieved the spear from its back and started a campfire. I simply rubbed some wood together. Then I cooked the glossy seafish over it. Tssss. It dripped deliciously as it cooked.

Boss cleared the first stage with the hardest difficulty in the blink of an eye. Currently, she sat on a sandy beach in meditation.

“...”

She took several deep breaths and tried to move her shadow into the water. However, the shadows couldn't stretch far enough because of her 93% stat restriction.

“Huuu.”

She tried over a dozen times, but always failed. In the end, she gave up on fishing with magic power. Growl.

I'm hungry. I have to eat something. Should I have saved the orange ticket's emergency food?

She stood up and walked around to forage. Soon, she found a large boulder and hoped to find some crabs underneath.

Boss threw the boulder aside and found a startled hermit crab. She quickly grabbed it.

“...”

Now, she needed to cook it and opened her inventory. She already ate all the food that came with her ticket, but still had the burner and frying pan.

Tak, tak.

She turned on the burner and placed the hermit crab on the pan.

“...Ssp.”

Food. Food. Food. The sun began to set as she mumbled.

* * *

It had been 18 hours since the second tutorial. Koong, koong, koong. I struck down a tree with my axe. The tree didn't last long against the red crystal axe with a fire attribute. Kiiik— It fell in just 5 swings.

“That should be enough.”

This was my 30th tree. I used all of them to build a boat. The highest difficulty island had no food and the second tutorial onwards would have a performance-based ranking system. How far I adventured and how many sea monsters I hunted would all contribute to my ranking. Leaving the island was a must.

“Inventory.”

I had filled my inventory with useful materials like bones and sea monster skins. Then I took out an item the system labeled as, red fish's tough skin.

“Craft.”

It instantly transformed into a string.

[Red fish's tough skin has been used to make a twine.] [Dexterity has been applied to crafting.] [You have crafted a Lv.1 Tough Twine.]

Using crafting, I could skip intermediate steps like in a real game.

“Whew.”

I picked up my axe and went to the logs. Ssk, ssk. With Dexterity, I began to shave the logs to make a proper sailboat. I needed to make them as smooth as possible. Sssk, sssk. After about an hour of hard work...

[Your efforts have impressed the Yggdrasil leaf.]

I received another system alert.

[Try checking the Yggdrasil leaf.]

“Ah, hold on a bit.”

I immediately set everything down to open my inventory.

[Yggdrasil leaf] — Blessing of Adventure: Your body will grow lighter with this item in your inventory. (Slightly boosts your physical ability.) You may grant minor blessings to items. Blessings will grow stronger the more they relate to adventures.

The Yggdrasil leaf gained a new effect.

“Nice.”

The first effect only gave a slight boost, but it applied to all my physical abilities. The second effect with blessings just seemed good all-around.

“Thank you.”

I closed the inventory and continued working on the boat. Ssk, ssk. I began to cut the logs. Chwaak, chwaak. And tied them together with strings.

“Uuu!”

I finally finished after 3 hours of hard work and felt a bit lightheaded when I stood up to stretch.

“Next up is...”

I began to throw coconuts into my boat for something to drink. One, two, three, four, five... twenty-three. I filled almost half the boat with coconuts.

[Try granting the vehicle a minor blessing.]

“Oh right.”

I almost forgot. Being friendly to the system also benefitted me like this. The Yggdrasil leaf might’ve gained a new effect because I had been so polite. I took out the Yggdrasil leaf and waved it over my sailboat.

[Yggdrasil’s blessing envelopes the sailboat with magic power.] [You will now have a smoother adventure.]

“Status window.”

I wanted to check the sailboat’s stats.

[Lv1. Sturdy Sailboat with Lv.2 Yggdrasil’s blessing] — Lv.1 Sturdy Sailboat: Durability Lv.1, Speed Lv.1, Safety Lv.1 — Lv.2 Yggdrasil’s minor blessing has increased all effects of the Sturdy Sailboat by 1.

“Oh?”

Yggdrasil’s blessing raised an item’s levels? That wasn’t a minor blessing at all!

“Thank you very much.”

I won’t forget this gratitude. Until I conquer this tower, that is.

Now, I prepared to set sail and pushed the sailboat into the water. Then I hopped on with a paddle. A pleasant breeze blew as I paddled forward and the sailboat began to drift away.

My goal for the second tutorial was simple. I would adventure as far out as possible and kill as many sea monsters as I could. It might become dangerous, but that would only increase my ranking.

“Huh?”

I spotted another island after paddling for about 30 minutes. The silhouette of the person on the beach...

“Am I seeing this correctly?”

I narrowed my eyes and focused into the distance. My vision instantly expanded and the island came into view.

Chapter 158

Tutorial (3)

“Who is it?”

Someone was on the island. He didn’t look too familiar. I couldn’t recall his name, but I think he was a high-intermediate rank hero who often appeared on variety shows.

“Wait...”

Could it be that all players on the highest difficulty shared the same sea? I never thought about that when I created my setting.

— O-Oi! Oiii!

The man also spotted me and waved as I sailed past. I had no intentions of letting him on board, but I didn’t mind giving him some food.

“Must be a green ticket.”

The man didn’t have anything, not even the basic weapon and food supply. Honestly, choosing the hardest difficulty with a green ticket was suicide. The system should’ve warned him, but he probably didn’t listen.

— Here! Here! Uhaha! Over here!

The man jumped excitedly as I took out a glossy seafish from my inventory. Then a dark shadow appeared underneath the island. I didn’t have time to think at all.

Puaaaa—

The giant fish's mouth suddenly shot up from the water. It had 2 sharp fangs on each side of its jaws and promptly swallowed the entire island.

[You have spotted an island devourer.] Monster Encyclopedia [Island Devourer] [Tutorial-only Monster] — This monster hates those who only stay on one island. However, who it seeks depends solely on luck.

A system alert popped up.

“Whoa, whoa.”

I broke out into cold sweat. However, I didn't have time to sit still. The shadow that swallowed an entire island crept up on me. I quickly began to paddle away. However, it only grew closer. I couldn't do anything against it with a mere paddle, so I quickly opened my inventory.

[Inventory] [Random Dice x3]

I could keep a maximum of 5 random dice, so I saved them for emergencies since they could become anything I desired. I picked up the dice and thought hard.

Please become something that can save me from that thing. Something like an attachable engine to my boat...

Drrr—I rolled the dice while praying.

“What?”

However, it mercilessly betrayed me and became a strange mango. At first, I didn't even notice it had turned into a mango. It just looked like a yellowish-orange fruit, but as big as a watermelon.

[Lv.3 Big and Juicy Mango]

I would've thought it was some kind of exotic fruit if it wasn't for the status window.

“The hell is this?”

I checked the item description just in case.

[Lv.3 Big and Juicy Mango] — A big, juicy mango. A very precious fruit that can sometimes be used as medicine. Lv.2 Vitality Recovery, Lv.4 Satiability

A Lv.3 item! Most items in the tutorial were only Lv.0-Lv.2. This mango was certainly a good item, but it was useless in this situation. What would filling up my belly do when I was about to enter a belly myself?

—Drrk.

“Shit...”

The island devourer’s fin grazed my boat. I had a strong hunch it wanted to eat me. My heart violently thumped, but I had grown used to this by now. As a mercenary, I had lived through much more dangerous situations. I didn’t even have time to throw another dice and frantically racked my brain. Mango. A delicious, juicy mango. A lightbulb suddenly went off in my head.

“H-Hey! Eat this instead of me!”

I held the mango forward and wafted it back and forth. The shadow slowed down, at least that’s what it looked like.

“This is a precious food you can never taste in the tutorial.”

As I said, Lv.3 items couldn’t be found in the tutorial.

“So take it!”

I threw the mango as far away as I could. Whiiish— With Master Sharpshooter’s help, the mango drew a beautiful arc and landed 400-500 meters away.

Plop!

Water splashed on my face as the giant creature changed course and swam towards the mango.

“Whew.”

The giant shadow grew farther away. Thud. I fell on my butt without any energy left. I definitely never created such a creature in my tutorial.

“I knew this would happen.”

It didn’t surprise me. I often received comments about the original story like, Isn’t the highest difficulty too easy? I always gave the excuse, It’s not that the tutorial is easy, but Kim Suho’s gift is just broken.

“Haaa...”

I barely avoided death. The scene of an entire island being swallowed still lingered on my mind.

“Mango, mango, mango...”

I murmured the same word in a daze.

“Auu, I’m getting seasick.”

Six days had passed since then. Today, the waves became fiercer than usual. The past few days had been quite spectacular. I almost fell overboard from a sudden storm and an intermediate rank, grade 8 sea monster almost ate me. I barely managed to survive both using my red crystal weapons and the random dice.

[Lv.2 Sea Tiger’s Oil] — An oil that will drive away sea monsters. Lv.1 Low-intermediate rank or lower monster repellent, Lv.1 Shock absorbent, waterproof coating

[Lv.2 Magical Repair Ointment] — A mystical ointment that will work on items. Will restore the durability of items under Lv.1

These two items served me especially well on my journey.

“I want to be on land.”

I started to miss the land after being on a boat for 6 days.

[Your sailing technique has improved to Lv.2] — You can now sail across waters more easily. — Your sense of direction at sea has improved.

No, please just give me some land! I widened my eyes and peered into the distance. Then I caught sight of a small island.

“Nice.”

I paddled towards my new destination. Splloosh. The boat seemed faster than before perhaps because of my improved sailing technique.

I could finally see the island up close after about 20 minutes of paddling.

“Eh?”

I exclaimed in shock when I reached it and saw a familiar face.

“Boss!”

* * *

Yoo Yeonha chatted with Yoo Jinhyuk in Essence of the Strait’s team leader office.

[Why are you so curious about this?]

[I’m not curious. I just want to know the truth.]

Yoo Yeonha shared what she knew about the Kwang-Oh Incident. However, Yoo Jinhyuk still kept some matters secret, which Yoo Yeonha was now in the process of investigating. She assumed Kim Hajin was the survivor and wanted to know why Chae Joochul's assassin didn't kill him and who the assassin was.

[Honestly, I don't know.]

“He's lying again.”

Yoo Yeonha frowned.

[You're lying.]

[No, I'm serious.]

[You said you saw him being admitted to the orphanage.]

As she typed, Yoo Yeonha suddenly wondered. What would Kim Hajin look like as a baby? She found it difficult to imagine it with his face.

[Yeah, some kid left him there.]

[Kid?]

[Yeah, 5-7 years old or 8 at most. Black hair... er, actually maybe that kid wore a hijab or something.]

[Do you have dementia?]

[Heh, I'm getting old. Time travel isn't what it used to be.]

Having more information wasn't always better since inaccurate information introduced needless bias.

[Anyways, it was a young girl.]

[Okay, thank you. Ah, by the way, have you thought about my offer?]

[No.]

“Tsk.”

Yoo Yeonha wanted Yoo Jinhyuk to join her information guild, Falling Blossom. He lazed around most of the time in his office.

[Think about it. I'm already being watched by Chae Joochul. What would he think if he sees you with me?]

[I get it.]

[Good, then send me some assault rifles.]

[What do you need those for?]

[I decided to form a small militia. You know how to go about it without being discovered, right?]

[Yeah, no.]

[What? Oi, niece, you—]

Yoo Yeonha left the chat and leaned against her chair. Ssss— Her eyes automatically closed.

“It feels amazing.”

She could only describe the sensation as leaning on an angel's wings or sleeping peacefully in Noah's Ark while the world crumbled. Her new chair was the best gift she'd ever received since she spent 16 hours a day in her office.

“Hnnng...”

Yoo Yeonha thought about many things while relaxing in her chair. Her guild members in the Tower of Wish, the high-intermediate rank monsters, the dungeons her guild planned to conquer, a cup ramen... hamburger... ssp. She began to drool.

Boss seemed skinnier since the last time I saw her. I wanted to give her a big hug, but we were both too dirty from staying in the wild for several days.

Boss leisurely smiled as she spoke. However, she didn’t seem to be in good shape.

“Boss, did you eat?”

“I did.”

She nodded, but I grew suspicious.

“What’s your vitality right now?”

“Vitality?”

“Yes.”

She blankly looked at the air, probably at her status window.

“...90.”

“90?”

“Yes.”

Boss nodded.

“Are you sure it isn’t just 9?”

“Pft, as if.”

Her unnatural smirk confirmed it. Her vitality was definitely 9. In fact, it couldn't be anything but 9. Boss' stat restriction must be incredibly high. Kim Suho received an 80% stat restriction, so Boss should easily surpass 90%.

"It was hard at first, but I got used to it."

"You've been here the whole time?"

"No, I went back and forth to find food."

"Ah..."

Thankfully, the island devourer didn't target her.

"Then let's eat something first."

"Okay."

I took out a seafish from my inventory, but Boss left first.

"Follow me."

She turned around with a smile and walked into the forest.

"Boss? Where are you going?"

"I thought this might happen, so I kept some emergency food supply."

"Ah... okay."

I followed her for now. Boss walked into the middle of the forest and stopped in front of a giant palm tree marked with an X. Then she removed the leaves underneath and took out the tutorial-only food bag.

"Here."

Boss proudly opened the bag with all sorts of seafood inside: clams, sea pineapples, crabs, snails, and two small fish. It certainly seemed decent enough for a meal.

“Wow.”

I felt genuinely surprised since Boss’ main stat was magic power. This stat displayed exponential power as it grew, but only became more unless it surpassed a certain point. Boss must’ve caught all this food with only her physical abilities.

“There’s quite a lot.”

“Of course. I got to relive my old days of training thanks to this place.”

Boss proudly stuck out her chest. She clearly had good survival sense since she kept the food inside the tutorial bag instead of her inventory. The tutorial bag kept food fresh, unlike the inventory.

“You must be hungry since you paddled all the way here. Wait for a minute.”

Boss seemed to worry about me as she took out a pan and burner to cook. Tsss. I stared at her watching the food on the frying pan. After flipping it a couple of times, she turned the burner off and handed the pan to me.

“It’s done. You can eat now.”

“What about you, Boss?”

“Ehem, like I said, my vitality is 90.”

She meant she didn’t need it.

“...”

I suddenly felt something warm in my heart. Was this why she was the boss? Was this a boss’ duty? I couldn’t quite describe my emotions.

“Aren’t you going to...”

I took out a fish from my inventory.

“...eat?”

Boss’ eyes lost focus at the large glossy seafish. She glanced back and forth between the frying pan and my fish. She had only gathered tiny seafood together, but the glossy seafish couldn’t even fit in the frying pan.

Boss’ face turned red.

We ate all the glossy seafish in my inventory 30 minutes later.

[Cooperation is an important factor in climbing the tower.]

The system messaged me while I sat on the ground to digest my food.

“Alright, let’s start moving.”

“Moving?”

“Yes.”

The second tutorial’s performance-based points used an absolute and relative evaluation. You had to surpass a certain threshold to receive the reward even if you achieved first place.

“Let’s set sail. It’s dangerous to stay on the same island.”

“Sail?”

“Yes, there’s a monster called the island devourer. It’ll attack you if you stay on the same island for too long.”

“I don’t quite understand, but sure.”

Boss and I returned to my boat at the beach.

“Hmm.”

My boat seemed a bit too small now.

“We’re going to ride that thing?”

Boss seemed doubtful as well.

“Mm... hold on.”

I took out a random dice. It should be fine to use one since I saved up five.

“I don’t know if this will work though.”

I wished for a boat or materials to build a new one as I rolled the dice.

Tk. The dice became stuck in the sand without rolling. It seemed my wish was too much as the first dice simply turned into a wooden plank.

“Oh? What was that dice?”

“Uh... hold on.”

I rolled another one. Tk. It also got stuck in the sand again. However, the dice strangely shook this time. Then it grew in size.

“Oh?”

And transformed into a boat. It was only half the size of my sailboat, but it looked like an actual boat.

“What is this mysterious thing?”

“...”

“Newbie?”

“...”

Newbie?”

I couldn't answer Boss. I only felt... betrayed. Why did I chop down trees, shave them, tie them together, and repeat all those tiring tasks? All I had to do was roll the dice a couple of times.

* * *

Boss and I set sail after I tied my old sailboat to the new one. Voyaging became more fun with someone to talk to. I obtained food from fishing while Boss focused on training her magic power.

“Ah, my magic power stat just rose by 0.3 points.”

Boss spoke with a bright face after about 6 hours of sailing.

“Wow, it's increasing fast. When do you think you'll be able to hunt sea monsters?”

“Now.”

“What is it at?”

“2.3”

“Let's just eat.”

“Okay.”

I began to cook while Boss meditated. Today's menu would be seafish sashimi. Sashimi didn't have much calories, but eating it could increase your magic power. While I sliced up the fish...

Pssssh—

A large waterspout shot out from the ocean. The surface of the ocean split and a fish as big as a house emerged. It had fierce eyes that took up half its face and a mouth that sharply protruded. This ugly fish blocked our boat and stared at us.

[You have spotted a giant fish. Its information has been recorded in the player encyclopedia.]

Monster Encyclopedia [Giant Fish] [Intermediate rank, grade 9]

“Boss?”

“Don’t worry.”

Boss stood up and reached out towards the fish. Gueeee— It opened its mouth with a strange roar to swallow us, but trying to fight Boss at close range was foolish despite her stat restrictions.

— Pervading Shadow.

With a soft whisper, black magic power shot out from Boss’ fingers and entered the fish’s mouth. Soon, its body began to distort as though something dug inside of it.

Gueeee—

A different scream rang out. The pain didn’t last long as black thorns pierced out from inside its body.

“...”

Boss sat on the boat with a peaceful look. I pulled the giant corpse closer to check for any useful materials, but it had nothing.

[The second tutorial will end in 10 minutes.] [Good work surviving until

now.]

A system alert notified us that the stage would end. Boss spoke from next to me.

“Looks like the tutorial is ending soon.”

“I heard.”

She smiled.

“Good job.”

“Thank you, but Boss is just dead weight here.”

“Dead weight... is a bit harsh. Didn't I kill all the sea monsters?”

“That's because I kept us fed. You starved every time you used your magic power.”

Boss narrowed her eyes. She glared at me, but I didn't find it scary at all.

“I'm kidding. Good work.”

“You too, newbie.”

We smiled at each other.

[You have cleared the second tutorial.] [Player Extra7 has obtained 2008 performance points.] [You are currently ranked 1st out of the 78 players who cleared the hardest difficulty.] [You are the only player with over 2000 points and will receive the second tutorial's reward of honor.] [You will be transferred to your waiting room in 3 minutes.]

Chapter 159

The First City (1)

[You will be given 24 hours to rest.] [Prepare for the final tutorial.]

A warm light enveloped my body as I closed my eyes. My feet touched a hard surface after a brief floating sensation.

I opened my eyes and found myself in the waiting room. Then I smirked and sat on the floor.

[First place reward – you have obtained a tutorial reward box.] [You have obtained 1000 TP (Tower Points)]

All I did was adventure, but easily obtained first place since the first wave of challengers had no idea how the tower worked. The competition would only increase after the third wave and Kim Suho should place first in the second wave.

[TP can be used on all floors of the tower.] [Try opening the Lv.1 Player Shop.]

“Yes, thank you.”

I politely thanked the system. This shop could only be used by players and sold special items like tower re-entrance tickets and earth return tickets. Of course, neither of them could be used during the tutorial.

“Player shop.”

A window popped up as soon as I spoke.

[Lv.1 Player Shop] — Physical Ability — Magic Power Development — Faith — Consumable — Special Items [TP: 1000]

The Lv.1 didn't refer to my level since players didn't have any, but everything else in the tower did: equipment, techniques, skills, NPCs, the player shop, and even the system. I clicked on the physical ability category.

[Muscle Growth Catalyst]... [Vitality Boost Pill]

The shop sold items that increased 0.05-0.10 stat points for 1000 TP. The magic power development and faith categories sold similar items. With 1000 TP, I could only buy a few consumable herbs.

[Blue Herb 30 TP] [Luminescence Herb 50 TP]... [Magic Power Clover 100 TP]

"There's nothing but herbs."

I recalled putting vitality and magic power recovery potions in level 1 player shops, but that seemed to have changed. The items listed here didn't seem cost-effective at all. TP could be used throughout the Tower of Wish, so it might be better to buy items from NPCs or other players in the auction house. Of course, crafting items would be the cheapest option.

[Earth Return Ticket – 1000 TP]

"This got more expensive too."

Even the return ticket cost 1000 TP without factoring in the other 1000 TP required for the re-entrance ticket. Going back and forth between Earth and the tower cost 4 times more than the original story.

"Looks like I won't make it back in a month."

TP was especially important on the early floors. I promised Evandel I'd return in a month, but I would probably need at least 2 months. Next, I checked the reward box.

[Tutorial Reward Box] You will obtain 3 random upgrade scrolls. (This box will disappear unless it is opened within 12 hours.)

My luck probably didn't apply to this box since it contained similar level scrolls. I opened it without hesitation and 3 scrolls popped out.

[Skill Upgrade Scroll] [Item Upgrade Scroll] [Upgrade Scroll] [All scrolls must be used within 12 hours.]

All 3 scrolls were quite rare and hard to find even after the tutorial.

"They're different, huh."

Kim Suho would obtain different scrolls. The only common one was the skill upgrade scroll. Obviously, I had to use it on the random dice. I wanted to save it, but it would disappear in 12 hours. First, I tore the skill upgrade scroll in half.

[Would you like to upgrade the bonus skill, Random Dice?]

"Yes."

[Please select an upgrade.] [Lv.1 Efficiency] Will decrease the Random Dice's recharge time. [Lv.1 Limit Increase] The rank of items you can obtain from the Random Dice will increase. [Lv.1 Intelligence] Random Dice will recognize your intentions better.

Three upgrades popped up in front of me. I clicked on limit increase without thinking for too long. Thunk. The sound of a metallic bar rang out.

[Random Dice can now transform into Lv.4 items. Its recharge time has increased by 30 minutes.]

Next was the item upgrade scroll.

"What items do I have anyway?"

I opened my inventory.

[Random Dice] [Lv.1 Fleshfish's Skin] [Lv.2 Black Horn Octopus' Heart] [Lv.1 Red Crystal Spear] [Lv.1 Red Crystal Axe] [Lv.1 Red

Crystal Fishing Rod] [Lv.2 Yggdrasil leaf] [Glossy Seafish's Tough Skin]

My inventory only contained 8 items since it was still at level 0.

“Hmm.”

None of the items from the tutorial seemed worth it. Upgrading the red crystal spear seemed... wait.

“The Yggdrasil leaf.”

Could I upgrade it? I tried rubbing the scroll on the leaf.

[Would you like to use the item upgrade scroll on the Lv.2 Yggdrasil leaf?]

“It works?”

I immediately confirmed it.

[Lv.2 Yggdrasil leaf has increased to Lv. 3] — The effectiveness of Yggdrasil's blessing has increased. — The Yggdrasil leaf's physical ability boost has increased. Your strength, vitality, stamina, and speed stats have increased by an additional 0.1 points.

“Alright, that does it for items.”

Now, for the upgrade scroll. It didn't have a prefix to specify its use, but I immediately decided on how to use it.

“I'd like to upgrade the system.”

I ripped the scroll in half. One second, two seconds, three seconds passed. The system, which always responded immediately, replied slightly late.

[Are you sure you want to upgrade Lv.0 Extra7's System?]

It seemed taken aback, perhaps even happy.

“Of course.”

I smiled and nodded.

[Lv.0 Extra7's System has increased to Lv.1 Extra7's System.] [Your waiting room has grown larger.] [Your inventory has increased to Lv.1] [The community...]

A string of alerts confirmed that I made the right decision.

“Great.”

I looked around the waiting room that I would often visit. I planned to bring my friends here as well. Of course, the tower had an incredibly large floor called the residential area, which was almost the size of Korea. However, you could only rest in the waiting room while on all the other floors.

“Let's make some furniture now.”

Crafting should help increase my stats and Dexterity's proficiency. First, I needed some material and took out the random dice.

[Well-cut Oak Tree]

Not having a level meant it was Lv.0, trash that could only be used for drawers or floor tiles. I rolled another one.

[Lv.3 High-quality Black Wood]

“Sweet.”

A large log popped out. I should be able to make a bed with it. I formed a tool with stigma's magic power and got to work.

“Huup.”

After 12 hours...

[Dexterity has increased to grade 8.] [Crafting has increased to Lv.2] — Can add finishing touches to handmade equipment. — Automatic crafting will become more elaborate. — You have obtained, Blueprint-seeing Eyes. [Your strength has increased by 0.1 points.] [Your stamina has increased by 0.1 points.] [Your vitality has increased by 0.1 points.]...

Dexterity had fallen to grade 9, but managed to improve. My physical stats also increased again.

[Lv.3 Comfortable Bed] Lv.3 Recovery: Will completely restore vitality in 6 hours. Lv.3 Comfort: Will clear your mind.

I built an amazing bed and had 12 hours left. Unfortunately, I didn't have enough time to rest. I worked so hard so I could bully that bastard... or I guess that bitch Jin Sahyuk. I had to grow strong enough to defeat her.

“Argh, I feel sore all over.”

My shoulders felt like they would pop off, but I still had to do many things. Next, I planned on crafting more equipment. I thought about a mask and hood to hide my face. I also wanted some simple armor. I rolled another random dice for more material.

I crafted 3 more pieces of equipment in 9 hours.

[Lv.3 Black Hooded Robe] Lv.2 Temperature Control, Lv.3 Auto-fit, Lv.1 Sound Muffling [Lv.2 Black Eagle Mask] Lv.2 Air Purifier, Lv.2 Face Protection [Lv.3 Leather Armor] Lv.3 Defense, Lv.3 Durability, Lv.3 Ease of Movement

“Auu, I'm so tired.”

Thankfully, stigma's magic power worked quite well and they all ended up with desirable effects. I probably had better equipment than everybody else.

[You have acquired the technique, Lv.1 Magic Power Infusion.] — The effect of magic power infused in items has improved.

[The final tutorial will begin in 1 hour.]

The final tutorial wasn't that hard. The first tutorial's concept was battle, the second was survival, and the final one would be society. I entered the community before the final tutorial began.

[Public Forum] [Read this if you are Extra7.]

“Huh?”

I found a post looking for me as I scrolled through. I could tell who posted it before even reading.

[Read this if you are Extra7.] [Nayunjajangman] — Are you still alive? If so, answer me.

He must've thought I died since I suddenly stopped responding last time. I laughed and replied.

— What, you finished your tutorial?

He quickly responded.

— As expected, you're still alive, hyung. I'm waiting for the final tutorial.

— What difficulty are you in.

— You first, hyung.

— I'm in the highest.

— Wow... hyung must be someone amazing... so scary.

[The final tutorial will begin soon.]

“Ah, I don’t have time to chat.”

I wouldn’t be able to enter the community during the tutorial.

— Hey, I’m starting the final tutorial. Don’t die and follow me properly.

— Lol Yes hyung!

“Hmm.”

The lol sounded like he looked down on me, but I didn’t bother replying.

[Final tutorial – Maintaining Profit] [You will now be transferred to the Tutorial Town.]

A light burst out like thick fog as I closed my eyes and felt the warmth.

[You are in the highest difficulty of the Tutorial Town.] [For 10 days, obtain as much TP as possible in the tutorial’s society.] [After 10 days, you must possess more than 1000 TP to clear the final tutorial.] [All TP earned by players will be theirs to keep.] [Lv.??? Mercenary’s Pub]

A flurry of system alerts popped up along with the status window of the building in front of me.

I looked around. The houses behind me with yellow bricks looked like medieval shops. A pub built out of wood stood in front of me. The whole scene came out of a fantasy novel.

I entered a pub for the first time in my life. Kiiik— The floor creaked as I opened the stiff wooden door.

“Uhahaha.”

“Hahahaha.”

Rowdy laughter greeted me as I entered. First, I took a good look around. Many muscular NPCs chatted while having fun. For the record, NPCs and players looked quite similar. It would be best to act like an NPC. I lifted my hood and sat at the counter.

“What can I get ya?”

The owner asked. I glanced at the menu and casually ordered.

“One gin.”

“That’ll be 50 TP.”

[You can take out 50 TP from your inventory.]

“It shouldn’t be that expensive.”

“...20 TP.”

The owner lowered the price by more than 50%. However, 20 TP still cost too much. I pretended to reach into my pocket and took out 5 TP coins. The owner poured the gin into a glass without saying anything.

[Lv.1 Gin] Lv.1 Alcohol

At least the drink wasn’t drugged. I chugged the glass. Then...

Kiik—

The wooden door opened and I instinctively turned around. Immediately, my eyes widened at the man and a woman who just entered.

The woman was a short Caucasian. Her white hair would stand out even at a distance and her puppy-like eyes shone like jewels. Anyone looking at her would wonder how such a small face could contain such beauty.

Next to the woman stood a well-built Asian man. His appearance was just as praiseworthy.

“Where is this? How mysterious.”

They were heroes from the Temple of Justice, the strongest members of the Hero Association. Aileen, the Spirit Speech Master, and Hellfire Yi Yongha.

Chapter 160

The First City (2)

According to the system, 78 people had passed the second tutorial at the highest difficulty. The Tutorial Town's size seemed similar to Yeouido and all 78 challengers now resided in this town. Among those 78, the 2 heroes closest to master rank appeared. I hid my nervousness and observed them.

"Where is this? How mysterious."

They walked into the pub as I pulled my hood over my head.

"It says this is the Mercenary Pub. Look, the bulletin board has missions on it."

"Ah, so we have to make money by completing them."

Aileen nodded at Yi Yongha's words. They looked like an uncle and niece pair at first glance.

"Looks like it."

"How much do we need to make again?"

"1000 each in 10 days."

"That should be easy."

Players with more than 1000 TP would move on to the real tower, but those who didn't would remain until the next tutorial in September.

"Destroying a goblin settlement, wiping out bandits, shutting down an illegal gambling house..."

Yi Yongha read the missions.

“We can probably complete them all today,” Aileen spoke impatiently.

“Please, you’re going to be dead tired after a single mission.”

“What? Are you underestimating me?”

“I’m being realistic. Your magic power is restricted right now.”

Aileen must’ve entered with a red ticket with Yi Yongha as her companion. Kiik— The door creaked open again.

“Where the hell is this? The last tutorial seemed more interesting.”

“Can you be quiet?”

I could tell who they were just from their voices. A giant and a seductive Western woman walked in. It was Cheok Jungyeong and Jain.

“How the hell are we supposed to make... eh?”

“Oh?”

They spotted Aileen and Yi Yongha in front of the bulletin board. Aileen and Yi Yongha also spotted them and exchanged glares. None of them said anything, but the atmosphere grew hostile.

“Owner, give me two of your strongest alcohol.”

I ordered 2 drinks and paid 20 TP. The owner took the 2 silver coins and handed me 2 glasses of highly concentrated alcohol. I pulled my mask up as if I would drink it.

“You two know me, right?” Aileen broke the tension first as she spoke to Cheok Jungyeong and Jain.

“Haha, that’s right, kid. We’ve seen you once before,” Cheok

Jungyeong replied.

“Kid?”

“Maybe it’s more appropriate to call you a brat.”

“Ha, haha, I dare you to say that again.”

Aileen’s face turned red from Cheok Jungyeong’s provocation. However, now wasn’t the time to fight.

“Both of you, come...”

Aileen’s gift, Spirit Speech, neared the level of an authority. I quickly twisted my wrist. Vodka shot out of my glasses and flew into Aileen’s mouth. Yi Yongha tried to block it, but I prepared two for this exact situation.

“Here— kek!”

Yi Yongha blocked one stream of vodka, but the other still entered her mouth. Aileen coughed, but couldn’t spit out the hard liquor.

“Aak! Neck, m-my neck is... burning... haak...”

Spirit Speech was useless if you couldn’t speak. Aileen was weak with alcohol to begin with. She started picking up and drinking other NPCs’ drinks.

“Ptui! Ah, this is also alcohol! W-Water—!”

“Um, Aileen, calm down. Take a deep breath.”

“You think I can calm down!”

Normally, Aileen would’ve quickly recovered with her magic power that rivaled Boss. No, she wouldn’t have been affected by alcohol in the first place. However, her stat restrictions made her more vulnerable.

“What the hell’s up with that brat?”

“Cheok Jungyeong,” I walked up to them and whispered.

“Huh?”

Cheok Jungyeong’s eyes widened. I held up my index finger, signaling him to keep his mouth shut. Then I dragged them outside and ran for 5 minutes straight.

“O-Oi!”

Cheok Jungyeong shook off my hand once we arrived at an alleyway. I let him go now that we reached far enough away from the pub.

“The hell’s wrong with you? Why’d you drag me here?”

“It looked like you might start a fight, so I brought you outside.”

“What, I can’t fight?”

“...”

I looked at Jain standing next to him. I wanted her to do something about this muscle-brained idiot, but she only shrugged.

“Their stats are restricted like the rest of us, right? I want to beat up that brat too.”

“You’ll be arrested if you fight inside the town. Haven’t you seen the town’s vigilante group?”

I carefully looked around. Thankfully, no players were around.

“By the way, where’s Boss?”

“Who knows? We just arrived too. Oh wait, there she is.”

Jain pointed to the middle of the street as I turned.

“She’s really there.”

Boss tilted her head in front of a street vendor selling candy and chocolates.

“Looks like Boss wants some sweets.”

Like Jain said, Boss smacked her lips and rummaged through her pockets.

“I guess so. She does like chocolate.”

“Oi, newbie, what’s up with your clothes?”

“Oh yeah, where did you get those?”

Cheok Jungyeong and Jain seemed interested.

“I made them.”

“Oh! Make one for me too.”

“Me too, me too.”

“Sure, if you pay.”

“Then never mind.”

Jain gave up, but Cheok Jungyeong persisted.

“How much? I have 300 won right now.”

“300 TP?”

“Yeah.”

I stared at Cheok Jungyeong and carefully spoke, “All of it.”

“Hahaha, brat. Do I look like a pushover?”

“...”

He wasn't that stupid despite acting and looking like an idiot. I quickly changed the subject.

“Cough, let's go to Boss first.”

Boss seemed to have figured out how to use TP and pulled out a gold coin. Gold coins were worth 100 TP each. She must've gained it as a reward from the second tutorial. Boss stared at the street vendor with the gold coin. The vendor's face was full of greed.

“She's going to get scammed at this rate.”

The Tutorial Town sounded kind and helpful, but 70% of its residents were scammers.

“Oi, Boss!”

Cheok Jungyeong called her and she turned around before she could hand over her gold coin.

“Oh, it's Gyeong. Jain and newbie are here too.”

Boss greeted us expressionlessly as Cheok Jungyeong stomped towards her. I also quickly approached and took away her gold coin.

“Hm? Newbie, why are you taking my money?” Boss frowned.

“I'll give it back to you later.”

I faced the candy vendor instead of Boss.

“This chocolate, how much is it?”

“Pardon? Uh...”

I could practically hear him racking his brain. However, NPCs thought the same way as humans. Seeing Cheok Jungyeong towering behind me...

“They’re 10 TP each.”

“...”

Wow, he’s trying to scam me in front of Cheok Jungyeong.

“Give me one, no, two.”

Boss sounded pretty desperate since she hadn’t eaten chocolate in over a month.

“No.”

“W-Why? I have 20 TP...”

“I know, but that’s enough to buy 10 chocolates.”

I left the struggling Boss to Cheok Jungyeong and faced the candy vendor once again.

With 20 TP, I bought 20 chocolates and 20 candies. We headed to an inn after I took care of the purchase. Boss happily ate her junk food as we arrived.

“Let’s see, 4 people... that’ll be 300 TP per night.”

Even the innkeeper tried to scam us, but I knew the real price and only took out 6 silver coins.

“Let’s make it 60 TP.”

“Hey, that won’t cut it. Go somewhere else.”

“I’ve been to all the inns in town and it only gets cheaper every time. This is the last stop.”

I glanced at Cheok Jungyeong. He noticed my signal and glared at the innkeeper.

“...Let’s do 150 TP per night.”

“60 TP.”

“60 TP for a 4 person room? That’s impossible...”

“60 TP, but we won’t be needing any food. Only a room.”

“...”

The innkeeper went silent for a long time. I also kept quiet. After about 3 minutes of dead silence, the system alerted me of my successful haggling.

[You have acquired the technique, Lv.1 Haggling] — You can see the rough estimate of minimum prices desired by NPCs with low-level haggling.

[Lv.1 Haggling has linked with your charming voice.] — Extra7’s voice will now contain slight persuasion.

So charming voice could be used like this. I grinned and looked at the innkeeper.

“F-Fine, 70 TP!”

He still wanted an extra 10 TP. I threw 60 TP on the counter and took the key. Then we all entered the large 4 person room upstairs.

“So what are you going to do now?” Jain sat on the edge of the bed and asked.

“I’m planning to go steal something. I’m sure you plan on doing your own thing as well. The problem is...”

Jain looked at Boss and Cheok Jungyeong.

“These two with low social experience.”

“I’ll take Cheok Jungyeong with me. You should take care of Boss.”

“What? You? You’re going to take me with you? Ahahaha, you’ve gotten funnier, kid.”

Cheok Jungyeong laughed as he smacked my shoulder. My bones would’ve been broken if this was the outside world, but I unexpectedly turned out fine thanks to the balance patch.

“Also, invest all the money you have in me.”

Jain’s eyebrows twitched. “What for?”

“Gambling.”

“What? Are you crazy?”

The Tutorial Town also had a gambling house. The problem was over half the gamblers were scammers, making victory or loss not completely dependent on luck.

“Ah, is that why you bought a pack of cards before coming here?” Cheok Jungyeong asked.

“Yes.”

I stopped to buy a pack of cards on our way to the inn. You just had to be the best scammer to make money in a room full of scammers.

“Are you confident?” Jain asked full of doubt.

“Of course, would I ask you for money if I wasn’t?”

Money was life to Jain. Stealing from her was no different than declaring war.

“Really?”

“Of course.”

I had studied and practiced cheating before coming into the Tower. Double dealing, hand mucking, base dealing, sleight-of-hand, etc. Thanks to Dexterity, I was practically a professional scammer.

* * *

One hour later. I asked nearby NPCs for directions and arrived at a gambling house with Cheok Jungyeong.

— Threes full of fives.

— Fucking hell, you cheated, didn’t you?

— Oh please.

The gambling house was loud and full of smoke. I sat at an empty table until a scammer smoking and looking bored approached.

“Oh, are you two new here?”

“Yes.”

“A bodybuilder and a skinny boy, what a strange combination. Are you two friends?”

I smiled without answering. Cheok Jungyeong also grinned.

“It’s true, this guy is quite skinny.”

“Anyways, welcome. I’ll treat you two well.”

I could tell he was a scammer, but I didn’t care since I would cheat too.

“Alright, why don’t we begin?”

The man picked up a pack of cards. I simply smiled.

* * *

It only took 2 hours for me to win most of the money in the gambling house. I cheated when I played against scammers and relied purely on luck when I played ordinary people. Of course, scammers caused a scene knowing that I somehow cheated, but Cheok Jungyeong stopped them every time.

“How boring. You’re all cowards.”

Scammer NPCs could only shrink away in front of Cheok Jungyeong’s muscles. I found it quite funny.

“We should leave now.”

“Eh? Why? We can still make more.”

“No, look over there.”

I pointed to a fierce-looking man that I had just beaten. He glared at me as he chewed on a cigarette.

“He should be a scammer hired by this gambling house’s owner.”

“So?”

“The owner will come soon with hired hands. Let’s exchange our money and leave before then.”

We had no reason to fight NPCs. I brought Cheok Jungyeong with me to the exchange.

“10200 chips, confirmed. Hold on a minute.”

The employee at the currency exchange confirmed my chips. I received 300 TP from Cheok Jungyeong, 200 TP each from Boss and Jain, and brought my own 1000 TP. I started with 1700 TP and more than quintupled it in 2 hours.

“Here you go, 10200 TP.”

The employee handed me ten 1000 TP notes and 2 gold coins.

“How much do I get?”

I put everything in my inventory without answering Cheok Jungyeong. Ssss— The 2 gold coins and some of the banknotes transformed into dust and entered my inventory. Right, only some. Five banknotes remained in my hand.

“These are fake.”

I stared at Cheok Jungyeong.

“What? Really?”

“Yeah, that’s why they didn’t go inside the inventory.”

Cheok Jungyeong’s face immediately contorted and turned red with rage. His muscles bulked up and... KWANG! A thunderous sound erupted.

“You son of a bitch!”

“Hiik!”

“Do I look like a pushover? I dare you to try that again, you...! Mother... father...!”

He spat out all sorts of curses I couldn't describe with words.

I returned to the inn with 10200 TP. Boss had been working out and Jain prepared to go steal something in some sort of disguise.

“Oh, you're back? Where's my money? If you lost it all...”

“Don't worry. First, take a seat.”

I gave Boss, Jain, and Cheok Jungyeong their money back and an additional 1000 TP.

“Whew... good.”

“You'll be able to go up to the next floor with the 1000 TP I just gave you.”

“Well, that was easy. Is this it for this floor?”

“No, stay on your guard. There are pickpockets all over town. They can even steal the money inside your inventory.”

This place was still the highest difficulty of Tutorial Town. No one could imagine that most people in this town were scammers. Even a great sage would be tricked once.

“Do we get a performance-based reward like the last tutorial if we earn the most?”

“Probably not. The system would've told us if that was the case.”

The third tutorial's reward was simple.

“The TP we earn should be our reward.”

* * *

In a goblin settlement some distance away from the Tutorial Town.

“What? You said it was 700 TP!”

Someone’s angry voice rang out. Birds on the branches flew away and squirrels fell in surprise.

“Agh, do you need to be so loud?”

Aileen glared at the mercenary leader who hired her. “You think I can be quiet? Huh? You said it was 700 TP before!”

“As I said, that’s if we didn’t suffer any damage. Look at the state those guys are in.”

“What?”

Aileen looked around her surroundings. The mercenaries clearly suffered from great pain. She bit her lips.

“It’s written in the contract that the amount paid might change depending on other mercenaries’ conditions.”

“I don’t think it’s right to not even give us half the listed amount.”

Yi Yongha spoke up this time. The mercenary leader was unreasonably lowering the 700 TP reward to 300 TP.

“No, no, that’s just how it is.”

“At least give us half.”

“I can’t. We can’t spare even a single TP considering how much it’ll take to get these guys treatment.”

“You—”

“Fine! I don’t need your dirty money!”

Aileen shouted and snatched the 3 gold coins from the mercenary leader's hands. She wanted to use Spirit Speech, but had spent most of her magic power already.

"You better pray we don't see each other again. If we do, I'll kill you for real."

"I-I'm just going with what's written on the contract. You don't have to be so mad."

"What, you son of a bitch—!"

"Stop Aileen. We won't gain anything from fighting."

"B-But this bastard is...!"

Yi Yongha dragged her away as she struggled with her short legs. They walked back to the town after separating from the mercenary group.

"Forget about today. Let's just buy some potions on our way back," Yi Yongha spoke as he wiped his sweat.

"The player shop doesn't sell potions."

Aileen sounded especially meek today. She had been lively even on an uninhabited island, but a few people had managed to make her depressed. Yi Yongha bitterly smiled.

"No, not the player shop. I've seen some potion shops around. Ah, there's one right there."

Yi Yongha pointed to a nearby potion shop.

"You're low on magic power, right? Let's buy some magic power potions."

"Yeah, good idea."

The two of them ran up to the potion shop.

“100... 100TP?”

“Yes, magic power potions have gotten expensive recently.”

“Still, they can’t be that expensive.”

“It’s true. It’s the same everywhere else, but I don’t think many shops are still open since it’s so late.”

“Haa...”

They couldn’t believe the price, but the shopkeeper looked too honest and righteous to lie. Even Yi Yongha had no choice but to believe her. He looked at the dejected Aileen.

“Haa.”

Yi Yongha deeply sighed and suddenly wanted to see his wife back home. Aileen needed a magic power potion to regain enough energy for tomorrow since she overused her magic power today.

“I guess it can’t be helped. We’ll take one.”

“Ah, yes, sorry about that...”

“No, it’s not your fault.”

“I’ll add in some additional bonuses next time you visit.”

“Ah, thank you.”

Yi Yongha used up all his money to buy a magic power potion.

“Here you go, Aileen.”

“Ah, thanks.”

Aileen took the magic power potion and placed it inside her inventory.

[Poor Magic Power Potion] Lv.0 Magic Power Recovery. Will restore 10 magic power upon consumption. Lv.1 Food Poisoning. Will increase your chance of food poisoning upon consumption.

The item description seemed a bit weird, but Aileen didn't think much of it since magic power potions normally cost a lot.

"Then let's find an inn."

"Un!"

They found an inn 10 minutes later. However, the innkeeper glanced at them and delivered more shocking news.

"Let's see, two people... that'll be 150 TP per night."

"Pardon?"

They felt as if their souls had left their bodies.

Chapter 161

The First City (3)

[Highest Difficulty Tutorial Town]

A new morning arrived. I left the inn after waking up and began stretching. Then a loud voice struck my ears.

“Oi, what are you doing?”

I turned around and saw a topless Cheok Jungyeong. He seemed to have been working out since his body looked red and his muscles bulked up.

“Just some morning workout.”

“Workout? Ha, you call that a workout?” Cheok Jungyeong sneered as he approached.

“Listen, newbie, doing push-ups is for kids.”

“Pardon?”

“Breathing is the most important thing when it comes to training your body. Got it? To breathe properly...”

Cheok Jungyeong began to lecture me about breathing. I half-ignored him, but my mind also grew clearer. He pushed his face closer.

“Listen, breathing isn’t just done with your body. It’s done with your mind.”

The man who stood in front of me was the famous Cheok Jungyeong of the Goryeo era. No one could argue against his understanding of martial arts as the most powerful general in the history of Korea.

“Look, this is what’s known as inner core breathing.”

Ssp, haa... Cheok Jungyeong began to breathe. It might look like normal breathing, but was completely different. I carefully observed his body as his muscles moved with every inhale and exhale.

“I’m moving the muscles in my body by breathing. Get it? We’re on a completely different level!”

Cheok Jungyeong proudly stood after finishing his demonstration. I watched his muscles for a bit before muttering.

“I don’t think I’ll ever be able to do it.”

“It’ll be hard for sure. Lots of rookies swing their swords claiming they’ve achieved oneness with the blade, but remain ignorant that becoming one with your mind and body is the hardest thing in the world. Do you know why I can do it?”

I gave him an apathetic look, but Cheok Jungyeong continued without minding my disinterest.

“The strongest man in all of Goryeo, the martial god who could uproot trees with his bare hands and change the fate of countries alone.”

Cheok Jungyeong proudly banged his chest.

“That’s who I am.”

He smiled with an expression that contained ineffable pride and self-conviction. I silently stared at him.

“Are you starting to respect me now?”

“No, I’m just cringing. Isn’t that your past life?”

“What? I dare you to say that again.”

I obtained a good hint about breathing with the entire body. I couldn’t do it now, but I should be able to imitate it using stigma's magic power.

“Hajin.”

Jain peeked her head out of the third floor window.

“Yes?”

“Do you know how to cook? I think Boss is hungry from all the training she did last night. She wants you to cook for her.”

— Jain! W-When did I say that!

“Boss says you're a good cook. She wants bulgogi rice.”

— Jain! Y-You!

I could hear Boss as well. I chuckled and looked at Cheok Jungyeong.

“Let's go shopping, Mr. Cheok Jungyeong.”

“Mister? Just call me Cheok Jungyeong.”

“Alright, Cheok Jungyeong.”

“...You wanna die?”

Cheok Jungyeong and I went out into the busy streets.

“Isn't it interesting?”

“What is.”

“The scenery here.”

This place looked exactly like a town from a fantasy novel. Most houses were made of bricks or wood, they only used horses and carriages, and shops sold potions and magic supplies.

“I guess so.”

Eventually, we arrived at the town’s market district, a long stretch of alleyways filled with street vendors that sold food. I looked up at the vendor after picking the freshest ingredients.

[Lower limit – 30 TP]

“How much for all this?”

“Let’s see. Onions, mushrooms, pork... That should be about 100 TP.”

“I think 35 TP should be enough.”

In this town, talking politely meant you were a pushover.

“35 TP? That’s a bit...”

“Make it 35 TP.”

“Then you can go elsewhere. I doubt you’ll find any place with such dirt-cheap prices.”

The vendor tried to refuse, but he was only an NPC with low haggling skills. It didn’t take long to crack him.

“Sigh, fine. Take it.”

I successfully haggled the price with the help of Cheok Jungyeong’s intimidating aura behind me.

“Are you done?”

“Yes, let’s go back.”

Boss and Jain welcomed us with our hands full of bagged ingredients.

Boss sat at the table before I even started cooking.

“Wait just a bit.”

Grade 8 Dexterity should be enough for cooking. I quickly made a 4 person meal with a recipe I had memorized.

“Wow.”

“Oh, you’re a good cook, newbie!”

Cheok Jungyeong and Jain expressed their surprise while Boss quickly ate like a vacuum.

* * *

The four of us blankly stared at the ceiling after our meal.

“Oi, newbie, what are you doing next? Gambling?”

“No, we went yesterday.”

I already beat the casino hard. I should be on their blacklist since they knew my face. They wouldn’t allow me to enter or would probably kidnap me the moment I showed up.

“Then what are you going to do?”

“I’m going to open up a street stall.”

“Street stall?” Jain’s eyes widened.

“Yep.”

The Tutorial Town’s NPCs had a lot of money. Of course, this town didn’t provide any Lv.3 equipment or items as part of the tutorial. NPCs were at least Lv.2 or Lv.3 and the captain of the vigilante corps could potentially be Lv.10 or more. The Tutorial Town was located at the base of the Tower of Wish and every NPC should have lived here for at least 5 years.

“Why a street stall? Aren’t you just going to get scammed?”

“No, opening a street stall is the easiest way of making money as long as you sell above the lowest price. NPCs can’t force you to sell something.”

“Mmm, then what are you going to sell?”

“This.”

I took out my red crystal axe and spear. They came in handy during the second tutorial, but I no longer had any use for them.

“I’m also going to make more.”

The random dice would provide me with plenty of materials. I wouldn’t be able to use stigma’s magic power, but I could make up for it with this special leaf.

[Lv.3 Yggdrasil leaf] — Lv.3 Blessing of Adventure: Your body will become lighter with this item in your inventory. Will improve your physical abilities. You may grant minor blessings to items. Blessings will grow stronger the more they relate to adventures.

“Jain, I need you to do something.”

“Me?”

“Yes.”

“What is it?” Jain tilted head as she pointed at herself.

* * *

I set up a stall at the end of a street leading to an inn where not too many, but not too few passed by. I made sure to wear my mask and hooded robe in case I ran into other players.

[General Store] [We sell everything from weapons, armors, herbs, fruits...]

I set my sign down and sat on the ground. Before I could even pull out my items...

“Hey, who are you?”

Five thugs from the street vendor union on the same street surrounded me, but I maintained my composure.

“I got permission to sell here.”

“What? Whose permission...”

“Mine.” A deep voice rang out at just the right moment. The thugs all turned around.

“Ah, Boss!”

The NPCs immediately bowed at a 90 degree angle. Tak, tak. The man they called boss walked up imposingly and stood in front of me.

“I gave this person permission.”

“Ah, our apologies, we didn’t know...”

“It’s fine.”

The boss frowned. His eyes of contempt showed that he didn’t want to bother himself with trifling matters. As expected, her acting always felt superb.

“I’m not the one you should be apologizing to in the first place. Why don’t you buy something from him.”

“Y-Yes, understood!”

The five NPCs faced me once again with a single command from their boss.

“This looks nice. How much is...”

The first NPC pointed at an armor I took out without much thought. However, his eyes suddenly widened.

“Whoa, h-hey, isn’t this a Lv.3 armor?”

“Lv. 3?”

“Ha, as if that’s possible.”

Their attention all fell on the armor.

“This is Lv.3?”

“I think so.”

NPCs couldn’t check item descriptions like players, but their discerning eyes could appraise the level of most items.

“But there aren’t any Lv.3s around here!”

They remained doubtful and suspicious.

“This isn’t a Lv.3 armor.”

I explained.

[Lv.3 Leather Armor with Lv.3 Yggdrasil’s Blessing] Lv.3 Defense, Lv.3 Durability, Lv.3 Ease of Movement — Lv.3 Yggdrasil’s Minor Blessing: Will increase all effects of the leather armor by 1 level. This blessing will disappear after 24 hours. However, the owner of the Yggdrasil leaf can choose up to 5 armor to receive permanent blessings.

“See, he says it isn’t. I’ve never seen a Lv.3 equipment in my life.”

“Exactly, it’s only... what? Lv.4?”

“Yes, you should be able to tell if you look close enough.”

I made this armor in the waiting room with stigma’s magic power. It felt a bit wasteful to sell it, but gaining TP was currently more important.

“Here, let me see.”

“Ah, let me see too.”

The five NPCs took turns looking at the armor.

“Ah, fuck, stop being so selfish!”

“You don’t even have money!”

“I do, you fuck!”

They even began fighting amongst themselves. I looked past their shoulders at Jain, who silently mouthed.

— Hajin, don’t forget to give me 5%.

I nodded.

“This, I’ll buy it! How much?”

“Mmm... it’s going to be a bit expensive.”

“How’s 500 TP?”

“8! I can do 800 TP!”

“1400!”

The sudden auction caught the attention of others in the streets. More people began to wander over in curiosity. After hearing about the Lv.4 item being sold...

“3000!”

“3000. Is that the final bid?”

“...”

“Good, 3000 it is.”

The leather armor I made sold for 3000 TP. The NPC who bought it seemed quite wealthy. I gave him the armor after checking the TP wasn't fake. The NPC happily left, but the other customers had no plans to leave yet. They began to ask all sorts of questions about the other items for sale, some of which were Lv.3. Cheok Jungyeong caught the fools who tried to steal any items and taught them a lesson.

A familiar voice rang out as I dealt with the influx of customers.

“What's going on here?”

This faint voice immediately caught my attention as I turned towards it.

There, I saw a girl on tiptoes, trying to peek at what was being sold.

“A general store?”

I knew her all too well. I could never forget her face and my heart almost skipped a beat when I saw her. It was... Chae Nayun.

“Argh, move over if you're not buying!”

Chae Nayun worked her way in front of me. I couldn't say anything. I quietly thanked the mask and hooded robe before lowering my head.

“Red crystal spear? Um, do you have a red crystal sword?”

I shook my head at her question. Her voice still sounded the same.

“I see... then how much is this spear?”

I had no choice but to speak now, so I cleared my throat and changed my voice.

“250 TP.”

“250 TP?”

“I’ll give you a bonus too.”

“Uh...”

Chae Nayun fell in thought. She didn’t seem to find anything suspicious about my voice. Once again, I thanked my charming voice.

“Hm... I really want this, but I only have 200... no, 150 TP.”

“...”

“I-It’s true. I’ll just go to another shop if that’s not enough.”

Her haggling made no sense with zero logic, technique, or emotion behind it. I pretended to be tricked.

“Then you can take it for 150 TP. Here, have this too.”

I threw in a money pouch with a bento box I made for lunch along with the red crystal spear.

“Oh, I don’t need the bonus. How about you shave off another 50 TP instead?”

“...Are you crazy?”

She made an absurd offer.

“...I’m kidding. Thank you. Have a nice day.”

Chae Nayun turned around with the red crystal spear in one hand and the leather pouch in the other. She left just like that with light steps. She must be thinking her haggling technique had cut down the price. I watched her leave for a long time. Her hair was still short, but dyed black. I grabbed my chest and felt my beating heart refusing to calm down.

“Oi, answer me.”

Some man walked in front of me and blocked my line of sight. His face looked oily and unpleasant.

“How much is this?”

He pointed at the red crystal axe.

“1500 TP,” I briefly retorted.

“What? You just sold the spear to that girl for—”

“1600 TP.”

“What? Why did it go up by—”

“1700 TP.”

“You...”

* * *

Five minutes later. Chae Nayun sat at a nearby bench.

“Let’s see... Oh? It even has a blessing.”

[Lv.2 Red Crystal Spear with Lv.3 Yggdrasil’s Blessing] Lv.2 Burn Damage, Lv.2 Fire attribute — Lv.3 Yggdrasil’s Minor Blessing: Will increase all effects of the red crystal spear by 1 level.

“Huhuhu...”

What's this, I bought a half Lv.3 item for 150 TP? Chae Nayun smiled as she read the item description.

“Looks like NPCs can't read item descriptions. Should I sell it? No, why would I sell such a good item?”

She tightly hugged the red crystal spear.

“Oh right.”

She suddenly recalled the leather pouch from the street vendor NPC. Chae Nayun opened it without much thought and found a warm bento box inside.

“A bento box?”

First, she checked the item description. Thankfully, it wasn't poisoned. She felt hungry and took it out with a smile.

“Oh?”

However, the pouch contained even more. Five gold coins. It had 500 TP.

“...”

Chae Nayun blankly stared at the coins. She thought about it and concluded that the street vendor NPC must've mistakenly placed their sales inside. However, greed filled Chae Nayun's heart as she looked at the shining gold coins. Five gold coins were worth 500 TP. She only had 150 TP on her.

“N-No.”

It's only right to give it back. You already received such a great item for 150 TP. Don't lose your conscience, Nayun. She shot up and went back.

“There he is.”

Thankfully, the street vendor hadn't left yet. Chae Nayun worked her way through the crowd to return the gold coins.

“Um, here. You left 500 TP inside the leather pouch.”

“What?”

“I came to give it back. Take it.”

However, the NPC refused to take the coins and glanced at the giant man behind the stall.

“Oi.”

The giant walked in front of the confused Chae Nayun.

“Screw off if you're going to argue with what you got.”

“N-No, I'm not arguing with what I got. I just found 5 extra gold coins inside. These are yours.”

“Hmm?”

The giant glanced at the street vendor NPC. Chae Nayun couldn't hear what the vendor said, but the giant only sneered back at her.

“Screw off, idiot.”

“What? Idiot? Say that again!”

“Just leave, brat.”

The giant man raised his arm to threaten her. He must've thought he could intimidate her.

“What? Are you crazy!”

Chae Nayun kicked his leg without cowering away. Kwak! Her foot dug into his calf.

“Uk!”

A sharp pain coursed through the giant’s body, causing him to fall on one knee. Then Chae Nayun quickly ran away.

“Y-You crazy bitch—!”

“Hmph, I was doing you a favor!” She stuck up her middle finger at the giant.

“I, I’ll remember your face! You little—!”

Cheok Jungyeong’s angry roar echoed throughout the streets.

Chapter 162

The First City (4)

The sky had already turned dark by the time Chae Nayun completed a mission. She trudged back to the same inn from the night before after only receiving 200 TP for a 500 TP mission. She only had 125 TP left once she paid for her lodging.

“Hey, you need to pay another 75 TP.”

“Ask my companion for the other half.”

“Hm, fine.”

“Alright then, I’m heading back to my room.”

She walked past the greedy innkeeper to her room. Chae Nayun stared at the ceiling as she lay in bed. She felt tired, but couldn’t fall asleep. Suddenly, her heart rate slowed and her mood turned sour. Lonely thoughts began to distract her. Tk, tk, tk. Rain began to fall.

She opened the door in case she misheard, but it really was raining. She sighed and recalled how much easier the first two tutorials were compared to this one. Back then, she felt so exhausted she couldn’t think. Now, she had idle time in solitude and everything came alive again. Fragments of memories swept through her head. Her mental illness had grown worse since she entered the tower. Was it because she stopped taking her pills? Her breathing became rough and her head hurt.

“Uk!”

An unbearable headache struck her as she clutched her head. Beeeeep

— A ringing noise buzzed in her ears. She felt like the strange sound shook her surroundings.

“Ah... fuck...”

Blood dripped as she bit her lips. Things she couldn’t understand flashed before her eyes. The conversation from that day rose in her foggy consciousness. She still had many questions left unanswered.

“Argh...”

Was it really him or did he just make up an absurd lie? If he did murder her brother... Why, why, why? Just why did he do it? Her questions repeatedly rattled in her mind. The resentment and sadness formed a chain around her.

Click—

The door to her room slowly opened. Chae Nayun slightly raised her upper body. She could see a man with disheveled hair trudging in. He had that man’s face. Kim Hajin, Kim Hajin, Kim Hajin. The face she could never forget appeared in front of her. She reached for the spear next to her bed.

“You’re already back?”

However, her hallucination scattered away with a single sentence from the man. With a sigh, Chae Nayun closed her eyes before opening them again. Then she saw who the man really was.

“Why you are sitting in bed like a ghost?”

Shin Jonghak asked. Chae Nayun examined his dirty clothes that looked like he spent the day rolling in mud.

“Did you make any money?”

“Pft, is that the first thing you ask? Is this what it feels like to have a nagging wife?”

“Shut up.”

Chae Nayun encountered Shin Jonghak purely by coincidence. He suddenly appeared with a stupid smile as she looked for a mission at the mercenary’s pub. It freaked her out at first, but she decided to share a room with him to save money.

“What’s this bento box?” Shin Jonghak pointed to it on the bed.

“Oh, this? It came with an item I bought.” Chae Nayun glanced at the half-empty bento box.

“I didn’t finish it though.”

“Why? Is something wrong with it?”

“No, it’s actually pretty well-made according to the status window.”

“Then why didn’t you finish it?”

“No reason. It just wasn’t to my taste. Why do you keep asking? For the record, I didn’t save it for you.”

Honestly, she couldn’t taste it. After that incident, Chae Nayun lost her sense of taste. Ironically, she finally overcame her pickiness because of that. She merely treated food as fuel now.

“You bought an item? Are you sure you didn’t get scammed?”

“Please, if anything, I’m the one who scammed the seller.”

Chae Nayun proudly held up the red crystal spear.

“Is it good?”

“Yep. It should be worth at least 1500 TP, but I bought it for just a tenth of that price!”

Huhuhu— Chae Nayun made a big smile.

“I went on a mission with this thing and it slashed through goblins like butter!”

“...”

However, Shin Jonghak didn't react. His serious expression made her feel awkward.

“Don't force yourself to smile.”

“What?”

“It hurts to see you like this.”

“What are you blabbering about.”

Chae Nayun brandished her spear in front of Shin Jonghak, who promptly raised his hands and backed away.

“I'm kidding. Anyways, doesn't that mean you spent TP?”

“Yeah, but I ended up making money from it.”

“What?”

Shin Jonghak frowned as if he doubted her. Seeing this, Chae Nayun took out 5 gold coins from her inventory and told him about the lucky incident.

“I was going to give it back, but they chased me out while calling me an idiot.”

“...”

Shin Jonghak normally would've made a snarky comment, but remained silent. Chae Nayun caught him looking at the coins with a complicated expression.

“So how much do you have?”

“H-Huh?”

As expected, he became flustered and she sneered at him.

“Pft, I bet you’re poorer than me.”

“Pft, as if. Of course, I have more than you. Who do you think I am? I’m the man who will become the world’s youngest high-intermediate rank hero, Shin Jong—”

“Then show me.”

“I’m feeling tired all of a sudden.”

Shin Jonghak pretended to be drowsy and collapsed on the ground when she put her hands out. She snickered and looked down at him.

“Oh right.”

She suddenly recalled something and nudged his shoulder with her foot.

“Stay on the floor if you’re going to sleep. If you try to put a leg over the bed like last night...”

“I’ll do my best, but my only flaw is my bad sleeping habit.”

“Try it if you want a broken leg.”

“...”

“Actually, I’ll sleep on the floor tonight since I slept on the bed last night.”

“What? You don’t need to—”

“Hurry up and move.”

Chae Nayun dragged Shin Jonghak onto the bed despite his resistance.

* * *

Tk, Tk. I closed the stall late at night under the drizzling rain. Cheok Jungyeong already left to go drinking, but I returned to the inn. I felt like someone threw a huge rock at my head and couldn't bring myself to stay outside.

"Ssp... huu."

Boss was the only one inside the room. She sat cross-legged and focused on regaining her stats.

"..."

For some reason, her attire looked more daring than usual with only a black tank top and hot pants. Her well-developed muscles showed through every time she breathed. I quickly walked past her and lay on the bed.

"Did something happen?" Boss asked with her eyes still closed.

"No, nothing."

"Did the stall not go as expected?"

"No, I sold everything. I made a lot."

"Then did you get scammed?"

I shook my head. Before going to sleep, I took out 2 random dice as part of my daily routine. I wished for good items to sell and rolled the dice.

[Lv.4 Krill Dragon Leather] [Lv.3 Big and Juicy Mango]

A good material and a nostalgic fruit from the second tutorial. I could sell these tomorrow.

“...”

I turned around after feeling a laser-like stare. It came from Boss. Heh. I grinned.

“Are you hungry, Boss?”

“No.”

She frowned with a pout. “Do you think I’m a glutton?”

“No, it’s just that you were staring at this mango.”

“That’s a mango?”

Her eyes flashed with greed when she looked at it. However, Boss soon retracted her gaze and stood up.

“Cough, it’s not that. You don’t look so good today, newbie.”

“I just get a bit depressed on rainy days.”

Things that made me angry, sad, apologetic... For a long time, I’d been burying emotions deep inside. Otherwise, I would be in pain every day. However, these emotions subconsciously surfaced and always caused me distress.

“Anyways, Boss.”

“Hmm?”

“How are your stats looking?”

Honestly, Boss currently lived like a NEET. After I gave her 1000 TP, she stayed indoors all day without doing any work and spent all her free time either eating or training. She must’ve made some improvements.

“My magic power is at 3.5 and the other stats have entered the 2 point range.”

“Oh?”

Her growth speed was still incredible despite the tower’s increased stat gain. This was why division of labor was important.

“You’re like a max level NEET.”

“What’s that?”

Boss narrowed her eyes. It meant she was a bum who played around all day without working, but could easily dominate whatever she set out to do.

“It’s a good thing.”

“I don’t believe you. I’m hurt. I think I need to eat that mango to feel better. Give it here.”

Boss reached for the mango, but I stopped her by putting it inside my inventory.

I continued to make and sell equipment at my street stall for the rest of the third tutorial. I couldn’t increase my stats much because of that. However, the most important aspect of the third tutorial was money. I felt more than satisfied with over 20000 TP.

“I should be able to buy it.”

Today was the last day of the third tutorial. I stood in front of a dilapidated shop on the outskirts of town. The pouch in my pocket overflowed with money.

[Miscellaneous Item Shop]

It looked like the town didn’t sell anything special, but one shop sold rather unique items. This shop only existed in the highest difficulty tutorial and made it worth all the trouble.

Kiik—

I walked into the shop with a trembling heart. A burst of dust spread out as I passed through the door and I could smell the aged wood.

“Uh...”

The shop looked quite battered and the shopkeeper continued reading a newspaper without even greeting his customer. First, I took a good look around.

“You have quite the collection here.”

“...”

The shopkeeper NPC didn't say anything. However, his silence made him more trustworthy. After all, being talkative was one of the key characteristics of a scammer. I pretended to look around the shop again.

*[Lv.2 Magic Contract] [Lv.2 Cure Illness Potion] [Lv.2 Speedwell Grass]
[Lv.2 Sprite Shield] [Lv.2 Kim Joonghon's Claymore]...*

The shop contained all sorts of items. However, its real specialty sat on the counter. I walked up to the counter and pointed to an egg.

“Is this egg for sale too?”

[???

An egg with question marks as its item description. The shopkeeper finally reacted.

“That egg is from a special bird that only lives in this town. It's not something a nobody like you can buy.”

The man spoke with a husky voice that didn't sound hospitable in the slightest. I smiled back.

“Who else would buy it if not me?”

“That costs 40000 TP, kid.”

That much TP was impossible to acquire in only 10 days even if someone knew before entering the tower. However, this egg was certainly worth every TP. It was laid by Muninn, a raven that belonged to the god Odin. Since Muninn was a god's pet, this egg would surely be... Well, I didn't know the answer. I only introduced it as an Easter egg that not even Kim Suho could buy in the original story. Instead, the shop NPC would see through his sense of justice and gift him a different item. Of course, I had to make do with money since I didn't have Kim Suho's disposition.

“How about half of that amount? 20000 TP.”

“...”

The shopkeeper gave me an odd look.

“Isn't that reasonable? I don't have any more than that and you can't sell this egg here anyways.”

A 40000 TP item would never sell. Not even a business god like Yoo Yeonha could earn that much in 10 days.

“You have 20000 TP?”

“Of course.”

I took out twenty 1000 TP notes from my inventory and showed them to him. His eyes flickered.

“Why don't you take that hood off first? It's rude, don't you think?”

“Ah, yes, sorry.”

I should be one of the only polite customers he would've met in this town full of scammers. I quickly pulled my hood down.

"Do you know what this is?"

"Yes, I do."

"What is it?"

"The egg of an eagle, I think?"

The shopkeeper's eyes widened. As I said before, Muninn was a raven, but I thought it was an eagle when I wrote my novel. Of course, many commenters pointed out my mistake, but it was too late to make edits. I recalled saying something like, An eagle sounds cooler.

"You have good eyes. You're right, it's the egg of an eagle. However, most people won't be able to raise this beast. In fact, they won't even be able to hatch it."

"Ah... but you see, I'm not an ordinary person."

"..."

The shopkeeper gave me a meaningful look.

"Otherwise, how would I have made 20000 TP?"

I received the shopkeeper's gaze and spoke with ease.

[The third tutorial will end in 3 hours.]

A wooden tent barely stood in front of a campfire near the outskirts of town.

"This dumb, stupid town."

Aileen's face had turned haggard and impoverished after only 10 days.

"Everyone in this town is trash! Every single one of them!"

The humiliation she suffered flashed before her eyes. Having to eat a restaurant's leftover food, her money being pickpocketed out of her inventory, accidentally spilling juice she worked so hard to buy on a noble's clothes, then having to kneel and beg for his forgiveness... She would've never experienced such things on Earth.

"We somehow managed to earn enough TP."

Yi Yongha went through similar circumstances. Their sense of accomplishment felt overwhelming because of all the trouble they went through. They slept outside, skipped meals, and gave up on living like decent humans to scrape together 2000 TP.

"...I know, hic..." Aileen began to tear up.

"Are you crying?"

"Uun... They're tears of joy."

Aileen felt proud of herself, so proud of gathering 2000 TP with restricted stats that she wanted to shower herself with kisses.

"Oh, by the way, that was them, right?"

"Them?"

"You know, the ones we met on the first day at the pub."

"Ah, yes, they should be members of that group your chasing."

Aileen didn't know their names. However, she recalled their faces from an artifact scramble long ago. She had almost arrested them both with an impeccable strategy.

"Wasn't there someone else?"

Another member had been in the pub other than those two.

“You know, the one who made me drink alcohol.”

“I’m not sure, but only one person comes to mind when I think of a mask and hood.”

“I agree.”

Aileen nodded. Honestly, she felt quite confident that Black Lotus also entered this tower.

[The third tutorial has ended.]

“Finally, this damn tutorial is over.”

“I’ll bet my honor that less than half gathered more than 1000 TP.”

Aileen and Yi Yongha leaned against a tree exhausted and read through the system alerts.

[50/78 challengers currently possess more than 1000 TP in their inventory.] [Congratulations. You have managed to protect your profits from pickpockets, robbers, thugs, and scammers.]

Aileen turned towards Yi Yongha, who awkwardly laughed.

“There’s a bit over half, haha.”

However, the system alerts hadn’t finished.

[Hidden Reward – Profit Master] [The profit of victorious challengers will be revealed along with their nicknames (expenses excluded).] [The top 5 challengers will receive 100% of the profits they earned as a bonus.] [Rank 1 – Extra7, 21300 TP.] [Rank 2 – PhantomThief, 7800 TP][Rank 3...]

“Eh?”

“What?”

Aileen and Yi Yongha became speechless. The difference felt too overwhelming.

“It’s not 2130 TP, but...”

“21300 TP? How the fuck is that possible!”

Aileen inadvertently cursed in a mix of Korean and English.

“Who is it!”

Aileen felt so wronged. She had suffered through one humiliation after another to scrape together 2000 TP, but someone had earned 21300. He must’ve used a cowardly method!

“Who’s Extra7!”

Three hours later. A burst of light brought me back to my waiting room. I didn’t say goodbye to Jain, Cheok Jungyeong, and Boss since we could contact each other soon through the messenger system.

[Congratulations on achieving first place.] [21300 TP has been deposited.]

“Ah, thank you, thank you. You did well too, system.”

I bought Muninn’s egg with 20000 TP and only had 3000 TP left. However, the hidden reward returned 100% of my profits and made me rich again. I hadn’t expected such a setting change. I thought the co-author only made things more difficult, but it seemed I was wrong. A little bonus wasn’t so bad every once in a while.

“Ah.”

I took out Muninn’s egg from the inventory. Huu, huu. I blew on the 20000 TP egg in case it felt cold and carefully placed it inside my bed. I wondered what cute eagle would pop out and pulled my blanket over it. However, the good news didn’t end there.

[Your black entrance ticket has been confirmed.] [You may now retrieve 3 items you deposited since the tutorial has ended.]

I had been waiting for this. Equipment that could make up for the stats I neglected while crafting and selling items. I kneeled respectfully and already decided long ago what items to retrieve: aether, the Desert Eagle, and my laptop-linked smartwatch.

[Soon, your equipment storage will be transferred over.] [Please decide within 1 hour.]

Of course, the number of bullets available would limit the Desert Eagle, but I chose it for a single reason despite its disadvantages.

“Jin Sahyuk.”

My only reason was to kill Jin Sahyuk.

Chapter 163

Waiting Room

Shoong — The storage box from before the tutorial appeared. A window popped up with the list of items and I picked out three.

[Aether] [The armament, aether, will have its battle prowess restricted by 50%.]

Aether, which I hadn't seen in a while, sagged like a sad slime. I reached out and it twitched like a cute caterpillar before coiling up my arm. I smiled and took out the next item.

[Smartwatch]

I wore the laptop-linked smartwatch on my wrist as aether seeped into it and made it more elegant. Aether had great taste and it looked somewhat like a Patek Philippe watch now.

[Desert Eagle]

Finally, I grabbed the Desert Eagle. The platinum handle's size and coldness felt nostalgic.

"Hmm..."

I examined the Desert Eagle and transformed it with aether into a shotgun, sniper rifle, and assault rifle. The Desert Eagle had one magazine loaded for each form: 1 handgun magazine, 1 assault rifle magazine, 2 shotgun shells, and 5 sniper rifle bullets. That was all I had.

"Um, system?"

I felt like this wasn't enough and raised the Desert Eagle to the tower's system, which should be watching me. The storage box contained all my magazines. I didn't expect to receive hundreds of bullets back, but just a small portion would be enough.

“Um, you see, this is a gun. It might be a bit special, but a gun can't be used without bullets.”

I tried asking just in case.

— Extra7 has used Lv.2 Haggling.

— Extra7's Lv.2 Voice of Trust has been activated.

I hoped the system would listen to me.

“With that in mind, can you give me some extra magazines? I don't need too many.”

The system didn't reply even after a long time. I felt dejected and lowered my hand. It seemed the system couldn't make an exception. As I gave up...

[Your request has been accepted considering that this weapon is a gun.]

“Oh!”

I bowed respectfully as soon as I heard the message.

[However, we hope you will not use the mysterious power you possess at lower levels of the tower.] [The administrator of the lower levels may consider it an unfair advantage and punish you accordingly.]

“Understood. Thank you.”

I nodded. The mysterious power most likely referred to stigma. It didn't matter too much since I could currently only use 2 streaks. Any more than that and my body wouldn't be able to handle it.

[The magazines will now be transferred over.]

Soon, various magazines appeared in the air: 2 handgun magazines, 1 assault rifle magazine, 3 sniper rifle bullets, and 6 shotgun shells. This should be more than enough as I stored them in my inventory.

[After 24 hours of rest, you may advance to the tower's 2nd floor.] [You may now use all the system functions.]

[Here is a brief explanation.] [Waiting Room] — Normal Entrance: You may teleport to your waiting room when there are no hostile players nearby or when you are not in a combat zone. — Emergency Teleportation: You may teleport to your waiting room no matter where you are or what situation you are in. (This function has a 96 hour cooldown.) — Waiting Room Entrance Ticket: You may provide other players with entrance tickets to your waiting room.

[Deaths in the tower] — After the tutorial, players are given 7 lives in total. Once killed, players will revive at the nearest residential area and will receive a penalty based on their circumstances. (Note: If you die on the 2nd floor, you will lose all stat gains you've acquired and will restart from the tutorial.)

[Auction house...]

I already knew everything and nothing seemed to have changed from the original setting. Then I turned on my smartwatch and stared at the egg on my bed.

[???

I wasn't able to read the egg's information with the tower's current system. However...

[Lv.6 Muninn's Egg] [Tower – Mythical] — An egg laid by Muninn, the Eagle of Memory.

My smartwatch could perfectly read the egg's description. As I thought, my laptop was superior to the tower's system.

“Hmm... What do I do now?”

The 24 hours seemed needlessly long, but was barely enough to utilize each of the system's functions. Currently, members of various guilds should be having conferences.

“Oh right.”

I infused stigma's magic power into the blanket covering the egg. The little blanket nest I made for Muninn's egg became incredibly warm. Next...

“24 hours...”

I lay on the floor and thought about what to do.

[Remaining time – 23h 35m 39s]

I couldn't just waste an entire day.

“I'll fix this place up until random dice's cooldown ends. Then I'll start making more equipment once I get more materials.”

I came up with a plan.

“Um, can you please bring up a list of items from the player shop to renovate the waiting room?”

The system immediately pulled out a list of items from the player shop's miscellaneous category.

[Lv.1 Marble Slabs – 30 TP] [Lv.1 Timber – 20 TP] [Lv.1 Warehouse – 300 TP] [Lv.1 Training Room – 500 TP]...

“There's even a training room?”

I bought the marble slabs and thought about making a warehouse or a training room.

Shoong, shoong—

A bundle of marble slabs appeared. The Lv.1 marble still looked better than wood. I began to tear out the waiting room's wooden floor to install them. Of course, even such a menial task took a lot with my low stats.

[Your strength has increased by 0.003 points.] [Your vitality has increased by 0.003 points.] [Your strength has increased by 0.003 points.] [Your vitality has increased by 0.003 points.]...

I received many similar alerts after about 6 hours of work.

“If only I had the goblin tablet with me.”

I wiped off the sweat from my forehead. Tiring— A message suddenly popped up in front of me.

[Player PhantomThief has invited player Extra7 to a group chat.] [Would you like to accept?]

PhantomThief was Jain's nickname. It seemed she figured out how to use the messenger system. I accepted.

[Extra7 has entered the chat.]

PhantomThief: Hey newbie. There's even a group chat. Isn't this interesting?

Goryeo'sStrongest: Whadup?

PhantomThief: Look at Cheok Jungyeong trying to type lol what an idiot.

Goryeo'sStrongest: The screen is too small for my fingers. You're next to me, so why do I even need to chat?

[Boss has entered the chat.]

PhantomThief: Hey Boss.

Boss: Hi.

PhantomThief: Look, our nicknames are similar. [1]

Boss: Similar? How?

PhantomThief: Isn't that obvious?

Boss: No.

A holographic keyboard popped up when I reached out to the chat window.

Me: What's everyone doing?

Boss: I'm training.

PhantomThief: I'm looking around the community for more information. There's already an anonymous information café. People sure are quick-witted. It looks like a great way to earn TP.

Me: Is the owner a djinn or from a guild?

PhantomThief: I don't know yet. I think I'll set up my profile too.

Boss: Profile? How do you

Boss didn't finish her sentence since she typed slow.

Boss: do that?

PhantomThief: It'll be too hard for you, Boss. No matter how well we explain it.

Boss: I can do it. Teach me.

[9 hours and 30 minutes have passed. Your random dice have recharged.]

My random dice came back at just the right moment. I placed the chat window aside and took them out. My inventory was still empty after selling everything.

“Good materials, good materials.”

I rolled the dice as I wished. They hit the marble floor and transformed into a shining piece of leather.

[Lv.4 Black Gargoyle Leather]

“Oh.”

It practically screamed special.

In player CaptainBritain’s waiting room 12 hours later, Rachel opened her eyes on the shabby wooden floor. She shivered and rubbed her arms.

“Huuu...”

She sighed after her teeth chattered and had woken up again in the middle of sleeping. Not from the cold, but because of her body’s clock. She checked the community page after waking up.

[Confirming members of the Royal Court guild. Please leave comments.]

Rachel had posted as soon as she finished the second tutorial so she could meet up with her guild members. She still hadn’t met Kim Hajin and wondered what he was up to. Of course, she believed he was doing just fine on his own. Then she left the community page and lay back on the ground. Her current living space felt uncomfortable without even a blanket or pillow.

“...”

She struggled to fall back to sleep. Although she had cleared the high-intermediate difficulty tutorial, all sorts of worries rose in her head: England’s current situation, the Royal Court guild, and the person whose life or death remained unknown. Rachel decided to work out and shake off those complicated thoughts.

“Huu.”

She began to do push-ups. Three sets of 40 followed by 3 sets of 60 curl-ups, then squats and the Royal Court’s basic sword training routine...

After 4 hours of training, she accessed the community again.

Public Forum [Tutorial clear records.] [Is there anyone with a Lv.2 sword willing to trade for a Lv.2 axe?] — Me. I’ll put it up on the auction house. — The auction house has high fees though... [Difficulty doesn’t matter from the 2nd floor onwards, right?] — Looks like it.

The public forum seemed quite busy. Honestly, Rachel was also busy until about 8 hours ago. At the time, all 7 Royal Court guild members had gathered in Rachel’s waiting room for a meeting.

“Hmm?”

An interesting post caught Rachel’s attention with dozens of people commenting.

[Everyone, someone earned 20000 TP in the third tutorial.] — No way, who? — Don’t lie, please. — No, no, it’s already been confirmed by everyone who cleared the highest difficulty tutorial. His nickname is Extra7. — Extra7? — Yes, people are guessing it’s either the Vast Expanse or a member of the Nine Stars.

“Eh? 20000 TP?”

Rachel’s mouth opened in shock. She only managed to collect 3500 TP in the high-intermediate difficulty Tutorial Town. Even then, other players labeled her as vicious. To have 6 times as much... Rachel refreshed the page while feeling a bit jealous.

[Oh! Hey, there’s a Lv.3 armor in the auction house!]

A new comment popped up.

“...!”

Rachel slightly jumped and immediately entered the auction house.

[Lv.3 Gargoyle Leather Armor (J – White Order)] Lv.2 Resistance, Lv.2 Ease of Movement, Lv.3 Durability [Starting Bid – 500 TP] [Current Bid – 600 TP]

A Lv.3 item had appeared when the tower climb hadn't even begun. Rachel didn't know what white order meant, but it still sounded cool. She wanted it as soon as she saw it. I want it. I want to make that armor mine. She clicked to make a bid.

In Player Nayunjajangman's waiting room.

[Wow, someone from the third tutorial earned 20000 TP!]

Chae Nayun looked at the same post that Rachel had read. She already knew that Extra7 had earned 20000 TP in the third tutorial. After all, she had seen it with her own eyes.

“Could he really be Vast Expanse?”

The thought that he could be the famous Vast Expanse never crossed her mind.

“Who?”

“Who are you talking about?”

The Essence of the Strait members in her waiting room also seemed interested. Chae Nayun had invited them over with the waiting room entrance tickets.

“Extra7.”

“Oh, him? The public forum is filled with people talking about him. Did he really make 20000 TP?”

This cheerful voice belonged to Yi Jiyeon, a former classmate from Cube who had chosen the lowest difficulty tutorial.

Chae Nayun briefly replied, “Yeah, I saw it with my own eyes. He earned slightly more than 20000 TP.”

“No way, really? How the heck did he make 20000?”

“I’m not sure. By the way, aren’t you being a bit rude?”

“Hm? What do you mean?”

“Don’t use words like heck when you’re talking about him. Do you think he’s your friend?”

“...”

Yi Jiyeon became speechless. Chae Nayun retracted her sharp gaze and opened the list of encountered players, a system functionality only available in the waiting room.

List of Encountered Players — [Goryeo’sStrongest]... [Extra7]

“Eh?”

To her surprise, she spotted Extra7 on the list. However, she quickly accepted it since it wouldn’t have been strange to pass each other at least once in the highest difficulty tutorial. Clearly, neither had recognized each other. With a small smile, she sent a friend request to her old master.

[You have sent a friend request to player Extra7.]

[You have crafted a Lv.4 equipment.] [Your Lv.2 crafting technique has improved to Lv.3]

“Huu.”

I sigh in exhaustion after 9 hours of hard work. I finally succeeded in crafting a Lv.4 equipment, the best I had made so far. It required both aether and stigma’s magic power and I called it the Black Messiah’s Horrible Suit.

[Black Messiah’s Horrible Suit] Lv.3 Resistance, Lv.4 Durability, Lv.3 Temperature Control, Lv.3 Stealth

“My naming sense... sucks.”

I had become a bit crazy before finally succeeding. Well, I could just change the name before selling it.

I put the suit on. It felt light, yet stuck to my body. This armor made moving easier.

“Amazing.”

It felt much better than the failed products from before. At first, I used half of the Lv.4 material to make a Lv.3 armor, which turned into a complete failure. I randomly named it and tossed it in the auction house. If I recalled correctly, I named it: [Lv.3 Gargoyle’s Leather Armor (J – White Order)]. The J stood for Jin, the second part of my name, and white order meant the lowest grade.

“I guess I’ll see how it’s doing.”

Feeling bored, I went to check the auction house when...

Tiring— An alert popped up from the group chat.

PhantomThief: Ahhh, this waiting room sucks. How am I supposed to stay here for 24 hours?

Jain complained.

Me: Lol why don't you buy a bed? There's one in the player shop.

PhantomThief: Are you crazy? That's such a waste of TP. Auuu, Cheok Jungyeong reeks of sweat.

The red entrance ticket's waiting room was twice the size of other rooms since 2 people would share it.

Boss: Jain, you should train like Gyeong. A beautiful flower only blooms in solitude.

PhantomThief: Stop making typos, Boss.

Me: Boss, have you eaten anything?

Boss: Of course.

Me: Hold on, I'll send you a ticket to my room.

I planned to invite Boss to my room since she probably hadn't eaten anything. However...

[Player Nayunjajangman has sent you a friend request.]

"Hm?"

I suddenly received a friend request and tilted my head at the familiar ID.

"What?"

How did he send me a friend request? Didn't I block everyone from sending me friend requests through the public forum? A sudden suspicion crept up inside me.

"Erm..."

I hesitated before accepting.

Ding— Nayunjajangman immediately messaged me.

[Hyung! What happened? I heard you made 20000 TP!]

1. Their nicknames share the same first character in Korean. 📎

Chapter 164

Jungle (1)

[Player Nayunjajangman has sent you a friend request.]

How did he send me a friend request? Didn't I block everyone from sending me friend requests through the public forum? A sudden suspicion crept up inside me.

"Erm..."

I hesitated before accepting.

Ding— Nayunjajangman immediately messaged me.

[Hyung! What happened? I heard you made 20000 TP!]

I checked my system settings once again.

[Allow friend requests through the public forum (OFF)]

It remained the same. I had blocked friend requests since things would get annoying after my name spread from the third tutorial. Players couldn't send friend requests unless they had been within 20 meters at some point.

[Hey, how did you add me as a friend?]

I messaged Nayunjajangman as a strange feeling rose inside me.

[Lol We must've passed by each other in the third tutorial. I saw hyung's name in my list of encountered players.]

[You're also in the highest difficulty?]

[Yeah lol]

“Eh?”

I took my eyes off the chat window for a moment. My neck suddenly began to hurt and I needed some time to think. Only 50 people managed to clear the third tutorial. The first part of his name always bothered me even though he always called me hyung and spoke like a man. Was it just a coincidence? Or had I changed fate?

[Hyung, how did you make so much TP? I have mad respect for you.]

I closed the chat window and typed ImGosu into the public forum.

[There is no comment or post under that player name.]

Next, I typed Nayunjajangman.

— Anyone clear the highest difficulty tutorial? — The highest difficulty tutorial is filled with scammers. Be careful, everyone. Pickpockets can also steal money from your inventory. — Yep, I got 150 TP stolen from my inventory while walking in broad daylight. — Also, there are thugs all over the dark alleyways. They’re gunning to steal your money. — I don’t know if the hardest difficulty tutorial has any benefits. — Lol I am in the highest difficulty tutorial. — Screw off if you don’t believe me. — Fuck you too!

Cold sweat began to form after reading through his comments and posts. I brushed my hair back and felt a chill down my spine. My head grew hot and my hands trembled as I tapped the holographic keyboard.

[It just happened.]

[You just happened to make 20000 TP? Hyung, are you really Vast Expanse? I’m a big fan.]

[By the way, are you really a guy?]

I asked a seemingly random question after a bit of back and forth.

[Why? That was kinda sudden.]

[Just asking. You know, your name is jajangman. Do you run a restaurant? How did a restaurant worker clear the highest difficulty tutorial?]

[Lol I'll tell you when we meet. Like I said, I think we'll meet one day.]

Nayunjajangman avoided the question. I didn't dig into it too much, afraid my suspicion would be correct. He sent me a few more messages, but I told him I was busy and left. Then Boss suddenly messaged me.

Boss: Newbie.

Me: Yes? What's up?

Boss: Do you have anything to eat?

Me: Lol Didn't you say you already ate?

I laughed in the chat, but my expression remained stiff as I subconsciously touched my lips. It felt cold.

Boss: W-Well, the player shop has bento boxes for sale.

Boss: I just thought I shouldn't waste TP on bento boxes.

Me: Oh, okay, hold on a second. I'll invite Boss to my place. We can eat together.

Boss: Ok.

I sent Boss an invitation as I sighed on the edge of my bed. I wouldn't be alone thanks to Boss, but she didn't show up even after a long time. A message arrived 15 minutes later.

Boss: How do I use the invitation letter?

“...”

Me: Just take it out of your inventory and rip it in half. You can just ask the system if there's anything that you don't know.

Boss: Ah, okay!

Soon, a light flashed in my waiting room and Boss appeared. She stood imposingly with her eyes closed, then slowly opened them.

“...?”

Her eyes widened. “W-Where is this?”

“It's my waiting room.”

“What?”

Marble tiles, a comfy couch and bed, a storage closet made from the wooden flooring, a table, tableware, etc. It probably looked quite different from Boss' empty waiting room.

“You know how it is, I like decorating things. Wait just a moment. I'll cook something for you.”

[The final bid has been completed.]

“Yes!”

Rachel clenched her fists. After a fierce 3 hour battle, she managed to obtain the [Lv.3 Gargoyle Leather Armor (J – White Order)]. Her heart filled with happiness and she considered it a strategic victory. She had raised the bid by 500 TP in the last 30 seconds, shocking other players from bidding any higher.

“Huu, huu.”

Rachel collected her thoughts and calmed herself. The coldness that made her shiver had disappeared a long time ago.

[Lv.3 Gargoyle Leather Armor (J – White Order) will be transferred to player CaptainBritain’s waiting room.]

Shoong—

A cluster of light descended from the ceiling and changed into the gargoyle leather armor. Rachel held up the incredibly light and elegant black armor. She especially liked the white symbols engraved on the leather.

“Hehe...”

What a good purchase! Rachel joyfully stared at it and carefully put it on.

[The equipment’s size will be adjusted to fit your body.]

The armor shrunk to snugly fit Rachel. It felt so light like she wasn’t wearing anything at all. Plus, she also didn’t need to tie the strings in the front. They came together like magnets and automatically tied themselves.

“Oh.”

Rachel happily hummed as she looked in the mirror. Then she entered the community to brag.

[Whoa lol the Lv.3 armor got sold for 3000 TP] — Isn’t that too much? — Must be someone rich. I’d pay that for a Lv.4 armor, but not Lv.3.

“You’re just jealous.”

Rachel pouted and commented.

— That’s quite cheap considering the tutorial just ended. — Are you the one who bought it? — No. — Don’t you remember what you had to go through to earn 1000 TP? 3000 TP is a lot.

“Sigh.”

Rachel shook her head. As far as she was concerned, she bought it for cheap. Then she moved on to the next post.

[What is everyone using their TP for?] — I bought some furniture for my waiting room, a bed and a blanket. Oh, and some bento boxes. — Same. Sucks to sleep on a wooden board. It was money well spent. — How’s the player shop’s bento box? — The 5 TP one is trash, but the 10 TP is pretty good.

Rachel felt a bit proud after reading those comments since she gave up those comforts to buy the Lv.3 armor.

[In 10 minutes, you will be transferred to the tower’s 2nd floor.] [The system’s help will decrease starting from the 2nd floor.]

“Sunshine.”

A system window popped up as Rachel summoned her wind elemental, who became a lot smaller after entering the tower.

— Yeeeah?

“Get ready.”

— Okay.

Sunshine entered Rachel’s leather armor. As expected, the combination of wind and leather felt especially good. Her body became even lighter as she prepared to enter the second floor.

* * *

[Lv.3 Gargoyle’s Leather Armor has been sold for 3000 TP.] [You will receive 2700 TP after a 10% deduction.] [You have obtained 3 auction house trust points. Your trust level will increase to grade 9 with 7 more trust points.]

“Oh? That much?”

The amount shocked me. I even double-checked to make sure I wasn't seeing things. I really received 2700 TP.

“I guess people don't know the market price since it's still early.”

Of course, some NPCs in the highest difficulty Tutorial Town also bought Lv.3 armor for 3000 TP. However, they naturally possessed more TP.

Lv.3 items were quite common outside the tutorial. They could easily be acquired starting from the 3rd floor. That said, the armor I made would most likely be the best Lv.3 armor around.

“Was it Jain?”

The buyer and the seller remained anonymous in the auction house, so I messaged Jain. However, she said, I'm not interested in such things.

“Then who was it?”

Could someone else spend 3000 TP so easily? Another system alert popped up as I pondered.

[In 10 minutes, you will be transferred to the tower's 2nd floor.] The system's help will decrease starting from the 2nd floor.]

“Ah, it's starting soon. Boss, wake up!”

I shook Boss, who slept on my bed. However, she tightly grabbed the blanket and refused to get up.

“It's time to leave, Boss.”

“Uaaaauu.”

“What?”

“Auuuuii...”

“What?”

I yanked the blanket away. Koong. Boss fell to the ground with the blanket. Only after her head slammed on the ground did she open her eyes.

“Mm, mmm... Your bed feels very nice...”

“Get ready.”

I wore the [Lv.4 Black Messiah's Horrible Suit], placed the [Lv.3 Temperature Control Robe] over it, equipped the [Lv.2 Protection Mask], slipped on the [Lv.3 Utility Footwear], and placed the [Lv.3 Ice attribute Dagger] made from frozentium into the holster around my thigh.

“Now this is what you call overgeared.”

I fully loaded myself with various equipment made from the random dice, stigma's magic power, and dexterity.

[Desert Eagle (firepower restriction: 60%)] — A portion of the restriction (10%) will be lifted when you reach the 3rd floor. — A portion of the restriction (20%) will be lifted when you reach the 5th floor. — A portion of the restriction (30%) will be lifted when you reach the 7th floor.

I felt confident in my Desert Eagle despite the restricted firepower.

“Ooh...”

I turned around and saw Boss staring at me in envy.

“Oh right, I have something for you too, Boss.”

“Oh?” Boss shot up in surprise. “Really?”

“Yes.”

“Hahaha, I see you treat your boss with respect. So, what is it?”

Boss walked up to me with a hearty laugh. I took out a black robe from my inventory. It looked quite beautiful thanks to aether.

“How is it?”

“Mm, I like it. Very good.”

Boss smiled in satisfaction and pulled the hood over her head. A system message popped up at the perfect timing.

[You will now be transferred to the 2nd floor.] [Please prepare yourself.]

Whoosh— It felt like being carried away by the wind as my feet touched down on the 2nd floor. This would be the real start to the Tower of Wish. I opened my eyes and saw Boss next to me with 2000 other players in a huge field. They stared at each other in surprise and began to look for their companions.

“Where are Jain and Gyeong?”

“Let me see... Oh, they’re there.”

I pointed behind us. I easily spotted Cheok Jungyeong among the crowd with Jain next to him.

“Let’s go.”

“Yeah.”

We walked up to them.

“Oh, Boss and newbie. Hey.”

Hundreds of groups began to form like how we did.

“Hello.”

A man suddenly appeared on the other side of the field. His hair, unique clothes, and ringing voice distinguished him from everyone else.

“My name is Luke. I am the administrator of the 2nd floor.”

He only gave a simple self-introduction. However, his voice echoed across the entire field.

“Nice to meet you.” Luke lightly bowed. His respectful tone, formality, and voice captured all of our attention.

“I’d love to talk to every one of you. Unfortunately, we don’t have the time, so I will cut straight to the chase.”

Luke received everyone’s gaze and pointed into the distance.

“As you can see, the 2nd floor is quite chaotic. It is filled with frightening scenes of nature.”

The 2nd floor’s scenery could be considered chaos itself. You couldn’t tell a jungle from a volcano or a glacier from a swamp. I widened my eyes and peered into the distance. My thousand-mile eyes pierced through the dense leaves. However, this floor’s strange mixture of land wasn’t something a grade 7 thousand-mile eyes could comprehend.

— Interesting.

— An impossible terrain...

Other players didn’t seem all that surprised. They probably expected something like this from a tower of this magnitude.

“Your goal is simple. Travel through this chaotic land filled with traps and monsters to find the elevators that lead to the 3rd floor.”

I looked around for a specific person as Luke continued. I couldn't find Jin Sayhyuk, but found someone else instead. A girl with blonde hair and the armor she wore caught my attention.

"Vice leader, where did you get that armor?"

"Oh, it's nothing."

"It's so pretty."

"Huhu, it's nothing special."

Rachel proudly stood contrary to what she said. So Rachel was the pushover who bought my armor. I wanted to say hi, but the Chameleon Troupe members stood next to me.

"There are 10 elevators hidden on the 2nd floor."

Luke continued to explain.

"Each elevator can hold 50 people, which is quite a lot. Unfortunately, they are very slow and take 8 hours to travel back and forth."

Many players would remain on this floor for a long time, but that didn't matter too much. Entering the 3rd floor early didn't have any benefits. Honestly, it would be better to go there later.

"That is all."

The 3rd floor would be the first residential area that players could access. However, its poor conditions made staying on this floor a much better choice.

"Oh, I'm sure you all know, but I will explain it once again. You will have to start over from the tutorial if your vitality reaches zero."

Luke sat under the shade of a tree and began to read a book after finishing his explanation.

— What are you going to do?

— We don't have much of a choice.

— Shouldn't we hold a meeting first?

— I don't see the need for it. We only have to find the elevators.

Players quickly left and didn't want to stay in this strange place for too long.

"How interesting. We should hurry up too," Cheok Jungyeong spoke. However, I didn't follow them.

"You can all go ahead."

"Eh?"

"What are you going to do?"

"I have something to do," I simply replied.

"I see."

"Don't worry, I'll chase after all of you soon."

"Mm... I'm sure you'll be fine. Alright, we'll go ahead."

Boss, Jain, and Cheok Jungyeong chose to head north. I climbed a zelkova tree to locate Jin Sahyuk from a higher vantage point.

"Huu, I should be able to see everyone from here."

By the time I arrived at the peak of the tree...

"Yeah, you should."

"...?"

Someone replied to my murmuring. A chill immediately ran down my back. I turned to the right where the voice came from. Amidst the leaves, a man I once met stared at me.

“Hello.”

“...”

The handsome man who accompanied Jin Sahyuk appeared out of nowhere and placed his hand on my shoulder.

“Are you looking for someone?”

I quickly jumped down as he followed suit. Tak. Both of us lightly landed.

“Good landing.”

The man applauded as I took a deep breath. I felt so tense my tongue went stiff, but I didn’t need to be scared. I shouldn’t lose to anyone inside the Tower of Wish and silently walked forward.

“Oi, you should answer when someone asks you a question. I’ll ask again. Are you looking for someone?”

He continued to follow me. Huu. I stopped walking and turned around.

“Yeah.”

“Who?”

I didn’t know if he expected me to actually tell him, but I did so anyway.

“Your companion.”

“My companion... Oh, the girl who fought you in Busan?” the man asked full of interest.

“Yeah.”

“Why?”

“Do you need to ask?”

I took off my hood. By the looks of it, he already knew my identity.

“I’m looking for her so I can kill her.”

“...”

His expression immediately turned stiff as I took out my gun. The man who didn’t exist in my setting glared, but soon smiled again.

“Iya, so cool. Unfortunately, you’re going to have to wait.”

I furrowed my brows without replying.

“You see, I stole her ticket. I used it instead of her.”

The man grinned.

“What?”

“I used her black ticket. I even got something called a bonus skill from it. Want me to show you?”

That completely shocked me. He didn’t seem to be lying since he mentioned the bonus skill.

“Oh... I see.”

I quickly regained my composure. It didn’t matter all that much. It might be delayed, but Jin Sahyuk would undoubtedly enter the Tower of Wish. I could always kill her then.

“In that case—”

As I spoke... Chweeek— Puuk. Something sharp or blunt struck my back. Was it a dagger, an arrow, or a club? I couldn't tell because I didn't feel anything, not even pain. Was this the power of a Lv.4 armor?

“What's this?”

I found a dagger on the ground.

[Lv.1 Well-sharpened dagger]

A blade without a handle. Someone had attacked me.

“Oh, sorry, sorry. My companion must have gotten angry. She likes Sahyuk a lot, you see.”

“...That's good to know.”

“Sorry, I only told her to stand by and watch.”

“You don't have to be sorry.”

I raised my gun and easily pinpointed the attacker's location from the dagger's trajectory. Then I fired towards a tree in the north.

— Uk!

Soon, a short scream rang out and something heavy fell to the ground.

“You shouldn't do something in the first place if you're going to feel sorry, right?”

I said with a confident smile. I wouldn't lose against anyone inside the Tower of Wish, especially at the earlier stages.

Chapter 165

Jungle (2)

I pondered about the man in front of me. I didn't know his abilities and couldn't detect any changes in the setting. Was it because he was too strong? Or was it because he wasn't in the original story? Regardless of his gift, I had no reason to fear him inside the tower. I couldn't guarantee my victory, but I felt like I wouldn't lose against anyone.

"I guess you're right."

The man retorted. His expression constantly changed from a glare filled with killing intent to a serpent-like smile.

"I shouldn't do something if I'm going to feel sorry."

Suddenly, his body flickered. It happened instantly, but I noticed his body had transformed into magic power.

"Yeah, it was my fault," the man murmured and laughed. The corners of his mouth practically hung on his ears. I raised my gun as he transformed into a current of magic power and flew back.

"What..."

I wasn't mistaken. He definitely transformed into magic power. However, I could trace his movements. Then I pulled the trigger. Two bullets passed through his body. On the third bullet, I infused stigma's magic power along with an anti-magic attribute.

"Up!"

The bullet struck his shoulder and he materialized before falling to the ground.

“That hurt.”

He sat upright and rubbed his wounded shoulder. I remained calm and transformed the Desert Eagle into an assault rifle as I approached him with more anti-magic bullets.

[The administrator of the second floor, Luke, is watching you.]

However, I could feel the administrator’s gaze on me. I slightly flinched, but still pointed my gun at the man.

“It’s not easy having my power restricted.”

The man got up and sighed, “Sigh, fine. I’ll admit it. You’re the strongest person in here. My shoulder hurts so much, I can barely move.”

I could feel the sincerity in his words.

“I should have brought a gun too. My weapon is so heavy I can’t even hold it yet.”

The man grumbled and slowly walked away. Meanwhile, I thought about the system alert. It said Luke was only watching, so I judged it would be fine to fire another bullet. The man joined up with his companion, the woman who threw the dagger at me. She seemed to be heavily wounded and clutched her chest as she gasped for breath.

“Lacors...”

The man murmured an ancient language as symbols appeared on the ground below him.

“...?”

“Interesting, isn’t it? It’s the skill I chose with my black ticket.”

“Mass teleport?”

“You know about it?” The man grinned.

“You took the worst one.” I coldly shot back and aimed.

“Really? It sounded pretty useful to me.”

I carefully infused stigma’s magic power into the bullet to kill him before he left. KWANG! I fired, but pillars of dirt shot up from the ground to form a shield. Tudududu— My anti-magic bullet easily tore through the mixture of magic power and dirt, but all the layers managed to halt the bullet’s momentum.

— Kuk!

The man blocked it with his body.

— Huu... It’s been a while since I’ve felt this much pain.

His exhausted voice rang out from the other side of the shields. A spiraling current of magic power signaled the activation of mass teleport.

[Warning! Luke, the administrator of the 2nd floor, is watching you carefully!]

A warning popped up. It seemed I fought too close to the administrator. I felt confident I could’ve killed him at least once if we fought farther away. I should take this into account when I kill Jin Sahyuk.

I put my gun down. Then I put on airs and spoke generously, “Alright, you’re free to go. I’ll let you live this one time.”

— Hm?

I heard a flustered voice and simply retorted, “I’m letting you go since I’m quite touched that you stopped to pick up your friend.”

The man didn’t reply. I wanted to hide my weakness and prevent him from finding out that I couldn't freely use anti-magic bullets in front of an administrator.

— Thanks.

I didn't know whether he bought it or not, but that's what he said.

— Then I'll let you live once too in the future. My name is Bell. Remember it.

“Yeah, yeah.”

Shooong— Two clumps of magic power shot into the air as I watched them fly away.

“Sigh.”

I didn't expect Jin Sahyuk to not be here, but this worked to my advantage. If she entered the tower 2 months later, that meant I would have more time to display an overwhelming difference in power.

“For now...” I peered in the direction my companions took.

Kuoooo—

A large gorilla roared in the distance.

— Kuhahaha!

Cheok Jungyeong fought the gorilla and seemed even more like a gorilla himself.

— Come, I'll fight you!

They began to wrestle, but he naturally couldn't surpass it in pure strength inside the tower. Their hands interlocked and the gorilla pushed him back. Then...

Cheok Jungyeong roared like a beast and his muscles bulked up. The tide of battle suddenly turned as he strangled the gorilla's neck. Cheok Jungyeong strangled it to death despite its fierce struggle.

— Little imp, don't get so eager...

With those words, Cheok Jungyeong passed out on the ground. Jain looked down at him and shook her head.

— Do you think he knows this place isn't a dueling arena, Boss?

I chuckled at Jain's question and ran towards them. I wasn't sure if they purposely walked slower for me or if the gorilla had delayed them, but I quickly caught up.

"I'm back."

"Oh? That was quick." Boss spotted me first.

"Hajin, what were you doing?" Jain spoke like we were close friends and Boss gave her an odd look.

"..."

I looked around our surroundings without replying. The 2nd floor exploration had only just begun, so many other players wandered around in a 1-2 km radius. I spotted Chae Nayun among them with Essence of the Strait members and purposely looked away.

"Hajin?" Boss asked again.

"Yes? Oh, it's nothing. Have you run into anyone?"

"No, I don't think other players want to cooperate with strangers," Jain replied. Most traveled with their guild members.

"Mmm... Let's sit for now."

"Sit?"

“Yes.”

“Why? Shouldn’t we walk?” I pointed at the gorilla Cheok Jungyeong hunted.

“I want to dismantle this first. Wait for a bit.”

“Do you need to?”

“Its leather is important and we also need food. We’ll be staying here for a long time.”

“Long time? Nah.”

Cheok Jungyeong, who passed out a moment ago, suddenly shot up. He recovered at a frightening speed.

“Didn’t that white-haired guy say 50 people could go on each elevator? He said there are 10 of them... so 2 days should be enough. Can’t you do multiplication and subtraction?”

“No, it’s not a matter of math.”

It had more to do with efficiency, ethics, selfishness, and altruism. Each elevator could fit 50 people. However, that was the maximum. The elevator didn’t need to be full.

“The administrator said 50 people at most.”

“Yeah, so if 50 people get on each one...”

“Use your brain, you dimwit.” Jain stepped in and made my job easier.

“You don’t need all 50 people to get the elevator going. That means even a single person can leave with it.”

“Exactly.”

What Cheok Jungyeong said was only the best-case scenario. Considering the innate greed and selfishness of humans, probably only 20 or so people would go up each day. In other words, we could be stuck here for over 100 days.

“Hm, I see... but doesn’t that mean we should try to find an elevator as quickly as possible?”

“Don’t worry, it’ll be fine if we’re a little late.”

The 3rd floor was a terrible place. I needed at least 3-4 days of preparation before going up.

“Argh, fuck. Then what do you want us to do?”

Unfortunately, I couldn’t explain in detail.

“Let’s take things slow rather than rushing.”

I sat near the gorilla and began to dismantle it. I skinned it with a knife, cut out its flesh, and pulled out its teeth. I had grown accustomed to this while dismantling fish during the second tutorial. I found it hard at first, but it became easier after I pretended everything was clay. Of course, a huge gorilla was still more disgusting than a fish.

[Lv.1 System can use sanity defense mode.]

The system messaged me as I dismantled the gorilla.

“Ah, thank you for the suggestion, but I can handle this.”

“Hm?”

“Why are you talking to yourself?” Boss and Jain gave me a strange look.

“Oh right, don’t yell or get angry at the system messages you see.”

“Why?” Jain tilted her head in bewilderment.

“Well, we should be grateful to it if you think about it. It’s helping us climb without receiving any compensation.”

“...”

When I said that, Jain and Cheok Jungyeong gave me strange looks and took a step back. They treated me as though I had gone mad. Only Boss fervently nodded. Soon, I finished dismantling the jungle gorilla.

[You have acquired the technique, Lv.1 Dismantling.] — You may now instantly dismantle low level monsters.

[Lv.2 Jungle Gorilla’s Leather] [Jungle Gorilla’s Meat] [Lv.2 Jungle Gorilla’s Teeth]

I stored everything in my inventory and stood up.

“Let’s get going now.”

Three hours later, Rachel and 6 other Royal Court guild members walked through a fierce snowstorm.

“Vice leader! The snowstorm is too harsh!”

“How did a jungle suddenly change into Antarctica? Auu, I’m freezing.”

Rachel’s Royal Court guild chose the northwest jungle. However, a large snowfield suddenly appeared as they toiled through it.

“Let’s stop and rest!”

Rachel shouted. Her companions stopped and huddled together. They didn’t need to build an igloo as Rachel faced the blizzard and took a deep breath. Then 2 elementals that only she could see formed a circular barrier around them.

“Huu... There’s just no end to this. We don’t know where the elevators are and what’s in this place.”

A guild member spoke inside the warmth of Rachel’s barrier.

“Vice leader, I think we should split into 2 teams. We can still use the tower’s messenger.”

A system window suddenly popped up as various members brought up different ideas.

[The first elevator has departed with 9 people.]

“Hah?”

Everyone yelled in shock. Nine people? Fifty could have taken it, but only 9 had departed.

“Nine? Dammit!”

“These fools blinded by greed!”

“Let’s split up.” Rachel immediately decided after seeing this message.

“We’ll split into the teams discussed before and locate an elevator as quickly as possible. The first one to find an elevator can send everyone else the coordinates.”

With that, Rachel took off the 3000 TP gargoyle leather armor and handed it to the second team’s captain, Davin.

“Um, vice leader, what’s this?”

“Wear it, Davin. My team can deal with the cold with my elementals, but that’s not the case for you. This armor has a temperature control function, so you can rotate it amongst yourselves if needed.”

“Yes, thank you.” Davin accepted the armor with a touched expression.

“Now let’s go. We need to hurry!”

The 7 Royal Court guild members split into 2 teams.

“Don’t forget to send periodic reports. Good luck.”

“Yes, Your Majesty.”

“Thank you.”

As the leader of the first team, Rachel went east with 2 other guild members. They paved through the fierce blizzard for 10 minutes, 20 minutes, 30 minutes... After walking for a long time...

“Wait, what’s that?”

One member pointed into the distance. A sharp, golden object shone in the snow.

“It kind of looks like a... snowmobile.”

“Let’s go. It might be a hidden piece.”

With bright expressions, the two male guild members walked up to the golden object. Rachel had an eerie feeling, but followed after them.

“It’s a snowmobile!”

“Hurry, vice leader!”

The guild members stood in front of the mysterious object and called her over.

“A snowmobile?” Rachel felt excited. It would undoubtedly be one of the best methods of transportation here.

“Yes, I’m certain!”

“Wait, how do we use this?”

“I got it. I’ve driven this befo—”

They couldn’t hold back their excitement and touched the golden snowmobile. Immediately...

“Uk!”

“Huup!”

Pzzt—! A powerful spark shot out. They couldn’t react to the instantaneous current of magic power and fainted on the spot.

“Re... Refel! David!”

“Dwarven supercar?” Jain tilted her head in a jungle cave that served as our temporary base.

“Yes, there’s an artifact by that name that you can’t normally touch.”

“And how do you know that?”

“Ah, well, you’ve seen it too, right? The administrator was reading a book.”

“Huh?”

The administrator of the 2nd floor sat under a tree and began to read a book the moment he finished his explanation. Being kind and social, Kim Suho would provide Luke with some company before setting off. He would then spot the book in Luke’s hands and ask about it. Luke would smile meaningfully and give the book to Kim Suho.

“I sneaked a peek. The elevators and the supercar are both artifacts left behind by dwarves.”

“Ah, so that’s why you were late? What does this supercar look like?”

“It should look like a snowmobile.”

This floor contained several hidden pieces considered dwarven artifacts. I wanted to find all the hidden steles and the supercar on the 2nd floor.

“So things will get easier if we find it?”

“Yes, it’ll be helpful on other floors as well.”

The Tower of Wish mainly used horses for transportation. However, low level horses couldn’t be used in battle. Famous steeds like the Red Hare, Bucephalus, and the slightly lesser Reckless could, but would be difficult to obtain.

“Do you know where to look?”

“No, but I’m confident I can find it with my eyes.”

The 2nd floor should have 3 dwarven supercars. I planned to give Kim Suho a map of the 2nd floor, so there should be no problem if I took one.

Koong. Koong.

Huge footsteps rang out from outside. I glanced sideways and saw Cheok Jungyeong return from hunting. As always, injuries riddled his body. However, they looked even worse today. A huge cut on his side revealed his ribs and something seemed to have bitten off a part of his calf.

“...Off doing weird things again?”

Jain remarked as she shook her head. Cheok Jungyeong received it with a big grin.

“I tasted ecstasy inside the boundary between life and death.”

“So... where’s the corpse?”

“...”

However, he didn’t reply.

“You didn’t bring it again? You should have brought it back if you could.”

I grumbled as I handed him a potion I had made with herbs from the player shop. It was only Lv.0 since I didn’t have a proper recipe, but would be better than nothing.

“Cough.”

Cheok Jungyeong took the potion as he scratched the back of his neck.

“Where is it? I’ll go bring it back.”

“It’s not that far. Keep going straight and you’ll see it.”

He gulped down the potion and immediately passed out on the ground.

“Eat, fight, sleep, eat, fight, sleep... What is he if not a beast?”

“Jain, take care of the food. You just have to cook it.”

“Huh? Oh, okay.”

I left the cooking to Jain and went outside.

“Hm? Where are you going?”

I ran into Boss, who also just returned.

“Cheok Jungyeong left a monster corpse behind so I’m going to fetch it.”

“Then let’s go together. You’ll need someone to guard you.”

“Thanks.”

Boss and I began walking forward. After about 15 minutes, we discovered traces of a fierce battle. A huge area in the jungle had caved in with crushed trees and a huge monster lay lifelessly in the middle.

“He killed a Lv.3 grizzly bear?”

Was that even possible bare-handed? Once again, Cheok Jungyeong’s strength awed me. KOONG! I chopped off the bear’s head and began to dismantle it.

“Hm?”

[Lv.3 Grizzly Bear’s Head] Lv.3 Durability, Lv.1 Air Purifier, Lv.3 Face Protection, Lv.-1 Hygiene

The bear’s head could be used as a helmet without any refinement. If treated correctly, it could become valuable equipment. I cleaned the inside with stigma’s magic power and the Lv.-1 Hygiene disappeared. Then I placed it aside.

I guess I could make a helmet and gift it to Cheok Jungyeong.

I went back to dismantling the bear.

“Mmm.”

Then I heard a satisfied murmur and briefly glanced to the side before returning to the bear. However, I immediately glanced to the side again.

“Um, Boss?”

“It looks a bit weird, but feels fantastic.”

Boss wore the bear head with her face peeking out from the bear’s mouth. She looked happy like a child.

“Look, newbie. It defends my entire face if I close the mouth.”

“...”

Boss closed the bear’s mouth and I silently stared at the girl wearing a bear mask in front of me.

— Isn’t it cool? Huhu.

A satisfied voice rang out from the bear’s mouth.

Chapter 166

Jungle (3)

— Hit me. I need to test its durability.

Boss spoke while wearing the bear head. I hesitated before weakly striking it.

“How is it?”

— I don’t feel anything. Try hitting harder. Is that all you’ve got?

“Hmm.”

I raised my hand and clenched my fist. After a light stretch, I struck down with full force. KOONG! A small echo resounded in the jungle.

—...!

Boss’ neck trembled and shrunk on impact.

“How is it?”

—...

Her head creaked after staying still for about 30 seconds and 2 deceased bear eyes glared at me. I should probably take them out and use them as glass eyes.

“Cough.”

I returned to dismantling the grizzly bear. Meanwhile, the bear head continued to glare at me without the slightest movement.

[Lv.2 Grizzly Bear Leather] [Lv.3 Grizzly Bear's Gall Bladder] [Your dismantling technique has improved to Lv.2.] — You may now instantly dismantle monsters Lv.2 and lower. — Monsters you dismantle will receive a boost in hygiene.

“Done.”

The grizzly bear couldn't be eaten because of its tough muscles. I only collected its leather, which could be used to make various equipment, and its gallbladder, which could be used for medicine.

“We're done, so let's head back.”

I got up. However, Boss still sat on the ground and looked up at me. Was she still in shock that I hit her? I grinned and grabbed her wrist.

“Let's go eat. We have deer meat.”

—...

“And you should take off that bear head.”

—... It's not a bear head. It's a helmet.

Boss finally opened her mouth and seemed to be sulking.

We returned to our temporary camp and smelled the savory meat. Boss smacked her lips. Today's menu was the deer meat marinated in my special sauce.

“Oh, you're back?”

Jain greeted us as she grilled. Then she tilted her head after seeing Boss, who still wore the bear head.

“Boss, did you get eaten by a bear?”

“No, it's a good helmet despite how it looks.”

Boss proudly took off the bear head and gave it to Jain, who examined its description.

“Wow, it’s Lv.3! Isn’t this the same as the armor newbie sold on the auction house?”

“Yes, but the one I made is better.”

Not all Lv.3 items were equal. That’s why the Hero Association evaluated heroes with a rank and a grade. The difference between intermediate rank, grade 9 and intermediate rank, grade 1 was huge. Even 6 grade 9s couldn’t defeat a single grade 1 unless their gifts directly countered each other. This difference only became larger between ranks. The gargoyle leather armor I made could be considered a grade 1 item and this bear head could be considered grade 9.

“Mm, I see.”

Jain nodded as Boss snatched away the bear head and stored it in her inventory. It seemed she liked it a lot.

“Alright, let’s eat. I cooked a lot.”

“Yes.”

We gathered around the frying pan.

“These are done, right?”

“Yes. Go ahead, Boss.”

I respectfully let Boss take the first bite. She nodded and placed the deer meat in her mouth.

“Mmm.”

I enjoyed seeing Boss happily eat as the cook who marinated the meat. Jain also tried the meat and her eyes widened.

“Oh, shi... cough, this is amazing! You made this sauce?”

“Yes.”

“Wow. Oh, then is it not worth spending TP to buy bento boxes from the player shop?”

“Bento boxes? Mm, they were only for the tutorial. You shouldn’t be able to buy them anymore.”

“What? Really?”

“Yep, you can easily check it.”

Food was important in conquering any tower since starving to death and being killed in battle shared the same result. The Tower of Wish contained residential areas that sold food, but not on mission floors like the 2nd floor.

In this tower, dying meant that the number of skills you could bring back to the real world would decrease. You could lose all 7 lives simultaneously depending on how you died.

Simply put, you should avoid dying at all costs.

“You’re right. They’re not being sold anymore.”

Of course, I didn’t worry about the bento boxes. I would never have to worry about starving with Lv.2 dismantling, Lv.3 cooking, Lv.3 crafting, and the random dice. I grabbed a piece of deer meat with my chopsticks. As expected, it tasted delicious. I could practically feel my HP going up.

“Eh? Why can’t I access the public forum?”

“What? Really?”

I tried to access the public forum after Jain informed me.

[You cannot access the public forum on mission floors.]

“Oh...”

Looks like another setting had changed from the original story. However, I didn't bother to check my smartwatch. Too many changes had occurred, most of which were minor. I could just ask the system about them later.

“You didn't know about it?”

“No.”

“I thought you knew everything.”

“Haha, it's not like I'm the master of this tower.”

KUAA. A roar suddenly echoed in the cave as though a drunk man had woken. Cheok Jungyeong stretched and walked over to us.

“...”

He quietly grabbed a handful of deer meat and stuffed it in his mouth.

“Got any more?”

“Hold on.”

I took out another chunk of meat from my inventory. I should at least feed him well since Boss took the bear head I planned to give him.

Tsss—

“Hehe, it's looking great.”

Cheok Jungyeong grinned at the meat being grilled. I began to pack up the items around the cave as Cheok Jungyeong ate. We should get going after having stayed here for a while.

“Auu, I’m stuffed.”

What took 7 minutes to cook only took Cheok Jungyeon 1 minute to eat. He swiftly finished his meal and got up.

“Let’s get going.”

“Alright.”

“Okay.”

Jain stretched as Boss put on the bear head. We left the cave and walked through the jungle. Man-eating plants, gorillas, giant mosquitos, etc. We looked for an elevator while defeating all sorts of monsters.

“Oh?”

Our surroundings suddenly changed as if we passed through a barrier that separated two regions. The greenery on the ground turned into white snow. Taking a step back wouldn’t change anything. It felt like we had been transported to a different area.

“Where are we?”

“It looks like Antarctica.”

“How mysterious. We were just in a jungle.”

A fierce blizzard blew in the snowfield. The freezing temperature made the humid jungle seem like a dream.

A blizzard blew endlessly in the bitter cold. Rachel used the full power of her elementals to barely make an igloo. She carried her 2 unconscious guild members inside and lay a couple of blankets over them.

[Your strength has increased by 0.005 points.] [Your stamina has increased by 0.005 points.] [Your special stat, elemental affinity, has increased by 0.005 points.]

The stat alerts didn't make her happy at all. Rachel looked down at her guild members with mixed feelings. They had fainted the moment they touched the snowmobile. Thankfully, they didn't die. She opened the messenger.

[Communication is being hindered by the mission floor's natural phenomenon, snowstorm.]

"Haa..."

Rachel sighed and turned back to her guild members who lay like corpses on the ground. The tower's system said each player had 7 lives, but dying also resulted in penalties. As the vice leader, Rachel couldn't let her guild members die without knowing anything about the penalties.

"..."

Her stomach growled. Rachel opened the player shop as she rubbed her belly. She had already eaten all the emergency food provided by her ticket. However, she didn't worry about food since she still had 500 TP. With that in mind, she clicked on the 5 TP tutorial bento box.

[The tutorial bento box may no longer be purchased after the tutorial.]

"Eh?"

Her eyes widened in shock. Why now? She clicked on the 10 TP bento box, hoping for a different result. However, it remained the same. The player shop only featured one bento box left after she tried to buy food multiple times.

[Emergency Bento Box – 200 TP]

"Argh..."

She covered her face and stomped. It cost 200 TP for a single bento box? She felt like this was punishment for spending 3000 TP on armor. As the saying went, bad things came all at once. The mere 20 year old vice leader couldn't handle the situation.

“Huu. I can do this. Cheer up.”

Rachel lightly slapped her face. She didn't know when the blizzard would stop or when her 2 guild members would wake up, but she needed to find food.

Rachel left the igloo and the fierce snowstorm seemed to swallow all her senses. However, she forced herself through the snow and endured the bitter cold with her fire elemental Fiery's help.

“...!”

She suddenly stopped and the snow around her feet slid off a cliff. A huge crevice lay in front of her.

“I almost fell...” Rachel sighed in relief and looked down the crevice.

“Ah, over there!”

She discovered a golden elevator under the 15 feet crevice. Its color contrasted with the snow and made it easy to spot. However, her joy only lasted briefly. Soon, she bit her lips.

— !@#!@%#&

— !@*&!^$@!#@#?

Another group had already taken over the elevator. Rachel examined their faces. Thankfully, she recognized them as they often appeared on Korean news. They belonged to China's number 1 guild, Empire of Glory. Unfortunately, they seemed to have met up with the rest of their guild members and prepared to depart.

“Ah, wait!”

Rachel shouted and 8 individuals looked up at her. Upon further inspection, she saw the pride and joy on their faces from overtaking their competitors. Her intuition told her they wouldn't wait for anyone else.

“Don't stay quiet after calling out! You should hurry up if you want to come with us!”

The man who seemed to be their leader spoke out. Rachel could sense the lust in his eyes.

“Thank you for the offer, but I have comrades who fainted.”

“Ah, I see. I don't think we can wait if you're not alone. Who knows how many people will come if we do?”

However, his lust disappeared in front of his competitive spirit. Rachel shouted again as he coldly turned around. She used her only negotiation tool.

“I understand, so I'm willing to pay 500 TP. No, I'll pay 1500 TP for my 2 comrades.”

“Hey, vice leader, do we look like beggars? We're the best in China despite how we look.”

“I also have a Lv.3 armor. I don't have it on me right now...”

“Oh? You were the fool who bought the gargoyle's leather armor?
Hahaha.”

“F-Fool?”

“Good luck with your passed-out friends. We'll go on ahead.”

They only ridiculed her after she offered them everything she had. The group of 8 walked into the elevator and the door closed shut.

“Ah...”

Woong— The elevator shook and shot into the sky. Rachel could only stare as it left.

[Alert! Once activated, the elevator will reappear in a random location.]

Rachel despaired once more at the system alert. Tak, tak. The sound of footsteps rang out.

“A human?”

She guessed half-correctly. Turning around, she saw a strange half-human, half-beast monster commonly found in cold regions on Earth, a yeti.

“...!”

Rachel quickly raised her rapier, a level 1 sword she bought in Tutorial Town.

[Lv.3 Baby Yeti]

A Lv.3 monster would be the highest she had faced since entering the tower. The yeti bared its fangs at her. Rachel didn't have much time to think. It charged towards her as if it had been ordered to kill all humans.

Rachel jumped to the side and dodged the yeti's charge. KUOOO—! Its roar echoed in the blizzard.

Rachel decided to fight as it charged once again. However, it moved much smarter this time and leaped up with its powerful legs.

KOONG—!

The yeti slammed its fists as it landed. Rachel dodged with her elementals' help and attacked the gaps in the yeti's defense. She wasn't sure if her attacks would work, but the fight seemed evenly matched.

Clang— Clang—

Her steel rapier clashed with the yeti's fists. The yeti couldn't gain an advantage against Rachel's acrobatic swordsmanship.

However, Rachel knew she couldn't drag out the fight. This was the yeti's natural environment while she needed to use magic power just to stay warm.

— GUOOOO!

The yeti exploded with rage at Rachel's constant dodging. It roared and swung its arm in a wide arc. Rachel decided to use this opportunity to strike.

“...!”

It seemed to have a sharp battle sense as if it led her on and lifted its foot to kick away Rachel's rapier. Clang! Rachel clenched her fists as her rapier flew away. Use the gum if toothless! She infused elemental power into her small fist and punched.

— KOONG!

A huge sonic boom rang out from the distance along with her punch. She might've thought the sound came from her fist if she hadn't paid attention.

Regardless, the sudden attack drilled a huge hole in the yeti's chest, and its flesh and blood splattered on her.

“...?”

Rachel stood in a daze. The yeti completely stopped moving and fell forward. Then she spotted her savior beyond the fallen corpse. A man who wore a black hood and all sorts of equipment. He looked extremely warm.

“Who...”

The man pulled his hood down before she could finish. Her jaws dropped when she saw his face. She felt a sense of ease instead of surprise or happiness.

“Nice to see you again,” he spoke.

“Ah...”

As Rachel thought, he couldn't have died in the tutorial. She felt dumb for ever worrying after seeing his robe, armor, mask, and other equipment. He was doing far better than her no matter how she looked at it.

Rachel became lost in thought at the smiling Kim Hajin.

Chapter 167

Change (1)

We didn't just coincidentally meet. I ran here as soon as I saw an elevator flying up and heard a girl scream. Rachel seemed to be in danger, so I used 3 of my precious bullets. I didn't regret it too much since a yeti's horn could serve as good material. Rachel led me to her igloo after our reunion.

"Come in. It's surprisingly warm."

"Thanks."

"Um... No, never mind."

She seemed to have many questions, but didn't dig any further. I entered the igloo without saying much. Two other people lay inside in poor condition.

"What happened to them?"

"They suddenly fainted."

"Suddenly?"

Rachel nodded. "Yes, they touched a snowmobile and suddenly—"

"Snowmobile!"

I interrupted Rachel. A snowmobile could only refer to one thing.

"Y-Yes, a snowmobile..."

"Where?"

“Um, you shouldn’t touch it. You’ll become like them if you do. I think it’s a trap.”

Rachel’s expression darkened. Of course, I knew about the fainting. They would pass out for about 2 days after touching a dwarven artifact bare-handed.

“Don’t worry. I know how to handle it.”

I planned to use the Book of Truth if I couldn’t find one on my own, but it seemed I could reserve the Book of Truth for finding the steles.

“Eh? How? Where?”

“Um, in the book the 2nd floor administrator was reading... Well, I’ll explain later. For now...”

I took out the jungle gorilla’s leather from my inventory before heading out to the dwarven artifact.

“Here. This should keep them warm.”

“Ah, thank you!”

Rachel placed the leather over her guild members as soon as she received it. They looked like corpses in a morgue, but it should keep them warm.

“They should wake up soon judging from the color of their faces.”

“I hope so.”

I smiled reassuringly. Touching the snowmobile without any preparations would cause one to faint for at least a day, but it wasn’t life-threatening.

“Then let’s go find the snowmobile. Do you remember where it was?”

Rachel looked worried, but nodded.

“Yes, I can ask my elementals for directions.”

“Mmm...”

I arrived in front of the snowmobile with Rachel. Only a vague outline remained after the blizzard buried it. I wanted to claim it for myself, but I couldn't do much for now.

Honestly, this hidden artifact could easily be found. The 2nd floor was only as big as the city of Daegu. Three of them existed on the 2nd floor and stood out.

However, a barrier also surrounded this hidden artifact. Touching it thoughtlessly would cause one to immediately faint. Kim Suho could cut the barrier with his gift, but I didn't have anything like that.

“Ah, I want to see Suho.”

“Suho? You mean Kim Suho?” Rachel tilted her head at my murmuring.

“Ah, yes. It's been 3 years since I last saw him.”

Honestly, I did see him from a distance a few times. I asked Yoo Yeonha to gift him some medicine and even went as far as tricking him into thinking they were vitamins since he didn't like getting stronger with medicine. The sender of the gifts remained anonymous, but he probably figured out that I had sent them.

“Ah, maybe...”

I came up with an idea after mulling it over and turned on my smartwatch.

[Device Link]

This dwarven artifact could be considered equipment, so I used my laptop's newest function.

[Search For Nearby Devices]

I swallowed hard and clicked search.

[Searching for devices within 300 meters...] [Search complete.] [1. Dwarven Supercar] [This device has no owner. Would you like to set its owner to Kim Hajin and link to it?]

I only felt half-sure that this would work, but thankfully it did. I clicked yes.

[Setting an owner and linking to it requires 200 SP.] [Would you like to continue?]

That wasn't cheap by any means, but I could ride this artifact until the 7th floor. I clicked yes once again.

Woong—

A golden light shot out from the snowmobile and melted the snow nearby. The supercar revealed its black body engraved with golden symbols, which could seat 3-4 people. It operated without wheels and resonated with mana, truly making it a mystical dwarven artifact.

[The dwarven security barrier has been deactivated with the transfer of ownership.]

I hopped on the snowmobile, which seemed to have a heating function since the seat felt warm.

“Ah, be care... eh? Are you okay?”

“Yes, this is part of my gift,” I briefly explained to the shocked Rachel.

“Get on, Rachel. I'll drive you to the igloo.”

“Um... Can I ride it too?”

“Of course. You won’t get hurt, so don’t worry.”

Rachel blinked a few times before getting on behind me.

“Let’s go.”

Wiing— Driving the dwarven supercar didn’t feel too different from a normal snowmobile. We drove back to the igloo and reduced the 30 minute walk to 3 minutes.

“Oh, um, I’m sorry about this.”

I scratched my neck apologetically after dropping her off. Rachel had found the artifact, but I took it for myself. She only smiled.

“You don’t need to feel sorry. I wouldn’t have been able to use it anyways.”

“Still... Ah.”

I walked into the igloo and took out a [Lv.1 Wooden Storage Box].

“I’ll give you this.”

“...?”

Rachel looked back and forth between me and the storage box.

“It’s a storage box with an ice attribute. I made it in the jungle and it can function as an icebox.”

I opened the storage box.

“There’s food inside. It’s marinated deer meat. You can just pan-fry it.”

“Food?”

Rachel’s eyes shone as she looked inside. Sniff, sniff. She smelled the sauce used to marinate the meat.

“Ah... thank you so much, Hajin.”

She expressed sincere, heartfelt gratitude. I returned a small smile. Then Rachel sat on the floor.

“I’m fine, so you can go. Your comrades must be waiting for you.”

Growl— Rachel’s belly growled. Her face flushed red and she quickly took out a frying pan. Tak, tak. She turned the burner on and put the frying pan on top.

“Um, would you like to join me?”

“No, I’m fine. I already ate.”

Rachel looked at me and nodded before placing 3 small pieces of deer meat on the frying pan.

“You should cook more. You must be starving.”

“I have more guild members than just these two, so I need to save some for them.”

“Mm, I see, then I’ll take my leave. You can send me a friend request later. My ID is...”

I paused. My ID was Extra7.

“...Extra7, but if anyone asks, don’t tell them.”

“Got it.”

Rachel didn’t ask why and simply agreed.

“Wait, Extra7!” Her eyes shot open as she suddenly recalled.

“The one who made 20000 TP?”

“Ah... right... then that equipment... with 20000 TP...”

She murmured to herself and came to her own conclusions. I grinned and left. The blizzard blew as fierce as ever. I put on my hood and jumped onto the dwarven supercar.

“For now...”

Let’s head to Boss. I took out a GPS receiver that I bought from the player shop before separating from the others. It cost 700 TP, but I could use it indefinitely.

[No.1 GPS – Northeast, 680 m]

Boss wasn’t too far away. I stepped on the accelerator and the dwarven supercar charged through the snow. I traveled 680 meters in exactly 20 seconds.

— In any case...

I heard Boss’ voice as I stopped and turned northeast from where I stood. My thousand-mile eyes pierced through the curtain of snow.

— You have 7 lives in this tower.

I could see Boss standing in the snow. However, 4-5 people surrounded her.

— So I’m sure dying once won’t be a big deal.

— Kahaha!

They only sneered at Boss’ warning.

— What, you’re going to kill us? You think we’ll just stand here and do nothing?

— Why don't you take off that bear head? Or do you want us to do it for you?

I raised my Desert Eagle at the thugs. However, I had no chance to intervene.

Chwaak—

The shadow underneath Boss shot up. Black magic power formed a blade and pierced a talking man's neck.

— Kuk!

— W-What!?

— F-Fuck!

— H-Hey, kill her!

The thugs jumped back to unleash their magic power, but Boss easily neutralized their magic power blasts and even reversed the magician's spell. Her shadow blade tore their limbs apart.

— Kuaaak!

— Kuak.

Only despair and pain rang out along with the sound of bones breaking and flesh being torn apart. A shadow danced above the white field of snow as blood and human organs flew in every direction. The situation ended in just a minute.

“Haa.”

Silence returned and Boss sighed in the middle of severed limbs. A single drop of blood on her white skin made her look especially cold.

“Boss.”

I called out and her shoulders slightly flinched. Boss turned around in the blizzard and her eyes slightly flickered at me. However, she soon returned to her usual self.

“You’re back.”

“Yes, it was quite a spectacle.”

I said jokingly, but Boss didn’t react and simply walked past me. Tak, tak. She left behind a trail of blood in the white snow and seemed a bit lonesome. I silently followed her. Whish. The wind blew and I tried my best to ignore the bear head she wore.

* * *

“The Chameleon Troupe?”

Yoo Yeonha video called Yoo Jinhyuk in the outside world.

— Yeah.

Yoo Jinhyuk finally revealed a new piece of information to her. She decided not to ask whether he had been hiding it or just found out.

— By the way, are you not entering the tower?

“It’s hard to find the time. Apparently, it takes a month to finish the tutorial. I’m sure you don’t need me to explain any further.”

Yoo Yeonha looked past the video call at the news regarding the Tower of Wish. Some people had returned from the tower after clearing the tutorial by using some sort of a ticket and others had died without clearing the tutorial. The news caused quite a stir.

— Mm, yeah. That makes sense.

“Please continue what you were saying.”

Yoo Yeonha urged him on.

— Right, so I think this Chameleon Troupe is the group behind the Kwang-Oh Incident orchestrated by Chae Joochul.

Yoo Yeonha strained her ears. Yoo Jinhyuk was currently informing her about the assassin hired by Chae Joochul and commanded by Yoo Jinwoong.

— The problem is whether this Chameleon Troupe is the same as the current one.

Yoo Yeonha silently stared at him. Her eyes demanded an explanation. Yoo Jinhyuk looked around his surroundings before continuing any further. Only a single fly sat on his window.

— Jesus, how can a fly be that big? Hey, hey, chase that thing out.

“You don’t have to worry about a fly.”

— It’s just too big. What the heck? Did it come back?

“Geez, just ignore it. You’re in North Hamgyeong Province. No one knows about that place anyways.”

— Oh, it’s gone. Okay, I won’t say it again, so listen carefully.

Yoo Jinhyuk coughed after chasing the fly away and began to talk about the Chameleon Troupe. A mysterious group that appeared 30-50 years ago with an unknown goal and unknown members. From the traces they left behind, he could only guess they were a crime syndicate with at least 10 powerful members.

— You see, the Chameleon Troupe’s leader died back in the day when I was hot stuff.

“Eh? Died?”

— Yeah. I think Chae Joochul killed him, but I’m not sure. Now, look at the terror incidents that have been happening in Pandemonium.

Yoo Jinhyuk displayed the recent data. Terror incidents weren't rare in Pandemonium, but the ones on the screen were unique because of the black lotus symbol.

— The Chameleon Troupe must've picked a new leader and resumed their activities.

“Hmm... So who's their new leader?”

— I don't know. But! This is where the Kim Hajin you love comes in.

“L-Love? We're just allies—”

— Anyways, a young girl dropped off Kim Hajin at the orphanage.

Yoo Jinhyuk had seen this with his gift.

— I'm almost 100% positive this girl is a member of the Chameleon Troupe. In other words, Kim Hajin will be looking for the Chameleon Troupe in the future.

Yoo Yeonha nodded.

“If things are as you say... it'll be complicated.”

She drew a map in her head.

[Chae Joochul = A] [The Chameleon Troupe's previous boss who carried out the Kwang-Oh Incident = B (now deceased)] [Working with B, the young girl brought Kim Hajin to an orphanage = C] [C is a current member of the Chameleon Troupe]

A total of 4 main characters: A, B, C, and Kim Hajin.

“It's too complicated...”

— It is. Kim Hajin is only a small fish compared to these giants. That's why it looks and feels so dramatic.

“Dramatic? How?”

— Think about it.

Yoo Jinhyuk made a weird face and shouted.

— Chae Joochul! The child you tried to kill has come back alive!

“What.”

However, Yoo Yeonha only frowned.

— Chae Joochul will end up being killed by a main character he wasn’t even aware of. An extra if you will.

“...”

Yoo Yeonha crossed her arms without replying to his nonsense. Then she thought about Chae Joochul.

Chae Joochul the Immortal. The owner of Daehyun and undoubtedly a giant in Korea. She had a feeling it wouldn’t be long until she faced off against him. Chae Joochul began to increase his pressure as Essence of the Strait continued to grow.

— But Chae Joochul’s granddaughter is your friend and subordinate.

“She’s only my friend.”

— Be careful. Chae Joochul isn’t someone who would care about his granddaughter.

Yoo Yeonha nodded. Even though Chae Nayun was her friend and a hero of Essence of the Strait, Yoo Yeonha would never hesitate if the day came when she had to fight against Chae Joochul.

At the Chameleon Troupe hideout in [Droon's Playroom], which Kim Hajin made with special care...

“What an interesting story.”

Droon stretched as the conversation between Yoo Yeonha and Yoo Jinhyuk replayed in his eyes.

“Is my mission over now?”

In the past, Boss and Jain tried to employ several information guilds to look into Kim Hajin. However, they failed every time. Droon, who investigated Kim Hajin's past independently, made an unexpected harvest. Calling it a harvest might be a bit misleading. It was the only result he obtained from Mimyo's 133 day stakeout.

“Should I tell them?”

Droon pondered. Mimyo had disguised as a fly and brought back an interesting conversation. Regardless of whether it was true or false, things would surely become touchy if either side found out.

“Nah.”

Droon shook his head after mulling it over for a long time.

“Everything they talked about was simply speculation. Telling Boss or hyung would only cause problems.”

Droon didn't want Boss and Kim Hajin to fight yet.

“Hajin hyung made this playroom for me and Boss took me in. Yep, that's right.”

Droon grinned and came to his own decision.

“But if everything is true...”

He couldn't help but think of the possibility. If everything Yoo

Jinhyuk said was true... the young girl who dropped off the baby at the orphanage. If Hajin hyung was the baby and Boss was the young girl... then Boss killed Hajin hyung's parents?

“Yikes, how scary.”

Droon trembled at the thought of this brutal truth and quickly hid under his blanket.

Chapter 168

Change (2)

I walked with Boss after commanding the dwarven supercar to follow us. We proceeded through the snowstorm without a clear destination. Ssk, ssk. Our feet crunched the snow beneath us. Then Boss asked me a question.

“What do you think?”

She sounded gloomy. I wasn’t insensitive enough to not know what she meant.

“Still the same.”

Boss once asked me what I thought about murder. That I would have to kill many people if I stayed with her. My answer remained the same.

“I’m a murderer too.”

The result remained the same whether someone was beaten to death, shot to death, or sliced into bits and pieces.

“...”

Boss stopped and I also paused behind her small shoulders. Perhaps she feared disappointing me. After all, she had never killed anyone so brutally in the 3 years we worked together.

“I see.”

Boss only spoke those 2 words and continued on.

“They’ll revive anyways, but they’ll have to start over from the tutorial.”

Honestly, being dismembered was quite a severe death. Those thugs would probably lose 2-3 lives and wouldn’t be able to avoid the mental trauma either.

However, they had started it and Boss even gave them a chance to leave.

“They were probably djinns. I heard Pandemonium had around 500 tickets.”

“Yeah.”

Boss muttered and didn’t sound so dejected anymore. This was probably the right time to show her my new artifact. I called the dwarven supercar over. Shoong— Boss became startled and unleashed her magic power.

“What is it?”

“It’s mine. It’s our transportation.”

I jumped in like getting into a sports car.

“Get in, Boss.”

“What is this?”

“Like I said, the 2nd floor has lots of useful items.”

I smacked the back seat with a grin.

“Hoh...”

Boss curiously examined the vehicle before getting on.

“Is it made out of pure gold?”

As expected, that caught her attention first. Boss rubbed the golden symbols engraved on it before jumping in.

“Alright, it’s rather fast, so hold on tight. Oh, also...”

I took out the Yggdrasil leaf and blessed the dwarven supercar before setting off.

[Yggdrasil’s Blessing has enveloped the dwarven supercar.] [All effects of the dwarven supercar have increased by 1 level.]

“Hold on tight.”

“Okay.”

I stepped on the accelerator. Vroom— I sneaked a peek at Boss as we drove off. She leisurely watched the scenery and looked beautiful except for one thing.

“Boss, you should take off that bear head now.”

“Ah?”

Boss’ eyes widened and she quickly took off the helmet.

“I, I forgot I was wearing it since I was thinking about other things.”

Her face turned slightly red. This was the most meaningful change in expression I had ever seen from her.

On day 2, we built an igloo like Rachel to spend the night. The fierce blizzard had disappeared by the time we woke up and blinding sunlight reflected off the snow.

I took out the dwarven supercar from my inventory as I left the igloo. I had to quickly find the dwarven steles and head to the 3rd floor since Cheok Jungyeong and Jain grew bored.

“Let’s see...”

I murmured and took out the Book of Truth for the first time in the Tower of Wish. The system had warned me about using stigma, but I hoped Luke wouldn’t notice if I used less than a single streak. After all, Luke wasn’t a highly ranked NPC even as the 2nd floor administrator.

“Hmm.”

Speaking of NPC ranks, the 3rd floor’s administrator should be the famous magician, Medea. Unfortunately, she didn’t have too good of a personality. To think the administrator of a trash residential area would be a mythical rank NPC... what a shitty setting. I asked the Book of Truth about what I currently needed to know.

[Is there a dwarven stele within a 3 km radius?]

The Book of Truth immediately sucked 0.5 streaks of stigma as I felt an intense pain.

“Argh.”

Using stigma in the tower came with a greater backlash. However, the pain felt worth it as the Book of Truth revealed the stele’s location.

“It’s not far.”

Northwest, 1.3 km. I got on the dwarven supercar and stepped on the accelerator. It took less than 3 minutes to reach the coordinates. I found the stele buried under the snow inside a huge crevice at the edge of the glacier near the ocean.

I slowly drove the dwarven supercar down the cliff. This snowmobile could travel across vertical paths, so a cliff posed no issues.

“Found it.”

The dwarven stele lay buried under the snow. I dusted my hands as a system alert popped up.

[You have discovered a dwarven stele.] [The contents of the dwarven stele have been stored in your database.] [Ecorld Qowemr FcmoE Roalz...]

I couldn't understand it, but immediately asked the Book of Truth to translate. Surprisingly, it didn't take too much stigma.

[Young Dwarf's Diary of Enlightenment] [Today, Old Man Hairy Nostrils taught me the most important mindset as a descendant of Hephaestus...]

"The heck is this?"

I frowned in the middle of reading. A diary? What happened to the potion recipes? I walked up to the stele to check for anything else. A burst of light erupted when I touched it. I had experienced this brilliant light before. It happened when my accumulation of luck activated.

Chwaaa— The golden light emanating from the dwarven stele poured into my eyes. I stood still and fully received it.

[Young Dwarf's Enlightenment has resonated with your trait, Dexterity.] [Dexterity has been replaced with Young Dwarf's Dexterity. Its rank has been increased.]

"Haa..."

I trembled in excitement from the system alerts. The mystical race of dwarves, descendants of Hephaestus, possessed an innate dexterity. I clutched my beating heart and took a deep breath. I could only mutter one word.

"Jackpot."

We stayed on the 2nd floor for another 36 hours after my accumulation of luck. Meanwhile, the landscape changed from Antarctica to a volcanic zone and I found 2 more dwarven steles. One contained a recipe for brewing a special dwarven potion and the other had a recipe for crafting special dwarven shoes. Both of these recipes resonated with Young Dwarf's Dexterity and entered my head. Now, I could make them as long as I had the ingredients.

"Everyone, let's head to the 3rd floor now."

"I almost died from boredom. We're finally going up?"

Cheok Jungyeong grumbled as I smiled.

"Didn't you have fun fighting the flame octopus? You said it lasted 12 hours."

"I'm tired of it now. I want to fight humans."

Boss and Jain probably felt the same judging from their expressions. I didn't blame them since this place had nothing fun to do. Cheok Jungyeong shot up.

"Alright, we're going up now, right?"

"Yeah."

"You better not be lying. Otherwise, I'll squash your head."

Cheok Jungyeong sounded impatient, but none of us worried since I had already found an elevator.

We left our temporary base and soon arrived at the elevator. It didn't look like an elevator since we poured magma over it and covered it in granite.

"I'm breaking it."

"Yes."

Cheok Jungyeong punched the mound of granite. KWANG! It shattered and revealed the elevator within.

"Alright, let's get on."

“By the way, Hajin, will everyone be able to come up? There were about 2000 people and only 4 of us are taking a single elevator right now.” Jain asked.

“I’m not too sure, but I’m guessing about 80% will make it up.”

The speed of the elevators would double after a week from something called the acceleration phenomenon.

“Really? Hm, I can’t see more than 50% going up.”

“Well, we’ll see. Hop on. We don’t have time.”

“Oh, right. Okay.”

We all got on the elevator, which only had 3 buttons: floor 3, open, and close. I sat down after pressing the 3rd floor button and the close button. Wooong— The elevator began to float after it roared to life.

“Ah, I’m hungry. Hajin, let’s eat some deer meat.”

“Oh, I gave it all away to my friend.”

“What? All of it?”

Jain felt shocked since it could’ve fed us for a week even if Cheok Jungyeong ate 3 people’s worth at every meal.

“Yes, you could say I traded it for the dwarven supercar, but we still have a lot of boar meat left.”

“Ah, I see. I guess it’s fine if that’s the case. What kind of idiot would trade that artifact for food.”

Jain accepted it after learning about the dwarven supercar’s versatility.

“By the way, is this thing going up?”

“Probably? Yaawn.”

It took 8 hours for the elevator to travel back and forth. We would be here for the next 4 hours.

“This is the perfect time to sleep.”

We decided to rest until the elevator arrived. I took out 4 pieces of monster leather from my inventory for each of us.

“Good night, Boss.”

“Yes.”

“You too, newbie.”

“You too, Jain.”

I checked my messenger before going to sleep and had received a few new messages.

Nayunjajangman: Hyung, did you clear the 2nd floor? If not, you can join the elevator we found. We decided to wait for about 3 hours before leaving. I'll give you the coordinates if you want to come.

“...”

The message came about 30 minutes ago. At first, I turned the messenger off without replying, but if Nayunjajangman was that girl...

Me: I'm on the 3rd floor now.

I felt like Nayunjajangman would wait for more than 3 hours if I didn't reply, so I sent a brief reply.

Nayunjajangman: Oh lol as expected of hyung.

Me: Oh right, make sure you stock up on food.

Nayunjajangman: Food?

Me: Yep. Deer or wild boar. If you've never dismantled wild animals before, now's the time.

Nayunjajangman: Got it. Is there nothing to eat on the 3rd floor?

I didn't say anything else. Of course, I wasn't sure whether Nayunjajangman was Chae Nayun, but my heart felt heavy and I cast the thought aside.

Zzz— Zzzz— Zzzzzz—

"Pft."

My depression didn't last long after hearing the unique snoring of each member.

"I should sleep too."

I closed my eyes and began to breathe. One, two, three... DING!

A ringing woke my blurred consciousness. I opened my eyes and got up as the elevator slowly opened.

"Yaawn."

"Kuhu, I like this leather. It's from the bear I defeated, right?"

"Yeah."

I stored the bear blankets in my inventory and stood in front of the door.

[You are now on the 3rd floor.]

The elevator opened along with a system alert. I looked out at the 3rd floor. The first residential area that players would soon label as the worst. Its name was Prestige.

[Welcome to the 3rd floor's residential area, Prestige] [You may freely use the messenger, waiting room, and community inside residential areas.] [Please be careful of sudden attacks by hordes of undead monsters.] [Prestige Boost — Stat increase rate is increased by 5% (7% for magic power).]

“What is this place?”

Jain frowned as she looked at the poor city outskirts. I knew how bad it would be beforehand and still thought it looked poor. Run-down shacks filled the city and homeless drunks slept by the road. A mysterious knee-deep fog blanketed the city and the air smelled like coal.

“This is a city?”

“Yes, the system called it a city, so it’s a city.”

Roads filled with life and death and lifeless NPCs. The 3rd floor didn’t have a sun, so everything looked black and dark blue.

“Now, let’s go.”

People still lived here, so it should have shops. This part of the city on the outskirts seemed a bit more hopeless.

“Wait, wait, let me rest in my waiting room first. This place smells too awful... uwek—”

“Be patient. We have to figure out what kind of a place this is first.”

Going to the waiting room right away wouldn’t be a good idea. You wouldn’t be aware of anything that happened outside and also wouldn’t receive Prestige’s stat buff.

“Right, don’t overreact and just endure it, Jain.”

“Okay.’

Jain had no choice but to nod as Boss chimed in. We walked through the city as some NPCs aimed for our pockets and others innocently begged for help.

“Oh right, where did the other players go?”

“They’re probably working to make TP.”

“Auuu, this smell!”

Jain hated the nasty smell more than anything else. The other two felt the same. Cheok Jungyeong frowned and Boss put on her Lv.3 bear head helmet.

“Wait just a little longer. I’ll make a gas mask for you.”

I consoled Jain as we went to receive the group quest from Prestige City Hall. It felt a little annoying to deal with that damned Medea, but we couldn’t live in Prestige if we got on her bad side.

* * *

On the 2nd floor, Rachel energetically walked towards the coordinates sent by the second team. The 2 guild members who fainted after touching the dwarven supercar also accompanied her.

“Vice leader!”

“Over here!”

She could see 2 other members waving in the distance. Rachel wanted to run up to them, but walked slower to match the 2 members who hadn’t fully recovered yet.

“Geez, look at those two. They’re nothing but burdens.”

“I heard you two fainted. Why didn’t you just die! You’re going to revive anyways, right?”

“Sorry, team leader.”

“Sorry.”

The 2 guild members dropped their heads in shame. However, Rachel only kindly smiled.

“It’s fine. No one expected such a thing to happen.”

The 7 Royal Court guild members reunited in front of an elevator with one worry left.

“Should we wait since 50 people can ride the elevator?”

Davin, who led the second team, asked. Rachel thought for a moment and recalled the Empire of Glory guild she met not too long ago. She didn’t want to be like them, but knew she had to make cold-hearted decisions as the vice leader. In this place, kindness would only be a burden.

“Let’s go up.” Rachel came to a decision and got into the elevator with her guild members.

“You can do the honors, vice leader.”

“Yes.”

Rachel pressed the 3rd floor button. Then as the elevator began to close...

“Waaaaaaait—!”

A loud voice rang out. Startled, Rachel instinctively pressed the open button.

“Let me go with youuuu—!”

The elevator opened once again and Rachel could see a white-haired kid with her supposed guardian. They looked dirty and tired, but ran at an extraordinary speed.

“Uwak!”

The child stumbled on a stone and fell forward, but the man following her quickly snatched her up and entered the elevator.

“Ah, thank you so much!”

The man bowed and expressed his gratitude.

“No problem.”

Rachel responded indifferently. For some reason, she felt like she had seen the man’s face before.

“Thank god, thank god...”

The white-haired child also seemed familiar. Rachel felt like she would remember if the child’s hair was properly combed. Tap, tap. One of her guild members tapped her shoulder and whispered.

— Vice leader, I think that’s Aileen and Yi Yongha. They’re heroes from the Temple of Justice.

Immediately, Rachel’s hair stood on end. She easily matched their faces with her memory after hearing their names. Everyone knew white hair almost represented Aileen.

— But what do you think is wrong with them?

Rachel whispered back. Why was Aileen, who reigned as one of the strongest heroes in the world, in such a state?

— It must be because they both heavily rely on magic power. As you know, magicians are heavily disadvantaged in this place.

In this tower, one had to use their body to get through. Even the greatest magician would struggle with hunger.

“Ah, thank you, thank you! You’re the only ones who opened the door.”

Even so, Rachel still felt curious. Aileen’s gift, Spirit Speech, could easily control people. Was her magic power restricted that much?

“No, it’s only obvious. Nice to meet you, Aileen and Yi Yongha.”

Rachel reached out to Aileen, who stood about 20 cm shorter. Aileen looked at Rachel’s hand and grabbed it with a grin. It seemed she hadn’t washed her hands in a while as it felt dirty and sticky.

“You know us?”

“There aren’t many who don’t.”

“There were. No, they probably pretended not to know. They must’ve been scared of me.”

Meanwhile, the elevator closed on its own and headed towards the 3rd floor. Ssss—

“Anyways, thank you so much!”

Aileen smiled like a child and plopped on the floor.

“Ah, I’m starving. Yongha, do you have anything to eat?”

“No, we already ate everything we had.”

“What do you have? Hmm...”

Aileen naturally turned to Rachel. She felt too ashamed to directly ask for food, but seemed to be asking with her eyes.

“We don’t have anything either.”

Rachel shook her head. Of course, she still had a lot of the deer meat Kim Hajin gave her, but lied.

“Mm? Ah, no, I wasn’t asking for food or anything. I’m thankful for the ride alone.”

“Ah, yes.”

[Lv.2 Kim Hajin’s Special Sauce Deer Meat] Lv.2 Satisfaction, Lv.3 Taste

Letting them in was one thing, but Rachel couldn’t share this Lv.2 food with them. It tasted extremely delicious and she planned to share it with her guildmates.

Chapter 169

Prestige (1)

— Kueeek. A red crystal spear shot forward and pierced the neck of a Lv.1 ribbon pig. The pig collapsed with a painful roar. Then Chae Nayun pulled the spear out of its neck.

“Dismantle.”

With a soft murmur, the pig’s corpse turned into meat and leather. Chae Nayun stored the food in her inventory.

[Your inventory is full.]

“Mm, can’t you fit more?”

[No.]

Chae Nayun filled her inventory with food she had collected for the past 4 hours.

“Nayun, are you done?”

Yi Jiyeon’s voice rang out from behind her. She sounded tired.

“Yeah, I’m finished. What about you? Is your inventory full?”

“Huh? Oh, uh... yeah, mine is full too.”

She clearly lied, but Chae Nayun didn’t pursue it any further.

“Let’s head back now. More people are gathering at the elevator.”

Essence of the Strait’s team had already found an elevator 5 hours ago, but Chae Nayun delayed setting off to hunt nearby monsters because of Extra7's advice.

“Nayun, we have to go!”

However, none of the other guild members showed interest in hunting even when Chae Nayun told them the advice came from her master on the 3rd floor. They only repeatedly told her to hurry up. Of course, she understood their reactions. Other players could steal their elevator as they hunted for food.

“How many people do we have?”

Chae Nayun managed to obtain enough food to last the entire team 1-2 weeks despite their uncooperative attitude.

“Around 27 or maybe 28. We have to hurry. A fight might break out if it fills up.”

Essence of the Strait had found the elevator first, but other players had also gathered after they delayed setting off. Only 1 member of a group needed to find an elevator for an entire group to come over. It wouldn't be surprising if another huge group arrived soon.

“Okay, let's go.”

Chae Nayun decided to head back.

“Sigh, good. Follow me.”

Chae Nayun followed Yi Jiyeon with the red crystal spear in hand. They returned to the elevator in just 15 minutes. Anyone would notice that the Essence of the Strait members seemed unhappy. They felt annoyed, but held back because Chae Nayun was Yoo Yeonha's friend. Still, Chae Nayun ignored their gazes and stood in front of them.

“Chae Nayun, you delayed us by 5 hours. Five. Whole. Hours.”

However, it seemed they had something to say this time. The chief officer of Essence of the Strait's tower subjugation team, high-intermediate rank, grade 2 hero Kim Youngjin stood in front of her.

“...”

“Don’t you have anything to say?”

“I suggested hunting together, leaving behind one team to defend the elevator and taking shifts.”

“What?” Kim Youngjin frowned intimidatingly.

“Like I said, we need to stock up on food for the 3rd floor.”

“The 2nd floor’s administrator said that the 3rd floor is a residential area. You think a residential area would be low on food?”

“...”

Chae Nayun didn’t reply. Extra7 was already on the 3rd floor and told her to stock up on food. However, she didn’t want to explain the same thing again. She knew her words would only sound like an excuse because of their bias.

“We’re late because of you. Do you understand that?”

“...Yes, sorry. It won’t happen again.”

Chae Nayun simply dropped her head and apologized. Following the chief officer’s orders. That was one of the conditions Chae Nayun had to accept for a tower entrance ticket.

“Tsk.”

Kim Youngjin didn’t say anything more and opened the elevator. The other members entered after him and other bystanders also got on. Unsurprisingly, Chae Nayun got on last.

[Departing to the 3rd floor.]

Their elevator contained 29 people. They shared the small space and awkward atmosphere. Yi Jiyoong clapped her hands and tried to lighten the mood since they would be here for 4 hours.

“R-Right, so, um, did any of you meet anyone famous in the tower?”

“Famous?”

“Yeah. I’m sure the tower has many famous heroes, mercenaries, and hunters.”

Everyone ignored Yi Jiyoong, which made the atmosphere even more awkward.

“...”

Shouldn’t they say something since we let them join our elevator? Yi Jiyoong grumbled inwardly.

“I met someone.” A man wearing a black robe raised his hand.

“Wow, really?”

“Yes.”

“Who?”

The man smiled at her question. Until then, Chae Nayun hadn’t shown any interest in their conversation. She simply looked through the auction house for any useful items and wondered if she should sell her red crystal spear.

“I saw Fenrir.”

“...!”

Chae Nayun’s head suddenly shot up like lightning struck her and she looked at the black robed man. Jeronimo’s mercenary, Fenrir. Chae Nayun knew his real identity. Only one person in this world could wield a gun so well.

“Ah... really?”

Honestly, everyone who went to Cube with Kim Hajin knew. However, Yi Jiyoong pretended to be oblivious out of courtesy.

“Um, was he strong?”

“Yes.”

The man bitterly smiled and took off his robe. Yi Jiyoong blushed when she saw his handsome face.

“My friend and I almost died picking a fight with him. He was quite scary.”

“Oh... I see...”

“Yes, I suspect he’s the strongest in the tower. Don’t try to fight him if you ever meet him. You’ll die.”

Yi Jiyoong blankly nodded after being enchanted by the man’s handsome appearance. Gzz— Chae Nayun clenched her teeth and the hand holding her spear turned white. Kim Hajin was here. Just hearing this caused blood to rush to her head and filled her with all sorts of complicated thoughts.

“Ah... Dammit.”

Her head seemed to be splitting in half. She felt like she would lose herself in this intense pain. Rage and fear rose in her heart, as well as hatred and sadness. Doubt seemed to devour her reason. There’s no way he killed oppa. It must’ve been a misunderstanding. Such thoughts flashed across her mind. She only believed what she wanted, yet she could never believe such things. It drove her crazy and stifled her breath.

“My, my head...”

An unbearable headache struck her. It felt like a hammer beating on her head. In the end, she smashed her head against the elevator and collapsed.

“Eh? N-Nayun!”

Yi Jiyeon quickly helped her up. However, no one else showed any interest. Even Essence of the Strait members backed off and glanced at the chief officer to take care of the situation.

“Ha, what a mess.”

Kim Youngjin sighed. Just how long did he have to take care of this silver spoon?

“Argh, my head hurts too.”

He massaged his sore temples.

[3rd floor, residential area – Prestige] [TIP! Find a guard to purchase citizenship.]

We walked through Prestige. Fewer NPCs sprawled on the ground and proper buildings appeared as we grew closer to the city center.

“What’s that?”

A tall wall and a large gate appeared after about 40 minutes.

“Looks like a gate. Let’s check it out.”

A guard stopped us as we approached.

“The inner city is off-limits to non-citizens. You must show proof of citizenship to enter.”

“...?”

Everyone except me blinked in confusion. Soon, Cheok Jungyeong began to crack his knuckles. I quickly stopped him.

“Stop, you won’t be able to beat him.”

“Haha, kid, are you looking down on—”

“Ask the system.”

“Ask what? I’m sure it’ll say...”

Cheok Jungyeong stopped talking. He should’ve received a system alert that read something like this: All guards inside Prestige have received a 250% boost in stats. We were only on the 3rd floor, but guards were at least Lv.5. With a 250% stat boost, we wouldn’t be able to defeat them until we become strong enough to clear the 6th floor.

“Uhahaha, that only makes me want to fight more.”

“Shut up and stay put.”

Jain restrained him as he smiled mischievously. The guard spoke again.

“You can pay 1000 TP to register as a temporary citizen or return to the outer city.”

“What do you all want to do? I plan on buying the citizenship.”

I turned around and asked them out of courtesy. You couldn’t do anything without citizenship in Prestige.

“I have 1000 TP.”

“I told you, I think I can beat him in a fight!”

“I don’t have a lot of TP.”

Jain, Cheok Jungyeong, and Boss spoke respectively.

“Then I’ll pay for Cheok Jungyeong and Boss.”

I took out three 1000 TP banknotes from my inventory.

“What about me?”

“I know you’re rich, Jain.”

“I should’ve said I was poor too.”

Jain pouted as she took out 1000 TP. I considered haggling, but guards were the most inflexible NPCs. Haggling probably wouldn’t work on them unless it reached Lv.10.

“Here, 4000 TP.”

“Confirmed.”

The guard turned around and gave the money to a clerk at the front entrance. The clerk wrote down the amount in her accounting book and instantly produced 4 identification cards.

“Here. You are not official residents, so you will have to renew your identification cards once a month for 700 TP. It will cost 1000 TP to replace if you lose it, so keep that in mind.”

We received our identification cards for temporary citizenship. Extra7. Boss. PhantomThief. Goryeo’sStrongest. Our IDs contained our nicknames.

“How did they know our nicknames? We never told them.”

“It’s probably that NPC’s trait.”

“Oh, NPCs have traits too?”

“We call them NPCs, but they’re humans just like us in the tower.”

A series of system alerts popped up.

[You have obtained Prestige's citizenship.] [Common player quests have been issued.] [1. Undead Monster Subjugation] — You will receive 50 TP per 50 Lv.1 undead killed. — You will receive 75 TP per 25 Lv.2 undead killed. — You will receive 100 TP per 10 Lv.3 undead killed. — You will receive 125 TP per 2 Lv.4 undead killed.

[2. Land Spider Subjugation] — You will receive 50 TP per 4 land spiders killed.

[3. Demon Subjugation] — Prestige contains 666 demons. Each demon has a special bounty on its head.

“There's quite a lot to do.”

“There sure is.”

Prestige wasn't the prettiest city, but you could easily earn TP thanks to common quests for its citizens, Medea's special quests, and other NPC quests. However, these benefits would cause its downfall. The TP earned by players didn't benefit NPCs and only filled the belly of the administrator Medea.

Of course, I didn't plan on letting that happen.

I wanted to see a different ending with Kim Suho. I planned to only destroy the tower shell instead of destroying the world within the tower. This was the best ending I came up with after 3 years of planning. I would make this tower support such an ending.

“Your inventories are full of food, right?”

“Yep, just like you wanted.”

We would have to kill at least 66 demons to obtain meat on the 3rd floor. Before then, monsters and wild animals all spawned as undead, so one could only eat grass. That would only be a shortcut to losing vitality and stats.

“Aren’t you going in?” The guard urged us as we stood still.

“We will, but before that...”

I pointed at the building next to the wall. “How much is it for a building like that?”

“You should be able to buy it for 5000 TP.”

The guard answered my question. He probably would’ve ignored me if I didn’t have citizenship.

“Why, do you want to buy a building?”

“Yes, I plan to.”

“Why?”

“I just thought it’d be nice to own a shop.”

I answered Jain’s question. System alerts continued to pop up.

[You can purchase the Lv.2 Wooden Building Outside the Inner Wall for 5000 TP.] [You currently have 24000 TP.] [Would you like to purchase this building?]

Buying buildings felt so easy in a world without real estate. I clicked yes.

[You have obtained ownership of Lv.2 Wooden Building Outside the Inner Wall.] [The wooden building currently contains nothing inside.]

A building suddenly became mine with a single click.

“Let’s go in.”

“Hm? Don’t you have to buy it?”

“I already did.”

“What?”

I left my 3 puzzled companions behind and asked the guard again.

“Is it possible for us to meet the 3rd floor’s administrator?”

“No, it’s too early to have an audience with her.”

“How long do we have to wait?”

“Another week.”

“Hmm.”

I had no reason to enter the inner city yet. I crossed my arms in thought. Then I turned on my smartwatch to read the abandoned settings in my settings book. I wrote these settings, but never included them in the original story.

[3rd Floor Residential Area NPC – 1. Kiri and Henry.] A brother and sister duo. Give them money or food to receive the black pouch. The black pouch will allow you to bring back one item from Earth. Kiri and Henry are both clever and have high growth potential worthy of named NPCs.

“Oh right, these two kids lived here.”

Kiri and Henry aside, the black pouch would be quite useful. I had about 4 free days since I couldn’t meet Medea yet. I should obtain the black pouch and return to Earth to bring back the goblin tablet. That way, I could also visit Evandel.

“Boss, Jain, can you two go inside and look for a hideout?”

“A hideout?”

“Yes, just a place for us to stay. You can rent a house.”

“Sure, but where are you going?”

“I’m going back to Earth for a bit.”

The 3 of them entered the inner city. Then I took out the Book of Truth.

[Where are the NPCs, Henry and Kiri?]

The Book of Truth drained about 0.5 streaks of stigma and displayed their location in real time. They wandered not too far away around the city outskirts. I walked over and about 15 minutes later...

“Buy some flowers. They’re edible.”

I spotted Henry and Kiri in the distance selling flowers. However, no one seemed interested or even had the money to buy flowers. To make matters worse, their baskets only carried withered flowers.

“Flowers, buy some flowers. They’re edible.”

“...”

I silently watched them. Two starving children trying to sell flowers that no one wanted. Did it have to be so realistic?

“Haa...”

I discarded my depressing thoughts and walked over.

“Ah, um, flowers... buy some flowers...”

Kiri and Henry became startled when they saw me since I wore all black. I took off my hood and mask and smiled brightly.

“How much are they?”

“Eh? You’ll buy them?”

“Yeah.”

The younger sister, Kiri, spoke to me. She hesitated and couldn't meet my eyes.

“...10, 10 TP.”

“Each?”

“Yes? Ah... um, no. Everything in this basket is 10 TP.”

Kiri gave the entire basket to me. Meanwhile, Henry stood next to her and trembled. Did they think I wouldn't buy anything if each flower cost 10 TP? I silently looked at them and discovered a black cloth peeking out of Henry's back pocket. That must be the black pouch.

“By the way, what's that black thing?”

I knelt to Henry's eye level and pointed at the pouch in his back pocket. Kiri turned to him nervously.

“This... this? Um...”

Henry fiddled with the pouch in his back pocket with a troubled expression.

“Um, this is... um...”

His small body trembled as he contemplated what to say. Soon, he came to a decision and took it out.

“W-Will you buy this too? This pouch is really good!”

“O-Oppa! Dad said never to—”

“Shh.”

The surprised younger sister stepped in, but Henry stopped her. Kiri bit her lips with a sad look.

“How much is it?”

“This is a bit more expensive. It’s um... 200 TP.”

I looked at his thin cheeks and fearful eyes. I suddenly thought about these 2 NPCs from the setting I had abandoned. A setting I had disregarded in a rush to advance the story or because I felt too lazy to write about it. What would have been their fate in the original story? They would’ve starved to death.

“Um, 150 TP!”

Henry must’ve misunderstood my silence and lowered the price.

“Mmm...”

“I-Is it too much?”

“No, I think it’s too little.”

Their faces lit up when I took out two 100 TP coins. I gave one to Henry and the other to Kiri. They took the shiny coins with their small hands and blankly stared at it as they swallowed their saliva.

“Ah, oppa, give him the item.”

“Oh right, h-here!”

Henry handed me the black pouch.

“And um, take this too!”

Kiri quickly gave me her flower basket.

“I didn’t buy this.”

“You can have it! Um, you can eat these flowers! If you want, I can also teach you where they grow. I’m the only one who knows!”

“...”

Kiri was too kind. Such a young girl acted braver than her older brother. I couldn't help but worry about them.

“It's fine.”

I shook my head. I put the black pouch away and tapped their shoulders.

“Hey, aren't you two hungry?”

“...Yes?”

They both put up their guard this time.

“You see, this hyung owns a building.”

[Lv.2 Persuasive Voice has activated.]

They were born and raised in a harsh environment, but were still children. My voice easily persuaded them.

“Building owner?”

“Yeah. Also...”

I took out my identification card.

“Wow, a citizenship ID.”

“Uwoah...”

Their eyes shone brightly. Collecting money and buying citizenship. This must be their dream. I spoke to them as warmly as possible.

“If you follow me, hyung will make you lots of delicious food.”

I had more than enough reason to bring them along since I wrote that they were worthy of being named NPCs. Not to mention, I needed employees to take care of my new building.

Chapter 170

Prestige (2)

I easily persuaded Henry and Kiri as they accompanied me to my building. It felt a bit weird since I just bought it 30 minutes ago. We walked inside as they marveled at it.

“Hiik!”

They gasped when they saw the building’s interior. The more quick-witted Kiri noticed something unusual.

“T-There’s nothing here...”

“Huh? Oh.”

I could understand their misunderstanding. Crimes usually took place in empty buildings like these.

“Hiyaak!”

KWANG! To make matters worse, a fierce wind shut the door.

“It’s empty because I only bought it a while ago.”

I tried to calm them, but Kiri’s legs shook uncontrollably. She hid behind Henry, who glared at me with a terrified expression.

“W-What do you want?”

“S-Save us! We’re sorry, please don’t kill us!”

“Um, kids. I’m not a bad guy...”

Their faces turned purple as I slowly approached.

“Kids?”

“W-We’ll give you the money back! Please don’t kill us!”

“Ah, aaak! Aaaak!”

“...Uh.”

Talking any more would only make the situation worse. I simply sat on the ground and took out the burner and frying pan. Then I began to cook my special marinated boar meat.

“Hic.”

“Hic.”
